R: What kind of experiences do I have? (SL: Well thinking about your day?) I just go through the day spontaneously. (SL: Excuse me?) I go through the day spontaneously, doing whatever has to done at that moment. (SL: But you do not experience it?) I'm not the doer, I watch myself doing, but I realize that I'm not the doer. (SL: Is that all there is to it?) That's it, simple. What do you want? (laughter) (SL: That's really all there is to it? There's just standing back and realizing that life is beautiful.) (laughs) But if it doesn't exist why is there even an adjective? You become spontaneous and the adjective is consciousness. You realize yourself as consciousness like the screen and you enjoy watching all the pictures on the screen. But you understand that you are the screen. (SL: So if a person is going through this alleged life, enjoying everything and not reacting but simply being spontaneous then is that all there is to it?) That's it. (SL: Besides knowing that, besides even living that there is still an experience?) For whom? (SL: Well, like the experience that her son had. Probably most everybody here sees everyone else here as themselves.) Again never mind everybody else. Speak only about yourself. (SL: Well that sounds, sounds egotistical?) It has to be because if you know you are egotistical that is how you get rid of the ego, by knowing you are an ego first. So that's a good point. (SL: But what are we all lacking?) Nothing. (SL: We are lacking an experience?) No we are not. See that is your point of view. (SL: Then we are exactly where you are then?) Of course. (SL: If we live in beauty and in love we are where you are?) Forget about living in beauty and love. (students laugh)

SH: If you throw out the beauty and love then you're there. (students laugh)

SL: Well if we're living the miracle then, as you said everything is a miracle?

R: And you ask yourself, "To whom does it come? To whom does the miracle come?" (SL: To nobody.) That's right. So you're nobody. You're no body. You're just no body. You have no body. Now you've got it.

(long silence)

If you truly wish to repent just sit in silent meditation and see the perfect reality within. For all manners of evil merely arise in erroneous thought.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 49

I ACKNOWLEDGE YOU

3rd March, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It's good being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

There's some of you who come hear to hear me speak. This is not exactly right. The message is between the words. The words themselves are fine but the real message is in between, in the silence, in the quietness. That's where reality is. The less you talk the more you achieve. Learn to be quiet. Learn to find time at home where you do not speak. The world will still go on without you. You don't have to worry. The power that runs this world does not need your advice. When you become still, quiet, you make a connection with a great power, and then things happen.

I would like to acknowledge you, not by name, but just to acknowledge you. There are those of us who believe that in the transcendental state you do not care about anyone or anything. This is not true. I am aware of each one of you. I am more aware of you than you'll ever know. I may not talk to some of you or say anything, but I know all about you.

How do I see you? It is true that I see everything as consciousness. Imagine consciousness as a gigantic screen and you are images on the screen. So I am aware that I am the screen and you are the images of myself. There is only one Self and I am that. Therefore I am aware of both, that your appearance exists on the screen, yet you are the screen, or you are consciousness, but you are still seeing yourself as an image, as a body, whereas I see you as consciousness and also as the appearance that you see, as a body. But I know the truth. Therefore I am aware of you.

There are some of you who come to see me from far away. We have people here who come from San Jose, Santa Cruz, San Diego and other far places. I'm aware of that.

Thursday it was a rainy day, yet we had quite a few people here. That's why I explained, first things first. If you're really interested in your spiritual life, if you really wish to transcend the body, you've got to make this first in your life. You cannot compare satsang to watching the TV, or going to a movie, or going bowling or anything else. If you put satsang in the same category, then there is a total confusion within you, and you don't even know what you want. But where you put your energy, where you put your life force, what you go after with all your heart, with all your soul, this is what you ultimately become.

I appreciate you. I appreciate those of you who support me financially, who put funds in the collection box. Most of you realize this is my only source of income at this time. I appreciate that. Always remember whatever you give of yourself, you're giving to yourself, because there's only one Self. When you give away your love, you give your joy, you give your truth, you give your happiness, you give your finances, you give whatever you give, it's like your right hand giving to the left hand.

If you took away all space and all time there would only be one person. The reason we appear as many, is because of time and space, maya, the illusion. It appears as if there is time and space. Therefore there are many. But as you go within yourself, as you begin to identify with pure consciousness, time and space seem to disappear, and wherever you look, you see yourself, for there's no room for anyone else. There is only one Self. This is why you should never be angry at anyone, never judge anyone, never become upset with anyone or react to any one, for you are really doing it to yourself.

Whatever is going to happen will happen. Your job is not to react. Your job is to understand that everything is predestined. You are in your right place where you are supposed to be. If there is anything that appears in your life that you don't like, it's wrong to try to change it. It's right to go within yourself and see the truth within yourself. And then the appropriate changes will come by itself. Change no one. Change nothing. React to no one, react to nothing. Do not live in the past and do not worry about the future. Stay in the eternal now, where all is well.

So I acknowledge you. After all you are me and I am you. There's no difference. I love you all, for I love the Self. Love and the Self are synonymous. And since the Self is omnipresent, how can I not love you. Love is consciousness, absolute reality. We are all that.

Why do you see others? Why do you see perverse situations? Why do you see all these dastardly things that seem to be apparent.

Your eyes are meant for you to see, but to see the truth, whereas with most people the eyes see an object and sends the message to the brain, according to your programming, and you react accordingly. When you begin to realize it's all a game, no one is born, no one dies, and in between no one prevails. There is only God, pure awareness.

There are many methods to use to recognize this truth. This is why I share these with you. Not everyone can practice atma-vichara, self-inquiry. Therefore I share these other methods with you. There are many things that you should do. How many more years do you think you've got in your body? Why go after the fleeting things that change and disappear. Forget about trying to win the lottery. Forget about who's hurt you. Forget about your sins of omission and commission. Let go of everything. Be yourself. Do not react to the world. Do not even react to your own body. Do not even react to your own thoughts. Learn to become the witness. Learn to be quiet.

I know sometimes you get up in the morning and you feel out of sorts. You may feel depression, you may feel the collective unconscious of the world, which is a negative vibration. You should immediately snap out of this by realizing this is not the truth about me. The truth about me is I am love, I am consciousness, I am absolute reality. Identify with the truth about yourself. Do not allow your mind to tell you one iota of negative thinking. Catch yourself. It makes no difference what position you're in. Do not believe and think, "Well, when things get better I'll have time to do this." There's no such thing. You've got to start where you are. You've got to be yourself now and forever. Things will never change.

Get rid of your arrogance. Develop humility. Become humble. By that I don't mean become a door mat for people to step on. In humility there is strength. You understand the truth, therefore you do not get involved in pettiness, in nonsense. The truth shall always prevail, regardless of appearances.

People were bored, then a war started. It became exciting for some people. Something to do, to get rid of their boredom. Now the war is over and they become bored again, always looking for excitement, looking for something outside of themselves. I can assure you my friends there is nothing outside of yourself. Remember the whole world is a projection of your mind. Never forget this. It is you who make the world real. The world picture is very strong in your mind, and the stronger your mind, the more real the world. This is why in all the higher teachings we are told we have to destroy the mind.

What do they mean by that?

The mind is known to be a conglomeration of thoughts about the past and worry about the future. That's all the mind is. As you begin to understand your true nature, the mind settles down and goes back into the heart, where it's supposed to rest. The heart is the Self. Therefore the mind becomes the Self. The Self is the universal. The universal is absolute reality, which results in bliss. Therefore your life can be blissful while you're still in the body.

You do not have to give up anything really. You simply have to put everything in the right perspective. You can work, you can play, you can go on vacation, you can do anything you like, but you'll always be aware of the truth of your being, that's all. Do not think when someone attains liberation they have to go and live in a cave and forget about the world. On the contrary, you're in the world but not of the world. You see through appearances and you become happy.

Now one of the ways of quieting the mind is chanting. It has been known for centuries that chanting makes the mind one-pointed. It works through the nervous system, bringing peace and tranquility to the mind. Then the mind disappears of its own volition. Let's do that now, shall we?

(Chanting)

Anything to stop the mind from thinking.

I receive mail from various parts of the world and sometimes, when I think it's apropos, I share it with you, for many people have the same questions. We're going to do that now, Mary. We have one of the letters from Taiwan who by the name of Andy used to come here. He now lives in Taiwan and he's been practicing these things. This letter will describe how he's doing.

Mary: This was written on February 19th: He says:

"Dear Robert,

Namaskar. I'm happy to say what a joy and a precious gift it is to know you and have your presence in my life. From our first meeting I felt a warmth and friendship that I've continued to find companionship as well as pure shining light of my own true being. I share thanks.

I am writing now with a feeling of needing to express something that has been a source of ambivalence and unclarity for quiet sometime. I often experience a subtle conflict that seems to result from infrequent but clear insights into my true nature which render all other spiritual issues irrelevant and unnecessary. In other words when the truth is clear as it often is when I hear your words or more accurately what they express there simply is no consideration of anything else. What could possibly be worth considering including the question of the truth. But this is not a living understanding my mind is mostly busy and continually dreaming.

However even though these moments of living clarity are rare and elusive. Just having reference to them sort of dissipates any motivation toward spiritual action even when I desire it.

This must sound quite comical to you as it does somewhat to me as I write it. That is why perhaps I have neglected to acknowledge it concretely until now. It's always felt more worthwhile to just go back to the whole truth on whatever level it's perceivable at the time. Knowing it's the only reality and all else is BS.

Yet here this body is feeling that the only real purpose of living is to realize fully my true nature and embody it in every breath. My day to day experience says that I'm far from this, but the echo of insight says there is nothing but this. Every time there is inquiry, every time there is meditation which is never with prescribed intention, this conclusion is quickly reached regardless of the experience of identification. Regardless of reaction, attachment, aversion these are all insubstantial appearances which are of one consciousness and to say that is, to say far too much.

The meditation renders the life of Andy Kincart unworthy of consideration. I guess Robert the essence of it is doubt. The ego's last stand, like yeah right you think you know the truth when your life is like this. But it's not just that I don't, don't doubt the insight, the simple clarity is beyond doubt. It just feels like there is something more to come to fruition and it's really not even like I desire for something to be fulfilled in the sense that I will be relieved of suffering.

But I'll read the words of Maharaj or yours, of your experience along with his or your advice on actions to do, or ways to be. But when I go through the words to the space that he or you are coming from I just feel like, why? What is being done to what? And that even feels like too much consideration to give to the issue.

When I mentioned doubt, I think I was referring to the doubt of fear that my understanding is largely intellectual. Based on experiences of clarity.

But even as I write this it sounds ridiculous. Why am I entertaining these silly thoughts? The understanding is all there is and there is nothing to do but to dwell in it. Well with saying that, it feels like this letter expresses through embodying some of the cyclic ambivalence that arises from me. I beg your pardon if what I've shared is boring and monotonous. I'll leave you, so-to-speak, with something I just wrote a day or two ago that brought me back to the place I belong.

With the understanding that all forms are of one universal being. Which is void of any existence what can be done. Can there even be anyone to carry this understanding. The truth is regardless of it's acknowledgement through understanding. So how does the form pursue its own emptiness? See the nature of emptiness already within the form and there will be nothing to pursue. See that the seer as well and even the seeing are all empty and illusions of memory. Just be quiet and allow the light of awareness to burn away the clouds of forms in perpetual change. Only pure being is free of form and change and becoming. Just be by burning through the illusion of identified perception. The kingdom of heaven is now, simply give up all lies to the contrary.

Once again the friendship which shares our being is a true joy.

Andy"

Robert: Now, Ed would you answer that letter for me.

SE: His understanding being said.

R: In essence, tell him he's too wordy and all of his experiences are a manifestation out of his own mind. And he has to become still by going deeper within himself and if anything comes up tell him to catch himself and through self-inquiry ask, "To whom does it come?"

SM: What did you want Robert? (R: That letter.) That letter? Or the other one.

R: This one. And send him lesson number three. Now there's one more if you would like to read Mary.

SU: Robert didn't it show a rather good understanding he said, I create exactly reality with regardless of the understanding, that is regardless of mind or concept or anything else so it sounds to me that it was coming from a very quiet place?

R: It's a good letter and he shows a lot of understanding but all he has to say is, "All is Well." (SU: Regardless of the understanding?) Yes, because if you really had an understanding there is nothing to say. See that is something we all have to realize. It's not how much profound knowledge we know intellectually. It's how much we don't know. We have to transcend the mind that wants to be worthy and profound. We have to go beyond that to wake up. As long as your mind is filled with beautiful poetry and beautiful quotations and profound knowledge you can never become free. The idea is to give it all up. Then in your freedom you know all these things but there is nothing to say.

Would you like to read the next one?

Mary: All right, do you want the letter part first then the card?

R: Read the card first. (Mary: The card first, okay.)

Dear Robert,

Thank you so much for showing me the trust that I can have for myself and that everything is truly all right.

With love and oneness

Jim.

And then heres a little letter from Jim also.

Dear Robert,

Enclosed is a cheque sent to me from Joan whom I knew ten years ago in Syracuse. She was a spiritual friend and I have been sending her your tapes. From the letters she has writtten to me they seem to be beautifully changing her life. If you feel inclined you could write to her. I am sure this is actually a lot of money for her to be sending.

Take care love and blessings,

Jim.

Joan is in New York.

Robert: Ed would you send her lessons 1, 2 and 3? We conduct all of our business here. (laughter)

We have to understand that we do not come here to overcome a problem. We do not come here to acquire profound knowledge. We do not come here to memorize words that I say, or books that you've read and you memorized, the beautiful quotations, and you're able to repeat these things. We come here to empty ourselves. It's only when you become an empty vessel that the truth, which you really are, can shine forth. When you have too much head knowledge you keep yourself from awakening. When you have too much book knowledge, you keep yourself from awakening.

This is why words are always inadequate. You are already liberated. All you really have to do is to get rid of those things that tell you you're not. When thoughts come to you, when ideas come to you, whatever comes to you, realize that's not what it is. Neti-neti, not this, not this. Reality is your real nature. You don't have to go anywhere to find it. You don't have to travel the world looking for teachers. All you have to do is become humble, have humility, go within, and the truth will reveal itself. It makes no difference what your condition may be. This is totally irrelevant. You can be rich or poor, sick or healthy, deformed or otherwise. Makes no difference. It has nothing to do with reality.

It's like you go and see a movie and you identify with the plot and the actors and the actresses. Then the movie ends and you're nowhere, for you've spent all your energy identifying with the actors and the actresses, the roles they're playing. This is what we do with our lives. We identify with conditions, with situations. We try to protect our interests, and that's only ego. We have no interests. We own nothing. We come into this world with nothing, and we're going to leave it with no thing. What you do in between birth and death determines what happens to you from thereon in.

If you're like most people and you've been bound by the earth, identifying yourself with earth things, believing you are the body, you'll come back again and again as a body, until you wake up and realize it's all a dream. You have to wake up. There's nothing else you have to do but wake up. Forget about the world. I'm speaking of mentally. Allow your body to do what it must, but mentally forget about the body, the world.

Keep your mind on your heart center. Practice self-inquiry. Become the witness to all of your movements and to all situations. Do not react to anything. Watch. Behold how the world keeps changing day after day after day. Realize that you are not the world. You are watching the world, but you have really nothing to do with the world. You are consciousness, you are the Self, this is your true nature. Identify always with the pure Self.

It's like the story of a bird who lived in a gigantic tree. The bird represents most of us, and every time it would eat sweet berries on the tree it would be cheerful and happy and sing. But when the season changed, and the berries became sour, he would stop singing and become angry. Isn't this like us? When things appear to be going our way we say we are happy, because we are getting what we think we want. But when something does not go our way, we become despondent and angry.

One day the bird was flying around the bottom of the tree and it looked up to the top branches, way far up in the air. On the top branch it saw a translucent, beautiful, gigantic bird, smiling and happy. And the little bird said, "How I wish I can be like that big bird. I'm going to fly up there and discover what makes this big bird happy." Isn't this like most of us? We get tired of the run around of life, and we discover some truth that we go after. But look what happens.

On the way up to the big bird, when the little bird was a quarter of the way up, flying up, it saw some delicious berries on one of the branches. It therefore forgot all about the big bird, landed on the branch and started to eat the beautiful, succulent berries. When they were all finished, there was all these sour berries left. So again it became despondent. Again it's like us. In the beginning we go after truth, after reality. But if something wonderful happens to us materially, or physically, we forget about it. We say I can go after that later when things are bad. And we get caught up in our experiences.

So when the little bird became despondent enough it remembered the big bird. It looked up and there it was again, sitting so majestically on the top branch, translucent, shining, happy. And it said, "This time I'm going to go right up to the big bird and find out its secrets." Halfway up again it saw a branch with beautiful berries and forgot about the big bird once more. Just like we. We search for truth, we read books, we see teachers. But let's say we win the lotto, and we have a million dollars. How many of us will continue to search? Not too many, I'm afraid. We'll get lost in riches and what they can buy for us, until the IRS comes knocking, or your relatives steal your money, or the stock markets go down, and you become despondent. That's like the little bird eating sour berries.

After it was despondent enough, again it remembered the big bird. That's like us. When things get too bad, we start thinking about God. So again the little bird started to fly up and up and up, and this happened again and again, until when it was three quarters up and the berries became sour again, it got completely disgusted and said to itself, "I'm tired of sweet berries, I'm tired of sour berries. I'm tired of the whole game. I don't care about anything I see on this tree again. No matter what I see on this tree, it doesn't make any difference. I'm going straight to the big bird." And that's like some of us. When we've been kicked around by life enough we become determined to go all the way in the pursuit of truth.

So the little bird started to fly closer and closer to the big bird. It bypassed all the sweet berries and the beautiful berries it saw on the tree. And the big bird became more and more translucent, and shining, and beautiful and majestic. And it finally landed right in the center of the big bird. And when it did, it found out something very interesting. It found out that it was the big bird all along. So it is with us. When we finally awaken we will realize we've always been awake, there never was a time when we were not, and become free.

Let's sing, "Oh God Beautiful."

(After singing Robert continues)

Many people ask me is there any short method that I can use when I become depressed or disillusioned. When I start feeling out of sorts is there anything I can say besides practicing self-inquiry? Is there a little fast method some words that I can use as an affirmation?

Well we don't use affirmations because they are just the workings of the mind. But there is something you can do that is very simple and you hear me saying it all the time. You can interrupt your feelings and your mind, worries, thoughts by merely saying, "All Is well."

You hear me saying this all the time, "All is well and everything is unfolding as it should." When you say, "All is well," it contains everything that we teach. All is well means that everything is the way it should be. There are no mistakes. There is absolutely nothing wrong.

No matter how things may look, no matter how things may appear, if we believe something is wrong, it's because we misconstrue the way things really are. When you say to yourself, "All is well," a calming effect takes place in your nervous system and you find that you become relaxed and peaceful. For in reality you are saying, "Nothing is wrong, nothing has ever been wrong and nothing will ever be wrong." If I think it is, it's because I don't understand. So, "All is well."

Remember you have been brought up to believe certain things about life. How your life should be. In other words you have been brainwashed. Just about everything you believe is anti-reality. Think about your belief system. The way you think that things should be in your life. Things shouldn't be any way in your life. Things just are, they come and they go. You have no life. You are reality. You are the Self, and that's not a life that's just being, pure being. Pure being is your real nature.

I reiterate again. Stop looking and stop judging at appearances. Leave the world alone. Stop coming to conclusions. Do not be for or against anything. Be easy with yourself, be gentle to yourself. Catch yourself when your mind starts telling you all of these depressing things and starts worrying you. Realize that you are greater than you can ever imagine. You are God in all its essence. You are not a piece of God or a parcel of God. You are the whole. You are absolute oneness, nirvana, emptiness. You are the Self.

Why not accept this?

All you have to do is intellectually accept the truth and the intellect will cause it to go into the subconscious, the subconscious will go into the reality, the reality will turn into consciousness and consciousness will express itself as bliss. This means that while you appear to be wearing a body, it will be a body of bliss. Others will not see it like that. But you will not be concerned with others, for you are others. And as you see your body of bliss, of course it includes the body of the universe because your body of bliss is omnipresence. Therefore you see everything as bliss and you have unalloyed happiness, joy and peace.

(tape break, tape starts abruptly with students laughing)

...(laughter) You do not have to agree with me. Feel free to condemn me, to crucify me, to do whatever you please. If there is anything that needs clarification or something you don't understand or something about your spiritual life or anything else, we're one big happy family here. So if we get into a fist fight don't worry.

SB: Robert when you are looking up at the ceiling are you seeing the ceiling or are you absolutely not connected, your consciousness is not connected to your eyes at that time?

R: I'm not aware of what I'm looking at. I'm not doing it for any reason. (SB: What are you aware of?) Of you, asking a question. I'm not aware of anything, I'm just blank. (SB: So you're dwelling in consciousness at that time.) I'm not dwelling in anything, not even consciousness. I'm not dwelling. To dwell in consciousness there has to be somebody to dwell in it. So if there is no somebody who is to dwell in consciousness? Consciousness is your real nature but body does not dwell in it. Nothing dwells in it. Consciousness is self-contained. Self-contained absolute reality. It is just pure being, there is no dwelling. The dweller has been destroyed. (SB: So is it like absolute release from everything?) Well again there has to be someone to be released and no one was ever born that needed to be released. There is just is-ness, pure being. (SB: It seems to be inconceivable to the mind?) We don't care what the mind tells us. Let the mind think it's inconceivable. Be in control of the mind, don't let the mind be in control of you. Go beyond the mind. Ask yourself to whom does the mind come and you will realize you never had a mind to contend with.

Fred's getting cold, "It's all in your mind Fred." (students laugh)

Sf: Robert, you used to always come out and just tell everyone to wake up. I wonder why you are not doing that as much. I think maybe that's what we need here.

R: Well when you say, "All is well," it's the same thing. All is well means you are absolute reality and you wake up.

SG: I think we need a joke then. (R: I'll stick your thumb in the electric fan.) (laughter)

SK: Robert you mentioned something earlier that one of the things preventing getting in touch with being at home or whatever, is humbleness and removing the arrogance. In my daily life I see that pretty often lately. How my ego does not want to give up, there is not much humbleness. To be humble seems to be the hardest thing in the world to tell somebody. You know I'm really sorry, make amends and stuff like that. And that is as far as my humbleness goes. That's what I'm dealing with it on my spiritual plane, you know.

R: To be humble and to have humility, you don't really have to apologize to anyone, but in your own mind you apologize to yourself for believing you were a person who can make another person angry. You reconcile yourself. It's not something you do to anyone else. When you reconcile yourself with the whole universe you automatically become the living embodiment of kindness and compassion and then, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Everything will take care of itself from then on.

SD: Is reconciliation the same as forgiveness or is it forgiveness so-to-speak?

R: When you reconcile yourself with the universe, you are coming to terms with your own Self. (SD: Right if we come to terms with ourself is that the same as forgiving yourself?) Yes of course, because your real Self never had anything to forgive. So when you come to terms with yourself you become total joy and total bliss and all sins of omission and commission have been transcended. (SD: I guess what I'm saying is that even the word forgiving implies an ego action.) Yes it does. That is why I said in the beginning that you don't have to tell somebody you forgive them or ask for forgiveness. (SD: That is why reconcile would be better than ask for forgiveness.) You reconcile yourself with the universe and you automatically become the truth, the reality, consciousness.

SK: But would that forgiving another person in a sense be more like and ego deflating situation? I mean to do it by myself at home, I can do that, I think I can, but to do it to another is person very difficult.

R: In a way like Dana said, when you ask for forgiveness or you forgive somebody else, it's the big ego that does that because you think you are good. You say, "Now I have forgiven that person. I have asked that person to forgive me." It's like saying, "I can do it again and again." But rather forget about that, but go within yourself and ask the question, "Who needs forgiveness?" And you will realize that forgiveness and your ego are synonymous. When there is no ego there is no idea of forgiveness. There is just loving kindness and compassion and everything is reconciled. And things take care of themselves.

SD: So you are saying you wouldn't have to make amends, for example?

R: No, amends are from the past. Forget about the past, stay centered in the moment. (SD: So loving yourself at the moment...) Is good. (SD: ...is great because you love everything.) But remember you are not loving yourself as an ego. (SD: Right.) Most people get confused when I say, "Love yourself." They love themselves the way they are and they say, "I don't care what anybody thinks, this is me and I'm going to stay like that. I love myself." (students laugh) That's the self that has been getting you in trouble. (laughter) Realize that there is a Self within you as you. That is beyond comprehension. That is God and that is the Self you love. (SD: And how could God need to forgive himself.) Exactly.

SC: Robert going along with that, what about guilt? If you harmed someone in the past and is still haunting me, you know?

R: It's the same as forgiveness. When you know the truth about yourself all guilt is transcended. It's like being born again. The past becomes dead wood. And you go forward into the new dimension, as consciousness. (SC: It just keeps nagging at me, you know?) Well you've got to work on yourself. You have to ask yourself, "To whom comes this guilt?" It makes no difference what you've done in the past we've all made mistakes. Everyone makes mistakes as long as you've got a body then everyone's made mistakes. But as you stick to the truth, as you adhere to your true nature, as you work on yourself through self-inquiry your guilt ridden self will begin to disappear and your true nature will come forward, at that time there will be no one to forgive and there will be no guilt feelings. But when you feel guilty it's because you are identifying with the body and the body does all sorts of things. (SC: I think it's more than that. It's what I have done to the other person.) That was in the past, this is now. As you know the truth now, you grow out of that. But as long as you're still thinking of yourself as a body you will be ridden with guilt feelings it will not go away.

This is why it appears that nature doesn't make us remember our past lives. You feel guilty now, can you imagine if you knew about your past life? (laughter) Then you would really commit suicide. So nature makes you forget. You'd be surprised what things that you've done in previous existences.

SD: Does suicide necessarily keep you on the karmic wheel?

R: Sometimes it does and sometimes it doesn't. It depends from where you are coming from. (SD: What if it's only ???) Then you will immediately return and you will have to go through it again. (SD: Is it worse for that person?) It's about the same, depends. There are many things to consider. (SD: What would be an instance when you can transcend karma and still commit suicide? Would that just be something like a woeful leaving of the body more or less?) Well you have an understanding that karma doesn't exist and you realize that your life has been a mess, but it's not really you. And you have an inkling of the truth of reality, but you no longer wish to have a body. As long as you stick to the truth, at that time suicide doesn't make any difference. (SD: Would you be like reincarnated however under those circumstances?) It depends on your realization. (SD: Umm.) How deep your realization is. (SD: But if you were fully realized it seems like you probably wouldn't reincarnate anyway.) If you are fully realized you don't have thoughts like that whatever because you are not a body and you have transcended the past and the future and everything else. So it's a completely new ball game.

Don't get hung up on reincarnation and karma. For you are aware that they really do not exist. They only exist for the person who believes they are the body-mind phenomena. Do not think next time I'll come back in a better life. Forget about that. Rather ask yourself, "To whom does this life come? To whom do these experiences come?" And get rid of everything at one time. Realize it's the personal I that has gotten you into trouble all of these years. Follow the I thread to its source and become free.

SK: Robert, I have heard what other people say, "Look at what you are not, rather than see what I am." A process of elimination.

R: Yes, that's what we were talking about before. (SK: Trying and finding out what you are not. All is false.) Yes. You are not only not your faults but you are not your body. When you realize I am not the body I am not the world. I am not the conditioning. I am not karma I am not reincarnation. I am not my mind, I am not my blood or my heart. Whatever is left in the end is what you are.

SJ: That seems like a good process because when you are left at the end you don't know what it is anyway. You've negated everything and you are left with yourself and you don't ever really know what anything is. Sounds a very good process.

R: It's good to work on that but there is so much to negate you never finish. (students laugh) (SJ: So what would you do?) You keep going and going and going it never ends. I am not a leaf, I am not a worm, I am not a cockroach. It's easier to follow the personal I because all these things that you are not are attached to the I thread and as you go following the personal I to the source and you ask, "Who am I?" Everything falls away and you become free.

SL: Why is the world not interested in these teachings?

R: The world is the world and if you look at the evolution of the planets. This planet if you go by astrology and you go into those things — that don't exist — this planet is equivalent to a third grade schooling and beings are just running around doing all kinds of mischief. So they are interested in the world and worldly things, not in reality. Leave the world alone, find out who you are and then you won't be interested in what the world is or isn't because there will be no world for you.

SD: Robert I can — at least it lets me understand rather that I am not the body and perhaps not with the mind but where does personality fit in, or these traits or the compilation of experiences that individualizes a person?

R: Personality is the ego. Your personality is you, as an ego. It is a combination of all the things you've been through and all the things you know as an ego. (SD: It's easier for me to realize that, "I am not a body," but I'm not used to, "I am not the ego.") You are not the person. The person is the ego. When you follow the I thread back to the source the ego is attached to the I. The I and the ego are synonymous. So when you look at the I and you hold on to the I and go to its source the whole thing will go away, the ego, the personality. You become your radiant Self. (SD: Is that how the ego is afraid of annihilation because I think we all have to get lost in the same routine?) Well of course the ego is afraid of annihilation. The ego mind is very powerful and it will fight you at every inch so that you do not destroy it. This is why it's usually only through self-inquiry that the mind is used to get rid of the mind. Other methods usually enhance the strength of the mind. They make you think that you are powerful and that you've got siddhi's and you can do all kinds of things. It increases the power of the mind. It makes you into an ego maniac.

So this is why we don't want to develop siddhi's, powers, occult knowledge. We want to transcend all of these things and become free and liberated. And the best way for doing this is to ask yourself, "To whom do these things come? Who wants powers? Who wants to rule others?"

ST: Robert, the same thing with virtue, is that correct?

R: The same thing with virtue, that's correct. Virtue and non-virtue are two sides of the same coin. Virtue comes from the mind, it's from your upbringing that you say, "I am virtuous because I live this kind of a life." Get rid of all the concepts, all the preconceived ideas about virtue and non-virtue. They've all got to go to become free. If you think you are virtuous, you think you are proud. They are both of your mind, makes your ego stronger. I'm a virtuous person I don't drink. I don't fool around, I do nothing I'm boring. (students laugh) All those concepts have to go.

Another good form of meditation is in relaxing yourself and saying to yourself, "I, I." What you are really saying is, "I Am That I Am." But you are shortening it, you are saying, "I, I."

Let's try that now shall we? Make yourself comfortable and relax. Become happy within yourself. Listen to your breath and with your respiration say, "I, I." You inhale you say, "I" you exhale you say, "I." And notice how good you begin to feel, it happens very fast...

(tape ends) [TOC]

PUT FIRST THINGS FIRST

7th March, 1991

Robert: Peace. Good evening. It's good to see you again and be with you. Try to remember that I'm not a speechmaker or a minister or a philosopher. It's not words you want to hear. Many words can be spoken and nothing said. The answer you are looking for is within yourself. Everything you are looking for is within yourself. When I say within yourself I don't mean your physical self. I mean within the Self. The Self is not within you. You are in the Self. So when I say everything you're looking for is in the Self it includes your physical body and everything else. Everything is the Self, and you are that. All is well.

From your upbringing you've probably heard of the word blasphemy. The only blasphemy that exists is the fact that you believe that you are human. That's blasphemy, to believe that you are a human being. It's the ultimate lie. You are not what appears to be. No thing is what it appears to be. Then who are you? You have to find for yourself. Is there really a you? Are you really an individual? Are you separate from a tree, an animal, the world, the universe? Is there any separation? Find out. Do you really exist? Find out. Do you have a purpose in life? Find out. Again, it's blasphemous to believe that you were born as a human, and you prevail and you dissolve. That's true blasphemy.

It all begins when you awaken in the morning. That's the time that you should work on yourself. As soon as you open your eyes you should make a statement such as, "I am pure awareness." But never believe that your personal self is pure awareness. You're saying I am is pure awareness. Your personal self, your ego, the personal I, can never be I am. That doesn't even exist. Therefore think what you're saying when you say, "I am pure awareness." You're not speaking about your little self. That doesn't count because that doesn't even exist. You're speaking of I am, pure awareness. Awareness of what? You're aware of something, for you claim, "I am pure awareness." You are aware of the fact that I am is consciousness. Pure awareness is consciousness and I am is that.

Do you realize the revelation when you really know what you are saying, and you announce it with feeling, where you disregard the body-mind phenomena and you simply state the truth about yourself? I am pure awareness. Awareness of I am is consciousness. When you make such a statement, you will notice that you become blissful. You just begin to feel wonderful all over, due to the fact that pure awareness, I am, consciousness, expresses itself as bliss. They all really mean ultimate oneness.

But as you express yourself this way, as soon as you open your eyes, something profound happens to you. You begin to feel the joy of your Self. You begin to feel total happiness, goodness, and then you can state, "All is well," and you will know and feel that you are the beginning and the end. You will understand what sat-chit-ananda means. You will know Parabrahman. You will feel a divine emptiness, nirvana. You will be at peace, for you will understand that you are the universe, and no thing exists but yourself. You are the Self of the universe.

Just to hear this, doesn't it make you feel good, when you realize your divinity, that you are not a man or a woman, that you are not reincarnation or karma? There never was a time when you are not. That you, are all-pervading, transcendental bliss. Abide in your true nature. Stop believing that you are a sniveling human with problems. For whom are there problems? How can you, pure consciousness, absolute reality, think about a problem?

Even if you say, "Well, life still goes on. I've got to meet my bills. I've got to go to the doctor. I've got to do this and I've got to do that." That's blasphemy, that's what you call blasphemy. Not that you're not going to do it, but your body has nothing to do with you. Your body-mind and all of its affiliations, does not even exist. Even Jay who thinks he's blowing his nose, that's an illusion. You think, "I've got a cold. I've got an allergy, I've got to go to work tomorrow morning, I've got to wear my clothes. It is this, that keeps you from realization. You'll wear your clothes. You'll go to work. You will do whatever your body came here to do, but don't worry about those things. Do not concern yourself about those things.

The more human you are, the more you will say, "If I don't take care of these things, who will?" What are you talking about? There is only one I, and that is consciousness. Try to get it through your thick skull that the powers that be, know how to take care of all your needs and meet them most abundantly. There is something that cares about you, the great mystery. Something loves you, when you get your bloated nothingness out of the way. As long as you believe that you've got to solve a problem, then you will have to solve a problem. Something will take care of you.

Put first things first. And the first thing you have to remember is that you are pure awareness. You can tell yourself that. "I am pure awareness." Sure it's the mind that does this, but there is something that grabs hold of the mind and annihilates it as you turn into I am. These are the things that you should think about. I know it sounds strange when I say this, but do not concern yourself with the world. The world was here, with all of its destructive mechanisms, before you came upon the scene. It will be here after you leave.

People who do not understand Jnana Marga, Advaita Vedanta. They say it's your duty to help others, to make this a better world in which to live. But they do not understand that if you awaken and you become liberated, you become others. You are others. There's no one to help. This doesn't mean again that you will do nothing. Your body will appear to be helping, to do all kinds of things. But the truth is, when you help yourself, you help others. And when you help others, you help yourself. It's all one.

You wonder what to do with the rest of your life. Should I work? Should I sit home? Should I join the army? Shall I become a dictator of a country? All these great thoughts go through your mind. Do not allow that to happen. Catch your mind. Catch your mind thinking and stop it. The mind is necessary as long as you are a human being. You make decisions. You know what's wrong or right, good and bad. Your mind creates the world of duality. But as you progress in the spiritual life you begin to realize that the mind is a hindrance, not a friend, for it brings up all the things of the past, and worries about the things of the future. Who needs a mind like that?

Therefore take control. And again, the best time to do this is early in the morning, as soon as you wake up, for the first thoughts that you think about will carry you through the day. And before you fall asleep, the thoughts that you think about before you go to sleep will continue when you wake up. So fall asleep understanding that I am pure awareness.

And you'll have a tendency to think, when you say, "I am," you're referring to your physical self. Catch yourself when that happens. Your physical self can never become enlightened. The finite can never know the infinite. The personal I can never become the universal I. I am is pure consciousness. So you're consciousness. Conscious, not personal, not "I am this," or "I am that," but pure consciousness, existing as I am. I am that I am, absolute reality, beingness, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda, emptiness. I Am that.

If you focus on those things during the day, before you fall asleep, when you wake up, most of the time you will discover an amazing secret. You will discover that your work is being done better than when you were thinking about it. Everything will unfold the way it's supposed to. Yet you have to, sort of, in a way, feel that in the beginning. Make yourself feel it and put it first in your life, before anything else.

Think, if you will, of what comes first in your life now. It may be your husband, your wife, your job, your house, your car, your friend, your ambitions, your desires. This is what is keeping you back. You have to desire to rid yourself of past mistakes, past experiences. Stop thinking of the future. And this is hard for most people to do, for they are always anticipating the future and worrying about the past. Yet this is exactly what they have to do to let go, of past and future problems.

Your physical life is already planned, and all you have to do is to unfold beautifully into it. Everything will happen the way it is supposed to. You have to remember there is no evil in the universal, so nothing evil can ever happen to you. If you think it can, it's because of your imagination. You have a certain concept, a preconceived idea, of how you think things should be. And of course you're always disappointed because things are never the way you think they should be. Yet everything works out for your benefit, due to the fact that there's nothing in the universe that can or wants to hurt you.

Everything is on your side, from the minutest blade of grass to the giant cosmos. Everything is on your side, due to the fact that you are that. Everything is on your side because there is only one. There is ultimate oneness, and that ultimate oneness is perfection, absolute reality, consciousness. That is omnipresence, all-pervading. So where is there room for evil? Where is there room for anything wrong? Why do you worry? Why do you fear? Why do you become upset? The power that brought you to this class, knows what to do to continue your spiritual growth. But you have to put it first.

It's like the story of the student who was in a class like this, and he kept asking his teacher, "Teacher, explain it more. I don't understand, tell me more." And this went on and on. And at the end of the class, when all the students left, the teacher told that particular student to stay here, and then he told him, "Follow me," and he took him to the edge of a river. And he said, "Look into the river." The student did, and he pushed him into the water and held his head underneath the water until he nearly drowned. Then he pulled him up by the hair. And he looked in his face and he said, "What is it you wanted more than anything else in the world, while you were under the water?" And all the student was able to do was to gasp for air. And he said, "Air, air, air." And the wise teacher said, "When you want to awaken as much as you wanted air, you will."

This is true of all of us. Just take a look at your personal life. Just for today, what did you want more than to awaken today? If you were angry, then you wanted that, more than awakening. You see, whatever you put your feelings into, that's what comes first in your life. If something upset you? Then that became your God. You wanted that more than anything else. If you were in doubt that became your God. Whatever turns you on, whatever turns you off, became your God for that time. And that's what you give your energy to, so you increase that condition. As an example, if you are having problems with somebody, the more you think about it, the more you fuel it. The more you try to take any kind of an action to stop it, or to prevent it, or to change it, the more you are saying, "This is the truth about me."

How should you react to something like that? You should not react. Something within you will do what it has to do, and you will be at peace if you will allow it to do so, first things first.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and all of it's righteousness, and all of these things will be added unto you," which means first things first. Focus your attention on the Self. Realize that you are pure awareness, that you are aware that I am consciousness, resulting in bliss. Therefore you are a body of bliss. Not as a human body, when I use the term body, I mean the body of the universe. You are a body of bliss. Bliss is your nature, and in that bliss there is nothing wrong.

Calm down, mellow out, relax. You are the body of bliss, and your divine nature is consciousness. You can never have anything wrong in your life unless you put your mind on it and make it so. This is why you have to control your thinking. Do not allow your mind to tell you what's going on. If you learn to live in the moment, if you learn to center yourself and stay only in that moment, then you will be expressing consciousness, for consciousness is a moment thing. Consciousness is not yesterday or tomorrow. Consciousness is this moment. It's the gap between yesterday and tomorrow, the fourth stage of life. After waking, dreaming and sleeping, then there is consciousness.

So putting first things first will alleviate all of the negative conditions of your life, if you have any. It will awaken you. And as you work on yourself, and your mind brings up all kinds of things, as it will sometimes. In a very gentle way ask yourself, "To whom does this come?" and keep still. And of course the answer will be, "It comes to me. I feel out of sorts, I feel depressed, I feel as if I'm not getting what I want, I feel that somebody is taking advantage of me." Further questioning, "Who is this I? What is its source? Who gave the I birth? Where did it originate from? Who am I?" There is never an answer to the question of, "Who am I?"

By doing this process you will immediately feel better. And every time the mind brings up something else, you use the same procedure. "To whom does this come? Who is feeling this? I am?" Just by saying, "I am," it will immediately take you out of your personal thoughts about yourself and lift you higher to what "I am" really is. Yet if you don't feel that, you can ask again, "Then who am I?" And you keep doing this over and over and over.

Someone called me the other day and told me, "Robert, I've been practicing for twelve years, and I feel despondent and I feel depressed." So I said, "Why?" And he said, "Because all my friends are enlightened except me." I had to laugh. "How do you know?" "They told me."

How can you explain that there are no others? It makes no difference what anyone else is doing. Let them all do what they will do. What does this have to do with you? When you try to straighten things out, when you try to change other people, when you try to make other people do what you want, you're holding up your spiritual progress. Bless everyone and let them go. Leave the world alone. The world doesn't need your help, thank you. This world, remember, is an emanation of your own mind. Therefore you are seeing yourself when you look at the world.

As you begin to go within, you will realize that you've always been within. There's nowhere to go. The within and without is the same, pure consciousness. It begins with you.

I can sit here and talk all night, but what are you doing about your life? How do you see yourself? Forget about time. Even though you say, "I'm getting older, I haven't awakened yet. I hope I awaken before I die," this is all false thinking. No one is getting older, and no one has to awaken before they die, because no one dies. Get rid of that type of thinking. Forget about your age. Forget about your body and identify with consciousness. Identify with your Self. If you can just do that, everything else will take care of itself. I can promise you that.

Be happy. Be radiant. Have a good word for everyone. Stop thinking of your needs. They will be met if you stop thinking about them. How will they be met? Remember there is only ultimate oneness. And the ultimate oneness has never needed anything. It is self-fulfilling, self-contained, all-pervading. So the one who thinks they need something is the deluded self, the personal ego, the I.

But reality is present here and now. This means that you are fulfilled here and now. There is no thing you need and there is nothing that has to change. I'm not saying you're going to keep on suffering if you think you're suffering. What I'm saying is simply that the one who thinks they're suffering is deluded. No one suffers. Take your mind off the pettiness and begin to realize that your mind is causing you to feel these things, the belief that you are a body and a mind.

Begin to dwell on, "Who am I? Who is going through these experiences? Who thinks they're getting old? Who thinks they will not make it in this life? Who? I. I do. Who am I?" Continue the work. Do not worry about the world or other people. Work on yourself, diligently, constantly. Never let up, and you'll find that you become happier and happier. The old you is fading away. And you will awaken to yourself.

Any questions?

(tape break)

SK: (tape starts abruptly) ...So this person is saying deal with the contents. Look at what is. Now what I just got from you what I just flashed on, what he is saying is dealing with what is, is keeping me in the now, I think?

R: You're right, if you are thinking about your problems and dealing with what is, then you are stuck in that place. You have to let go of what appears to be and identify with your real nature which is God or consciousness. And to the extent that you can identify with your real nature, to that extent will you find that everything is resolved in your life. It's not the other way around. If you are dealing with psychology it is. For all psychologists and psychiatrists and mental people will tell you to deal with the problem. But you realize that even if you deal with the problem and even if you seem to resolve it a new one pops up again. (SK: I don't understand that?) And another one pops up and it never ends. (SK: What I'm saying, it's duality I guess. Instead of looking for peace in the world, there isn't any peace in the world there is violence in the world. So if I look...) No, no, no, no, no. There is no violence in the world and there is no peace in the world. Do not say one is different than the other. They are two sides of the same coin. But rather ask yourself, "Who sees the violence? For whom is there violence? For whom is there peace?" It is the ego that is part of those things. (SK: Yeah I understand, I understand.) Get rid of both.

(Robert continues) We have a tendency to look at what is going on in the world. We see the Iraqi situation, there was a war, there is man's inhumanity to man and we tend to say, "I see violence." Violence is for the ego. Violence is for the personal I. Therefore, "Who am I? Am I the personal I? Am I the ego? If I am then there will be violence and I will have to help to alleviate it. But if I am consciousness that is completely transcendental." It is like you are a chalkboard and the violence are images that you draw on the chalkboard. They come and they go, the images, but the chalkboard always remains the same. So the world comes and goes but consciousness always remains the same. It never fluctuates. Identify with consciousness and become that. And you will be free of all these concepts.

SV: Robert I have a question. If one is serious about realization, can one do it by himself in solitude by practice alone or is it necessary to be a devotee to a teacher or guru?

R: It depends on the person. It is very difficult to go all of the way by yourself. There are very few people who have done this. For it's difficult to transcend the mind. Being in the presence of a teacher who has transcended will cause you also to transcend. Being by yourself with the world pushing in on you from all directions makes it more difficult but it's possible. (SV: By being in the presence do you mean by just attending satsang?) Yes, just being in satsang is sufficient.

(Robert continues) Most of you think that you came here because you wanted to. But that is not true. You're being here tonight and being at satsang most of the time, there is something within you fulfilling itself. You have earned it there are no accidents. If you took the average person walking in the street tonight and brought him or her to satsang. They would be filled with fear and run out of the room because their evolution has not come to that place as yet.

This is why I say, do not concern yourself with others. Rather look to yourself. If you have been devoted to yourself at home, understanding that you are the Self that you are consciousness and you've been pure to yourself, something will guide you to your next step of spiritual unfoldment. Everything takes care of itself. But you have to take the first steps. This is why there is no one here tonight that has not been in spiritual life for quite a while. Otherwise Jnana Marga will be foolishness to you. So you are where you are supposed to be. The universe never makes mistakes.

SK: Robert... (R: Umm.) ...You said a part of reasoning, I'm telling myself that I have a pure consciousness. I do that, how do I get myself to that place where I believe that or am I just in another delusion?

R: See you already made a mistake because when you said, "I am," you are thinking of your physical self aren't you? (SK: But that's what I heard you say.) I am... did you come late? (SK: Pardon.) Did you come late? (SK: No.) Were you here from the beginning? (SK: You spoke of pure consciousness.) When you say when you wake up, "I am pure consciousness" or "pure awakening, pure reality," you are referring to I am. You are not referring to your physical self or to what you think you are. I am is consciousness, I am is pure awareness, I am is not your body it has nothing to do with you. That is why I repeat this so much. When you say, "I Am," you are not referring to your body or to your state of being. You are referring to absolute reality, to parabrahman. So when you first wake up and you say, "I am pure awareness," immediately you will get a feeling of joy and bliss. (SK: How do I differentiate? Do I know that is the truth or a delusion or am I in another fantasy with that?) Do not try at all to know. Simply make the statement and leave it at that. Now when questions come up like you just asked, "I wonder if I am saying the truth or am I in illusion?" ask yourself the question, "To whom comes those thoughts?" That's how you follow it up. "Who thinks they are in an illusion," or "Are they fooling themselves. To whom do these thoughts come?" And follow it through. If you do that, you will wake up one morning and you will state, "I am is pure consciousness," and you will be in bliss. (SK: Just by saying the words?) Just by saying that and identifying with them in their reality, but again if anything else pops up in your mind ask yourself, "To whom does this come?" And follow it through. You're killing two birds with one stone.

That's a terrible expression isn't it? (laughter) Who wants to kill two birds with one stone? That's a terrible expression isn't it? Who wants to kill two birds with one stone? Who came up with all these expressions? (SK: Nobody.) (students laugh)

R: If you think about that you'll see you're getting double credit because you are saying, "I am is pure awareness," and when the other thoughts pop up in your mind you're asking, "To whom do they come?" So you are attacking yourself from all directions. Something has got to give sooner or later. But put it to practice make it work for you. (SK: So by doing that it creates a surrendering, a giving up, a letting go?) You can say that, yes. But if those words come to you as you are doing that again, ask yourself, "Who has to surrender? Who is there to let go?"

SI: So Robert is it that which recognizes itself?

R: That which you speak of is self-contained consciousness. It only knows itself and you are that Self.

SK: What happens when ego intercedes?

R: Ask yourself, "To whom does it come?" Whatever pops up you do the same thing, "To whom does this come?"

SI: Robert, asking, "Who is aware of this?" be equivalent?

R: Who is aware of this? (SI: Yeah who is aware of whatever comes up? Is that the equivalent question?) Well that is not too clear. It's better to ask, "To whom does this come?" For all different thoughts arise. You have to take them one at a time. If you say, "Who is aware of this?" it's sort of ambiguous. But if you're feeling some kind of fear or you think you are wasting your time, you merely ask, "To whom does this come? Who feels this? I do. Who am I?"

SG: Robert I almost feel like I've been hearing this and it's just occurring to me that I'm missing something very basic, I don't know what it is exactly, but it's who is asking this question?

R: Ask yourself, ask yourself, "Who is asking the question?" Whatever comes up go right back to self-inquiry until you get rid of everything. (SG: In this life is there an entity other than the mind that is operating?) There is no entity at all. Nothing is operating. What is operating are your thoughts that appear to be operating. So you must keep asking yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come?"

SK: When I said it's trying to be an empty vessel. It's identifying with an empty vessel?

R: No, again, you have a concept of an empty vessel that has got to go. All concepts, all ideas, all preconceived ideas have to go. If you think you're an empty vessel then you keep seeing yourself as an empty vessel and that keeps you back. It's all got to go.

SG: Then the one that asks the question must go also?

R: Of course, the one who asks the question is like the stick that stirs the fire. You throw in all the twigs and you keep stirring. In the end you throw in the stick also. It all has to be burnt up in consciousness.

SJ: After you throw in that stick it takes a while for that stick to burn though? Is that like the aftermath or...?

R: Says who? (SJ: I'm asking?) If you believe it takes a while it takes a while. (laughter) But why should it take a while? Your real nature is here now. (SJ: Speaking to us.) (laughter)

SL: Robert in the silence which doesn't seem to last very long before thoughts come up. Also I'm aware of this physical grip. Something like when I'm aware of the thought I'm also aware that with this thought has come this tension. And when I can really release the tension I can stay in the moment. Can you help me with that?

R: Yes you are making it complicated for yourself. As soon as you feel tension ask yourself, "To whom does it come?" (SL: Yeah, I realize that.) And then keep going down further. (SL: Is that related to the thought at all or is it just...?) Of course it is. Tension is related to all thoughts. Thoughts bring tension and tension brings thoughts. (SL: I'm not aware that the thought is a tension provoking thought. They just seem to be just arrive to me.) Then no matter how they come, ask yourself, "To whom do they come?" No matter what it is use the same procedure until you get rid of everything.

SK: Can I use the same procedure when I experience physical pain?

R: Yes, sure, you may ask yourself, "To whom does this pain come?" And you will realize that it's your ego that feels it. So when the realization comes that you are not the ego, the pain will disappear.

SK: Pain disappears?

R: Why not? Where does it come from? It's part of the body. The belief that you are the body. When that belief is eliminated, everything that goes with it is also eliminated.

SK: What are useful way or ways to work on for disbelieving we are the body?

R: What are useful ways...? (SH: How do you get rid of the body idea?) That's what we've been talking about all night. (laughter) Ask yourself, "To whom does the body come?"

SK: Robert is this not - all these thoughts — is this not a manifestation of ego? So what would the process - I can't kill the ego, that's my belief maybe I can - What is a process to go beyond that? Does the ego reconstruct itself through a series of spiritual growth or do I have to watch for that constantly?

R: As you continue to work on yourself the ego like a balloon begins to become deflated and it bothers you less and less. As you keep inquiring, "Who am I? Who am I? To whom does this come?" Your ego becomes smaller and smaller until it finally disappears.

SF: Robert when I'm inquiring, in the process of inquiry when I seem to face silence, I should ask, "To whom does this silence comes to?"

R: If you are thinking about silence you ask. The real silence is not a thought. (SF: Right.) So if you are thinking about silence, ask, "Who is thinking about silence? To whom does the thought come?" (SF: Yeah, if I'm aware or I believe that I'm aware of certain silence for it's erroneous thinking about it?) The real silence comes when there is nobody to be aware. The one who is aware has been transcended. (SF: So in that position there is no need for any...) No. (SF: ..."To whom this comes to?") No, in that position there is only silence. (SF: Right.) It doesn't come and it doesn't go. It just is.

SG: What relationship should we have to the body, body-mind phenomena, the personal I?

R: You shouldn't have any relationship because it doesn't exist in reality. This is what I meant before, that your personal I and your body will always take care of itself. It has nothing to do with you. Your job is to identify with consciousness and your body will take care of itself.

SK: If a person was born in the jungle or something, lived their life according to the natural way of life, no concepts, no ideas. Would that person be in the silence atmosphere?

R: It all has to do with karma. It depends on your karma. (SK: I thought you said there wasn't any karma.) There isn't. But you are speaking of a person being born in a jungle.(laughter) So as long as somebody is born there is karma. (SK: Well unconditioned then.) Well if you understood that there is no karma, there wouldn't be any jungle and there wouldn't be anybody being born. But as long as you feel there is then there is karma. (SK: And you are caught up in it.) Sure and all kinds of stories, you have analogies, stories, predicaments, it's all karmic. It doesn't exist.

SL: So it's all just to stop the thinking. (R: You've got it, that's it.) (laughter)

SL: You said that when you had your realization that you haven't learned anything since?

(R: Okay?) Did you go to school then after that? (R: Nope.) Nope? (R: Nope.)

SJ: Actually noone went to school. (SL: Oh, okay we're back to that.) (laughs)

R: What would I do in school after that? (SL: Well you became a psychologist, am I correct?) Nah (laughter) (SL: Then you were a fake psychologist?) I faked it. (SL: Faked it. But you've read things, you've read...) I still read things. (SL: Umm-hmm, but as you said justifying what they were about rather than - like you've never read all the works of Shakespeare?) Not really, I've been through it, I know about it and I have read lots of books, but it's meaningless. (SL: But not to learn but just to see what they are about?) Just to see what's going on.

SK: Robert can I ask you what your relationship was with Krishnamurti... he deals with I guess he deals with more of looking at the contents...

R: Well what can I say? (SK: I don't know?) I didn't have any personal relationship with Krishnamurti. He had a message.

SV: Robert in inquiring doesn't there come a time like you just have to stay silent and you feel yourself just being drawn in. Do you still look at it, as long as you are aware of it, do you keep still questioning it?

R: As you keep asking yourself, "Who am I?" You become quieter and quieter until the day comes when you stop asking and you remain in silence. (SV: But I'm talking about during the inquiry, like you have an experience of like, almost like your awareness is going somewhere, is to keep questioning continuously?) You automatically do what you have to do. As you keep questioning you will find that you are becoming calmer and quieter and more blissful and you will question less and less. (SV: But as long as you are aware you question?) As long as you're physical you question.

Okay, let's close our eyes for a few moments. Pay attention to your respiration. Become the witness to your respiration. Realize that the breath is part of the bodily procedure, but yet you are able to watch it, to observe it. You become the witness to your breathing. If thoughts come to you simply observe them also and go back to watching your breath. Now ask yourself, "Who is the witness?" Who watches? "I am." With your breathing, inhale and say "I," exhale and say, "am."

(tape ends) [TOC]

EVERYTHING LEADS TO SILENCE

10th March, 1991

Robert: Peace. Good afternoon. It's good to be with you again. I consider this my spiritual family. We are all one, there is no difference.

People still ask me, "Robert, what do you see when you look at us? Do you see energy? Do you see consciousness? Do you see a play of lights? Do you see emptiness?" If I saw any of those things I wouldn't be able to function. I see what you see, you! The only difference is, I realize I am not the body. And when I say, "I'm not the body," I'm speaking of the universal body, which contains you. Therefore, if I'm not the body, and I see that, I see that you are also not the body.

I simply see the world as superimposed images on the screen. But I'm always aware that you are images. And so is the body, and so are the trees, and the sky, and the planets, and the animals, and the insects, and everything else. For some reason I'm always aware of that. I'm aware that it's like a bubble, and the bubble bursts, and the reality expresses itself as consciousness.

Therefore I see you as you see me, but I see you as consciousness, the reality. Or I see you as I see myself, as a screen, and the whole universe is simply a superimposition on the screen. I do not see you as a human being. I do not see this radio, or the lamp, or this table, as an entity of itself. I see it as consciousness.

This doesn't mean that consciousness manifested these things. As I always explain, consciousness is self-contained, and only manifests itself. These things are like optical illusions. They do not really exist, as a dream does not really exist. In the dream you're carrying on, you're flying back from New York to California, you're experiencing all kinds of things in your life, and everything appears to be real. But you wake up and the bubble is burst.

So I guess the only difference between you and me is that I'm always aware of that. If you're always aware of that, there's no fear. Fear only comes when you believe the world to be real. When the world proves to be an illusion, where is there fear? What in the world can upset you, if you know the world is but a dream?

You may say, "Well it may be a dream, but I don't want to be hurt in the dream. I want my dream to be smooth and easy. I want to be happy and harmonious and healthy." If you think in those terms, you are not aware yet of what consciousness is. Consciousness transcends all of that. Consciousness is divine harmony. None of those things exist.

I realize that's hard to comprehend. The worst things can appear to happen to my body, to my affairs, to my life, yet I am aware that it's not happening. I'm not imagining that it's not happening. I'm not repressing it. I'm not saying to myself, "Robert, you've got to see only the good." It's beyond all that. There is no good. There is no bad. It's total freedom, total liberation.

Look at it this way. You have an idea what God is because God has been branded into your head since you were a little kid. Can you imagine God having fear, of anything? Or God going through any kind of experience? Or God saying, "This is good, this is bad, this is right, this is wrong, I'd rather have this than that?" There is no duality in God.

So the universe is ultimate oneness. Ultimate oneness is another word for divine harmony. It is beyond all concepts and preconceived ideas. The human mind cannot comprehend it. Suffice it to say that all is well. It is when we begin to quiet the mind that you come closer and closer to this understanding. It's when the thoughts begin to stop, when they slow down, that you become more aware that all is well and the reality comes to you by itself. As long as you keep identifying with the world and the things of this world, you can never know the truth about yourself.

And again you may say, "Well, I've got to function in the world. I've got to work, I've got to have a family, I've got to look after my interests." Who says you don't? But it has nothing to do with you.

You have to understand that your body will take care of itself. The dream will go on by itself. You will do whatever it is you came to this earth to do, without you thinking about it, without you trying to make something happen, without trying to straighten out anything in this world. This is what I mean when I say, "Be yourself. Just be yourself. Live in the eternal now." That's being yourself. Be spontaneous. Allow the world to unfold as it should. Do not be judgmental. Look at everything fresh and new, with awe. Have reverence for all of life, and ask yourself, "Who am I?" Then things will begin to happen.

The closest thing you can come to, to having an experience of quiet mind, is chanting. Chanting has a vibration in the nervous system that actually causes the mind to slow down. There are many people who cannot do atma-vichara, self-inquiry too long. And for those people who are practicing self-inquiry, sometimes you are meant to take a break. So put on a chanting tape and chant along with it to yourself, or out loud, and you will find that you go deeper within yourself and the mind begins to become quiescent, still, calm. So let's do that right now, shall we.

(Chanting)

Some people tell me they like the talks better than anything else we do. Some people tell me they like the chanting better. Some people tell me they like the question and answers better. Some people tell me they like the silence better. Remember what this is. This is satsang. It's not a lecture or a musical festival. Everything we do is important, even if I spoke about the weather and nothing else. It's being at satsang that causes something to take place within your consciousness and lift you higher.

There was once a holy man who died and went up to heaven. He came to the pearly gates and banged on the gate. And God came out and said, "What do you want?"

And the holy man said, "I am your servant. I have come." And God came said, "Sorry, there's no room for you here. Goodbye," and left.

The holy man was perplexed. He sat down in front of the gate and started to ponder. "Why didn't God let me in?" And he sat for two years thinking, "Why couldn't I get into heaven?" And finally it came to him. So he banged on the gate again and God came and said, "Who are you? What do you want?" The holy man said, "I am your servant. I have converted thousands of people on your behalf. I have preached the bible to millions. I have done good deeds. Let me in." And God said, "Sorry, I don't care what you've done, there's no room in here for you," and went away.

This time the holy man was really disturbed. He couldn't understand this. "Why won't God let me in?" he said. So he sat down in front of the gate again. Centuries passed. Remember he was dead anyway so it didn't matter. He was pondering why God didn't let him in. Then it came to him. So again he got up and he banged on the door, on the pearly gates. God came out and said, "Who are you? What do you want?" And he said, "Lord, I am your humble servant, but I must confess my sins. I have had sexual affairs with my female devotees. I have eaten meat and told people I was a vegetarian. But I confess everything to you. Can I come in now?" So God looked at him and said, "I don't care what you do, there's no room for you here." And went away.

Again the holy man said, "What is this? I've done everything I can. I'm going to sit at this gate if I have to sit here for all eternity, until I find out what the problem is." So he sat for years and century after century, pondering. "I confessed my sins to God. I confessed my good deeds to God. I want to get into heaven. Wait a minute, who is this I? Who is the I that committed sins? Who is the I that committed good deeds? Who is the I that wants to get into heaven? Who am I?" And all of a sudden he started laughing. It came to him. He rolled over in laughter and he got up and banged on the gate. And God came and said, "Who are you?" And he said, "I am yourself." And God opened the gate and said, "Come in. There never was a room here for me and you."

And so it is with us. We claim we want to be self-realized. We do not realize that we are already self-realized, and we just have to let go of believing, "I am the doer." It makes no difference what you've done in the past. It makes no difference if you've done good deeds or bad deeds, as far as self-realization is concerned. Once you know the truth, you become free. The truth is, there is no past. There never was a past. The universe has no foundation. There is nothing to hold it together. Therefore there is nothing that you have done that can keep you out of heaven, so-to-speak.

Now remember, this doesn't give you license to go out and hurt people and rob banks, and do whatever you think you want to do because it doesn't matter. That's not what I'm saying at all.

As far as you're concerned, as long as you believe you are the doer and you are the body-mind phenomena, everything you do has to be accounted for. The lord of karma is going to get you, as long as you believe you are human and you are the body. Then you can't get away with anything, for you run into the law of cause and effect, karma, and you have to deal with the personal god, Ishvara.

Henry likes Ishvara, good friend of his.

SH: That's your dream. (laughter as Robert continues)

As long as you believe you are human, you are the doer, and you are a personal I, then there's a personal god, and that's where prayer comes in. You can pray to your personal god, and you will be helped. Your personal god will take care of you if you surrender and submit to him or her, whatever your personal god is.

But when you submit you are giving up your ego, are you not? You're saying I am nothing and you're everything. This helps you. As you keep going in that direction one day you will awaken to the fact that the god you've been praying to is none other than yourself. For how can this god be separate from you? Where would he live? What would be his nature?

You begin to understand, I am that. You find freedom in yourself. You begin to see that god is not within myself, actually, I am in God. What I call God, is consciousness. I am conscious. I am aware. I exist. I am. And there's nothing else. You begin to see yourself as omnipresent. You are no longer limited to your body or to the personal I. You have broken through, and you live in glory.

Your job is to keep the mind from wandering. The mind has to be held by you, to stop it from thinking. Stop it from going berserk. The mind is not your friend. It makes you human. It makes you believe you are a body, separate. As soon as you can see that your body is an emanation of your mind, it has no existence whatsoever except in your mind, you also begin to see that the body of the universe is the same as your body. Therefore it is a manifestation of mind. This brings a semblance of freedom. Bondage begins to break up, when you can see this. You look at the world and you realize the world is the Self. I am that Self. There is nothing else.

You want to share this truth with your friends, with your family and with your associates, but you cannot, for there are no words to describe this. Everywhere you look, you see freedom. Everywhere you look, you see love. All the trivialities are gone. The judgments have dissipated. You have nothing to fear and nothing to fight. All is well.

It comes as an idea. Have you ever seen those cartoons of a light flashing when somebody gets an idea? Something like that happens to you. It's as if you're awakened from a long sleep. In this awakening there is no past and there is no future. There is just beingness. You have just become yourself. You have not become anything foreign or anything strange. You simply awakened to yourself, and you feel wonderful.

You have to ask yourself, "Who do I really think I am?" And you can tell by the amount of sorrows or happiness or human endeavors that you go through. If you believe you are human then you experience human happiness, human sadness, you go through human experiences. You can never know the Self that way. But as soon as you stop reacting to your human goodness...

There are people who tell me, "I've never had a bad day in my life." So I tell them, "You're just as stuck in your good days that you are in your bad days. For realization is not having good days." Try to understand that human goodness has nothing to do with this. Human goodness is karmic, and when the karmic patterns wear off you will experience the opposite. You want to go beyond, beyond all understanding, beyond all conceptual thinking, beyond all intellectual concepts, beyond anything that is known to man, and of course that's silence.

Everything leads to silence. It is in the silence that you experience pure awareness. It's in the silence that you experience bliss. It's in the silence that you are. You are not anything that you can describe. You have become the pure Godhead. You have awakened.

Why not awaken now? Why continue to play games? Wake up. Know who you are. Be yourself. Leave the world alone. Again, your body, as it appears to you, will function in the world. And it will do whatever it came here to do. But leave it alone. Do not interfere with the process. Do not react to any conditionings. Keep identifying with the Self. The Self is I-am. You simply become aware that I-am. That's how you identify with yourself. You feel, "I-am, I-am, I-am."

If anything comes after that, inquire, "To whom has this come?" I am not this and I am not that, "I am." Even if the word God comes after I am, your mind is playing tricks on you. Ask, "To whom does this come? The word God?" I am will suffice. That's all you have to be is I am. Everything else is redundant, superfluous. If your mind tells you, "I am the body," again inquire, "to whom does this come?" Whatever words are put into your mind, get rid of them. Listen to the silence. Listen to I am.

(long silence)

Some people wonder if it's good to ask questions. Some people are afraid to ask questions because they think somebody will think they are stupid. Nothing can be further from the truth. The answer to that is yes and no. There is a certain point about this teaching, you may be wondering about, something you do not understand, so you should ask a question. On the other hand if you come in here with the right attitude, all your questions will be answered from within yourself.

Therefore do not feel strange if you ask a question. That's all part of the teaching. There might be something going on that you'd like to know, that I haven't covered. Therefore feel free to ask any question about spiritual life or anything else. Doesn't matter what you ask. I don't have the answers, but you can ask anyway.

SG: Have you found a deepening as you continue, a deepening of the experience of your Self, has it deepened as time has gone by, or has it stayed the same? In other words when a person realizes that, does it continue to deepen and mature with time or...?

R: There is no deepening involved, you either become awakened or you're not. But on the other hand the appearance is, you become more peaceful on the path. And all the things that used to disturb you, seem to dissipate. (SG: So there is a process as realization occurs, there is a sort of process...) It's not really a process for realization. (S: Yeah.) It's a process for yourself to become a better person. But awakening comes by itself. And it has nothing to do with that. But the appearance of what you've said happens also. (SG: As a better person you continue to be a better person after that self-realization?) No, not after. After self-realization there's nobody left to be a better person. The better person comes before. On the other hand, there have been thieves, murderers, who have, all of a sudden for one reason or another, have become self-realized. It depends on the person. But again, you're either awake or asleep. There is no in between. Once you wake up you realize that you've always been awake. There never was a time when you were not. But before that you go through all kinds of games and rituals and experiences, sometimes. It all depends on the maturity of the person. (SG: What if the person is immature and they have, as you say, a realization itself. That immaturity, is that healed in the course ... in the presence of self-realization? Is that immaturity healed and so the person becomes more established in their...?) If a person awakens, there is no question of immaturity. Those questions are gone. For again, there is no one left to be mature or immature. You're just awake. And all concepts are finished. All the things we're talking about go on before awakening. But once awakening comes, there's no question. (SG: So those beings, those - I'm sorry to keep going...) That's okay. (SG: Those individuals, those so-called sinners who suddenly have realization, what happens to all those tendencies, those samskaras? Are they burnt up in that realization?) Completely burnt up. They never existed.

(break in tape)

R: (tape begins abruptly) ...has the bubble gone? There's no bubble because there is no one to experience the bubble.

SU: But you said that the divine harmony was part of the bubble, or did you?

R: I didn't say it exactly like that. (SU: You didn't say it?) I didn't say it exactly like that. There appears to be a bubble which is a manifestation of the world, but the bubble bursts, and then there is total freedom. The bubble is the world. It's like a bubble, like a dream. Once someone bursts the bubble, the dream is over and you're free. So where is the need of a bubble? There has to be someone to experience the bubble. When there is realization, the experiencer and the experience, both have been transcended. In other words, there is no one to experience anything. (SU: You won't experience the freedom either.) That's right. Freedom is only a word that's spoken before realization. For whom is there freedom when one is realized? One becomes freedom. There is no such word for the realized person.

SG: If someone is sleeping, can you go over to the student, shake him and wake him up? Can you do that to me?

R: Walk over and wake you up? As far as I'm concerned you're already awake. But you have to be able to see it yourself. (SG: Can one person do that for another person, help another person to wake up?) That's very rare, but it's possible. That usually happens to a person who in many lives has been on a spiritual path, a high path, and then through a touch or a glance, they go all the way, and they break through maya, and become free, that's possible but very rare. As far as asking if I can do that, there's no I left to do anything. If I did something like that, there would be a me and a you. But there is no me and there is no you. There is only ultimate oneness. So I have no reason to do that. If you can understand, there is one Self, there is no one left to do anything for anyone else. The doing is part of the dream. When the awakening comes, there is only one, there is no doer. People who do things like that are yogis. But Jnanis never do things like that.

Yet there are people who claim that that's happened. Many awakened people in the time of Ramana Maharshi used to claim that when he looked at them or touched them by mistake, caused the awakening process. He denied everything. That's why it depends on the maturity of the individual. Anything is possible.

SB: Does eating a non-vegetarian diet cause the awakening to take longer or prevent it.

R: As far as I'm concerned, it's morally correct to be a vegetarian. The quality of the soul becomes purified and you come closer to realization. Eating meat makes the human body gross and pulls you down to the earth. That's why they speak of the three gunas in all spiritual teachings. Meat eaters have tamasic qualities, which are the lowest qualities of humanhood. Therefore it's better not to eat meat. Your thinking becomes clearer, you become more purified, and you're able to absorb the higher teachings. Spiritual aspirants should eat satvic foods, which are grains, fruits and vegetables mainly, some milk now and again. And they should eat small meals. And perhaps observe a day of fasting once a week. Food should not be very important to you. Whatever is set before you, you should eat, and not think about it too much. People get lost in food these days. Which food is right? Which food is bad? Which food makes you live long? Which food makes you healthy? In the end, everybody drops dead anyway. So really it doesn't make that much difference. (SB: You said the soul becomes more purified, what is soul?) Soul is something that the human body thinks it has. As long as you believe you're human, then there is a soul that leaves the body after you drop your body. And it goes into the astral plane and plays games with itself. But as you begin to understand that I am not the body or the doer, then for whom is there a soul? There is no body, there is no soul, there is no astral plane. There is only the Self. (SB: Isn't the soul identical to the Self when it is purified of all mind?) No. If the soul were identical with the Self, then there would be duality, there would be two. There would be the soul and the Self. (SB: Isn't the soul the Self?) No. (SB: When it is purified of all personal I and mind?) The soul cannot become purified. The soul is part of the personal I. The Self is soul-less. Why would the Self need a soul? (SB: So then you're saying the soul is the mind?) The soul is the mind. The soul is the personal-I. (SB: Okay.)

R: All those things are manifestations of your own thoughts of the mind. But in truth, there is no thing but the Self, and I am is that.

We get caught up in all these concepts that keep us earthbound. For instance in my diet, I eat grains and fruits and vegetables, but I don't give much thought to it. My body automatically gets up and it goes for the food it needs to sustain itself. Yet I have nothing to do with that.

SS: If I am not my thoughts...not being my body, this being my life, I'm looking at everything as if through it, and I don't see how I can live my practical aspects of being the body and with all the things I have to do in this stage of life?

R: If you really knew you were not your body, that question will never come to you. (SS: Pardon me?) That question would never come to you, due to the fact that your body will always take care of itself. Who grows the oranges in the orange tree? Who grows mangoes in a mango tree? Who grows the grass? Who takes care of the world and the earth? The same power that takes care of all the things on this planet, will take care of your body. You don't have to worry about it. Everything will be okay.

Your body will not walk into the street and get hit by a car unless you are day dreaming. You will be awake. Being awake is not being in a stupor or walking into walls, or getting hit by a car purposely. Being awake is being aware. Everything just happens spontaneously. But it happens better than you can ever imagine, if you were thinking about it. Therefore be yourself and you will see what transpires.

See I picked up a glass of water and I drank a little bit. I didn't think about it. It was spontaneous. I didn't say, "I wonder if I'll be able to drink the water. I wonder if the water is pure and fresh, or if the glass is going to break." It's the same with your body. When you stop thinking about your body, it'll take care of itself better than you can ever do it.

SL: To those of us who have expressed verbally, "Oh, I'll never get this, or, it seems so difficult, or, it may take life-times," you say, "don't say that." Is this from knowing that our words have power, because our lives have power to create what we expect?

R: As long as you are in the physical plane, words and mind do have power. The words come from your mind. When you say something negative about yourself you're keeping yourself earthbound. Even if you make a mistake, realize you made a mistake and forget it, and go forward. Do not dwell on the mistake. Do not dwell on the error. See what it was, correct it if you can, and go forward. But keep your mind on your Self, on I-am, and you will find everything will go well for you.

SL: In the bible it says, "In the beginning was the word." Was that teaching meant to show us that our words are powerful, that they begin a process?

R: They're actually talking about a primeval word "Om." The first current of creation was "Om." That was the word. And out of that came creation. So if you want to go back into creation you chant Om, and you'll get to the cause of creation. But we teach and we understand that there never was a creation. (SL: Except that when were living on this level there is?) So you have to ask yourself, "For whom is there creation?" and you'll find out that it never existed. No thing has ever been created. (SL: In the exercise that we say in the morning — we understand that everything is a projection of my mind, but in fact we're working on this level to tell ourselves that we are not realized?) No, you're not doing that at all. You never want to tell yourself that we are realized. (SL: Now, that we are realized.) Oh, you are realized? (SL: Is that what you're saying?) What you are really saying is, everything that you observe with your eyes is a manifestation of your own mind, and your mind doesn't exist. So there is nothing that exists. First you realize everything comes out of your mind, everything, everything! And then the realization will come that your mind doesn't exist, and you'll be free.

SG: When realization starts, I believe Ramana Maharshi used to say that it occurred on one side of a part of the heart area it starts in the heart area. Is that in your experience, mainly in that area where the heart is or...?

R: The reason Ramana Maharshi said that is because people wanted to pinpoint him. They said where is God located? Where is realization? So he pointed to the right side of his chest and said, in the heart, the spiritual heart. That's trying to make people realize it's someplace. But in truth, there's no heart. There is no spiritual heart. There is only the Self. There is only absolute reality. But to those naive people who need a place to work from, he'll point to the heart center. (SG: So there is no specific center itself. The body is no longer a part of man's feeling.) You never had a body, so why would you want to feel things in your body? Anything that's felt in the body is part of the illusion of a body. Remember when I'm speaking of your body I'm referring to the body of the universe, for what you see as an individualized body, you will see many bodies. But when you realize there's one body, and that is the body of the universe, then everything becomes one. And then that goes, and there is no body whatsoever. And you become free.

(tape break)

SU: You put so much on freedom?

R: We're not putting too much on freedom. It's just a word. It's a word to explain that you're not what appears to be. You're not bound to anything. There's no bondage. There's no limitation. Therefore freedom is the word that expresses that. You are not earth-bound, and you are not bound to your body. That's a lie. (SU: But you are not bound to not have a mind either. You're not bound to anything. You can be — you can have a dream and not have a dream. The minute you say, "Oh it's not right to have a dream, it's not right to do this, it's not right to do that.") I'm not saying it's not right. I never use those words. (SU: I don't mean you, but it's kind of understanding, kind of makes you nullify everything that is. And what is that could be beautiful.) Anything that's beautiful in this world is temporary. (SU: So, what's wrong with that?) What's wrong with that is you're living the mortal dream. And whatever is temporary has to come to an end, and then you'll experience the other side, unhappiness. (SU: Do you experience everything?) You experience everything as a mortal being. But who wants to go through life experiencing good and bad, bad and good, up and down. And then you have to die and go through all kinds of rituals, and karma's, and repeat it again and again and again. You want to get off the wheel and become everlasting joy, bliss, pure awareness, sat-chit-ananda, Parabrahman. You want to go beyond what appears to be.

Remember it's your mortal self that sees the goodness and the badness of the world. So surely you don't want to stay in your mortal self. You want to go beyond, you want to go beyond yourself to eternity, to total bliss. But if you don't want to then stay where you are. This is why I always say, everyone is in their right place. There are no mistakes. I'm merely voicing where I'm coming from. You can listen, or you don't have to. You can practice, or you don't have to. The choice is always yours.

You see, our relationship is different from what you think it is. It is not a guru-disciple relationship really. I am nobody's guru. I am just here, and you can look at me anyway you like. I didn't ask to be a teacher. It just happened. So here I am and here you are. What are you going to do about it? (laughter) You can shoot me, you can do whatever you like.

SL: Cream puffs or with a pie. You suggested last week that we hit you with a pie.(laughs)

R: Do that. (students laugh)

SR: Remember when you said, here I am, here you are. I got thinking, "How did I get here?" But I couldn't remember and I still don't remember how I got here. I know intellectually there is something that could be totally from my mind. But I thought could that be from my intellect at the moment is a very strange state of affairs. Whew.

SK: Robert from your orientation or whatever orientation is happening around here is there any value to heart center experiences?

R: Heart center experiences? Yes, because a heart center experience fills you full of bliss and makes you realize there is something higher, and there is something else taking place. It lifts you up. There is nothing wrong with that. (SK: Apart from nothing being wrong with it, is it useful for the process of liberation as apposed to...?) Nothing is useful for liberation, except realizing I-am. Every experience you have, including your heart center experience, you have to inquire and ask, "To whom does this come?" Eventually everything has to go, including all spiritual experiences.

(tape break then Robert continues)

If you truly wish to repent, just sit in silent meditation and see the perfect reality within. For all manners of error merely arise in erroneous thought, and like the morning dew before the rising sun, can perfectly be eliminated through the benevolent light and wisdom.

Do we have some announcements Ed?

SE: By popular demand, Easter Sunday Bhandara has been moved from 2 to 6. And there is a new talk back there, of Robert's talks. And beginning next week we're going to handle designer loin cloths as part of the ... forget it. (SL: Not a bad idea. Is that the new dress code?)

SE: New dress code, right. (laughs)

SL: Another announcement, it's Edward Muzika's birthday today!

(happy birthday wishes from everyone).

Robert: Let's sing happy birthday.

(Everyone sings happy birthday to Ed as tape ends)

[TOC]

JNANA MARGA - THE PATH OF KNOWLEDGE

14th March, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, peace. Good evening. I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to see you again. It's very commendable on your part that you can be here tonight. After all, you could be watching TV, you could be going out with your girl friend or boy friend, you could go to a good movie, you could go get drunk.

Student: Then what am I doing here? (students laugh)

R: I don't know. Ask yourself. But you decided to come here and that means something, not to me, but to yourself. It means that you're tired of the world, to an extent. It means that you realize what this world really is. It's not bad, it's not good. It means that you want to wake up, so there is something within you pushing you. All you have to do is to quiet your noisy mind and allow it to happen, that's all. You do not have to go through rituals, initiations or anything else. You simply have to quiet your mind and everything will take care of itself.

Let me ask you a question. What do you think is the difference between this teaching, Jnana Marga, and the rest of the yogas, prayer, religions and whatever? What is the basic difference? Who can tell me?

SJ: Jnana Marga is not concerned with anything of a relative nature, not even calming the mind, really. (R: Well, in a way that's true.)

SG: No object? (R: In a way that's true also, but there's a more rational explanation.)

SF: There is nothing to be obtained. Just to recognize.

R: Well that's true too. Actually, the answer I'm looking for is this: In every teaching besides Advaita Vedanta, there's a personal I. Think about that. Let's take Hatha yoga. The I learns postures and the ego becomes expanded. Because you can say, "I can stand on my head and twist my feet," and you give it a Sanskrit name. (laughs) But you still say, "I can do this," so the I has become inflated.

SJ: Or it can be, right? (R: Sure.) It can be, propensity is worth a bit.

R: Take raja yoga, the eight limbed path, now these things are good. There's nothing wrong with these things. I'm not putting them down. But there has to be someone to learn the jamas, nijama, the virtues. There is somebody who is learning all these things. The I has learned to become virtuous. Take Kundalini yoga. I am focusing on the chakras, on each chakra. There's always I and I and I. Take prayer. I am praying to God. Again there's nothing wrong with these things, but the reason we call this the direct path is because this is the only teaching that investigates the I. We're not interested in effects. Whatever the effect may be, we realize that the I is behind it. We realize that if we find the I, and follow it to its source, everything else will be wiped out and we'll become free. This is why it is called the direct path.

Also what is the difference between meditation and Jnana Marga, because I mean most of you realize that on this path it is not really necessary to meditate? So what's the main difference between meditation and this path?

SJ: There has to be someone to meditating.

R: True, but that's not the answer I'm looking for. In meditation there's always an object of your meditation. And again the I is concentrating on certain words, mantra, or whatever. Therefore you're not getting rid of the I. You're concentrating on something else, where you exclude everything except that mantra or the words of your meditation, whether it's God, or whatever.

In this teaching you simply inquire for the source of the I. "Who am I? Where did I come from?" Even when I say to you, "Where did I come from?" some of you are relating to your body, aren't you? You're thinking where did I come from, as a body? But that's not what we mean. You want to know where the I came from, not where you came from. If you find out where the I came from you will realize that you do not exist. You never did and you never will. That's the point. Where did I come from? And as you get used to this kind of thinking, whenever you use the word I, you will never refer to your body again.

For instance, if you have a cold you usually say, "I have a cold." Only now you will catch yourself and you will laugh, because you will say, "I has the cold." Sounds like bad English. "I has the cold. It has nothing to do with me. So where did the I come from that has the cold?" And as you follow the I it will lead you to the source, for there's no I and there's no cold.

You can use this method for everything. "I am hungry." Well catch yourself, and realize that I is hungry. I is not my real Self. I is hungry, yet my real Self can never be hungry. I'm tired, I'm depressed, I'm happy, I feel beautiful, I feel wonderful. It's all the same thing. As long as you are referring to your body you're making a big mistake. Separate yourself from I.

There's only one I actually, and that I is consciousness. When you follow the personal I to the source, it turns into the universal I, which is consciousness. Begin to catch yourself. Begin to realize your divine nature. And you do this by keeping quiet. The fastest way to realization is to keep silent. Yet you have to know why you are keeping silent. This is why you can't tell this to the average person. If a person has no inkling of Advaita Vedanta, you cannot say keep silent. For to them it means just to be quiet. They don't realize it means to go deep, deep, deep, deep within, to that place where absolute reality lives, and that's the silence.

Actually the human body cannot keep silent. There's something else that enters the silence. It has nothing to do with your humanity. It's only after years perhaps of meditation in previous lives, that you can be mature enough to really know what this path is all about. When I give you these practices, it's not for you as a human being. You appear to be able to go through it as a human being, but I can assure you your humanity has nothing to do with it. When you enter the silence you enter a profound peace, bliss consciousness, pure awareness. That's what the silence is. It's not being quiet. It's beyond that. It's not just quieting your mind, like I say all the time. It's understanding that there's no mind to quiet. When you realize there's no mind, you automatically become silent. When you still think you've got a mind, you make every effort to quiet the mind, and you can't.

How many of you believe you can quiet the mind through effort? You can't do that. It's not the effort that makes you quiet your mind. It's the intelligent understanding that you have no mind to begin with. Then you just keep still and everything takes care of itself. If you have to meditate, by all means meditate. This path is never against any other method, due to the fact they all eventually lead to awakening. You have to do whatever you have to do. But for those who can understand what I'm talking about, and realize you're dealing with no mind, no body, no world, no universe, no God, an awakening comes immediately, because there's no one who is sleeping. Do you follow this?

If you think you've got something to overcome, if you're going to believe you've got to work on yourself, you've got to make some kind of effort, it will be hard. After all, who makes the effort? The ego, who's telling you all these things you've got to overcome? The mind, you think you've got to overcome your bad habits, you've got to overcome past karma, you have to overcome samskaras. That's all a lie.

I realize that I talk about these things sometimes. It sounds like a contradiction, but I am sharing with you the highest truth. There are no samskaras to overcome, because they never existed. There's no karma to overcome because it doesn't exist. But for those immature students, they have to work on something, so we explain to them there's karma, there're samskaras, there are latent tendencies that have got hold of you, and you have to transcend them. Yet I'm telling them a lie. But they really need to hear that at this time of their evolution, otherwise they couldn't work with anything else.

But the truth is, you have nothing to overcome. Think about that. If you had something to overcome you would never overcome it, for it is the nature of mind to play games with you. As soon as you overcome one thing, another thing pops up, and you have to overcome that. When you overcome that, something else pops up. Say you have a drinking habit, and you say, "I've got to overcome this." You may overcome it. It leads to a bad temper. Then you have to overcome the bad temper. It leads to telling lies. Then you have to overcome telling lies. It never ends until you begin to realize I has nothing to overcome.

Then you start working on the I. It is then you finally realize it's this personal I that's been giving the trouble. That's an advanced state, but that's also a lie, due to the fact the personal I never existed. But you don't know that. Because you think the personal I exists, you have to use self-inquiry to lead you to the place where you realize the personal I does not exist. It never has, and it never will.

Yet wouldn't it be wonderful if you could just sit down and realize all this in a flash and become free. We will not allow ourselves to do that for some reason. We want to play the game of overcoming. So we say, "I've got to work on myself. I've got to practice. I've got to meditate. I've got to be alone. I've got to do this and I've got to do that." But I say to you tonight, there's no thing you have to do. You just have to realize what I'm saying and awaken, and that's it.

Again, who has to awaken? It's all a pack of lies, but I'm using words. How can the Self awaken? The Self never went to sleep. Do you not realize who you are now? You're not a mortal human. There are no words to express what you are. You have to find out. So you practice. But while you're practicing your sadhana, keep in back of your mind someplace, there's really no one who practices. After all who does the practice? It's your body and your mind. If you can only remember there's no body or mind that exists, then there's no one to practice. So while you're practicing, remember that.(laughs)

I know you're going to walk out tonight and say, "Well, what do I do now?" (students laugh)

Look at it this way. As long as you feel body consciousness, and as long as your mind, so called, still has the power to make you feel this way and that way, then you have to do some practice. Otherwise your body-mind will control you. The highest practice is atma-vichara, self-inquiry. The reason I'm talking to you like this tonight, is because I can feel that all of that who are here have been through many paths and you're not newcomers, so you're ready for this. You're ready to hear that there's no practice, there's no God, there's no enlightenment, there's no past lives, there's no you, and you're free.

People still want to know, when everything is gone, what's left, what is the substratum, the cause, the underlying cause of all existence? There has to be something that holds it all together. Says who? There's nothing to hold together. Remember also, that the finite cannot comprehend the infinite. So when I say there's nothing that holds any thing together, I mean there's nothing that words can describe.

When I use the words like bliss or pure awareness, consciousness, sat-chit-ananda, Parabrahman, and Parabrahman is very powerful because it means beyond Brahman. What can be beyond Brahman? Silence. There's no such thing as Parabrahman, due to the fact when you think of it, it signifies an object to you, for instance, a place to be in. A place to be in the silence, that is Parabrahman. You're wrong. There's no place, there's no silence and there's no Parabrahman. Then what is there? Find out. Only you can know yourself. For there are no words to describe it.

You have to come to terms with your life. It takes total honesty to do that. You can't go on fooling yourself. Look how you run around from pillar to post. You go here, you go there. You're always searching, you're always looking, you're always striving, for what? Some of you think that you're going to find a teacher up in the sky someplace, and you're going to go searching for that teacher until you find him or her. No such teacher exists. When you finally settle down and start going into the silence more often, your teacher will appear to you and you will find he's none other than yourself.

You may ask then, "What am I doing here with you people?" I am your Self. I can see that very clearly. There's no difference between you and me. When you feel depressed, when you feel angry, when you feel out of sorts, that's me you feel. When you feel happy, when you feel enlightened, when you feel beautiful, that's also me you feel. All this is the Self, and I am that.

Some of you still think I'm talking about Robert. Robert has nothing to do with this. I'm speaking of omnipresence. I'm speaking of no-thing. And I think to continue speaking is a waste of time.

(silence)

Om, Shanti, shanti, shanti.

I'm just going to sit here like this and you can do whatever you like. If you feel like asking a question, ask a question. If you feel like making a statement, make a statement. If you feel like throwing me out of the door feel free to do so. (laughter)

SS: Purely an academic question... (R: Umm.) Unimportant but... (R: Everything is important.) Pardon me? (R: Everything is important to you.) Okay, Advaita Vedanta, what does the term translate and where is it from? Who created that term and when?

R: The ancient Rishis in the Upanishads, they came to the conclusion, and most of them never knew each other, that there is only ultimate oneness. Advaita Vedanta means, "The Oneness of the Vedanta." There is only ultimate oneness and this was about four or five thousand years ago. They handed the teaching down by mouth to mouth, from person to person. Again the interesting point is, in those days there were many Rishis and it came through them, they just awoke, they became realized and the message was always the same. The same message we're presenting here. So it's a very old antiquated teaching. (SS: When that was written down what was it written down in?) The scriptures called the Upanishads.

SJ: The Veda's is a big body of work and the Untas or the end of it is Vedanta, which is the cream of their work.

SG: Robert you spoke of, there was no need for initiation and I was reading Osbourne and a lot of other devotees of Ramana, talking about the initiation of Ramana's glance. (R: Umm.) From their perspective and from their imagination that there was initiation. They even had a court case... (Robert laughs) ...they took Ramana to court saying that you initiated me as Vedanta.

R: Well this is from their own perspective. They feel that is what happened. Just like many people who were in front of Ramana, used to claim that he did this for them, he healed them, he saved their lives, he did this, he did that and he denied everything. But they all claimed that because of him all these things happened. A Jnani is never aware of anything they do because there is nobody left to do anything. It's like a burnt rope, it's good for nothing.

ST: And Robert you call that absolute awareness. (R: I call what?) A burnt rope like you say is that absolute awareness? (R: You can say that.) Okay and there's nothing left, no knowledge, no nothing. (R: Yes.) Is there a state where there is awareness of the minutest detail?

R: Is there a state where there is awareness of the minutest detail? In reality there is no state at all. (ST: And how can it be created?)

(tape break. Tape restarts abruptly)

SR: Robert, from the perspective of doing practice. (R: Doing what?) Doing practice. (R: Uh-huh.) Are the words, "Who is I?" as appropriate as "Who Am I?"

R: If it's good for you, if it works for you, it's good. Whatever works for you? If you were able to say, "Chocolate bar," and you felt something and it worked for you that'd be great. (SR: What does working for me mean beside from feeling good?) It means that for you it means something sacred. It means something wonderful, something that you wanted to attain. That is the beginning and all of that leads to silence. Beyond words and thoughts. It automatically leads you there. That is why I said in the beginning, "All methods are good."

For instance: If you have a mantra and believe in the mantra and keep repeating it over and over again. The day will come when the mantra becomes less and less for you and the silence becomes more and more, until you drop the mantra all together. The mantra is only to make you one pointed. So you can exclude other thoughts but then the mantra has to go too. With the blow of the nose you awaken. (Laughter)

SS: What about his question about the "Who is I?" If there is no small I and there is also no big I... (R: Umm.) In that sense it doesn't make any difference but if I'm asking, "Who is I?" small I - this is a very different kind of a feeling of a question from asking, "Who am, big I?"

R: Yes, due to the fact when you inquire deeply, "Who is I?" the I begins to disappear. It turns into the big I which is pure awareness. So you use that method to lift you up and make you free.

SN: Robert, what if you ask, "Who am I?" and you get confusion and from that you get fear?

R: Then you have to ask yourself, "To whom does this confusion and fear come to?" And realize it comes to me, then you say, "Who am I?" again. "Who is this I that feels fear and confusion?" And keep still. And the fear and confusion will ultimately disappear because it never existed to begin with.

ST: Robert how did this illusion start? (R: It never did.) Why is it here then?

R: It doesn't exist. (laughter) See that is your perception. (ST: Why do I have perception?) Because you believe you do. (ST: Why do I believe?) That is what you want. It's like when you are hypnotized you see things that don't exist.

SL: But how do we all get hypnotized to be able to make a butterfly and a snowflake?

R: We never did. It appears that way. But nothing ever happened. (SL: It's the agreement of illusion is what baffles me.) The what? (SL: The agreement of the illusion between us... (R: (laughs) ...this ego and that...)) It baffles you? Then ask yourself, "Who is baffled?" I know some of the answers I give you sound like a cop out. (laughter) But believe me it's the highest truth. (SL: We believe you.) (laughter) See I know some of you want real profound answers. (more laughter) You want me to talk for a half hour and we go into all kinds of technical terms, why?

SR: Robert, my name is Richard. (R: Hi Richard.) I want to thank you for allowing me into your home. (R: You are welcome.) I've been on a spiritual quest for many years in this life. And something is happening with me and happening to me in the past two, three months from a certain individual, in my living situation. Although I've been coming here briefly, I'm using as much as I can what you have talked about and what has entered my heart but in truth, I still do not know how to deal with my pain and my stress and unfortunately the reality is, is that my body hurts and my head hurts at times and I become nausea from the unpleasantness that...well what I call my karmic reality of my life. I know that everything is an illusion but it is hard for me to dismiss, to over ride what I'm actually going through. And that is where I'm at right now.

R: I understand perfectly what you are saying and I have great compassion for you. But look at it this way: What's the worst thing that could possibly happen to you? Is there really anything to fear? What is the worst thing that can happen?

SR: You see it's not that I even fear death so much anymore you see I just don't want my life ... see I just turned fifty-five in January and to be very truthful I have now nineteen months and eleven days of not using any mind altering substances including pretty much caffeine now. But I feel like I'm being reborn and things aren't veiling me over like substances that I have used for thirty-five years. And I don't want my life to have been in vain and I've been searching for realization for a long time. And I come here tonight and I swear like this is the first peace I have felt in a long time.

R: Everything will work out for you. (SR: Excuse me?) Everything will work out.

SR: I keep hoping that. I really do and I have flashes of moments that it's okay, you know and then something happens and I am downward spiraled and sometimes I really fear for my life more often I fear for my sanity and I've got to keep remembering that God doesn't give me any more that I can handle and I just keep hanging in there.

R: Try to remember the one who is concerned is your body. It is your mind telling you all these things. But in truth what difference does it make? What can really happen to you? Nothing. Look at me for instance, I'm good for nothing, I have no visible means of support. I'm not worth anything, I've accomplished nothing in this life. So that is wonderful. (students laugh) What I am trying to say is that you are probably better off than most people. All is well, you'll be okay.

ST: Robert. (R: Hello.) You have mentioned you have a lot of compassion. If somebody says that I have compassion that does mean it should have some influence or is it just an empty word? Or should real compassion have some deep meaning that there could be something done about the dilemmas of life? (R: You can take it anyway you like.)

SJ: Here's something interesting, there is a guy in the war and he is being interviewed or something. He is in the first battalion where they are going to start ground war. And he says, preparing for a battle here and it makes the Southern California gang wars he grew up with seem like a schoolyard shuffle and then he's quoted," If old J.C. up in the sky pulls my card there is nothing I can do about it, is there? (students laugh) (SG: Is that Advaita?) (students laugh)

R: That's good. If I can only make you understand that it makes no difference what the body goes through. If Saddam Hussein tied me to the rack and cut off my fingers and my toes and poked out my eyes, what can I do? What difference does it make? I am not that. It is the ego that makes us feel sorry about ourselves and our lot in life. Always remember that there is always somebody worse off than you. No thing is ever that bad, rejoice.

(pause)

For those of you who don't know we're having an Easter celebration. The last sunday of the month at six o'clock. We're going to have eating and music and other music and have a lot of fun. So feel free to come, but bring something to eat for at least thirty people. (students laugh)

S: Is that the 21st?

R: The last Sunday of the month whatever it is. (SM: Do we have a satsang at 2 o'clock first?) No we'll have a satsang at 6. It'll give people a chance to be with their families during the day. (SL: So then we'll be eating after that?) We'll be eating after the satsang. And then we'll have music and tell dirty jokes. (laughter) I notice that nobody checks with Henry anymore when we want to do something at his house. (students laugh)

SK: Who's Henry? (SH: That guy checked out last week. (laughter) He's old hat now.)

R: Henry is very kind to allow us to wreck his house like this.

SL: Robert when we meditate is there a way to avoid hypnotizing oneself rather than being in awareness?

R: Well sure, you simply use the method of your meditation to bring you to the place where you are not hypnotized. What makes you think you are being hypnotized? (SL: Because I seem to lose the time, I lose awareness, but I am quiet and my mind might be going on but I don't even know it.) Well what makes you think that you are hypnotized? You probably are going deeper into yourself. (SL: I don't really know what hypnotism is, but it has occurred to me that way.) Well you are better off if you don't know. (SL: But it's felt as if I might just really have been asleep?) That's good! Even if you are asleep the work is carried on while you are sleeping. And when you wake up it will continue. You definitely are not being hypnotized, don't even think of it. You might ask yourself, "Who believes she is being hypnotized?" And you will come to realize it's your ego that makes you think that. Yet in reality that is not happening. But every-time you feel that is true that you are being hypnotized, ask yourself, "Who is being hypnotized?" and you will realize that it's only for the ego and not for you and you'll go beyond it.

SG: Is there other techniques that will bring you into a state of, I think it's called laya? (R: Yes.) Does there seem to be a place for peace to keep all the tendencies you haven't cleared them out yet? (R: Umm.) How does one know the difference?

R: You will know because you will feel a bliss, you will feel a joy that you have never felt before. You'll know. There is quite a difference. It's like being asleep and being conscious. When you get into a real Jnana state, you are consciously asleep, you are aware but not of the world and you will know.

SL: Who will know? (R: Umm?) Who will know? (R: You will know.) Who? (R: You.) Phew. (Students laugh) Who would I be? (R: Whoever you want to be. Whoever you think you are.)

SG: Robert does momentum count? (R: Does what count?) Momentum. I mean if you keep this up does it tend to reach a critical mass? It's like a feeling when I come to the stage, it seems to build to build up some momentum where the thought is, if I didn't, I would lose it.

R: In a way that is true, in a way it's not. (SG: Thank you.) If you're speaking of realization it's like when you are in a room filled with darkness and you trip over the furniture and you can't see where you are walking. So you finally figure out where the furniture is, and you miss a few pieces. But once in a while you bump into it. But then one day you hand accidentally puts on the light switch and the light comes on and the darkness has been dissipated. And it will never be dark again, that is how it works. You bump into things spiritually, you have a few small awakenings, little things happen, but when it really happens it's like turning on the light. It happens all at once and you are free. (SG: Can it happen like a sunrise?) Excuse me? (SG: Can it happen like a sunrise? A gradual dawning and finally the sun?) The real awakening comes when the sun is in its full glory. But there appears to be slight awakenings like the sunrise sometimes. But the real awakening comes all at once.

SE: And you know when that happens? (R: Oh yeah, don't worry.) (students laugh)

SL: Robert you said you feel no pain, does that mean you also don't really enjoy a hot shower either?

R: No I didn't say I didn't feel no pain. I said it doesn't matter. I like a hot shower also. Not too hot.

SJ: It's an experience, it's not a concept to believe or not believe. That is why you can't grasp it, you just experience it.

R: The hot shower? (SJ: And everything else.) Don't make the shower too hot.

SL: Hot as you can stand it is the best way, we all know that. (laughs)

R: I never take a shower as hot as I can stand it. (SG: Do you like a hot shower that it doesn't matter to a Jnani?) No I don't take a hot shower. (SG: You don't take a hot shower?) I take a medium shower between hot and cold. (SG: You like a medium shower but it doesn't matter, is that what you are referring to?) I get wet. (students laugh) (SG: I didn't understand your words.) I never thought about it whether I like it or not. (SG: I really what to know about the pain. If the pain doesn't matter. Do you just like pain?) Do I just like pain? (SG: Yeah.) Why would I like pain? (SG: You may not, that's what I was just trying to find out. It seemed like you said you like a shower. You like some kind of a shower.) Medium. (laughter) (SG: You've got this liking for medium showers, is there any liking or disliking for pain?) Pain it's the same thing, medium. I don't feel it as much as the average person but I can feel something, if that is what you mean?

ST: So Robert you are never asleep right?

R: Never asleep? I'm asleep but I'm aware I'm asleep. (ST: Awareness?) I sleep about three hours a night. (ST: But you are still aware...) I'm always aware, yeah. (ST: Then what do you do in those three hours?) Nothing, the same thing I'm doing now. What do you want me to do? (students laugh)

SL: Do you dream?

R: Hardly. (SL: So when you are aware is the awareness the same as it is when you are not sleeping?) It's always the same. (SL: Are your dreams good if you have dreams ever? Or are there any value to them?) Well the last time I had something like that was more like a vision. But then there has to be someone to have a vision. But I was flying through the air and I went to Arunachala the mountain in Tiruvannamalai, by Ramana Ashram. And I went into the mountain it was hollow inside, and inside there was Shiva and Ramana and Vishnu and Krishna and Jesus and more people I didn't recognize, and Moses. We all smiled at each other and we walked toward each other and we became one beam of light which turned into a lingam. And that's it and that was a couple of years ago.

SU: I didn't hear, the beam of light turned into a what? (R: A lingam.)

ST: Is there any truth to the power of a lingam? (R: If you believe in it.)

SH: That's a nice dream. (R: Could be worse.) (students laugh)

SS: When you "woke up" in the morning, did you then, ...no because you knew you were having a dream while you were having the dream? (R: I was aware of the whole thing yeah.)

SH: So the body then goes to sleep nightly, lies down in bed and konks out but you never go to sleep?

R: The body doesn't really konk out. The body just rests. (SH: Yeah, and you are observing the resting.) I'm observing the resting, yes.

Some of you who only come on Thursday nights are not aware that we've got transcripts of some of these lessons. And we have lessons one to five they are free of charge. (SJ: Except on Sunday. (laughter)) Well they are going to be free from now on. (laughs) The fellow who prints them up, went to a lot of trouble so he was charging for them so I told him not to do that. I think the way we should do it is when we get some of these lessons some of us should make five or ten copies each and hand them out to each other. That would be the best way, so Ed doesn't have to make two-hundred copies by himself.

S: Yeah every time.

(silence)

SF: Robert if somebody goes to the satsangs and doesn't understand English?

R: It doesn't really matter, as long as they are here that's all that matters. Satsang transcends language.

SG: They are probably better off. (R: You're right.) (laughs) Often I could fall asleep when you're talking, does that make any difference if I sleep in a church. Does it make any difference?

R: It doesn't really make any difference, no. There is a very subtle vibration in a satsang and it goes into your heart whether you are sleeping or whatever you are doing. As a matter of fact if I remember correctly, before we came to Henry's house, we used to have a guy who came to satsang and he'd lie down on the floor, stretched out and go to sleep. And he always used to tell me he felt the best he's ever felt in his life. He seemed to have made the most progress than anybody else. (students laugh)

(silence)

SG: There seems to be a difference between the Sunday and Thursday nights, like Thursday nights seem to be a little deeper, is that just my perception?

R: Well nothing is done on purpose. Maybe because there is no music Thursday night?

SJ: Maybe there is less new people also. (R: Could be that.)

SU: It's the dog. (R: It's what?) The dog. (R: Dog.) (laughs)

SS: When you say it's important to be here and it's not a matter of language because you could be sleeping and you do not understand the language. It would be equally beneficial to walk down the street with you, right? (R: If that's what you believe.) What if I had satsang with a person who wasn't realized? And what if we both just sat there and tried... what is it about it that makes... are we open to it or is it that there is a vibration coming that we're getting or what is it that makes it beneficial even though we don't comprehend the language?

R: Apparently what they say in the scriptures is a person who is realized has a very positive influence on others. It's like a light bulb. The average light bulb can be twenty-five volts ... or watts but then you put a hundred watt light bulb and you get a brighter light. So the more realized a person is, the more watts he has. And so the people around him feel the illumination and they also become illumined. So satsang is about a thousand watt light bulb. And those of you who are twenty watts or thirty watts or forty watts increase your wattage by being here.

Speaking of wattage, Alan Watts is on the radio did you know that? Every Monday 2 o'clock, on Pacifica.

SS: Did you know him? (R: No.) I know him well, he used to come here, have parties here. (R: Really?) Yeah this was one of his party places. (R: I heard he was quite a party goer.) Oh he was. (laughs)

SL: His girlfriend was my room-mate. (SH: Yeah? Give us the low down of discovery.) I pass. (students laugh)

SH: You don't approve do you Fred. (laughs) He was a great entertainer. (R: He was.) And that's how he looked at himself, as an entertainer. He had no pretensions at all. (R: Yes I know. I know, that's true. He was very down to earth.) He never claimed to be enlightened, never.

SL: Now that's a back handed compliment. (laughs)

SF: What's the best way to give thank you to a Jnani, Robert?

R: The best way to say thank you to a Jnani? (SF: Yeah.) By losing your ego. (laughter) That's a good point Horat. Being devotional you give up your ego to the Jnani. As if you are praying to God. You say, "Take my ego God I no longer want it."

SS: But in what sense does the Jnani care one way or the other?

R: The Jnani is just an instrument to relieve you of your ego. There is a sort of a contradiction you're right, because there is a lot of love and a lot of compassion. Never believe that I don't care. A Jnani usually cares more than anyone else on earth, but it's different. (SS: I guess you talk so much about ... I mean it just gives a person an image of that suddenly you would be full of joy as if you hadn't been the moment before and so it's ... I mean it suggests this variation in your moods or feelings or fullness that doesn't... but of course you are that!) (students laugh because it didn't make sense)

SH: You say that a Jnani cares more than anybody on earth but it's different. How is it different?

R: It's different because it's a universal care. A Jnani sees you as the infinite. Sees you as already being realized. So a Jnani has a great compassion a great joy because he sees you as himself. (SH: Uh-huh.)

SJ: Or like knows you? (R: Same thing, yeah.)

SG: Is that exercise a thing of the personal I? (R: No there is no personal I involved.) Is it the Self? (R: The Self.) Exercising through a human being? (R: There is only one Self there is no human being. There is one Self and I am That. When I say "I am," I'm not saying Robert. I am, consciousness is that. The one Self.)

SH: But that one Self does appear to operate through a body-mind? (R: That's how it appears, yes.) In that particular body-mind, right? (R: If you say so.) What do you say? (R: "Who am I?") I don't know. (R: Neither do I.) Okay that ends it. (students laugh) (R: If you don't know then I surely don't know.)

SG: In a way a Jnani couldn't really have compassion or any relationship because relationship implies two, I mean that just... (R: There is a thin line when you talk about that because there is a relationship and yet there is not a relationship. On one level there is a relationship another level there is not. But if there is a relationship it because you need it, so there is a relationship.) On the highest level there is no relationship. (R: True.)

SJ: You could just as easily say that all there is, is a relationship it seems because it's all unthinkable to the mind. It's beyond the mind. (R: You can say that. You already said it.) I did, didn't I? (laughter)

(tape ends) [TOC]

WILL SADHANA IMPROVE MY HUMANHOOD?

24th March, 1991

Robert: I can assure to you, I can swear to you that you are not the body-mind phenomena. I can assure to you, I can swear to you that you are not the doer. That no matter what appears to be is not. No matter what experience you're going through mentally, physically or otherwise, it is not the truth about you.

The truth about you is absolute reality, parabrahman, sat-chit-ananda, pure awareness, ultimate oneness. This is what you are.

Why don't you believe me?

You think you are a frail body that goes through the world for maybe seventy, eighty years and then that is the end of you, but that's not so. You are not that body at all. That body does not even exist. It appears to exist. It appears to exist as the personal I. When you investigate the personal I you will find that there is no body, no mind, no world, no problems, no God, no universe. You are that!

You are that absolute consciousness which was never born and can never die. You are that absolute reality that has always been and will always be, the same yesterday, today and tomorrow.

Know who you are. Do not depend on the world for your sustenance, for your maintenance. But dive deep within, deeper than you've ever dove before. Deep within, deeper and deeper and you will see the truth that you are omnipresence. You are pure consciousness. This is the truth about you and there is no other truth. Accept it, be it.

There is a certain question that people ask me continuously. People from this group, people I've never saw before that call me on the phone, people I meet in the park, homeless people, aliens, wretched people, people of all nationalities. What they ask me is this: As I am practicing atma-vichara, self-inquiry in the process will my humanhood improve. In other words what they want to know is while they're doing this sadhana, whether it's the I am meditation or self-inquiry, it may take weeks, months, years, will my personal life improve. If I am sick will I become healthy, if I am poor will I become rich, if I am miserable will I become peaceful so forth and so on.

The way I answer this is, first tell me what you mean when you say, "Improve your humanhood?" What do you mean by that? And the answer is: I mean to make myself a better person. To get a better job. To be able to buy a new car. To be able to get rid of the cancer that is eating up me. To get a companion, a mate that is compatible with my way of thinking. Will all these things happen while I practice.

We'll discuss this for a while.

This question presupposes that you are a human being and you wish to improve your humanhood. What you are really doing is building up your ego making it more powerful. What is a human being to begin with?

If you looked at a human being under an electric microscope you would find something very interesting. You would see billions of molecules and if you look deeper you would find trillions of atoms, that make up the molecules. You would see space in between the atoms. If you were as small as an atom, the space between the molecules would be the equivalent distance between the planets, between the earth and mars, the earth and jupiter, the earth and the sun. There is space between the planets also. That space is consciousness. And the space out of the body is also consciousness.

What I am trying to say is that there is one space and you are that space. Your body is in a state of flux. Your body is not what you think it is. It only appears to us to be solid. Just like every other thing on this earth, the chair, the radio, the rug, the wall. These things appear to be solid but they are not. What determines your body as compared to the wall is the movement of the atoms. How fast they move or how slow they move. The atoms of the body are moving at a certain speed. They become a body.

But again if you see what I'm talking about you're really space. You are not the body because the space between the atoms is larger, more than the atoms themselves. And the space becomes expanded taking up all of space. What is behind space? What causes space? What is the substratum of the space? You are, your real nature, absolute reality. So you see you are not what you appear to be. By trying to improve something that does not exist brings upon itself suffering. For you are identifying with the appearance rather than with the reality. As long as you identify with the appearance you go through all sorts of living conditions, all sorts of experiences. And you try to improve your living condition, as it were.

You are wasting your time, for in this world you have to experience both sides of the coin. When you improve your human condition something happens sooner or later so that you may improve an experience the other side of the coin. For every up there is a down, for every forward there is a backward.

Then who are you? Who is it that wants to improve their condition? That is the first thing that you should ask yourself. Who wants to improve the human condition? And the answer is always I do. Then "Who am I? What is the source of the I that wishes to improve the human condition?"

As you begin to search for the source you will find that the I disappears. As you begin to realize the truth about yourself, that you are not the body-mind, you are not the doer, happiness ensues. This happiness comes all by itself as a result of your realization that you are not the body-mind. But you still ask, "If I'm not realized why can't I live a total harmonious life in my illusion?"

It's impossible. Everything that is born, so-to-speak, must die. You begin to die as soon as you're born. But what does happen to you, to the extent that you begin to know the truth, to that extent do you begin to transcend the so called human condition.

In other words your body may still have cancer and you're no longer trying to heal it of anything. You're simply identifying with the reality. To the extent that you identify with the reality, to that extent do you no longer feel a body with cancer.

So to other people you may appear to have cancer, you may appear to be deteriorating. Like Ramana Maharshi did before he left his body so-to-speak. Like Rama Krishna and many others. The people see a deteriorating body, but the Sage does not have a body to deteriorate. He just has no body. The body does not exist for him. This is the problem because when I speak of this I know a lot of you get lost.

How can there be nobody when I see? Ask yourself, "Who sees? What do you see?" You see poverty, you see man's inhumanity to man, you see this and you see that. The seer that sees has to be transcended. There has to be a seer to see these things. When you ask, "Who is the seer?" Both the seer and the object seen dissolve into the nothingness from whence they came. This means you should not accept what is seen.

Let the world spin, let people go through their karma, leave things alone. Let the higher power take care of the world and universe, but you identify with the real Self. The Self that is the omnipresence. The Self that is the higher power. Know that you are that. You are no longer a limited personality. You no longer are a frail human that's dying of cancer or experiencing lack or limitation or experiencing happiness, human happiness, or experiencing vibrant health.

Even Arnold Schwarzenegger is going to waste away. He may believe in his body but he's getting weaker as he gets older. He's wasted all this time identifying with the weightlifting room. When he could've become free and identified with reality.

Nobody lives forever. No situation remains the same forever. Everything ends in this world so it appears. Everything has a beginning a middle and an end. But you are not that, you have nothing to do with that picture. You are immortal, you are nirvana.

You must begin today to stop judging by appearances. The more you begin to feel this the less you talk. For what is talking all about. Except to talk about the world and people and things. Think how long you've been talking since you were born. You started with dada, mama and you expanded your vocabulary. You thought you were doing something great, you've wasted your time. The more words you know the larger the ego. The less words you know the closer you are to the Self.

What has the Self to say, to whom shall it talk to, itself? The Self is self-contained consciousness. Aware of itself, itself is omnipresence. So to whom shall it talk to, itself? It is perfect bliss consciousness. There need be no words, just a look, a touch, a glance is all you have to do.

Yet you say, "How can I do this? I work for a living, I have to eat, I have to earn my bread and butter, I have to talk." Don't worry about details. If you dive within yourself and you spend most of your time thinking about the I am, practicing self-inquiry, the details will work themselves out. You must not believe that it is up to you to work out all the details of life.

There is a higher power that knows where the appearance of your body is supposed to be and what work it's supposed to do. Trust that power. You will find out one day that the power is none other...is you. That power is your Self. But until then trust the power. I like to call this power, "The current that knows the way." It's a beautiful power, it only knows love. It wants you to become a living embodiment of love. It wants you to merge with itself.

Yet as long as you identify with the world you can never know reality. As long as you identify with your personal I, by always voicing what I feel, I feel hurt, I feel angry, I feel sick, I feel depressed, I feel happy because somebody gave me something, I feel good because I'm getting my own way. That I has got to go. The whole world, the whole universe, people places and things are attached to the I. If you follow the I to the source the whole universe will disappear.

And the question arises, "Then what? If the universe disappears will I be in outer space? Will I be in a fog?" It's a paradox. The universe disappears, yet you exist in the universe. Your body will continue going about its business but you will not be identifying with your body any longer. You will not even feel that you are in the body. But you will feel the body is in you. You will feel like a gigantic screen. Where all the items of this earth, trees, plants, flowers, bugs, murderers, lovers are all superimposed on the screen. They are on the screen and you are the screen. The screen is not in them.

So it's a misnomer to say that, "God is in me." The body that you think you are in God and consciousness. Just like the body you draw on the blackboard. But the body you draw on the blackboard is not the blackboard. The blackboard is self-contained and you may draw items on the blackboard and erase them and draw new items on the blackboard and erase those. That is like life going from one life to the next life, from one experience to the next experience.

The whole universe is superimposed on consciousness. When you change identities and identify with consciousness everything disappears. Yet you continue experiencing not as an ego but as the Self. And what do you experience? Pure awareness. You are aware of the truth, the reality. Your body will continue its sojourn through the world doing whatever it came here for, but you will not be your body.

Again this is paradoxical for you appear to be your body but you are not your body. You become a living embodiment of pure happiness, total joy and bliss. The world can no longer fool you or disturb you. You have a feeling of deep immortality. You know without words that nobody dies because nobody was born. You understand and realize without words that there is no causation for the universe. Nothing ever brought it into life. It has no cause.

If it has no cause, again you ask, "Where did it come from?" And the answer is it didn't come from anywhere. It's like hypnosis. You are hypnotized into believing something is real that is not and to you it's real when you come out of the hypnotic trance, you are part of the waking world again and that something that appeared real is gone. So it is with this world, it appears real, yet it's like a dream. You wake up and the dream is finished. When you wake up out of your mortal dream the idea of body-mind, doer is also finished.

Now is this teaching practical? Is finding your real nature practical? Of course it's practical. Remember you do not become a burden on society by practicing self-inquiry and coming closer to the truth. Many people still think that they will stay home everyday and just meditate. I remind you again it doesn't work that way. If you were meant to be active you will be active. If you were not meant to be active no matter how much you try to be active you will not be able to do anything.

Again do not concern yourself with details. Simply practice everyday. Be aware everyday. See who becomes frustrated, see who feels slighted, who is hurttable, see who is trying to give a one upper-ship on somebody else, see who competes with others, see who you are. Find out the truth. Become free.

It's wonderful to realize that your real nature is parabrahman. Beyond consciousness, beyond words and thoughts, beyond human experiences of any kind. That is how you bring peace into the world. Not by trying to make up peace slogans or demonstrations, but by becoming self-realized, awakening. Then automatically your consciousness expands and people feel it and they too automatically begin to turn within. In the beginning do not concern yourself with these things whatsoever.

When you awaken then see if you want to bring peace to this world, because I kid you not, there is no world to bring peace to. We are looking at things from both sides. When you still believe in your humanity you want to do good deeds, you want to bring peace to the world, make this world a better world in which to live but the further into truth you go, the more you become self-realized the more you are able to see, "I am the world. All this is the Self and I am that." And you live a wonderful life.

Again it begins as soon as you wake up in the morning. Try your best to see the fourth state of consciousness beyond waking, sleeping and dreaming. The fourth state is between sleeping and awakening. Try to catch yourself there.

People tell me they try and just can't. If you keep trying you will. That place where there is no thoughts. A place where there is no thinking of any kind. That still place, that is bliss consciousness. Before the I comes out and starts to do it's dirty work. Just before the I wakes up ask yourself, "Where did the I come from? What was its source? Who am I?" And the last thing before you fall asleep, same situation. When all thoughts stop and you are about to sleep, catch yourself in that state and ask, "Where did the I go? The I seems to be disappearing as I fall asleep. Where is it gone? What is its source?" And yet as you sleep as you dream as you awake there appears to be another I that is the observer of you sleeping, awake and dreaming. That is the real I, that is consciousness.

Actually there is only one I but as long as you identify with the body it appears to be a personal I. As you begin to become aware of the higher I the personal I simply disappears, for it never really existed. And the large I comes into play, which is pure awareness.

(tape break)

You will find something very interesting happening to you. You are becoming happier and happier for no reason. Your fears just melt away. Your past dissolves. The new man is born. All the guilt dissipates. You have awakened. Try it, it works.

We are one big happy family here. I'm sure you have something to say or questions to ask, feel free to do so.

SU: Robert I find the concepts of immortality, those in the physical and in our state of being, why have we chosen if we are immortal, why have we chosen this mortal, fearful part of this life, what is it about?

R: You have never chosen it. You have to ask yourself, "Who has chosen?" and you will find out that the I that you think has chosen doesn't exist. You never chose to be mortal. The mortality of you doesn't really exist. It appears to exist as personal-I. As you follow the personal-I to the source, you will find that the mortal never began and the mortal never ends. There is no mortal at all.

SU: So there is no mortal? (R: No.) So we are immortal?

R: You are immortal. That is your nature, you appear to be mortal. It's as if you are watching a movie and on the screen you see all of the different pictures. They cover the screen. You have no idea the screen exists, but the reason you are able to see the pictures is because of the screen. And if you try to grab the picture you're going to grab the screen.

So it is with us. We as mortals are superimposed on consciousness and we appear as mortal. It's all part of the grand illusion. That is what is called maya. It appears to exist but it doesn't. When you awaken you will realize that there never was a time when you were born. And there will never be a time when you cease to be. So the mortal is false. It's an appearance.

SC: Is it possible that if one does some of the things like I've said and there is an armor around us and the armor could be broken we could see our true Self?

R: You can only go so far with that method that you explained. To go all the way comes through self-inquiry. You have to get rid of the person who breaths, as well as the breath. It's all part of the false identification. From the breathing techniques that you just explained to us, it improves your physical status it makes you feel better as a mortal, but that is as far as it goes. To truly break away from that you have to ask yourself, "Who breaths? Who is a better mortal? Who is healthy?" It's the ego, be rid of the ego and you'll be free and blissful, and happy. (SC: You know as you talk and it's true and I've heard this over and over, it just seems like throwing a ball against the wall, it comes back. The ball doesn't pene- trate the wall.) What you see is what you get. So if you see your stuff that you put out coming back, and it does, stop seeing. Go beyond seeing. Find out who the seer is and what is seen, they are both the same. The seer and the seen are the same. Go beyond that.

SC: It's almost like ... I know I'm talking but, it's almost like you're talking Greek to me in that sense. Unless you understand Greek it doesn't mean anything.

R: No it's a little different. (laughter) For you simply have to inquire within yourself, "Who doesn't understand?" It's always going back to you, "Who doesn't understand? I don't. Well who is this I that doesn't understand? Where does it come from? Who gave it birth? How does it originate? It seems to originate only when I open my eyes in the morning, the I begins its work. So what is its source?" As you identify with the source, the I will disappear and you will be free.

SC: How did it happen to you?

R: Well that is a story in lesson number four. (SC: I mean was it gradual?) No. (SC: Or like that or... (flicks fingers))

R: I was sitting in the school during high school when I was 14 years old taking a test. I'll make the story succinct. All of a sudden I found myself disappearing, merging into consciousness, not as a body but as pure awareness itself. My body had merged, like melted, but I never went anywhere, there was no change. As consciousness, I realized that there's no body. No body exists. There is only consciousness itself expressing itself as pure awareness. I don't know how long it lasted but the next thing I remember is the teacher shaking me and that experience has never left me. (SC: It wasn't a preparation like we're doing it just happened out of the blue, I mean...) It just happened out of the blue.

SS: It seems to me that there is no screen.

R: There is no screen but for... (SU: Screen.) Screen, I agree with you. There is no screen, there is no consciousness, there is no self-realization, there is no reality. Then there is silence. So if there is no screen then there is no words. In order to explain these things we need illustrations and words. But you're right, there is no screen.

SN: Robert isn't self-inquiry though a very advanced state, one should be established in concentration before that becomes effective. So when you say to find the I, abide in the I, follow it to its source. To find the I, requires one-pointedness and if that is difficult is it useful to do japa to try to have that concentration to even find the I and to inquire ... to do the inquiry?

R: It depends on the maturity of the person. Not everybody can do the self-inquiry, you're right. The next best thing to do is to surrender, totally and completely to God. Give God your ego, your life, everything. You have no will of your own. And as you do that you can practice japa, mantras. Those help to make the mind one pointed and prepares you for self-inquiry. But you can know yourself where you are coming from, by the amount of attention that you can hold on self-inquiry. If it's a little too difficult don't worry about it, surrender completely. Surrender completely, everybody can do that, sing bhajans, do mantras. If you are sincere, whatever you do you will be led to the next step. The current that knows the way will take care of you if you are true to your Self.

SN: Also isn't there a difference between witnessing and self-inquiry?

R: Oh yes. Self-inquiry is not witnessing. Witnessing is very good, it helps. To become the witness of your thoughts without trying to change them, to become the witness of everything. But when you practice self-inquiry you ask, "Who is the witness?" The witness is still attached to I. The witness ultimately has to go and then there is pure awareness. (SN: It seems that in witnessing the thoughts still come and go but in inquiry if you get into the state of abiding in the I there is almost a cessation of thought, there is only I am-ness.) When you abide in the I you are I am-ness, itself. When you watch your thoughts you are still the ego.

SH: So the thoughts have to come and have to cease completely before that step can occur?

R: Thoughts have to cease completely. There is no one left to think. There is nowhere from which the thoughts arise. And there is no place where the thoughts go. They just cease as if they never existed to begin with. (SH: Which is true.) Yes.

SS: But they appear again?

R: To whom do they appear again? (SS: Consciousness I think?) Thoughts cannot appear to consciousness. (SS: To whom can they appear to then?) To no one. (SS: To no one but as I say, but they come out of this consciousness they are received and then come out.) They do not come out of consciousness. (SS: They are consciousness.) Consciousness is self-contained. Nothing can really come out of consciousness. (SS: Is it the self-contained, is it this I, is it this ego?) No it's self-contained as I-am, not as the ego. (SS: It's everything.) The ego is an illusion. The ego never existed. Consciousness cannot give birth to an ego? (SS: How did this arise? If you become consciousness and you become ... and you are silent. The silence ends and it seems that these thoughts appear. They just appear.) If you are in the true silence then no thoughts will appear. (SS: Ever?) Ever. They will just be spontaneous. They will appear to keep your bodily functions going. (SS: But even if they are spontaneous they're there?) They are just to keep you going as a body. But that doesn't exist at all. That is an illusion.

SC: Do thoughts come to you?

R: As I function, thoughts appear to come. I raise my hand, I talk. I eat. So the thoughts are there doing those things but they do not go further than my nose.

SH: Why do you let them go that far? (R: I don't.) Good. (students laugh)

R: I am not that. But that is what appears to happen. I can sit here and tell you that I have no body, even if you are looking at me. There is no mind there is no appearance of a body, even. Yet you tell me, "No you're wrong I see it, so it must be true." But if you catch yourself when you say, "I see it." You'll find the culprit, I. I sees it. Find out who the I is that sees the body. The body and the I are attached to each other. If you get rid of one you get rid of the other.

See life is like an optical illusion. I go back to the illustration of the sky is blue. You look at the sky and you say, "What a beautiful blue it is." Not today. But if you investigate you will find out there is no sky and there is no blue. It's an optical illusion.

It's like the snake in the rope, which is another illustration. If you are in the dark and you see a rope coiled up you'll think it's a snake and you'll get fear and you're frightened to death. But when you turn on the light you see it's only a rope. Once you discover this you can never be fooled again.

SS: But that was a rope?

R: There was a rope but it was not a snake. (SS: But there was a rope or you wouldn't have seen the snake?) (students laugh) You thought the rope was the snake, but you find out upon investigation that it was not a snake it was only a rope. So in the same instance, you think I am the body but upon investigation when the light is turned on in your consciousness you will see that there is no body. There is only consciousness. There never was a body. (SS: Where does the rope come from? Is the rope the Self? Where did the rope come from?) The rope is just an illustration the rope is just there. The rope you understand, it appears to be a snake to some people and frightens them. So your body and your affairs sometimes appear frightening, but that is just like a snake it doesn't exist, it's a rope. You are pure consciousness and you are bright and shining.

SE: What if you think it's a rope and it's really a snake? (students laugh)

R: Well you've got a problem?

SH: Then you get death. (laughter) (R: Then you really have to work on yourself.)

SY: If the sky being blue is really an illusion, why do we all share the same illusion? Why can't we see the sky, different people see the sky in different colors.

R: It's like saying, why don't we all have the same dream? We dream individually. No two people have the same dream. In the same way no two people see the same thing the same way. You see the sky is blue in different ways. But collectively we see the sky is blue. This is called the grand illusion. We all come from the same oneness, the same delusion. There is only one. There are not many. So the collective consciousness of humanity appears to see the same thing because it's coming out of the same bag. When you destroy the illusion you no longer see the fake sky, you see reality. You no longer see yourself as a human being. You see yourself as the universe and the sky, the moon, the stars are all taking place within yourself.

SY: What is it when you can see something actually change shape like right in front of your eyes, like a persons head. For instance you're looking at a persons head and it can change into something ancient, like another ancient person and it can change into different shapes and forms and colors?

R: It means you have been taking too much LSD. (loud laughter) (SY: No I mean without any LSD, without any drugs.) Well somehow your brain has become a little warped (laughter again) and you're seeing all these different things. The idea is not to see these things. There could be many reasons, hallucinations, too much thinking. There are many reasons why we see things change and shapes change. But the truth is we have to go beyond that and you have to ask yourself, "To whom does this come? Who sees these things?" It's all part of the personal I. Everything we're talking about is part of the personal

I. Shapes, people, places, things, occult visions, astrology, numerology, it's all part of the personal I. As long as we get stuck in that scene we have to repeat it again and again karmically, so it appears. Until we get loose of the personal I and we become the Self. So all these things, visions, dreams, everything is part of the personal I.

SF: Robert, in the illustration of the rope and the snake how do you explain within that context, how do you explain the rope?

R: The rope is an illustration of reality. (SF: As the Self or something...?) As reality, as the Self. The rope exists but the snake does not. (SF: Uh-huh. Right.) So when you see the snake you have fear but when you turn on the light or when you awaken in consciousness, you see the rope. You see yourself as the way you are pure, pure awareness. So the rope illustrates the Self. (SF: Right. So if we don't know the Self it's a real mystery?) The Self is a mystery when you don't know it, that's right. (SF: Until more or less...)

R: Even if you realize it's a mystery you're on the right track. When it makes you think about it, it makes you say to yourself, "There must be something else than what I appear to be. This can't be all to me than there is. Going to sleep at night getting up in the morning, going to work, watching TV, there must be something else." That is the beginning of wisdom. And then you start asking, "What is this something else? Who is it? Is it God? I can think of God. Who thinks? What kind of God am I thinking of? Where did these thoughts come from?" And then one day you'll say, "I think them. Wow this is amazing. All these thoughts that I've been looking where they come from, I is the one that thinks them. Therefore if I eliminate the I the other thoughts will go also and I'll be free." So you spend the rest of your life with self-inquiry, eliminating the I.

SG: So Robert the whole thing is a full blown hallucination. It's what we're experiencing. If you know it's hallucination it gets you out, moving out of it? (R: Yes, of course.) It has that quality like life beyond LSD but you can't quite get yourself off the trip? But you know somehow...

R: ...there's got to be an answer. (SG: Yeah but somehow this is sort of unreal.) And the answer is always within yourself. And if you inquire deep within yourself the answer will come.

SC: It just struck me that, how about these monks that live up in Tibet are they doing the same thing, self-inquiry? Sitting in meditation, living an austere life? Is that their motive?

R: It depends what sect they belong to and what they are doing. I have no idea what they are doing up there? (SC: I mean not only in Tibet, but India and around the world?) There is no need to go to a monastery. For you have to take yourself with you. And if you can't think now about your real Self it will be worse when you go to a monastery. (SC: I didn't mean that I meant the men who were in those monasteries.) Who knows where they are coming from, they are probably all reading Playboy. (students laugh) (SC: That's a big one!) We have no idea what they are doing. Forget about them. (laughter) Find out what you're doing.

SK: Robert, it seems like in the practice of self-inquiry that there is a different kind of spectrum of thoughts, there are random thoughts and there are highly charged emotional thoughts like anger and there are perhaps things that are very close to having perception. Like you're kind of doing self-inquiry and there is a loud disruptive noise right near you and there are semantic perceptions like a pain in the body. Those all essentially are handled the same way as far as self-inquiry is concerned?

R: Everything is handled the same way. (SK: But it seems to be all the same type of thing but the experience is different somehow?) It's all attached to the I. The difference is in your mind. (SK: So when some of those things seem more disruptive to handle when doing self-inquiry and when they persist is it best when you can and something will get...) The disruption is the best teacher you can ever have because the disruption makes you see that you have to go beyond it. (SK: Well let's take the most disruptive can be physical pain so if you were saying, "Who am I?" and then it's there again. Do you go to "Who am I?" again?) No if you have physical pain, you should ask yourself, "To whom does the pain come?" Do it that way. "Who experiences the pain?" Again, "I do." Then you say, "Who am I?" (SK: And so it benefits...) It slowly does benefit, of course. (SK: As diligently as possible.)

R: Practicing "Who am I?" for the average person is really the greatest psychotherapy that was ever invented for it gets rid of emotional problems, by inquiring, "To whom does the problem come?" And then you realize that you are not the problem, I is. So where did the I come from? It didn't come from anywhere, that is the realization you come to. It never was born, nothing gave it birth, it's a liar. Then you're free.

SN: But "Who am I?" is not a mental process?

R: No, and it's also not a mantra, it's simply inquiry. You're inquiring. See what happens to the mind when you inquire what it is, it gets weaker and weaker until it disappears. That is the only way to annihilate the mind. By investigating it and realize that it doesn't exist. (SN: When you say to investigate it, it sounds like a mental process again?) No you're simply looking at your mind and asking, "To whom does it come?" It's true you are using a little of your mind to get rid of your mind. That's the only instrument you have got to use. When you investigate your mind with your mind, it dissolves, it dissipates. It becomes transcended. (SN: Yeah but the idea of abiding in the I seems to give a different feeling than investigating the I?) Abiding in the I is the same as investigating the I. You're abiding in the I, that means you're watching the I. You are holding on to the I. You're looking at the I most carefully. And as you keep investigating the I, following the I thread to its source, the I just is gone.

SF: So Robert there is a sort of a sequence in self-inquiry. First comes the "Who am I?" That's number one. Number two, the thoughts slow down the mind tends to dissipate or disappear little by little and abiding in the Self may or may not happen, but that's not my concern. I just keep on self-inquiring and the most that I could hope, if I hope for something is that my thoughts slow down and abidance in the Self may or may not come up, it's not my concern, again...

R: What you're saying is true. Nothing is your concern. You should have no concern whatsoever. (SF: I just keep asking myself, "Who am I?") This is a real radical teaching, it happens differently to different people. There are some people just by asking, "To whom does this come?" And there is sort of a flash and everything is gone and they're home free. There are other people who have to carry it through and do what you said. Don't make it a practice with number one, number two, number three, number four. (SF: Oh that's for explaining it, sort of.)

R: Yeah, but when you're doing it yourself let it come naturally do not force it. For instance, when you react to a condition and you catch yourself, do not force anything to happen or to take the place of the reaction. In a gentle calm way, observe what happened and something within you will say, "Who reacted" and something else will come and say, "I did. Then who is this I who reacted? Where did it come from? What is its source?" You do everything in a calm gentle way. You may have to go through all the steps and you may not have to go through all the steps. Do not have any preconceived ideas about this. Have no concepts. Simply allow whatever happens to happen.

(Music played with Mary singing)

R: We have a lot of prashad today. We have to eat until we bust. Do we have any announcements? Ed.

SE: Easter, next Sunday is Easter and at six o'clock, we're going to have it here, we're going to have a bhandara. And one more interesting thing is for some of those who feel doubts from time to time, one of the persons that recently has requested Robert's talks is Jean Dunn who has written ... is a student of Nisargadatta, written the "Seeds Of Consciousness" and "Prior To Consciousness" she said, his talks are fascinating and she gives them to her students and her friends up there in ... where she lives in Vacaville, just thought you might like to know that.

R: Is Vacaville not a prison? (SE: Yeah she is in prison there.) (laughter)

SL: Also there is a list on the table that I put up there for the bhandara and if you could just put down your name and what you're bringing so we have an idea...

(tape ends) [TOC]

ABIDING IN THE I

14th March, 1991

Robert: I hope you didn't come here to hear me talk. That's the worst reason you can have for coming here. Satsang is not talk. Satsang means being, being with the Self. Not myself, or yourself, but the one Self. Therefore when you come to satsang you are with the Self, or you are with God, God again being yourself. There is no usual talking going on in satsang, only a few questions. Everyone usually sits around doing what they do. But no matter what I say everybody stares at me to make something happen. You want to hear a talk. So I'll talk a little. I aim to please.

A question I'm commonly asked over the telephone or in person is this, "Robert, how do you see the world?" How am I supposed to see the world? Someone tells me, "I know you see consciousness, you don't see us." If I didn't see you I wouldn't be able to function. Of course I see you. Someone else tells me, "He sees bright lights and sacred images." Again, if I saw bright lights and sacred images I'd get run over by a truck. I see exactly what you see, nothing. The only difference is this. I look at the world and I laugh, for I realize I don't know, or I don't think.

I realize that the world is none other than myself. The world is consciousness. It is not the world as it appears, but it's still a superimposition. Therefore a Sage sees the world but realizes the world is Brahman, and is only an appearance, whereas most people look at the world and they identify with the world. Therefore they have fears, frustrations, pains, arguments, wars, man's inhumanity to man. Only because they identify with the world.

A good example of this is the example we always talk about, the snake and the rope. That's unconditioned superimposition, where you see the snake and you become frightened because the light is dim. But when you make the light bright again you know it's a rope, and that rope can never fool you again. Whenever you walk by the rope you know it's a rope and it's not a snake, the snake being the world and the rope being consciousness.

But then someone says, "That's a good example, but when I see the world it doesn't change for me, like it changes for you when you turn on the light and you see it's really a rope. The world remains the same to me whether it's dark or light or whatever. How do you explain that?"

So again the answer is this. You are seeing the world like water in the mirage. The water doesn't change, but when you first see the water in the mirage you try to grab it and you grab sand. After that you know it's a mirage but it always appears as the water. It doesn't change like the rope to the snake. You always see the water. Only you don't react to it any longer. When you walk by the spot where the water is in the mirage, you laugh, for you realize the water is not real. And so the Sage sees the world exactly the same way. The world no longer fools the Sage. It's like water in the mirage. He partakes of the world, but doesn't get fooled by the world. The world has no interest for him. For the identification is with the Self, with consciousness.

Then a pundit comes over and says, 'Well, those are good examples Robert, only look at it this way. When I'm in the world I can grab you, I can grab the lamppost, I can drive a car and I can feel things, whereas with your example of the water in the mirage, you cannot feel the water, because it doesn't exist? How do you explain that?'

So I guess I have to go to the dream world. In the dream world you are born, you grow up, you go to school, you become a doctor, and you get married, you have children, you get old and you die. Only you were a dream baby being born. And you're dream baby who is growing up to be a teenager. You're a dream doctor, and a dream person gets married. And you marry a dream girl and you have dream children. And you get old and you die. It's all going on in the dream.

So you see, instead of asking all these stupid questions, and you can go on and on and on, self-inquiry is the easiest and fastest way to cut through all the rigmarole and find out the truth for yourself. Because what difference does it make what I see? What difference does it make how I see things? Why should you believe me about a dream world, about water in the mirage, about the snake in the rope?

"Those are all great examples but I can't feel that," you say. "I'm identified with the world and I hurt because the world affects me," you say. "Things affect me. When I see man's inhumanity to man, I cry. When I see a funny movie, I laugh. When I get what I want out of life, I'm happy. When I don't, I'm sad. Therefore these examples and all these things you talk to me about, don't do me any good."

Now that's an intelligent observation. You should not accept book learning at face value. You should not accept anyone's experiences at face value. You should develop your own truth. I can tell you the world is Brahman, and that Brahman is absolute reality. Absolute reality is pure awareness, and so forth and so on. What good does that do you if you're hurting? There's things come into your life that you take very seriously. And you don't understand that your social body is going through it's karma, and it has absolutely nothing to do with you. You identify with the conditioning.

That's the first truth you have to admit to yourself. Do not try to psyche yourself out by remembering all these great truths. That's not going to do it for you. You and I know many people who have memorized books by Nisargadatta, Ramana Maharshi and by others, and who can recite these books backward and frontwards. But the first person who bumps into them, they become angry. As soon as they hear they are going to lose their job, they start crying and they get worried. It appears that books are doing them good only when things are going their way. Then they can quote from the books. But as soon as their world tumbles down on them they throw the books away, and they do not believe a word they read, until things start improving. Then they buy more books. Then something happens to them, and they fling the book across the room and say, "This is nonsense." But then it gets better again, and they go out and buy another book. And it goes on like this and on like this. I'm probably talking about some of you.

When will you grow up? It is only what you experience that matters to you. It's not what you read. So what if you learn a truth you haven't learned before? So what if you say this teacher expresses it this way and now I know it from this angle and that angle? I must remind you again, knowing truth intellectually does absolutely nothing for you. You might as well take LSD, because you only get psyched up. Then again as soon as something comes your way that you don't like, you become an imbecile, angry, mad, upset.

You want to know if you're making progress on the path? When was the last time you got angry? When was the last time that something mattered to you? When was the last time you thought the world was hurting you? When was the last time you became over-elated over something good that happened to you? That shows you you're still in possession of your human faculties. You have not transcended.

You cannot escape in a book. Many people, when they are upset and they don't want to think, will turn on the TV. But people on the spiritual path will open a spiritual book. It's like turning on the TV except you are memorizing spiritual truths. I won't say that that's not any better than TV. Of course it's better than watching TV. But all the same, you can do that for a 1000 years and you hardly make any progress.

How do you make progress? By using books for reference only. By practicing the methods I share with you. By practicing self-inquiry. By watching as you go through life's experiences and not reacting. Watch yourself become depressed. Watch yourself become angry. Do not deny it, but observe it. And if you observe yourself correctly in that calm way, you can ask yourself, "Who becomes angry? Who is feeling depressed?" and follow it through. Do this over and over and over again, as many times as you have to. One day the anger will leave you, the depressions will leave you, your thoughts will leave you. And you'll just be.

Until that happens do not fool yourself. Maya is very powerful. Maya is apparent reality of the world. As long as you believe you are the body, then the world is going to be very real to you. This is why you work on yourself first. Remember your body, as well as all the universe, is a manifestation of your mind. Therefore when the mind begins to dissolve, so does your body, and so does the universe. Also remember when everything dissolves you do not see consciousness. As I mentioned in the beginning, you do not walk around and see empty space. One person even told me he read in a book somewhere that a Sage walks around in a fog and sees fog-like people. Where do they get these ideas from?

I remind you again. The only difference between the Sage and yourself is you see the world and you identify with it. You think it's real. A Sage sees the world and he knows it's a superimposition upon consciousness. So he identifies with consciousness. Con-consciousness is not a thing. You cannot describe it. It is not the opposite of the world, and it's not an object, and there is no seer to see it. Consciousness is another word for being. Being what? Being nothing.

Now we go beyond the realm of creation, where it becomes ineffable and indescribable. That's why we can only explain to you what consciousness is not. Consciousness is not the world. Consciousness is self-contained, absolute reality. It is yourself when you do not identify with the world, and that only happens to the average person just as they are falling asleep and just as they wake up. At that time you are consciousness. But the feeling leaves you almost immediately. You begin to identify with the world. You forget about reality.

The method to remember is to catch yourself all during the day. "Who believes this? To whom does this come? Who feels this?" over and over again. When you say, "Who am I?" for some people it is better to say, "Who is I?" the same thing. What you are really doing is you're finding the source of the I. You're looking for the source of I, the personal I. Who am I? You're always talking about the personal I. Who is this I? Where did it come from? Who gave it birth? Never answer those questions. Pose those questions, but never answer them. Keep it up. Don't give up. Do not look for results. Because it's your true nature, sooner or later the results must presume themselves, but it comes without your help. You cannot help God. God does not need your help. Just be yourself.

It's difficult to be totally honest with yourself, yet this is exactly what you have to do. Forget about being a Jnani, or enlightened, or having self-realization. I get too many calls like that. People are calling me from all over the world telling me that they are self-realized. So now I just say, "Good, what do you want me to do?" They want the confirmation. So I was thinking of printing certificates, and mailing them out. This is to inform you that you are now self-realized. Congratulations.

Forget about those things. Don't even desire it. Just do the work and you'll be surprised. The more you want it, the more it eludes you. And that's natural, because you're chasing after yourself. You're trying to catch yourself when you're already caught. So the more you chase yourself, the faster you are going to run away from yourself. Stop doing that.

It's simplicity itself. There is really nothing intellectual about it. You don't have to know certain words or certain phraseologies. You don't have to memorize certain text. You simply have to remember the I. Abide in the I. That's all you have to do. Abide in the I. Hold on to the I. Everything is attached to the I, your body, the world, the universe. When you discover the source of I, everything else will go with it, into the ocean of bliss. Bliss is a natural outcome of your search.

When you stop searching and you calm down, and you put your books away, and you confront yourself and see what you are all about, that will bring it faster than anything else, than you can ever imagine, or ever do.

It's not in chanting mantras. It's not in being a good guy or a bad guy. It's not by doing penance. It's simply by observing your I. Abiding in the I. "Whew did I come from?" When you say that you're not saying where did my body come from? You're saying where did I come from? I. I is separate from your body. Your body is attached to I. The I is not your body. I is separate from the world, but the world is attached to I. God is separate from the world, but God is attached to I. Therefore when you ask, "Where did I come from?" something happens to your mind. Your mind becomes weaker and weaker. And when your mind becomes weaker and weaker, the I begins to expand and becomes all-pervading. Then the I becomes another word for the Self and you begin to realize I is none other than the Self. I am that. You become free. It isn't hard and it isn't easy. It just is.

Think about yourself for a moment. Watch what thoughts come to you when you think about yourself. Some of you are saying, "I'm hungry." Some of you are thinking of your needs. As soon as you think about yourself, you think about your body. But your Self is not your body. Your body is only a heap of rotten flesh, but that's not you. You are I. I am. I am not this and not that. I am. There's nothing else. Nothing else exists but I am. There is nothing to say about it. There are no speeches to make about I am. There is only I am. When you say, "I am" to yourself, what happens? Isn't there a quietness that comes over you, a stillness, because another name for I am is silence.

S: When you talk to us [you say] "you don't have to believe me, you don't have to take my word." But belief, I think, is very important, in the words and in the teacher, because there has to be trust to accept the validity of the teachings, in the method of the teacher as well as on the general instructions he gives, one has to ponder.

R: I hear you, that's a good point. I'm referring to those seekers who have been around from teacher to teacher, and they just accept everything the teacher tells them without investigation. The way it should be done is if I say something, you should investigate it thoroughly within yourself to see if it has any validity. Do not just accept anything I say on blind faith, but intelligently. Look at what I say. Feel it within yourself. Investigate it deep within yourself, and if it's real, something will tell you, and you will feel something. You will feel love for the teacher. That will come as a result of investigation. So I'm really speaking to all the seekers who run from one teacher to the next and they believe anything. If the teacher tells them flying saucers landed they just believe that without investigation. So don't just accept that on blind faith. Confirm it within yourself. Your heart will tell you if it's real or not, and you'll know. Always listen to your heart.

S: What does that mean, "Listen to the heart?"

R: It means your heart is your real Self and it will never lie to you. If you tune in correctly to your heart center your real Self will advise you, and tell you if your teacher is good for you or not, will advise you and inform you of everything you need to know. Your heart is the Self, God.

S: I'm very confused with my mind and my heart.

R: Well you know, the mind is nothing. The mind is only a bunch of thoughts. Thoughts about the past and the future, that's all a mind is. But the heart is a center of stillness, of quietness, of absolute peace. When you rest your mind in your heart you feel a joy and a bliss that overwhelms you, and you'll know. Surrender your mind to your heart and you'll feel it.

S: Will the other beliefs and stuff like that - is that if someone believes in the saying or book that when they feel peace, joy, happiness and have attained this or that, and that's the stuff that shouldn't be believed or accepted because you want to experience the truth?

R: If you're really going to your heart it goes beyond belief. The true heart is the Self. It cannot fool you. The mind will fool you. But a true surrender of the mind into the heart center, you will actually feel a bliss and a joy that you never felt before. (S: Well, that's what I mean in reference to believing the teacher explaining something.) In this day and age there are many teachers, but few disciples. Most people do not want to do anything, but they want to become a teacher. The world is filled with teachers. It is up to you to use your own discernment and find out who the true teacher is. (S: In reference to that, isn't it true it's really not an external teacher that's really where the unfoldment happens?) The true teacher is within yourself, and if you're true to yourself, your teacher from within you will lead you to the teacher without, and you'll both be one, and you'll know it.

S: But even beyond that, whatever I had, have, experienced, I realize very clearly it has nothing to do with the teacher that I've already found and studied... it's always... the Self. It has nothing to do, when it comes right down to it, it has nothing to do with outside teachers.

R: The teacher is also a catalyst... (S: Yes, maybe.) ...for you to find yourself.

S: Robert, when you were talking about books and how much progress you've made on the path. A lot of teachers and books talk about theory but not much emphasis is really put on practice. In fact, if you look at many books, they go into all of the different theories and how one thing relates to another, and this and that. But not too much of any book really goes into actual practice of what they're talking about. It's why, like I put this little thing together on vichara practice, and when you said how much progress we've really made. Really, we can't know how much progress we've made because progress can be a very dubious thing. On one sense you're making progress you may be aware of it. On another sense you may not be aware of it. On one hand things may seem to get better and you may have a better understanding. On another sense, things may seem to get intense, and you can't tell how far you've come until it's all over.

R: As you go through the vicissitudes of life, what you're saying is true. But if you abide in the I your problems of the world do not affect you as bad, and you will appear to sail through life easier if you abide in the I.

S: But as you said, sometimes things intensify.

R: Things intensify, but to whom do they intensify? You abide in the I and you watch all these things you're going through. You'll find that you're not affected as you used to be. They're not as meaningful any longer. It's like being in a fire and you don't get burned as hard, because you're abiding in the I.

S: Sometimes though you may be doing that and be unaware. You may think of yourself as being the same when actually you can't tell.

R: Sometimes you can't tell. But if you abide in the I, again you'll not be affected by those things and you'll watch those things come and go. You will rise higher by observing and not reacting. Therefore the safe thing to do is to always abide in the I.

S: And also actually effort can only take you so far. (R: True.) You can't will yourself into self-realization. You can only go so far again and after a certain point you become pulled into it. And isn't that the goal of the guru?

R: You don't even get pulled into it. You simply awaken to yourself. And the guru is a catalyst for that to happen. (S: Well the impression I'm trying to give is that it's not necessarily done with effort and intention. It's more a matter of letting go then, a matter of effort can only take you so far.) Yes, true. (S: Sometimes it's that intense effort before you let go to realize how simple it is...) You wonder why you use effort to begin with. (S: I think it has a valid place.)

S2: I think it has a very valid place. It builds up such intensity that one can awaken, and then when you awaken, you realize how simple it is.

R: But remember for whom the effort is. It is the ego that uses effort. It's much better to observe the ego than to resist it. (S: I understand that effort because that's a spiritual practice.) You observe the ego effortlessly.

S: Well what you were talking about, one can reflect back and seeing when was the last time one got angry and felt out of sorts, when one can't even remember those things that would happen, then what can you use as a gauge?

R: You simply watch yourself the way you react to conditions. And see how much you react to given conditions that affect you. Are you still reacting as you always did? You notice how quiet your mind is, that your mind doesn't move so far any more. It doesn't go out so far. It stays still. And everything is happening around you, but not to you. Again you become the observer of all of the things of life going on. You watch but you don't react. (S: Is that what you mean by abide in the I?) Not really. Abiding in the I is holding on to the I, by inquiring, "To whom does this come? It comes to me. I feel it. Then who am I?" That's abiding in the I. (S: When you ask who am I, then the silence comes?) The silence doesn't come, because the silence already is. (S: Your awareness of silence appears.) You simply become still when you ask, "Who am I?" (S: Abiding in the I, is that the silence you abide in?) You abide in the I by asking, "Who am I?" Holding on to the I is abidance in the I. (S: I don't still know what you mean by holding on to the I.) You become aware of the I by asking, "Who am I?" over and over again. "Who is this I? Where does it come from? Who am I? Who am I?" (S: That sounds more like questioning the I rather than living in the I.) It's the same thing. That's the way you abide in the I. It's the only way.

S: Once, when I used to do that, what would happen is, I'd follow the I and it would go somewhere and it would seem like it would go into the heart. And once it went there, it dissolved whatever it was attached to. As I was working with it, it dissolved, everything dissolved in that place, and that's when I thought I was abiding in the I. At that point I followed it, and it took time.

But it seemed like it went into the heart and then everything dissolved in that place and that's when I thought I was abiding in the I. (S2: And that would seem like abiding in the Self?) Yes, is there a difference?

R: How did you abide in the I? How did you follow it? (S: I asked, lets see, what did I do? "To whom does this come? To me, to I," and I grabbed hold of that I and I followed it, and there was something to follow. If I do it now, there's nothing to follow but when I was doing it.) What was the thing you followed? (S: Where is the source of the I. And it was nothing that, it was a sense of following it, it wasn't it had nothing to do with anything.) That's right. You don't actually follow the I. You pose the question, "To whom does this come? To I." (S: And you quicken to a sense of following it into a space where everything dissolves in the end.) It happens by itself. (S: Yes. But as for me, it was a sense of actually following, even though there was no other traceable means of following it at all.)

S2: What is the difference between abiding in the I and abiding in the Self?

R: When you abide in the I you're abiding in the ego. The I is really the ego, the small I. It turns into the Self eventually. So when you abide in the I, you abide in the Self, because there is only one I. This small I turns into the Self. Eventually only the Self exists, but in the beginning it appears like the I. And as you continue holding on by asking the question, "Who am I?" It turns into the Self, into I-am. (S: So, it's pretty clear.) As clear as mud.

S: So Robert, all the questions and all the answers are also part of maya. Maya can never be broken up intellectually. (R: No.) The only valid thing is to practice to follow the teaching of the teacher, the method he advises. And that's it. Questions, answers, discussions are out of the question.

R: You're right. Maya cannot be broken up intellectually, because it never existed. It doesn't exist. There is no maya. Once you realize that, you're awakened to your true Self. (S: So all the instructions, the questioning, the answering, all of that is part of maya too.) It's all a waste of time. But you have to do something. (S: Yes, that's what I mean. Follow the teaching, and the teaching of the teacher, as a practice, the practice. Follow the practice.)

R: If you do that you'll be OK But the teaching is only to show you that there are no teachings. You simply awaken. And then you know you've always been awake. There never was a time when you were not. None of this exists. If you have a quiet mind, you're safe. But if your mind is always thinking, thinking, thinking, looking for new methods, looking for new teachers, looking for new this, and new books, new this and new that, then you've got a problem. Be still and know that I am God.

S: I would have said it another way, Robert, what I'm looking for is what I'm looking with.

R: What you're looking for you're looking with? (S: Yes.) Well, if you want to say it, that's good. (S: The hardest part, who am I, that's right.) If it makes you happy.

S: Robert said all you have to do is be still, be quiet. But it seems as though to find that stillness, that quietness, there's a battle with the mind.

R: To whom? To whom does it appear that way? (S: Well, when you do self-inquiry, if you're quiet for a moment, then the mind comes back up. And then you do a self-inquiry again, you're quiet again, and the mind comes back up.) Okay. (S: Well, that's the battle.) This is really no battle if you ask, "To whom does it come?" (S: Well, that's your weapon.) So use your weapon to win the battle. (S: Well, that's my point is that it is a battle. It's not so much 'just be quiet.' On the one hand it takes that effort, it takes the...) I understand what you mean. But as long as you talk yourself into a battle, you're going to have a battle on your hands. (S: Well it seems as though if you ignore the battle, you'll have the battle. So when the battle is inevitable, but you can choose the battlefield.) On the contrary if you become indifferent and just watch, your mind will actually slow down by itself. Don't get involved. Watch. Be still. And there will be no battle.

S: Isn't part of the illusion that there is some quiet or silence that one's going to attain because there is certainly no quiet or silence... it really doesn't have anything to do.

R: Quiet and silence is your real nature. (S: Yes, but no it's not?) Silence and quiet. (S: I mean, I understand what you're saying and I agree, but it still has nothing to do with silence and quietness.) That's because you're making noises right now. You refuse to keep silent. (S: It's true, that's what I feel about you too Robert.) I'm not really talking.

S: Well if you were to witness and that becomes effortless and the mind becomes quiet, that's very understandable. But if you're doing vichara, that is like an effort.

R: Vichara is really done to quiet the mind, and if you look at it as an effort, it becomes an effort. Try not to have any thoughts for or against. Just do it in a peaceful way and watch what happens. But don't tell yourself it's a battle, it's an effort, or it's hard. Make it simple. Observe, watch, ask in a simple way, and everything will take care of itself.

S: You discourage reading or watching TV. Is there some kind of activity that we can do?

S: Vichara.

R: It depends on your maturity. Everybody is different. I'm not saying you shouldn't involve yourself in the world. Just do not react in anything you do. If you want to watch TV sometimes, that's OK. But if you're going to react to it and identify with it, don't watch it at all. Simply observe yourself and the things that you react to, and try to keep away from the things that you react to. Make your life simple and comfortable.

S: And do plenty of silence.

R: If you don't react to conditioning then you're always in the silence. You can be in the market place, you can be anywhere, if you don't react, you're always in the silence. You can also be in a cave, but if you have not learned to control your mind, your mind will drive you crazy, do all kinds of thoughts. Therefore it makes no difference where you are. It's how you react where you are, that counts.

(end) [TOC]

Transcript 55

FREEDOM

31st March, 1991

Robert: Good evening. I welcome you with all my heart. Chanting has been known to calm the mind, to calm the nerves, and to calm the soul. It makes your mind one-pointed. When your mind becomes one-pointed, you can practice atma-vichara or self-inquiry. And the path of Jnana becomes easier. So let's all join into the chant.

[Chanting]

I welcome you again. Good Evening. Hmm..., I've got a Zen microphone tonight. It has transcended.

Student: There but unseen.

It's appropriate on an occasion like this to talk about freedom. We're celebrating Passover, Easter and the beginning of spring. During the time of Moses, he led the Jewish people out of the land of Egypt, and set them free. Jesus transcended the body and became free. In the spring flowers bloom, leaves begin to grow on the trees, everything becomes brand new. So again it is appropriate that I discuss freedom.

Freedom from what? Freedom from the mind, freedom from fear, from want, from suffering of any kind. Your real nature is freedom. You are not confined to a body, and you are not confined to a mind. It appears that way, but I can assure you, you are totally free.

It's like the story of a man who was thrown into a dungeon. He stood there for many years. No one came to see him. His food was pushed under the door every day. He was confined for forty to fifty years. Time passed. He grew a long beard, long hair.

One day he got disgusted, totally depressed, and he said to himself, "I'm going to commit suicide, but how shall I do it? I know. I'll hit my head against the wooden door." But when he touched the door, it opened. The door had never been locked. He walked out the door and nobody even recognized him, and he was free. He could have been free from the very beginning, but he chose to be confined by not touching the door.

This is true with most of us. We think we have a problem. We think we are limited. We think we are the body, the mind, and we're finite. Little do we know the power that we really are. Little do we know that we have the ability to transcend the universe, and become totally liberated. Instead we identify with the world. We identify with conditions. We identify with person, place and thing. We believe we are born, and we live so many years, and then we die. Then what is the purpose of life? To work hard, to suffer, and then to leave everything to your children, and they go out and spend it all in a week?

What is the purpose of life? I tell you the truth when I say life has no purpose, as it is. The material relative world has no purpose. It has no purpose because it doesn't even exist. You may say, "But I see it, I feel it, I'm in it," but are you? Aren't you also, in a dream? You partake of the dream. You go to school in a dream. You get married to a dream girl or a dream boy. You have dream children. You have a good job in your dream. You become the President of the United States in your dream. You become a Queen or a King, and you believe it's real. No one can ever tell you it's not.

If I came into your dream and I told you, "Don't identify with this, you are only dreaming," you would laugh in my face and say, "look, I can pinch you. Can't you feel if this is a dream?" And I say, "Yes, it's a dream pinch. So I can feel the dream, hurt." It's all taking place in a dream. But you still don't believe it because you're going through it. But then one day you wake up in the morning. It was all a dream.

Perhaps the world is like this. Is it? As I always say, why should you believe me? There are methods to discover this truth for yourself. As we go through the vicissitudes of life we have all kinds of experiences, some good and some bad. This is a world of duality. For every forward there's a backward. For every up there's a down, and so forth. What this means is if you experience one thing, you have to one day experience the opposite.

This doesn't mean in one particular lifetime. Perhaps you can see now why some children are born into families that are impoverished, in families in Cambodia, Vietnam, Iraq, and they never find a days peace. While others are born in the United States perhaps, to wealthy families. They never have to work a day in their lives. Is this good and bad luck? Is there a reason for this?

We do not live in a capricious universe. We live in a universe of law and order. Everything that you are, you deserve to be. Now that's a hard thing to say. You can say, "Robert, I didn't deserve to get hit by a car and become crippled." You don't know that. Why should it happen to you? Let's just say perhaps in a previous existence, you ran over somebody with your car, and this is just karma returning to you.

Now the beginner in spiritual life goes through this process, wondering why things happen, why some people suffer and some people don't, why some people are sick and some people are healthy, some people are poor and some people are rich, some people are happy and some people are miserable. Why? Does it just happen? There is a reason for everything. And the reason is within you.

But we don't want to get further into that subject. For as I mentioned before, the world has no purpose. So you say, "Is reincarnation real? Is karma real? Am I born again when I die? Do these states really exist, the astral plane, the causal plane, the mental plane?" The answer is, "For whom do they exist?" They exist only as long as you believe you are related to your body-mind phenomena. As long as you feel you are a body, then there will be many bodies, and they'll never stop coming. For it'll come again and again and again. And you'll go through karmic experiences again and again and again. This is the grand illusion called maya.

Many spiritual people who understand maya, believe it only relates to the physical plane. But maya is the universe. The entire universe is maya, illusion. It seems to be real. It seems to be very real for some people. Then how do they get out of their predicament? People still believe that if I change my status, if I'm poor and I become rich, or if I'm sick and I become healthy, if I'm miserable and become happy, then everything will be okay.

Unfortunately, that's not how it works. To acquire happiness, true happiness, unalloyed happiness, forever happiness — it is your true nature — you have to transcend the world. You have to become non-attached to this world. I'm not saying you have to give up anything. I am not saying you have to go live in a cave or live in a forest. You merely have to give up everything in your mind. And when you give up everything in your mind, then you have to give up your mind also. When you give up your mind, what is left? Pure awareness, consciousness, absolute reality, this is your true nature.

So you see, you are not your body. You are not your mind. You are not the universe. You are not the world. You just have to change your identification. How do you do this? By simply acquiring the knowledge to know what to do. So it's knowledge that you begin the true spiritual path with. What kind of knowledge? The knowledge to realize, "I am that I am." I am not anything that I associate with. Then who am I? That question is never answered, due to the fact that you are the answer yourself. If you answer the question, there has to be a doer, there has to be a seer who sees the question, observes it, and answers it. As long as you do that, it is always the mind or the ego answering the question.

You therefore begin a procedure, and you start this in the morning, just before you wake up. Before you start saying, "I am awake," try to see, observe in your mind, from where the I comes from. Between awakening, and as you awaken, you are in a deep space of consciousness, you are in your true nature. As soon as you say the word I, you spoil it. And you don't have to voice it. You automatically think, without even knowing it, I am awake.

As soon as you do that, you should ask yourself, "Who is this I that is awake? Is it the body? Who is awake?" You say, "I slept." The same I that is awake is the same I that slept. And then you say I dreamt. Again it's the same I. I is always present. You ask yourself, "Who is this I? Where did it come from? What is its source?" You hold on to the I. The way you hold on to the I is by posing the question, "Who is I?" I know that doesn't sound like proper English. That's if you're referring to the I as a body. You inquire, "Who is I?" or "Who am I?" and you keep still.

When you keep still in the beginning, you will find that thoughts are running all through your mind, all kind of thoughts. You ask the question, "To whom do these thoughts come?" no matter what the thought is. Even if the thought tells you I am God, I am Brahman, I am nirvana, I am emptiness. It makes no difference what the thoughts tell you. If you were truly Brahman, if you were truly nirvana, consciousness, you would never voice it. The true Self is silence. It has no voice.

Again you ask yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come? The thoughts that try to tell me that I am Brahman, that I am absolute reality, to whom do they come? They come to me. I think them. Who is I? Where did the I come from?" This is called abidance in the I. As you hold on to the I, and again, how do you hold on to the I? By inquiring, "Who is I" or you can say, "I - I, I - I" Every time you mention the word I to yourself, your ego-mind is becoming weaker and weaker, and the "I - I" is going deeper and deeper within your heart center, and you are becoming more and more peaceful. You can say, "I am." Not "I am this" or "I am that." That spoils it. Just "I am." I am is beingness. Beingness is absolute reality. It is your true nature. As you pose this question again and again, as you abide in the I-ness, it will begin to disappear. It will turn into the real I am, into beingness. You will find bliss. You will find joy. You will find total happiness.

This is the best way in our time, to awaken to your self-realization. This is the best method, the highest method. Other methods are good also, but they don't lead you directly to transcendence. This has nothing to do with meditation. It has nothing to do with yoga. This has nothing to do with prayer. It is called self-inquiry, atma-vichara. It is for mature souls, for the mind that appears to be sort of intellectual to an extent. But yet if you're too intellectual, you'll not be able to grasp it, for you will learn theory and dry words. And you will be able to recite all the phraseologies, but you'll never have the experience.

To have the experience there has to be total surrender into the I am, and this requires devotion, love, bhakti, total surrender, they both go together. As you practice self-inquiry, you are also surrendering your body, your mind, your affairs, your ego, everything. One day you will awaken and be free. Let that time be today. Thank you. Any questions?

SB: Robert, is the love that a person feels when they sing or they play an instrument, is that the love of the actual consciousness, the love bliss of consciousness coming through, even though it's filtered through the mind?

R: Not really. Consciousness cannot be filtered through the mind. The mind has to be totally transcended for consciousness to be aware of itself. Consciousness is self-contained. It has absolutely nothing to do with the mind. But, what you're talking about, when you chant, when you play beautiful music, when you feel that feeling, it's on the way towards that. It makes you one-pointed. If your mind is one-pointed, you can easily practice self-inquiry. When your mind is thinking about so many different things, about the world, about your job, about your family, about your car, about your dog, about all kinds of things, then it's hard to get through. So we chant, we do yoga, we do different exercises, we sing bhajans, and the mind becomes calm, quiescent.

When the mind becomes quiescent it is like a clear lake. The clear lake reflects the sun and the moon and the stars. If the lake is murky and moving about, it does not reflect anything. And so it is when your mind is clear, quiescent. It reflects your divinity. When it's murky, it reflects the world. All these things are good, chanting, yoga, singing bhajans, everything is helpful. They all lead to atma-vichara.

SB: Can an emotional love become divine love? Can it increase to an infinite proportion to actually disappear into divine love or realize its oneness with divine love?

R: What do you mean by emotional love? (SB: Well, like singing and kind of dissolving in a feeling.) Again, all these things simply make the mind quiet. Their purpose is to make the mind quiescent, calm, and peaceful, and then your Self, your real Self will shine through all by itself, when the mind becomes absolutely still. It will not happen during the singing or during the chanting. The purpose again is to quiet the mind. When the mind is quiet, when all the chanting has subsided, when all the music has subsided, when you have entered that place where there are no others, then you will awaken to your true Self.

SG: Does there ever come a time when your mind will not need a device like chanting to become quiet?

R: As you keep practicing whatever method you're using, you can practice meditation, you can practice mantras, whatever you're doing to quiet the mind helps. Of course karmically if a person has been doing this in a previous existence, it will be much easier in this particular life, and you'll fall right into it. But all these things are simply gimmicks to quieten the mind. They're necessary for most people, but not for everyone.

SI: Bob, in your talk, you mentioned bhakti yoga as a way to lead into selflessness, or the I-am state. Aren't there other variations of Yoga, like Kriya and Raja, which is a culmination of the whole?

R: The closest thing to atma-vichara, to realization, the next closest thing, I should say, is bhakti Yoga. Kriyas, mantras, Kundalini Yoga, are all very good for themselves. They open the chakras, they make you clear, they cause you to develop siddhis, powers, but they have nothing to do with self-realization. Actually these things must be given up if one wants to acquire self-realization. If you're looking for powers, siddhis, if you're looking for ways to be powerful, then you practice Siddha Yoga. But like it says in the Upanishads, when you get involved in these practices, you can go through thousands and thousands and thousands of incarnations and you'll still be practicing at that level.

But some yogis call self-realization Siddha Yoga. So it depends what you mean by Siddha Yoga. But all the rest of the practices, Ashtanga Yoga, Hatha Yoga, Karma Yoga, and the rest are very good by themselves, but they do not lead to ultimate awakening.

SI: Would you select one over the others, all of them together, Rajah?

R: Well Raja and Hatha Yoga are very good for your body, very good for your mind. Raja makes you very powerful mentally. But of course what were trying to do is to kill the mind. We don't want to make the mind more powerful. So again the second best thing to Jnana Marga is Bhakta Yoga, devotion, and surrender.

SU: Is there something more than beingness? Nisargadatta says beingness was food.

R: Beingness is food as far as it goes, when you look at it that way. But true beingness — it depends what you mean, they give many terms for different words — true beingness is I am. You can call true beingness ultimate reality. That's the way I see it. That's the way I use it. This is why, when you read so many books, it becomes sort of confusing, because many of these writers mean well. They're talking of their personal experiences and trying to put words to it, which is very difficult. We use a word and it has different meanings to us. We use the word of Parabrahman, beyond Brahman. What is beyond Brahman? Your true Self, your reality is beyond Brahman. It is I, but yet we use the word Brahman. It means the same thing to certain people.

So this is why I always suggest, work on yourself. Don't worry about the words. Transcend the words. Have the experience for yourself, and then there will be nothing to say. But as long as you are a book reader, you never stop reading. There is a time to read, but there is a time to stop also. There's a time to put the books aside and to intensely practice, and give your life up to the practice.

What you put first in your life, that's what you get. So think about it. What is first in your life, a book, a house, a job, a body? Whatever you give your attention to most of all, gives its attention back to you. So if you're always thinking of God, or the Self, or consciousness, by chanting to yourself "I am," with your breath, — with your respiration, inhale, you say, "I," exhale, you say, "am," — this will eventually transcend everything else, and you'll begin by feeling a peace that you never felt before, a profound peace. Then all of a sudden you'll have a feeling of immortality. There will be no words to explain it. You will just realize that you are all-pervading. You have always been all-pervading. There never was a time when you were not. There never was a time when you were born. And there will never be a time when you vanish. You are omnipresent, absolute reality, ultimate oneness. Your true nature is nirvana, emptiness, I am that I am. You have to discover this for yourself.

To continue in our procedure at Ramana ashram every evening they have Aarti to Bhagvan. So we are going to now have Aarti and Jay will do all of the firmi. Jay?

Our service this Sunday evening to the Master. It's a form of respect in an evening prayer... (tape break as Robert continues) ...Devotion, it opens your heart. If you do not have an open heart you can't go any further. (tape break then Robert continues)

This ends our puja part of the meeting. We have some prashad especially made for you on this occasion and you can come up here and get some. Before you do that, let me remind all of the devotees there will be a special meeting at my house, Saturday at 1 o'clock. So please try to be prompt. After I hand out the prashad we'll have some local entertainment. Then we will eat and then we will have the pleasure of having a concert, an Indian concert by Rahul, who has honored us with his presence. So...

(tape ends) [TOC]

PURE INTELLIGENCE IS SILENCE

25th April, 1991

Robert: It's good to be with you again. What if I told you that you are absolute reality. Would you believe me?

Student: Yes.

R: You would? Why? (S: Because it's the truth.) Whose truth? (S: The truth.)

Robert continues: It's a word. Absolute reality. But can you identify with that? Can that be your truth? Unfortunately most of us believe we have to go through experiences. We have to perform sadhana. We have to practice spiritual disciplines. We have to do all sorts of weird things. And then, if God likes us, we will become self-realized. It's all a lie. You've been hypnotized into believing everything that you believe, everything. For instance, if you think that you accept the truth and that helps you, you're wrong.

As an example, if I ask you is the world real then most of you would say no. But that's ridiculous, because the relative intelligence that said those words is the same relative intelligence that holds the world together. You see, they're both coming from the same place. Do you follow me? The world is relative intelligence. When you say the world is not real you're speaking from relative intelligence. If you knew the answer, you would realize it's silence. The answer is silence, pure intelligence.

Reality is pure intelligence. The world has nothing to do with it. Neither does your mouth, or your body, or your mind. Pure intelligence is silence, sat-chit-ananda, Para-brahman, pure awareness! That's you. As long as you express it and think about it, you're not that. But when you let go and you have become silent without thoughts, then you become pure being, and you have absolutely nothing to do with the world. So the world is real, to the extent that you believe your body is real. You cannot believe in your body and your mind, and believe the world is false. Only when you transcend your ego, then you become pure intelligence, which is what you've always been anyway. Otherwise, it's like the sun traveling all through the universe looking for light, and it asks the moon, "Can you show me where the light is?" And it appears that to the moon, it reflects the sun's light. So the moon believes it has wisdom. It doesn't realize it's reflecting the sun's light. It believes it has a light of its own.

So it is with us. We believe we are alive as a mortal being. We believe we have substance and our mind tells us we've got to go through all kinds of experiences to learn, to become a super being, to become superman, to break through the shell of the chakras, and the rest of it. So we work all of our lives trying to accomplish this. In the end we drop dead. And we continue again. Thinking, judging, manipulating, searching, seeking, we go through it again and again and again, until the time comes when we become disgusted with the whole thing. And that, my friends, is the best thing you can ever do. Become disgusted with the whole teaching. Then you let go. You stop fighting. You stop trying to accomplish anything. You stop trying to be intelligent. You just relax. And your divinity shines by itself. There is nothing you need. As I make that statement and the following statements, your mind starts thinking. When I said there's nothing you need some of you start thinking of the things that you need. There is nothing you have to become. There is no one you have to search out for, to help you.

Can you accept that everything happens by itself? Well it does. It sounds strange I know, because you've been taught to believe that unless you make it happen, it's not going to happen. But you've been programmed. You've been programmed since you were born. And you've been programmed from other lives. So all you are now, is a bundle of programming. That's all you are. A bundle of programs.

You're predictable. How are you going to act when certain incidents approach before you? How are you going to react when you see certain things in your life? Right now you may think you've got everything under control, but if you went home and you found out that your wife or husband ran away with the milkman, you wouldn't be too happy, would you?

Things still control you. Situations still cause you to react. All that has to go. To become free you have to be empty, no preconceived ideas, no concepts, no judgments, no human knowledge. You have to be completely empty. When you're empty you're like space. Space appears as nothing. Yet space is filled with energy. I recently read an article where scientists are going to grow food in space. Out of space they're going to grow food. You heard about growing food under water. Well they are predicting that all of the land and all of the water mass will be used up in years to come, then we'll have to grow food in space. I don't mean up in space somewhere. I mean in space right here. Out of nothing.

What you call space is Consciousness. It appears as no-thing to you because of your mind/body phenomena. If you actually were able to comprehend and see what you were immersed in, your body couldn't take it. All around you right now, in different dimension, are all sorts of particles, radiations, electromagnetism and much more. But it doesn't affect you, because your body-mind is made that way. Yet you are not your body or your mind. You are pure consciousness. You are space. You are emptiness, nirvana. So what are you going to do about it? Cry? Get upset? Become affected by peoples words or actions?

There appears to be two different kinds of realization. One is when you transcend and you're still aware of yourself. You're separate from the universal, but you have transcended. The other one is when you have transcended the body so completely that you have become all-pervading, omnipresent. You have become the universe. There is no longer me and mine. You no longer believe I own this, and you don't. This is mine. You've become the universe and thoughts like mine and thine no longer enter your mind. But the one before that, is you're still aware of yourself as consciousness, but not universal consciousness, personal consciousness.

You can tell if you're getting there by the way you see things. If you're beginning to feel that you're like the screen, and that everything, everything that you see, including your body, is a superimposition on the screen, and you feel radiantly happy for no reason, you know you've come a long way. But when you feel like one of the images on the screen, and you do not remember that you are the screen, then you're still part of the world.

It may sound strange but everything, the trees, the sky, the moon, the sun, people, your relatives and your body, your mind, are all superimpositions on yourself. Just hearing this should make you happy. You are the imperishable Self. There never was a time when you were born, and there never will be a time when you disappear. You are that. You are that Self, without others. Wake up. Know yourself for what you really are. Stop believing that you are a man or a woman, and you're going through certain experiences. Stop believing you've got to work out your karma and that everything that happens to you is karmic. That's human thinking. Stop believing that God punishes and God rewards. There is no such God. Wake up. You're living the mortal dream and you're believing in it. Nothing can ever happen to you. There is no one called you. You don't exist. No thing that you can imagine exists. Realization doesn't exist. Liberation doesn't exist. It doesn't exist because you've got to think about it. And of course everything you think about is false imagination. You can only confirm this truth in the silence.

I realize that I only see most of you about four hours a week, and the world has you most of the time. Maya is very strong. Do not kid yourself. It doesn't exist, but appears very strong. Take a look at your actions this week and you'll see what I mean. Everywhere is maya. It's like a magician playing a game with you. Making you believe what is false is real, and what is real is false. And you're accepting it. Give it up. Become free. All you've got to do is give up your thoughts. Stop trying to analyze. Become totally still. There is no one to search for. There is no place to go. There is absolutely nothing to do.

It's too simple, that's why you won't do it. You want to get involved, don't you? You want to get involved in all kinds of teachings. You want to store knowledge in your head. Can't you understand this is what's keeping you back? You're reading all these books, going to all these teachings, accumulating all this knowledge. And you are becoming smarter and smarter and smarter, and getting caught in the trap of maya. Why do you think you have to learn a foreign language, like Sanskrit? Why do you think you have to learn the Kabbalah? Why do you think you have to learn all these different teachings, Zen, Buddhism, Tao? What do you get from all of this? Human knowledge. You learn to out-talk everybody else with your profound knowledge. But then when you get by yourself, you become like a little baby. You realize you're huffing, and you're in need. You have desires. You become a complicated human being.

This is the reason that in the old days beings became self-realized faster. Because they had no paper to make books. No pencils and pens to write with. They didn't have transportation like we have to day, so you can run from one guru to the next. They had to stay where they were and figure it out by themselves. All the answers you're looking for are within yourself. There is nowhere you have to go. Everything you want you already possess. You just can't see it because you're so involved in the ego.

There is a substratum of existence called consciousness. Another name for this consciousness is bliss. It is all-pervading. As you begin to merge with it, it becomes you. It is your real nature. It is self-contained. The world, the universe, did not come out of it. I'll repeat that. There are teachings that tell you that the world is a modification of consciousness, and we have to return to consciousness. There is nothing to return to.

Consciousness is pure awareness. It is aware of itself as absolute reality. The world is like a reflection in the mirror. Where did the reflection come from? From nowhere, because it doesn't really exist. You can not try to grab the image in the mirror, for you grab the mirror. When you awaken you understand that you are the mirror, and the reflection of the world is like the water in the mirage, like the snake in the rope, like the sky is blue. Why does this happen? It doesn't. It appears to happen. Why does it appear to happen? It doesn't. The appearance appears to happen. Why does the appearance appear to happen? It doesn't. It appears to appear to appear to happen. And we can go on like this all night.

It is difficult for the human mind to grasp that you are not what you appear to be, yet this is exactly what we have to do. As long as you believe you're human and you have to fight your way out of it by learning certain yoga techniques, or by meditation, or by any other method, you've got a long way to go. You're already that. You are that which you seek. There is nothing else. There are no real techniques. The reason that Ramana Maharshi, Nisargadatta and others gave techniques is because the aspiring student expected something.

As an example, if you were in my ashram and you came and asked me all these stupid questions, I would just look at you and wouldn't answer. And you would have the answer. But because there are always new people and you have certain questions, and I only see you four hours a week, I make up all these answers. They are totally meaningless. And you think you found an answer to your question. But you are not the questioner, and there is nowhere for the answer to go. You are pure intelligence. And as pure intelligence, there's no question and there's no answer.

So what are you looking for? What do you want? Your mind should be a blank when I ask you this. If you think you want something, or you need something, you're making a mistake. I am merely a reflection of yourself. You see me as yourself. Therefore, whatever you think of yourself you're seeing in me. But when I see you, I see my Self with a capital S. To me there are no others. Everything is the one Self. When I refer to myself, I'm referring to absolute reality and those of you who are ready, because of my saying the Self is omnipresence, those of you who are ready are merged into the Self and also become that.

But there's no separateness. There is not me and you. There is only me as you. Me, meaning the Self. You, meaning the Self. There is only the Self, and we are that. So wake up. Stop thinking of ways and means to become self-realized. Become free. All is well. All is exceedingly well. All has always been well. Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, Om, shanti, Peace.

S1: Is there any difference for visions and dreams?

R: Oh, no. A dream is like this. The only difference is this is longer. It seems to last longer. But otherwise it's all a mortal dream. When you're dreaming, that's your world for now. You're not conscious, through your sleeping, of the waking world. But you believe the dream is a waking world. When you wake up it changes, and this becomes a waking world. But there's no real difference. They're both the same. (S: And visions are part of the dream?) Visions are all part of the imagination. They're part of the dream. They're a little higher than a dream. But they are in the dream category, because, after all, who's having the vision. The real Self does not need any visions. So a vision is manifested by the mind. Yet as long as you are in your body, you'll have dreams and visions sometimes. But when you are really awake, you will be the witness to your visions, to your dreams, and also to this world.

S2: Robert, is there anything you could say for when a person who has a temporary loss of identification with their body and mind, and during those hours that the person has the sense of being, just being. Is there anything that can be done during those hours to help prevent the awareness or focus slipping back into body-mind?

R: What's going to happen will happen of it's own accord. When you have periods of nirvikalpa samadhi, that's good. All you've got to do is keep on doing what you're doing, and it will intensify all by itself when you're ready. There's something within you that knows exactly when it's going to happen. Everything is pre-ordained. But your job appears to be to dive deeper into the Self. When you feel yourself coming out of it, pose the question, 'Who's coming out of it? Who went in?' The person who went in it doesn't exist any longer. He's been transcended. So who's coming out of it, and in what form? Ask the question to yourself and you will find that you stay in it longer and longer. But everything is right. There are no mistakes. So when you do come out of it do not believe there's something wrong, or you've got to stay longer. After all, that's the ego that says that. But simply watch yourself. Observe, look, be, and everything will take care of itself.

The worst thing you can do is to analyze. Do not analyze what happened. Just watch, observe. The ego is the great analyzer. It wants to analyze everything. It wants to know. When there is no one left to know, then you will be that all the time. After all, who knows? The shadow knows. Remember the shadow? (S: Yes, Lamont Cranston.) Right. (S: What evil lurks in the heart of man.) That's right. (S: We're all from the same generation.)

S: Would hypnosis be useful as a means to breaking the hypnosis?

R: No, because hypnosis simply contacts the subconscious. It reinforces your ego. You're already hypnotized. So you don't want to double your hypnosis. Because then you have to get rid of the hypnotic trance as well as the waking trance. (S: That's how it appears it should be.) That's how it appears that it should be? How's that? (S: That's actually breaking the trance.. Hypnosis can't break the trance.) Only you can. By admitting and realizing there never was a trance. That you're already free and liberated now.

S: Robert, scientists and psychologists and other people, they always try to unlock the limitations of the brain. We use only say 10% of the brain. If we somehow get to the point of using 100% of our brain, would that get us more immersed..?

R: More immersed in the ego. (S: Yes. It is fortunate that we only use 10%..) You're right, because after all, what is the brain? It's an extension of the body. And the more you use the brain, the more lost you become in maya. So you don't want to expand the brain. You want to transcend the brain.

S: Robert. Does a dog take a physical body again and again? They seem so free.

R: Say that again. (S: Does a dog take a physical body again and again? They seem so free?) You mean do they reincarnate? What happens to animals, they have a collective consciousness. And they simply go back into the collective consciousness. And come back out of it again. Whereas humans have an individual consciousness and they reincarnate with the same soul, that's the illusion. But animals go into a pool of collectiveness, and re-emerge from that, for what it's worth. (S: How do you know that?) Who knows? (S: You're supposed to.) I don't know. It just came to me as I was talking. (S: It's a nice theory, but is it true?) The only thing that's true is that you are absolute reality. (S: Granted.) That's it. (S: The rest is all...) Malarkey. (S: Thank you. That kind of ends the question.) (S2: That's a good question...) Sure. We can always see where were going.

S: What is the so-called blue pearl or the sesame seed supposedly. Is that soul?

R: You mean what Swami Muktananda refers to? (S: Yes. I heard it referred to by other Swamis or whatever.) The blue pearl is a point of consciousness. Ramana Maharshi uses the right side of the heart, in the right side of the chest, where the heart which is consciousness resides. So the blue pearl is the same thing. Blue pearl, white pearl, gray pearl, the right heart, left heart, it's all the same. It's just a point of reference. It has no real significance. It's a place where you concentrate for the beginner. A beginning student needs to concentrate on a point in the body, to become one-pointed, so they stop thinking. So they concentrate on the imaginary blue pearl, or in the heart in the right side of the chest, or between the eyebrows or your navel. And that just makes you one-pointed. When you're one-pointed you can give up all that, and stop thinking all together. Then you become totally free.

Catch yourself. What are you thinking about? It's those very thoughts that keep you from awakening. Always catch yourself thinking. And ask yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come?" even if they're good thoughts. Makes no difference. There's something within you that knows what to do. There is a power greater than you that knows how to take care of you without your help. All you've got to do is to surrender to it. Surrender your thoughts, your mind, your ego, to the current that knows the way. It will take care of you. It will take better care of you than you can ever imagine. Most people are under the mistaken impression that if their thoughts stop they will vegetate and become a vegetable. On the contrary, you will become spontaneous. You will think just enough to take care of the moment and everything will be taken care of for you. Try it. We always think we're very important, and we have to think. Only remember the cliché "I think therefore I am." It should be "I am, therefore I don't have to think." How would you like to sit like this all night? (S: I could do it.)

S: It's funny. Tonight I'm feeling more energetic . . . All this is really, it somehow makes me think this is why it's called liberation. (R: Good.) (S: I feel good also.)

S: (referring to sitting) I could do it. But I don't know if the body would care for it.

R: Well, you don't have to sit. You can lie down on the floor and stretch. But some of you are always thinking you're going to miss your favorite TV show.

S: Robert, in talking with some satsangees, some of them they say that "I cannot do much of self-inquiry," or some of them also say "I don't care much for self-inquiry," or "What I want to do is go and sit with Robert." Would you comment on that?

R: Well, what can I say. Actually our being together at satsang is the entire teaching. The words are merely a pointer to be able to sit in the silence together and find peace. So what you're saying, Jorje, is true. Just being together does the trick. (S: What's the trick?) The trick is to wake up. I call it a trick because most people don't realize that all they have to do is keep quiet and then they'll be awake. So I trick them into making a speech, instead of telling them just sit with me and all will be revealed. Thereby hearing the words, people believe they found something out. But the words are to make you sit quietly and behave yourself.

S: Robert. You're saying that it's the grace that flows from the silence that transforms us?

R: Oh yes, true. Grace is already there. You simply have to be quiet enough to pick it up. When your mind is noisy you pick up the vibration of the world. Just like with a pool of water. When the water is still it reflects the moon and the stars, but when the water is noisy it cannot do that at all. It reflects nothing. So when your mind is noisy, it reflects chaos, confusion. When your mind is still and quiet, it reflects your divinity.

S: Would you advise certain kind of disposition, Robert, before we come to the meetings?

R: That's a good question. It's a good idea, before you come, to sit for an hour by yourself and reflect upon yourself. Still your mind. Become peaceful. Or you can read a spiritual book, if you like, for about an hour prior to coming to the meeting. This will help. (S: Just to make peace of mind?) Well, everything is unfolding as it should. Be true to yourself and right action will take place in your life. So thank you for coming. I love you.

Remember to worship yourself, to pray to yourself, to kneel to yourself, because God dwells in you as you. Peace.

(end) [TOC]

YOU HAVE TO HAVE BHAKTI

28th April, 1991

Robert: I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to be with you again. Get the preliminaries out of the way. Ask yourself, "Why did I come here today?" What is the reason you came to satsang? Is it because you had nothing better to do? Or you are an active person and you've got to go somewhere on Sunday? You could have gone to the beach. You could have gone to play golf. You could have gone to a local bar and got drunk. You could have done many things, but you chose to come here.

Or did you? There is something within each one of us that moves us. The body is like a puppet, manipulated by cosmic forces, and where you go has all been predetermined. In other words, it's no accident that you are here. Perhaps you verbally said, "That's where I'm going," and you believe you made the decision, but the decision was made a long time ago, before you came into the body. This is true of your every act. This is true of everything you do in life. If you can truly understand what I'm saying, why worry? Why fret? Why be upset over anything? Whatever is going to happen, will happen. You simply watch. You do not react. And you realize it's all for the good. You are not what you appear to be. You think you've made decisions today of what you should wear, where you should go, what you should eat. Every thing has been made for you. What I'm trying to say to you is you do not have to carry the load.

It's like when you go on a train and you have your suitcase in your hand. Do you sit with the suitcase on your head and carry the load? Or do you put the suitcase on the train in the compartment? You will still get to your destination. It's the same with life. You're going to your destination. Your destination is awakening, liberation. You do not have to carry the load. The load is desire. You want it very bad, and the more you want it, the more you're pushing it away, because a strong want, a strong desire, is a strong ego. It's not desire you want to develop, it's love, compassion, understanding. Let everything happen as it may. When the smoke clears, you will still be who you are, and you'll be totally free.

There is absolutely nothing in this world, or anywhere else, to worry about. No matter how things may appear in your life, all is well. You are divinity itself, just the way you are. Now when you start to think about just the way you are, you spoil it, for you say to yourself, "How can I be divinity? I'm this and I'm that." Who told you to think? Your thoughts will do it to you all the time. You simply remain in that moment. In that moment all is well. In that moment you are free. In that moment you are filled with joy. As soon as you start to think about that, you spoil it.

The secret therefore is to stay in the moment. Never leave the moment. You become spontaneous. You never dwell on the past and you never concern yourself with the future. For if you are truly in the moment, the moment becomes your tomorrow, and your next week, and your next year.

I've got a new song on tape which is a beautiful poem that comes out of the guru Gita. It was originally in Sanskrit. It was translated into English. The bhaktas here will love it. The aspiring Jnanis, when you hear the term sat guru, you can change that in your mind to consciousness, or absolute reality. I think that should be our theme song. See if you agree with me. Swami Muktanandas name is mentioned a couple of times. If you like, you can change it to what Muktananda really means, bliss of liberation. But listen to it and let me know what you think.

(Robert plays Kindle my hearts flame with thine.)

What do you think?

Student: Beautiful, beautiful.

S: I was just feeling the energy. I wasn't even listening to what he was saying. (R: That's good.) Because you really don't have to. You can just feel the energy while I listen to that.

R: Any other comments?

S: I think we ought to have a half hour chanting before every satsang.

S: And the rest please.

R: Should we use this as a sort of theme?

S: Robert, we need someone to get the words down.)

S: Let me bring a copy in Sanskrit. It's really beautiful in Sanskrit.

R: I want everybody to hear the words to know what they are talking about.

Okay, make no mistakes about it. If you want Jnana, you have to have bhakti, in other words you have to have an open heart. When your heart opens, automatically the Self appears.

But how does the heart open?

Through love, through devotion. Through devotion of that Self. Many people do not understand this. When people get involved in Jnana they become very talkative, and they discuss it, and talk about it, and memorize it, and read books about it. The years pass and you become a walking encyclopedia, but you've hardly made any progress. To make progress there has to be devotion. You have to love yourself, not what you appear to be, but your Self, God. When you begin to truly become a bhakta, and you love your Self, the Self you love becomes omnipresence, all-pervading. So naturally, automatically, you love everybody in this world, insects, animals, insentient and sentient beings, everything. You can only do that when you open your heart and you love your Self. That person becomes self-realized.

I have never known a person, who had a cold heart, who is self-realized. They may say they are, but it's impossible. You have to open yourself to the universe. You have to have a great compassion, loving kindness, and that's when everything happens by itself. But there are so many mean people around, so-to-speak, not here, but in the world. And they find out about self-realization, Advaita Vedanta. They start to read book after book after book, and they add it on to their arrogance. When you try to talk to those people they throw quotations at you from the books they've read. You've got to have love.

I received an interesting phone call this morning from a disciple who comes to this class, and many other people have asked me similar questions at various time. I talk about this once in a while. So I asked her, "May I share this question with the class today and give you the answer then." She said, "Okay, but I want to be anonymous." I agree. And here's the question:

"Robert," she said, "Why don't you advertise that you are a direct disciple of Ramana Maharshi? Why don't you make circulars? Why don't you put it in the newspaper so you can attract thousands of people, and then you can have ashrams all over the country, and have intensives, and charge a lot of money, and you can travel internationally. You'll be well known, and you'll have a lot of money, you can do with what you like?"

Well, first I kept silent. Because usually when people ask me ludicrous questions like that, I will try to explain this. Number one, Bhagvan Ramana Maharshi never had any direct disciples. He was not a guru. It is true there are many devotees who claim he is their guru. When they used to ask him, he would keep silent. He does not acknowledge devotees or disciples. Yet thousands claim to be disciples and devotees of his.

When I came to see him many years ago, I came because I wanted to confirm my own experience. I first went to see Yogananda, and I wanted to become a monk, because I no longer fit into the world patterns. But after a couple of weeks talking to me and observing me, he told me to go to India and see Ramana Maharshi. Of course I'd seen him before when I was a baby in the crib. We won't go into that right now. When I got to India and went to Ramana Maharshi, it was about 5 o'clock in the evening. He was about to take his stroll. He was with an attendant and I was climbing up the hill with my knapsack on my back. He turned around and looked at me, and he gave me one of his beautiful big smiles. I smiled back at him and he continued his walk.

For the three years I was there we had many conversations. Most of them are personal. But the first day I saw him personally he told me we had been together before in a previous life. I never thought that I would be a disciple of his, or a devotee or anything else. While I was sitting in the hall, during this talking with people, there were people who insisted that he is their guru, and he would keep silent. And they would pressure him. They wanted confirmation. And once in a while he would say, "If you believe I am, that's sufficient." But in all of his life he never claimed to be a guru or to have disciples. That's number one.

Number two, find out what ajnani really is. Read the works of Shankara, the Upanishads, the Bhagavad Gita. Another word for Jnani is an Avadhoot. The literal translation of that means a crazy, adept, non-conventional. This body has no desires. This body runs from fame and name. There is nothing that this body wants. If it usually appears that I'm in need of something, it's for others.

The only reason we have the transcriptions of the talks is because so many of you wanted them. And if you want the transcriptions, you should use them in the right way. And I talk mainly for the devotees now. The right way to use the transcriptions. I would suggest that for about six months, do not read any other materials. It's not because I do not want you to see what else is going on, but because it becomes confusing if you read the transcriptions, and then read books by others. Sometimes there are many transcriptions that are not only confusing, but contradictory.

You only see me about four or five hours a week. That's another reason why we have transcriptions. If we were together every day I'd tear them all to pieces and throw them away. But since you only see me four or five hours a week at this time, the rest of the time everything you need to know is in the transcriptions. So the proper way to read it is this. Go through it one time completely. Before you go to sleep is the best time. Then go over it again, paragraph by paragraph. Read one paragraph and ponder that particular paragraph, until you go through the whole thing. Do this for about a week for each transcriptions. If you do this and you come to satsang, I can assure you that you will make fast advancement.

Any questions about that?

As I always tell you, I would rather have five devotees that are really into this, than have a thousand seekers and disciples who come and go, and compare notes, and compare me with other speakers and other people around town. Everything takes care of itself.

Think about your purpose. What do you really want? You should be an empty vessel. When you empty yourself of all your preconceived ideas, all of your concepts, all of your desires, when you empty yourself out completely, then reality shows itself. But you cannot add on what you learn here to your existing self with a small 's.' Remember you've got samskaras to work out. You've got the brainwashing you received since you were a baby to get rid of. You are full of nonsensical ideas, and that all has to go. Being here is the focal point for going further with your self-realization. It makes no difference what I say. I can be talking about ice-cream, or chocolate bars. It doesn't make any difference. Just by your being here there is a subtle energy that takes over and pushes you forward.

Many people call me, they want me to talk about this, or to change some of the things I do, or to do this, or to do that. If I were a minister or a philosopher and rehearsed the program, and had a written text to go by, then there can be changes. But I am what I am, and that's what I am, I'm Popeye the sailor man. I do not plan anything. I do not have any rehearsals. This body just does what it does. What you see is what you get, nothing more and nothing less. Any questions about that?

S: What is this energy, how does it come about? It always happens when I get here?

R: It always happens when you get here? (S: When I come here it always happens without doing anything.) The seat you're sitting on is charged. I have a little button here when you sit in the seat. (S: I couldn't understand it, why, it just comes about naturally, without doing anything.) There is no real explanation for it. An explanation would be futile. Accept it. (S: Amazing.) You know what's interesting. That's a good point. The people who do not try to analyze these things are the people who make progress. What difference does it make where it comes from as long as you are receiving it. (S: Then why do I have to come here for it? Why not analyzing it? It happens consistently here. Instantaneously without any effort.) It has to do with our relationship.

S: You know, you say you are not the doer. And I was thinking you're not the thinker either. So if you're not the doer and you're not the thinker, then you can let it all go.

R: Exactly. There's nothing to hold on to. (S: There's nothing at all there.) And when you let go you feel the subtle energy you're talking about. Just be yourself. Everything we do here is important. Every song we play, every chant we do, every word, every silence, it's all important. I know there are some people who would like to keep quiet all the time. They'd like me to shut up and not say a word, and just sit still. There's a time for that also. But remember, if you will, that the words that come out, are words of silence. Even though I may be appearing to talk to you, you're sitting in the silence. Think about that.

What I'm trying to say is, do not look for faults. Do not say to yourself, "Well, I'd rather be doing this," or "Why don't you give us more of this and less of that." Remember it's you that says this. This is coming out of your ego. Allow everything to be.

That's what I meant before when I said you have to become a bhakta first. That means you just give out love, compassion, joy, kindness. You become a living embodiment of that. Then Jnana starts to develop inside of you. But if you always find fault with others, you're always trying to correct something. You always see what somebody else is doing. When your mind is full of doubts, apprehensions and suspicions, all of this negative energy pays a price in your consciousness and you develop in reverse. As the years pass you wonder why you haven't made too much progress. Give of yourself. Open up. Love. And then see what happens.

The chanting we do has a very positive effect on the nervous system. It clears the chakras. It makes you one-pointed, so you can turn into your original Self. The whole object of everything we do is to make you one-pointed, so you can ponder "Who am I?" The mind becomes quiet and everything unfolds as it should. So let us do a little chanting.

(Chanting)

There is only one problem that affects everyone. And that is, you think. It's your thoughts that get you into trouble. You have an opinion on almost everything. If you would only learn to control your thoughts you would become absolutely free. Even now, while I'm talking to you, there are many thinking of something else. Your mind appears to have complete control over you. Now if your mind were real you would have a battle on your hands. But, since your mind doesn't even exist, you merely have to see the mind for what it really is, the Self. There is no mind. There are no thoughts. There is only the Self. All the scriptures of the world have tried to explain this. Be still and know that I am God. Focus your mind on God, and all will go well with you. They're saying the same thing.

Do not allow your mind to persuade you with all the different thoughts that come into your head. Your mind is not your friend. It appears that it wants to survive, so it's going to do everything in the book to cause it to survive. It will tell you all kinds of stories. It will bring up everything from the past. It will bring out doubts, apprehensions, suspicions, anger, greed. It will make you believe that you're right to act the way you do, and to feel the way you do. Great Rishis, Sages, since time immemorial have realized that the only problem you have to deal with is your mind. If you can only stop your mind from thinking, self-realization will come of itself.

How do you do that? Through self-inquiry, no matter what thoughts come to you. Makes no difference what they are. Were not talking about negative versus positive thoughts. Were talking about all thoughts, no matter how true they may appear. Even if your eyes show you, even if your brother is over to your house and while you're sleeping he takes $50 out of your pocket, your eyes are showing you something is wrong. It doesn't mean that you let him go away with the $50. You confront him, but you do not react. You simply take back your $50 and you forget it. It's finished. It doesn't even mean that you have to continue inviting your brother to your house. Yet nothing is done with malice. The secret is to forget and forgive as fast as you can. Remember your brother is going through his own karma, and this is what he was supposed to do, so how can you hate him? You have a vocabulary of different names. You are ready to call him thief, crook, no good and so on. All this has to be forgotten. Remember again, you do not become a doormat for him to step on. You merely take the right action that you will do, and you forget it. And that's the end of it.

Your body knows what to do by itself. It's your mind that makes up all these things, that holds grudges, that holds malice, day after day, week after week, that's hurt by words. Give it all up.

Even the job that you have. You don't have to think about your job. Your body will know what to do. But if you allow your mind to get into control, you will hate your job. You will wonder why you have to do this kind of work. You will compare yourself with others, and cause all kinds of problems for yourself.

Remember where you are at the present time is your right place. There are no mistakes. Do not try to analyze it. Just be. And if you identify with God, with the Self, with absolute reality, with consciousness, it will not even seem like work. You will always be filled with joy, with happiness, for your mind is on God, and your body is doing the work.

Now how do you keep your mind on God? By asking, "Who am I?" By inquiring, "Who am I? Who does the work? Who has the problems? I do. Who is this I? From whence did it come?" In other words, "How did the I arise?" and trace the I back. Trace the I back to it's origin, which is your spiritual heart at the right side of your chest. As you abide in the I by tracing it back, that's how you're thinking about God. It's just another name for God, I.

Then you will do your work without thinking about your work, whatever you have to do.

So you see, it's your mind that causes you the problem. Your mind is just another name for I. If there were no I there would be no mind. Whatever pops up, ask yourself, "To whom does it come? Where did it come from? Who gave it birth?" Remember, you're not to do this only with things you don't like, but with all the stuff that comes to you of a good nature. Materialism, good and bad, are both sides of the same coin. They've got to go.

S: Robert, I want to ask you a question. Is it possible to realize the Self through a Jnani without a body? (R: Yes.) It is?

R: Yes it is. Because the Jnani is all-pervading. And if you focus your attention on his presence, you'll make contact, if you are sincere enough. (S: So even at a distance one could just focus on your picture for example.) It doesn't make any difference. The only difference is your mind. Your mind will tell you all sorts of stories. But if you do not listen to your mind, then the Jnani is everywhere. People are still getting healings from Ramana Maharshi. And they claim that he comes into their lives and solves their problems. For a Jnani there's no time and space. That's been obliterated. There is only the Self as omnipresence, so he or she is everywhere. Of course it's up to you to exude the right energy from yourself, so you make contact. It's just like grace. Gods grace is everywhere, but it's up to you to make contact with it. And of course the easiest way is through devotion, through love.

S: When one has doubts, does self-inquiry help to bring oneself from doubts?

R: Of course. That, to my way of thinking, is the easiest way, for you merely ask yourself, "To whom do these doubts come? Who has these doubts?" Every time they come up, ask the same question, and the doubts will eventually cease.

S: I don't understand this thing about love, because it seems to me that grace has nothing to do with anything. It just is.

R: Grace just is, and so is love. (S: Well yes, but you don't necessarily...) If you surrender your heart to grace, surrender your heart to grace and you'll feel it. Love, grace, Self, they're all the same.

S: Robert, I was reading the other day, there was a guy in India who said that he felt that the human body was very precious. That it was very difficult to obtain. And he says that a number of beings around him were humans, reincarnated as animals who seek their liberation that way.

R: This is part of yoga. That's all possible on a lower plane. It depends where you are at yourself. The body is very precious so that you become self-realized by having a body. But since you are self-realized already, for whom is the body? There are all kinds of psychic, physical, causal planes that you can play with and get lost in those planes. Go beyond all that. Always try to remember that everything is an emanation of your own mind. Causal planes, astral planes, other bodies, demons, spirits, genus, it all comes out of your own mind. When the mind is controlled you no longer see these things, and you have nothing to do with them. They exist on lower planes.

S: Robert. On this business of letting the body do the work, according to your mental work...

R: What, if you never work? (S: That's one thing. But what if you are doing mental work?) Mental work? (S: Yes.) You mean you work with your mind? (S: Yes.) Actually it seems that you work with your mind. But even if you're an accountant, you have to write figures, you have to calculate, and your body has to do those things. So your body will use the portion of your mind that it has to use, to make all those things happen. The body and the mind are synonymous really. When the mind goes, the body goes also. But for appearance sake in this world, the body appears to carry on. Therefore in order for the body to carry on, it has to use the mental energy that's available for it, to carry on. Consequently it will take care of itself, and the work will get done, without you being identified with it.

S: Or it comes through in the practice. It seems like there is a procedure when you're doing physical work. It is easy to see how you can do self-inquiry. Or, if you're trying to calculate figures for example, it seems to interfere, seems to be different.

R: I understand what you're saying. It appears that when you're using your mind and you have to concentrate on what you're doing, it's more difficult. That's not true. When you get up in the morning, if you prepare yourself well and practice self-inquiry at that time, it will carry on when you go to work, by itself, and your mind will concentrate on the figures. And at the same time, the self-inquiry will go on.

You've probably hummed a song before, and the song was in your mind. And while you're doing your work, mentally you're humming the song. Yet you're still calculating, you're still doing whatever you have to do mentally. You're doing all the mental work, but the theme of the song never leaves you. The song is in the mind also. And so it is with self-inquiry. When you begin to practice as soon as you open your eyes, it will carry you through the day. No matter if you're doing mental work or physical work, self-inquiry will still go on.

S: Robert, is there a reason why you are a vegetarian? Does it have a practical benefit in your practice?

R: There are so many ways to explain that. When I was about thirteen years old, I had eaten meat until that time. And then one day my mom gave me a steak, and I just blurted out, "I don't eat dead flesh." And I've never eaten it since.

Now if you're in the body, and you believe you are the body, you have to look at the moral reasons. What right do we have to kill these thousands of cows and pigs and chickens, so we can stuff our face with dead flesh. Think about that. Right now there are cows standing in line to get killed. McDonalds alone uses a million cows a year. All these cows are grown and they put them in a feedlot, and torture them with all kinds of antibiotics, and then slaughter them, so we can eat them. Morally it doesn't seem right. It's been proven a pig is smarter than a dog. It makes a better pet. Would you like to see your dog or your cat slaughtered and people eating them? You have preference. All animals are the same. On one level, the reason the world is degenerating is t cause of what were doing to all of the animals and the earth. But that's on one level. So you have to take it for what it's worth.

S: You know, we see in the zoo, we see them feeding one animal with another animal, and you give your dog meat. And you say, well my dog can eat meat, why can't my husband?

R: No comment.

S: Her husband doesn't bark.

S: So if you could stop all the animals...?

R: Well one thing leads to another. Because of ecology reasons the animals know how to take care of themselves and eat certain other animals, to balance everything out. But human beings are mercilessly killing animals for the fun of it. We think we have to eat animals, but we don't. Humans are not supposed to be carnivorous. You want me to prove it to you? Look at your teeth. Now look at the vegetarian animals that don't eat meat and look at their teeth. Like horses, cows, elephants. They have teeth like ours, gorillas. But when you look at your carnivorous animals, they have fangs, to tear flesh apart. This shows us that we're supposed to be vegetarians. We come from the animal family of vegetarians. You know when man started to eat meat? In the old days during the floods, thousands of years ago. Prior to that, man was vegetarian. But the floods destroyed the earth. It was impossible to plant, and man degenerated and started to eat meat. We've been carrying on ever since.

It's a personal thing. You've got to look at yourself, and see what you're doing, and ask yourself, "Why?" I know somebody can be a smart ass and say, "Well nothing exists anyway, so what's the difference? If nothing existed, you would know not to eat meat before that, and you wouldn't do it anyway. If you realize you're not the body, you would not eat animal bodies. You would eat very little, and mostly grains, vegetables and fruits. But you have to come to that conclusion yourself.

(end) [TOC]

BHAKTA AND JNANA

2nd May, 1991

Robert: It's good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. On Tuesday I attended my mother-in-laws funeral. So somebody asked me, why am I not crying? I therefore started to cry, and I cried louder than anybody else. They had to go get me a towel. That's how much I cried. And it made everybody happy. (students laugh) I cried for about ten minutes. I don't know why? (laughter)

SH: Just thinking about it you're starting to cry again.

R: (laughs) Somehow when people ask me to do something, I do it. Yet my feelings never change. And what feelings are those? All is well. Those words never come to my mind, but there is something that knows all is well.

There's some mysterious power that is continuously felt. This power of course is the Self, consciousness. It is beyond consciousness, beyond the Self. What is called I is simply an image, superimposed on this power. Therefore I can be the body and the power at the same time. So the body can cry, can laugh. It can go through all sorts of experiences, but nobody is affected.

The experience is like a burnt rope. They're of no value. You can't do anything with a burnt rope. If you try to touch it, it falls apart. So the feelings, and the emotions, and everything else that this body expresses, is like a burnt rope. It's of no value. There are no words to explain this. But I can assure you that everything is unfolding as it should. No matter what's going on in your life, or what appears to be going on in your life, believe me it's all for your ultimate good.

There is nothing in this universe that can ever hurt you, no matter how things appear and how they look. First of all, you're not your body. There is nothing hurt-able. You're not your mind, so there are no thoughts that can attract you, or destroy you, or repel you. Your beyond that, you're above that.

What you really are, you have to find out for yourself. And you do that, of course, by stopping to identify with the body, and do not react to conditions, that's being yourself. It's not knowing words, or paragraphs, or phrases. It's not by memorizing scripture and trying to impress others. It's by being yourself. To be yourself you just have to stop the thinking process.

Always remember it is your thoughts that keep you from yourself. Every thought that comes to you is your enemy. Even the good thoughts, for the good thoughts are just leading you on. It is your mind playing tricks on you. The good thoughts are trying to make you feel that this world is real, and you should strive after certain things, you should enjoy the world, and take it for what it's worth. But then you have to come under the law of change, and you become disillusioned because the things in your life are no longer the same, after a while.

Then you have to jump back into yourself and take refuge in your Self. When you take refuge in your Self you become happy. When you take refuge in your Self you have peace. When you take refuge in your Self you have harmony, you have joy. It's a mystery to me why people would take refuge in the outside world, in person, place or thing, when you know the outside world is subject to the law of change, and is never the same continuously. So whatever you take refuge in becomes a disappointment, whether it's a person, place or thing.

There was once a young girl who was brought up in a house of prostitution. This was her destiny, at the time. She couldn't get away from it. But she used to pray to Ramana Maharshi, "Oh Lord, if I must go this route, be with me. I'm not praying to change my life, if this is my destiny. But I'm praying that your strength and your love will always be with me."

Now across the street, there was a so called Jnani, and he used to stand in front of the market place, telling everybody they're consciousness and absolute reality, preaching and screaming. This went on for years.

Finally the time came when they both died and they went before God. And God told the girl, "You have to go back to the earth, and you have to be a Jnani." And he told the so called aspiring Jnani, "You have to go back to the earth as a snake." And the man said, "How come Lord? I extolled your virtues to everyone. I told all the people they were consciousness and they were absolute reality, and you send me back as a snake. What did I do?" And God said, "You have no heart. You come from the talking school. All you did all your life was to talk, talk, talk, talk, talk. But this girl gave me her heart. She surrendered to me. She didn't bemoan her fate. She just wanted me to be with her during her trials and tribulations. And I gave her the strength to carry on, so now she is free. But you still have a lot to learn. So you have to go back as a snake."

This makes us think. What are we really doing with our lives? We read lots of books, see lots of teachers, have a lot of head knowledge, but how many of us have given our hearts to God? And God is not far away. God is really the Self. But in order to contact that Self you have to have a lot of humility. To feel God's grace means you have to surrender completely, have a lot of humility. You have to have the attitude, "I know nothing, you are everything." This kind of an attitude will set you free.

And yet, how many of us have an attitude like this? Many of us think to become a Jnani, to become self-realized, we become proud, and you actually become more egotistical than you ever were before. We have a holier than thou attitude. This will never do it.

There is really no difference between a bhakta and a Jnani. One surrenders to God, and they have no other life. They realize that whatever they do, it is God doing it. Therefore it's good. They never complain. They never think of their problems. They think of others and their problems, rather than their own.

And the other one realizes that the I is responsible for all their problems, and for their existence. So they trace the I back to its source, to the heart, and they become free. At that stage there is a merging of both bhakta and Jnani. So a bhakta is a Jnani and a Jnani is a bhakta.

Therefore if you see a teacher who thinks they are better than anybody else, and they seem egotistical, be careful. Most Jnanis never take on a teaching role at all, and they have very little to say. After all, what is there to talk about?

This is what I was trying to explain on Sunday. Just being is enough, not being this, not being that, just being, being at satsang. And whether I talk about ice cream, or jelly beans, it makes no difference. The words themselves have value because the sound of the words are the grace that you feel. But the meaning of the words are only interpreted in your mind. That's why whatever I say is taken differently by each one of you, for it filters through your mind, and your consciousness and your beingness mix with the words, and the words come out according to your way of life. But if you listen with no mind, then you get the true meaning. In other words, do not put too much value on everything I say, but open your heart so the grace portion of it may enter, and you may pick it up, and lift yourself upward.

How do you do this? Just by becoming still, by stopping the mental activity. And you may stop the mental activity by any method you know. If you like to do pranayama, do that. If you like to practice vipassana meditation, do that. If you wish to observe your breath, do that. If you wish to practice self-inquiry, do that. In other words, do whatever you have to do to stop your mind from thinking. Vichara, self-inquiry, is only to keep your mind from thinking. That's all it is. All the practices of yoga lead to the place where you stop thinking. All of the higher religions are to make your thoughts one-pointed. And when your mind stops, you become your Self. You're free.

There are no rituals you have to go through really. You don't have to chastise yourself and try to get rid of your guilt feelings, samskaras, or anything else. By identifying with an empty mind, will do the job for you. But the empty mind is not realization. It is the step before realization. Realization is not an empty mind. Realization cannot be explained. Suffice is to say, that realization is beyond everything and anything you can ever imagine. But if you achieve empty mind, then you're on the way to realization. At that stage the guru within yourself, will pull you inwardly, and you will awaken to your Self. So:

Number 1: You have to develop humility. You have to open your heart to loving kindness.

Number 2: You have to forget about yourself and your problems, as if they never existed, and help others, give of yourself to others, because there is only one Self, and I am is that.

Number 3: You have to stop quoting teachers and telling yourself that I am Brahman, I am no mind, I am consciousness, for that really inflates your ego. You have to stop comparing yourself with anybody or anything.

In other words, you have to become nothing, and that hurts some of you, because you say, "After all I've gone to school for fifty years, I've got a profession, I'm doing this and I'm doing that. And now you tell me I have to become nothing?" Well, consciousness is nothing, it is no thing. What you call God is nothing. So if nothing is good enough for God, it should be good enough for you too.

Can't you see now that when you say to yourself, "Well, I'll never be nothing, I'm somebody. I've studied for years, I'm somebody important," can't you see now that this is what holds you back? Every Sage has come to the point where they have thrown away the scriptures, thrown away the books, thrown away their body, thrown away their knowledge, and thrown away themselves with a small "s." When you get rid of all that stuff, then you become your Self.

Can you see now why it takes so long for some people? Because they're holding on to something. They say, "I can let go of this, but I can never let go of that."

I don't mean you get to the point where you don't care. I don't mean you have to quit your job, or leave your family, or go anywhere. You have to do all this mentally. You do all this in your mind. You use your mind to do all these things, and then the mind turns within itself, and disappears into the heart. So take a look at your life and see what's holding you back. What are you attached to? What do you think is important in this world?

You cannot have both. You cannot mentally be attached to person, place and thing, and awaken at the same time. If you want liberation you have to pay the price, and the price is letting go, giving it all up, surrendering, having perfect faith that all is well. Not trying to interpret what "all is well," means. Just realizing that everything is in it's right place, just the way it is. That's it. Don't interpret that. There are no mistakes. As you begin to dwell on this, as you begin to dwell on these things, automatically you will come to the place where you will realize the last enemy to go is the I. Everything has been attached to the I. But you see how long it takes to get there? You have to do everything else first.

This is why it's dangerous for some people to just teach Jnana Marga by itself, for egotistical people become greater egotists. It builds up your ego. You have to have humility first and go through all these things we discussed. If you really want to do this, you will. You will not do this by taking action, but by sitting in the silence, and surrendering your mind and your body to your Self. I am will take care of itself. You see, I am is your real nature. Therefore you don't have to try to bring it about. All you've got to do is realize that the stuff that's holding you back, has to be given up. Everything has to go, your whole belief system.

What are you holding onto? Think. What's in your mind that's so strong? Fear? A job? All those things are meaningless if you want to awaken. You will still have your job. You will still do whatever you came here to do. I have to emphasize this because we always believe, and the question that I get from most of you is that, "How will I function if I do what you say?" I keep telling you, have no fear, you will function. You will function much better than you can ever imagine. It's hard right now, working with your ego, to think how can I function without a mind, but you will.

Here is something that cannot be explained in words. When you get to the ultimate state, you become human like everybody else. That's why it's difficult to know who a Sage is, because a true Sage appears no different than you and I. The ultimate state is functioning like everybody else, except there is something inside, there's something that makes you understand that you are like the mirror, and your body, your affairs, and everything else in the universe is a reflection. You become both. It appears that you act out your humanhood, but you're not human. And this is the most difficult state to explain, for it is beyond words. It is beyond thoughts. It is beyond reasoning.

You cannot be reasonable to become liberated, it's beyond every human faculty. That's why you can't think about it, and you cannot try to explain it, and you can't even discuss it. All you can do is to do whatever you have to do to get rid of all of your stuff. That's all, and everything else will take care of itself.

It's so simple. Words make it so complicated. The fact is you were never born, you can never die, there is no power that sustains you or maintains you. You do not exist the way you appear. The same is true for the whole universe. It's only a reflection. It's an optical illusion, like the mirage in the water, or the water in the mirage. They're both the same. The water is the mirage and the mirage is the water. So the appearance is water, but when you try to grab it, you grab sand.

Everything you grab in this world is like sand. It seems so real. And then your emotions grab a hold of it and give it more power, so that the maya becomes stronger and stronger and stronger, until you're in such a state that it takes you many incarnations to get rid of all the fears, all the frustrations, thoughts about the past, samskaras. You have made these things real for you, but they do not exist. None of these things are real, but you have made them real. You've done it to yourself.

Therefore when you leave your body, you appear to go through an astral plane, and you take a rest. You meet your long lost relatives, that you couldn't stand. And then you go onwards and go back into a body again. And you continue, and continue, and continue. But it's a lie. You are making it the truth. It is your truth because you believe in this, and you refuse to let go.

Therefore the mature aspirant of Jnana will always work with their I. That's where it begins. Trace the source of I. Where did my I come from? Watch it. Observe it. Watch when you get up in the morning. You feel so peaceful in the beginning, but as soon as you start to think about I, all your problems, your troubles in the world, gang up on you. But if you begin to catch yourself, grab hold of the I, "Where did it come from? Where did it just come from? A moment ago I was at peace. A moment ago everything was all right, but now I'm worried, I'm upset, I'm thinking about my job, my future, my finances, my health.

Where did the I come from that thinks about these things?" and trace the I back, back into the heart, which is the source.

People have asked me what they are supposed to look for in the heart? Well, remember the heart we're talking about is on the right side of your chest, two digits from the center, that's your spiritual heart, that's the source. The I comes out of there. So don't follow the I externally, follow the I internally. You see the difference? Don't go catching the I as it thinks about the world. Reverse the procedure. You want to follow the I back to its source.

So, you can see the source as a brilliant light a thousand times more brilliant than the sun. You can imagine the I going back into that light, merging with the light. Or, if you're bhakti-inclined, devotional, you can think of your favorite saint or Sage, and see your heart center as that Sage, and the I goes back into the Sage or into the light. The Sage absorbs your I. I can assure you that if you practice this only a little bit, you'll have some amazing results.

But for some reason, most people have to be on a spiritual path for years practicing some form of yoga before they can come to that stage where they can follow the I back into the source. Yet there are those people who do not have to be like that. There have been those people who have had no previous experience. They were just able to see that the source of their I is the Self. And they became liberated that instant.

The secret is not to allow the I to take you over. How does the I take you over? You begin to allow it to identify with worldly things, and you do that by thinking about them. Now, as an example, you got up in the morning and you start to think you've got to conserve water, you've got to pay your rent, you've got to buy new clothes, and a million other things about I, I, I. But if you keep remembering that all worldly things are attached to the I, you become introverted, and the I goes back into the source.

Once the I goes back into the source, even for a few moments at first, you become joyously happy. You have much peace and harmony. You feel it immediately. In the beginning it might not last, but at least you had it for a few moments, and you are able to prove the truth of what I'm saying. And some of you have told me you've been able to do this for a few moments, and you felt a joy, and a bliss, and a peace, that you never felt before. You're beginning to feel your Self, your real Self.

As you continue to do this every day, especially when you wake up in the morning, those periods will last longer and longer. They will expand, and you will be able to rest in that space, which is called the fourth state of consciousness, the gap between sleeping and waking. You will be able to stay there for longer periods of time, and you will feel what I'm talking about.

Yet there are some of you who do no practice whatsoever. If you are a bhakta you really don't have to. All you've got to do is surrender, total surrender, which leads to the same thing. But if you're an aspiring Jnani, and you want to get it over with, grab hold of your I, follow it to the source, and become free, totally and completely.

Any questions?

SL: Isn't following the I to the source with the purpose of getting rid of the me instead of finding the Self? There seems to be a semantic difference?

R: It is semantic. The Self is reality. The I is me. The I and me are synonymous. Therefore when you follow the I to the source, you are getting rid of the me. (SL: It seems to be just a collection of memories?) A collection of thoughts, of memories, of samskaras, of opinions, of concepts. That is the I, that is what the I is made of. So when you follow the I to the source. (SL: Do you follow the I into the heart.) Into the heart, that's the source. (SL: And then the I, the me disappears into the Self?) The I disappears, the me disappears. Everything disappears, you disappear. (something happens to the student, she starts laughing) It's really a beautiful experience, but I know that some of you no matter how many times I say this to you, you're not going to do it when you wake up, because you wake up so fast and all you can think of is a cup of coffee. (laughter) I got you, right.

But you've got to learn to slow down. Immediately become aware as soon as you open your eyes, of the time when you just woke up and you were at peace. Ask yourself, "Where did that peace come from?" And you will realize that it came because you did not think of the I. As soon as you think of the I everything is spoilt and you're in your ego again.

So even if it's for a few seconds, just by letting the mind know that you have been peaceful because the mind was not working yet, you'll be able to hold onto that experience a little longer everyday. And the time will come when you become free. There are some of you here that are doing that and there are some of you that are not. You know what you have to do. It's up to you.

SN: Robert, what if instead of feeling peace or feeling bliss you just feel blank? Rather than an experience of bliss it's more of an experience of non-experience?

R: When you experience non-experience that is also good. But that experience is not the truth it's not reality. It's just a quiet experience. (SN: Yeah.) Which is good, if you can identify with that experience you will go beyond it. (SN: But even the blankness, I remember that Ramana was saying that the idea is not to obliterate thoughts, obliterate self but to be fully present? You know to be realized means to be fully present, not to be away from...) Umm. (...here and now.) Umm. (SN: And that blankness is like a non-existence.) The blankness is a non-existence if your mind is causing it to happen. (SN: Right.) If it comes from your mind. But if it comes from your Self you will feel a joy and exhilaration even in the nothingness. You will feel the nothingness as total happiness. You will not be able to explain it but it will be total happiness and that's real emptiness.

SJ: In the total presence because what Ramana was referring to, he was describing a state, as well.

R: As total presence. (SJ: Yeah, yeah.) Yes. All that is in emptiness. It's another term for emptiness, total presence. You have merged in the infinite and you are totally present there.

SN: If you are in a blank state, that's just another state of the mind and...

R: That's a state of the mind. (SN: So...) All those states I'm referring to, are still states of the mind, even bliss. (SN: So do you just rest in that?) You rest in that. (SN: And whatever happens later?) You keep realizing that the Self is all. That all comes by itself, the realization. And it goes deeper and deeper and deeper as you keep resting in that state you keep going deeper and deeper beyond it. Because you are still aware that you are in that state. As long as you are aware that you are in that state, it's the mind. The mind will go and you will not be aware you will just be and that's your final state. When you are not aware.

SN: Robert if you're in this mental state of blankness would devotion help?

R: But of course. (SN: To get out of this mental state because it seems to be just the mind, maybe if you get more into surrender you might...) It'll definitely help. (SN: Yeah.) You can surrender the blank state to yourself. You can say, "Take it Self, " or you can think of your favorite saint or Sage and surrender the blank state to him or her. Give it all up. That definitely helps. But the blank state is a good place to be so you can go further. Everyone reaches the blank state, then you become aware that someone has reached that state. So you inquire, "Who is that someone? Where did the someone come from who has reached the blank state?" Then you will go deeper. Whatever state you acquire, go deeper, by inquiring, "Who am I? Who am I that has reached that state? Never stop until you disappear.

SK: Robert you said something about giving service. Giving oneself to giving service. Not that I'm against giving service but isn't that putting - what is the word. Not indulging yourself? - Finding refuge in things outside of myself? And doing that isn't that a refuge also? I mean I can make service a refuge? I can use that...?

R: You mean you can get attached to it? (SK: Yeah.) Of course you can. (SK: I was thinking another ego trip, right?) But of course, you realize that by giving service you are not being attached to it. You are doing it impersonally. (SK: I don't know if I could do that? It seems like whenever I do that it's always with an alternative motive. If I really question it there is always, an "I'm going to get something out of it that's why I'm doing it.") Well the next time you see a homeless person, give him five dollars and see the thoughts that come into your mind. And question yourself, "Why did I do this? What was my purpose?" Ask yourself those questions and see what happens. But by giving yourself away is a good way to go higher in consciousness. For you are erasing yourself. You're in the process of wiping yourself out. (SK: That's what it feels like, it's really difficult to do that. It's really difficult to give, I mean just give, I really can't in any form of it, you know?) Ask yourself, "Why? To whom is it difficult?" Ask yourself. And of course the answer will come, "It's difficult for me," and carry on and ask yourself, "Where did this me come from that makes it so difficult? Who is this me? What is its source?" Again you follow the me or the I to the source. By inquiring, "Who am I? What is the source of the I that has this difficulty?" And as you merge with the source, the difficulty will dissipate. Therefore everything you've got a problem with, work on that, and realize it's the I that has the problem. When the I merges with the source, the problems been resolved.

(silence)

Robert continues: Shanti, Shanti, Shanti Om, Shanti, Peace.

Any comments, questions? Do we have any prashad?

Thoughts, comments, announcements?

SL: I want to just thank you. (R: No problem.)

SR: Well it's easy in your presence or in the presence of people here to practice what you're suggesting.

R: You mean it's difficult when you're by yourself? (SR: It's not as easy.) Why don't you imagine that we're all together. (SR: Okay.) When you are by yourself because there is nowhere to go, so we're always with you.

(private conversation between Robert and Mary)

SM: Want to mention about the puja sunday, Robert?

R: Well we're not going to start this Sunday. What shall we do with these song sheets. (SM: With these?) You want to take these home and bring them on Sunday? (SM: All right.) Or unless you can hide them somewhere in Henry's house. (SM: Pardon?) You can hide them in Henry's house. Where the dog won't bump into them. (SM: (laughs) I'll take them home. Do you want them Xeroxed off or...?) No we've got plenty there already Xeroxed. (SM: They're already xeroxed?) Yes. (SM: Okay.)

(Pause)

R: Clyde you were in Hawaii seeing Balsekar, right? So why don't you share with us what it was like?

SL: We were in the presence of someone just like you. A loving, dear presence. Witty as you, the company was all as we are.

R: Did he pass around raisins? (laughter) (SL: There were cats.) Did everybody get some? (SL: He quoted Ramana more often than he quoted his own guru Nisargadatta, very, very often. Many quotes from the book were given which many people had with them by the way, had Ramana's book with them.) Umm. (SL: And there were many, many people who knew Henry of course, because Henry was the first one to bring Ramesh Balsekar to this country.) Henry's very popular. (SL: Everyone knows Henry, and everyones heard so much about him. Did Nancy stop by the way? Maybe she's too late.) I told Henry last week that I was listening to Alan Watts on the radio. He's on Pacifica radio every Monday. (SL: Monday at one, right?)

R: Two. So they played a tape from 1957 and Alan Watts was saying, "I'm sitting in Henry Anderson's house looking out the window." (laughter)

SH: That's what comes of being a hopeless seeker. It's the worst disease going.

(general talk)

SL: It was really nice though, it was intensive, because there were two talks a day and we were all together and there was a meditation room, many beautiful places to go, waterfalls and swimming, snorkeling...

SJ: (Student asks for place in Hawaii.)

SL: No it was in Maui. (general talk) What do you call when you have a banquet here? Is it bhandara? (R: Bhandara.) Well it was really nice because we had three of those everyday. (R: Really.) All was vegetarian food. It was prepared on the premises.

R: That sounds nice. (SL: By people who owned a restaurant and they were really talented cooks, it was pretty excellent.) That's pretty good. (SL: Not enough deserts but other than that it was really good.)

SR: We're going to leave you Robert. (SL: No, everyone's gone now, this is the best place to be.) (R: We don't have food.) (SN: But we have raisins.) (laughter)

R: When is Ramana's maha-samadhi? I forgot, I think it was this month? (SL: It was on April 2.) April, was it April? We'll have something to celebrate. (laughter)

(general talk and laughter)

SL: Your birthday's in December?

R: My birthday? (SL: Yeah.) Umm. (SL: When is your birthday?) It's a secret. (SL: Do you remember the day you became enlightened?) It's a secret. (SL: What was it like that day?) It's a secret. (laughter) (SL: Did you just hit yourself on the forehead and say, ... what did you do? You awakened in the morning and that was...) Umm. It's in one of the transcripts. The only reason I don't want to discuss all the birthdays and stuff because people have a tendency to bring me presents.

SH: Don't you like presents?

R: No. (SH: What's the matter with you?) Going crazy. (SH: What have you got against presents.) Why should I get presents? Why don't you get presents? (SH: If they come they come.) We'll give them to Henry. (SH: Sure great.) (laughter)

R: I'll give you a clue, aquarius. January 21st. (R: How did you know that?) It's in the transcript. I read them. January 21st?

SR: The suggestion of substituting a saint every time we sense our me, works real nice in this room. (R: Make every room this room. It's your mind that tells you something is easier and something is harder.)

Okay remember to love yourself, to worship yourself, to pray to yourself, to bow to yourself because God dwells in you as you, I love you peace. Until we meet again have a good life.

(tape ends) [TOC]

HOW TO DEVELOP COMPASSION AND HUMILITY

5th May, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. I welcome you with all my heart. I see a couple of new faces here. If you've come to hear a speech or a lecture forget it. I do not give lectures nor do I make speeches. I speak nonsense, no sense. It has nothing to do with your senses so it's nonsense.

For instance: I say to you your true nature is absolute reality. You are pure awareness. You are sat-chit-ananda. You are ultimate oneness.

Does that make sense to some of you? It's nonsense because you identify with the body-mind phenomena and you believe you are your experiences. You live your experiences, your thoughts about the body, the world, the mind. And you are always thinking, thinking, thinking that you've been hurt, you've been slandered, something is wrong. You watch the news on the TV, you hear the radio and you identify with all the wrongs of the world and then you feel out of sorts. That's nonsense, none of that exists. Only absolute reality exists and you are that.

So to put ourselves in the mood, take out your song sheet. And we shall sing "Joy to God."

(song is sung)

Again, I welcome with all my heart, good afternoon. And let me reiterate during the course of the talk you'll hear me speaking nonsense.

I don't make any sense to a sense bound person. Most people are bound by their senses. They can only understand what they read in the paper, what they watch on TV. When I try to express the truth, that you are not the body and you are not the mind, you look at me as if I'm crazy. Of course I am crazy so you can look at me any way you like.

But my experience has been that there is no body, there is no mind, there is no universe, there is no God, there is no person, there is no experience, there is only consciousness and you are that. Not the you that thinks that they're the ego, but the real you. The real you is divine, absolute reality, nirvana, total emptiness. This is the real you. When you get a glimpse of what you really are you have unalloyed happiness, total joy, bliss. And then you begin to see your fellow man, the world the universe as yourself.

So, if you want to change the world. If you want to make this world a better place in which to live. If you want to obliterate mans inhumanity to man. Know yourself. For your real Self is all-pervading, it's omnipresent. When you know your real Self you are no longer hurt-able and the whole universe becomes you.

So when you become a semblance of peace, an embodiment of peace in realization, so does the whole universe, even though there appears to be something else in the world. But it's only an appearance, like the water in the mirage. Like the sky is blue, like the snake in the rope. Those are appearances.

In the same way your body, your experiences, your thoughts are appearances, they're not you. You are free from all that, rejoice. You are more wonderful than you can ever imagine. For you there is no birth and no death. For you there is no substance in reality, as you call it. Reality, I mean your experiences in your body, your reality with a small "r". That reality has no substance, there is no ego sustaining it. Your period from birth to death doesn't even exist. It appears to exist and it's the appearance that gets you in trouble.

I always take a walk in the park in the morning. I met an interesting lady this morning that I've spoken to on numerous occasions. She is a devotee of Nisargadatta Maharaj. And we had quite an illuminating talk, which I would like to share with you. She asked me three basic questions.

The first one was: "Robert, I have been meditating now for 25 years. The last 10 years in accordance with Nisargadatta's teachings and I believe I'm self-realized." And usually I say, "That's nice." And she went on to explain that there is a question I want to ask you, "I have a heart condition and my doctor tells me I might need a heart transplant in a couple of years. So can a self-realized person like me pray to God to bring me relief in this condition?"

I didn't say anything for a couple of minutes and then I asked her, what do you mean by God? If God was somewhere outside of you, if God was somewhere in the sky. If there were two of you, yourself and God, then I can see you praying to God. But you told me you were self-realized. A self-realized being is all-pervading. There is no room for God and you. There cannot be duality if you claim to be self-realized and again if you were really liberated there would be no one left to tell. So you couldn't come up to me with that question or it would become redundant and ask me if I can pray to God but I'm self-realized. There is no one to be self-realized. That word doesn't even exist. There is no such a being, as a self-realized being.

Obviously what you are referring to is a being in the natural state. A being in their natural state is omnipresent. You would not concern yourself with your body. It may appear as if you have a bad heart but to whom is that appearance? Not to your liberated Self. It is your ego, your personal I that believes that they've got a bad heart. And you are identifying with that. So how can you say you're liberated? If you were liberated, again you would not be concerned with your body. There would be no one left to pray to any living God. Your body goes through the karma it came to this earth to experience. And your body doesn't even exist. Let alone have a heart attack. Why do you worry about your body, why are you so concerned about your body? You must believe that you are your body.

It is like this, imagine that you have a blackboard and on the blackboard you draw a picture of a lady having a heart attack or a lady with a bad heart, does that affect the blackboard? Does the blackboard die? Does the blackboard go to the hospital? Does the blackboard have a heart transplant? Only the picture on the blackboard depicts that. Then I can erase the picture and draw a picture of a healthy heart in a healthy woman. Does that affect the blackboard. The blackboard is always the same no matter what you draw on it. And so it is with reality. So it is with pure awareness. Pure awareness is your true nature. Consciousness is what you are. Your so called body, with it's bad heart is a superimposition on consciousness. In other words you have nothing to do with your body, it'll take care of itself.

She remained quiet for about three minutes. Then she said to me, "Robert obviously I am not a Jnani. So I must be a Bhakta. Being a bhakta, can I now pray to God for relief from these symptoms?" And I said, "Tell me how you pray?" And she said I pray something like this, "Oh God kindly relieve this burden that I've got. Kindly heal me from this burden of a heart problem. And while you are about it I've got some financial problems also, so see if you can straighten those out for me." (students laugh) Again I didn't say anything for a couple of minutes. Then I said, "My dear you are also not a bhakta. (students laugh) A bhakta means absolute devotion. If you were a bhakta you would have surrendered yourself to your God totally and completely. You would have become a puppet in God's hands. Not my will but thine. And however you are you would be happy. For you would have no body of your own to be sick. Your body has been surrendered to God. Your life has been surrendered to God. Your words, your thoughts are Gods. Therefore you would always be happy. You wouldn't even think about your bad heart, for that's God's business not you, not yours."

So she asked me then, "What is the correct way to pray if I'm a bhakta? And I answered, "The first statement you made, Oh God, that's it. Nothing else to say. Oh God says it all. For is not God all-pervading, omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent? Don't you know that your God knows your problem? You don't have to explain it to him. You simply have to say, "God," and that's enough. For the omnipresent God knows how to take care of you. Knows how to look after you in his own inimitable way. You have nothing to do with these things if you are a bhakta. You simply give it all to God and you are free. There is nothing for you to do. You will be told what to do. Everything will come through you when your mind is at peace and you have no concern. After all, all is well and everything is unfolding as it should. When you speak of your heart condition or your finances or whatever, it's like looking through a keyhole and seeing one part of the picture. If you open the door and saw the beginning and the end, you would rejoice. For you're seeing only the part where your heart is bad. Take your mind off those things.

So she exclaimed, "You mean I shouldn't take my medicine and I shouldn't go see my doctor? And I said, "On the contrary, do what you have to do but do not concern yourself. Try to understand that you are not the doer. You are not the doer. Exercise, take your medication, eat well, do whatever you have to do but do not keep your mind on those things. Keep your mind centered on God.

She asked, "How should I do that?" I said, "Say to yourself with your respiration, "I Am." Inhale say, "I," exhale say, "Am." That is invoking the name of God. That is doing Japa. Speaking Gods name over and over again. Instead of thinking about your troubles, instead of concerning yourself about your heart, surrender it all to God. By invoking his name, I Am, and you will be free."

The third question she asked, "What you've told me Robert brings me a new revelation, but I have to ask you this. For twenty-five years I've been on a spiritual path and as I told you the last ten years was spent, some of it in India with Nisargadatta Maharaj and yet I've seemed to have gotten nowhere. I do not seem to be making progress. What else must I do to awaken? I thought I was doing everything I'm supposed to do. But apparently I'm not. Can you please reveal to me or tell me what other sadhana I should practice in order to awaken in this life?"

We will spend the rest of the time going over this.

To begin with, I usually do not recommend books. As a matter of fact as most of you know I tell you not to read at all. But Jeff gave me this book a week ago. No mind, I am the Self, by David Gardener. It's about the life of Shri Lakshmana and one of his female devotees. I didn't recognize him in the beginning, but when I looked at the pictures like I usually do, when he was a young fellow, he was at Ramana ashram when I was there, when I was eighteen years old. He had a different name at the time, I recall him. He had a very bad temper as I recall and he always wanted to go and see Ramana when he was resting. Ramana's attendants did not allow him to come in. They always had big heated arguments. They were speaking in Tamil so I didn't understand what they were saying. But a couple of times the guards or the attendants literally picked him up and took him away. But now he's a self-realized being. Which is very interesting, so I would suggest that you buy this book. It's probably at the bodhi tree, and read it for yourself. It answers all your questions.

To answer the question the lady gave or a part of it. I just glanced through the book, I haven't even read it myself yet, I came across this paragraph, Mary if you would read this?

SM: Sure. (R: Just these two paragraphs from here to here. Listen to this very closely.) (Mary starts reading and is interrupted) Bliss is all...

R: Excuse me. This is what his disciple the girl who he adopted as a teenager. And she stayed with him for four years and became self-realized. This is what she is saying. Mary... (Mary reads)

"Bliss is always flowing from swami, but it depends on the maturity of the disciple how much is received. The more one is free from thought the more one will receive that force. Each devotee will receive grace in proportion to the amount of faith he has. How to get the grace of the guru, devotion in past lives is important. And in the present life one must always be engaged in spiritual practices. God is not a stone statue. He is within every heart. In the beginning though his form has to be taken for meditation. It is easy to realize the Self by the grace of the guru. He who realizes the Self and whose I is dead and who shines as the Self, is God. He is the only living guru. Select only one guru. The guru must be peaceful and have control of his senses and his mind. A guru is essential and he must attract like a magnet. I have been able to select a suitable guru."

R: Thank you.

SM: Thank you Robert.

R: Many people in the West have been told that they do not need a teacher of any kind. Many of us have read Krishnamurti who denounces spiritual Masters. Now why does he do this. When he was a theosophist and Amy Besant and Judge Leadbetter got a hold of him, when he was about 18 years old. He had some very unpleasant experiences with them. These experiences have not been written about. But because of the carryings on of Judge Leadbetter and Amy Besant he became disillusioned with every leading Sage. Yet prior to his eighteen years old he had many Masters himself. It is only in his later years that he renounced all his teachers.

It is interesting to note that just about all of the disciples of Krishnamurti are intellectuals. I have to say that not even one has awakened. I love Krishnamurti, he was a great spiritual philosopher but we're talking here about awakening. We're not talking about memorizing scripture, philosophy, knowing intellectually many of the Advaita Vedanta texts. We're speaking of waking up, liberation, Moksha. The truth is you can only go by yourself so far and then you have to depend on either the guru within yourself or the guru outside yourself. Do not be misled. There are very few beings on this earth who awaken by themselves. I would say a half a percent out of a hundred billion people awaken by themselves. Most of us need a living presence whose grace we can absorb in order to become totally free. This is why all great Sages have taught God, guru and the Self are one. There is no difference.

This is why I tell you so many times, do not come here and listen to my words. Words alone will not do it. Like the lady in the park, she has been listening to words and can recite all these words backwards and frontwards. Yet she is about 68 years old and she claims she hasn't made progress. If she had a teacher to confide in. The teacher would tell her the progress she's made. For you cannot know yourself. It's virtually impossible to know yourself, the progress you are making on the path. For you are dealing with your ego and your ego will fool you. It will make you believe all kinds of things.

The question she asked again is, "What else must I do to awaken?" And I explained these things to her, "You have to be yourself. You have to develop humility, that's first. By your talking to me I said to her I can see you've got a lot of arrogance, a lot of hostility." And she started telling me about her life, her parents abused her and whatever. So I explained to her that's all well and good, there are millions of people like yourself, but the time comes when you have to grow up and let go of the aggressiveness, the arrogance.

You have to develop gentleness, humility. You have to begin to trust others even though some have hurt you, it makes no difference.

As I told you before, if you remember your divine nature, if you keep your mind on god, you can never be hurt-able. Someone may abuse you, they may cheat you, they may do all kinds of things to you but what can they actually do to you? Who has been hurt? Have you been hurt? If you believe you are your ego, then you have, because your ego is always hurt. It always wants revenge. It always wants to get even. And the ego has stored in it's subconscious mind many, many, many, many horrible things that it's gone through from past lives and also this life. Things that you appear to have forgotten consciously, but every time you act, you bring it up.

So for you I told her. You have to pray to God, "God you are omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent. You know what I need. I throw myself at you, body, mind and soul. I have no desires, I have no needs no wants, do with me as you will." And that is exactly what you must do. You must become desire-less, even toward self-realization. Forget about awakening. Forget about Moksha, liberation.

Look at yourself. You exist don't you? Why don't you find out who exists? Ask yourself, "Who exists?" And the answer will come to you, "I exist." All you have to do is to find the source of the I. Find the source of the I by following the I thread to the heart. Which is on the right side of the chest. Forget about the chakras, forget about all the kundalini business you've learnt, forget about all the yoga you've been through all of these years. God loves a simple person. Know nothing, give up all of your intellectual knowledge.

We were in the park so I said to her, "Look at this tree. Do you know what this tree is?" She said, "Yes it's a tree." So I said, "No, tree is a name that we gave it. We called it tree. We could of called it dog or cat or cabbage or soup, but we gave it a name as a tree. So we believe we know what a tree is. But if you think about it you know absolutely nothing about the tree. Except that it appears as your body does. Where did it come from? How did it originate? What came first the seed or the tree? Why is there a tree? Nobody can explain that and this is true of every object." Start your spiritual sadhana by realizing, "I do not know what anything is at all."

Take the dog for instance: Why is this a dog? Where did it come from? Why is it here? We call it dog but again we could have called it soup or cabbage or chocolate. We say, "I know what a dog is, that's a dog." But go deeper than that. What is a dog? How did it originate? Where did the first dog come from? You don't know do you? And do the same to every object you see. That is how you develop humility. The first thing you have to do is to develop humility and you have to work on yourself that way. Realizing that you know nothing. You've got a Ph.D. in philosophy yet you know nothing do you? You just know words, you can confound everyone with words. What has that gotten you all of this time? And she admitted, "Unhappiness, suffering."

Then you must start understanding that you do not know what anything is. The next quality you have to develop is compassion. You have to try to understand that, "All is well and everything is unfolding as it should." You have to forgive your enemies, those who have hurt you. You have to forgive people like Napoleon, Hitler, Saddam Hussein, everybody else in this world. Not because you don't care what they did to people but because you don't understand what's going on. If you do not understand what's going on how can you judge? Remember the pictures that they portray is like looking through the keyhole. You do not know the whole picture. You see a partial picture and you judge by that. Do not try to figure it out. Do not try to analyze it. Simply forgive, let go.

As you develop these traits a subtle energy will take place within you. You will be able to experience higher states of consciousness. Then you will be able to understand when I say, "I am not the body. I am not the mind. I am not the doer. I am ultimate oneness, I am consciousness, I am absolute reality, parabrahman, that I am," and you will be free.

Basically that's how you begin, you practice self-inquiry. You develop humility and compassion at the same time. You develop devotion and you think about these things all day long. I asked her, "Have you been thinking of all these things all day long? So she said, "No I forgot." "How often do you think about these things that we discussed?" So she said, "Only when I meditate." "When do you meditate?" "Twenty minutes in the morning." "So where is your mind the rest of the day?" "On worldly things."

"If your mind is on worldly things how can you expect to wake up? As above so below, as within so without, you are exactly where you are supposed to be. You are in the position you are supposed to be by the work you've been doing to yourself. You have not taken it seriously. If you want to wake up it has to be a 24 hour a day job. Even when you are sleeping and when you are dreaming. You have to be awake and be the witness to your sleep. The witness to your dreams. And of course the witness to your waking state. If you learn to do these things something will happen. You will either be attracted to the teacher you need at the time or the teacher within you will push you forward and you will awaken. But I can assure you, if you just practice the things shared with you, you will see remarkable results. Now go home and do it."

Questions?

SD: I have a question, I've never understood the instruction, follow the I-thought to the spiritual heart. That seems like such a physical, mental amount of time not to be attached to the body. And what process are you talking about?

R: When you follow the I-thought you're abiding in the I. What you are doing is you are asking yourself, "Who am I?" And you image the I in yourself. You see the I going into the spiritual heart. You watch it. By saying, "Who am I?" over and over again you are abiding in the I. (SD: I understand that part but I don't understand the spiritual heart in a teaching that teaches the heart is not real?) The spiritual heart is the abode of God. That's where God, or consciousness or absolute reality presides, on the right side of your chest. It is a metaphor. It doesn't really exist. But as we are on the path we need a place in which the I may go to make you understand there is a higher power that takes over when the I disappears. So you may, with your eyes closed think of the I as going from the brain down into the heart centre. And you may see the heart centre as a sphere of white light, brilliant light a billion times brighter than the sun. Or you may see in your heart centre your favorite teacher. Whether he is Buddha or Jesus or Moses or Ramana Maharshi, whomever you favor. See that teacher in the centre of your heart, in the light and see your I being consumed by that particular deity.

SD: You mean your I, your individuality?

R: Your individuality. As if you're diving off the diving board and you're going down. So the I is going from the brain that believes it's an I, down into the heart and becomes consumed. And when it becomes consumed your real Self shines forth in all its glory and splendor.

So you can imagine the I anyway you like. You can actually imagine an I, the individuality going down or you can repeat "Who am I?" or you can just feel something is happening. My ego, my mind is being consumed by reality and feel the presence. If you practice this it'll come by itself. It'll happen by itself and it'll become easier and easier. But when some people start and they do this for five-seconds, then they go back to it next month, it becomes harder and harder. Therefore you have to practice.

It makes no difference how long it takes. Forget about time. It makes no difference if you believe that you are making a mistake or you are not doing it right. There is no right and there is no wrong. It's your attitude that counts. Do not use dry words and think you have to do something a certain way for it to work. If you have an attitude of humility, of surrender, of love, of compassion it will take care of it for you and you will be free in no time.

Feel free to ask any kind of question you like or make a statement or throw things at me.

SX: I think Krishnamurti is the sanest man I have ever encountered in my whole life.

R: I agree with you. (SX: And I don't think he is just for intellectuals. And he himself said that your body had merged and understood what he was talking about.) Krishnamurti was a great person, a very great person. He had his mission and he accomplished it. What I wanted to do of course is to clear up why he despises teachers and tells everybody they do not need anyone else. But I respect him whole heartedly.

Let's sing a couple of songs.

(songs sung)

R: Feel free to make any statements or questions or anything you'd like to ask. We're one happy family here so don't be afraid to say anything.

SB: So being free from the I. Realization is being free from the I right?

R: The I is what keeps you in bondage, so when the I is completely destroyed then you become all-pervading and you totally awaken. And the I has to be destroyed. (SB: So it's not freedom for the I it's freedom from the I, right?) You can look at it two ways. The "i" can become the "I," which means the same as absolute reality, the same as consciousness. You can call that the I also, that's the big I. But we're talking about the ego-I the small "i." That's what gets you in trouble. That has to be annihilated completely.

SR: Robert, I feel like everyday I go out into the playing field where there is just nothing but I's and it's very frustrating I feel sometimes anger at myself because to play in that world which is the only one which I really know you have to pretend like it's real.

R: Not really. See that's the test you're going through. What you have to do is to question yourself, "To whom does this come?" In other words, "Who is going through all this?" You have to work on yourself and not pretend for the benefit of others. (SR: But it feels like if I really do except that, I drop into a void that seems empty and unfamiliar and unrewarding at this moment. If I'm dealing in the playing field of all the I's. It's like I'm sort of the odd ball in the world of this game.) That's your ego playing tricks on you. That's when you really have to inquire, "Who feels this? To whom does it come?"

SD: Could you say, "Who pretends to play the game?"

R: If that helps you. (SD: For a change?) If that helps of course. But the whole idea is to realize that the I is the culprit. And follow the I to the heart centre. Where it merges with infinite reality and you become liberated.

SR: I guess what I mean by that is that all of a sudden I - to do it right I'll have to sort of feel like a leaf just sort of blowing hither and there without effort?

R: No you don't. That's your reasoning. That's how you see it. But you don't have to do all these things. See you are making all these stories about yourself. Don't do that, leave it alone. Just follow the I. Don't come to any conclusions. Don't say what's going to happen or what's not going to happen. Leave the world alone and follow the I. And you will be taken care of. Everything will work out.

SB: Robert, Bob says it feels unrewarding. Isn't it the mind that feels it unrewarding? And who feels it unrewarding?

R: The ego. (SB: The ego feels it unrewarding because it's avoid to the ego, it's like different territory. So the ego only wants excitement and entertainment. So it's unrewarding to it.) Of course it's unrewarding, the ego, the I, the same thing, will always play tricks on you. And will make you believe all sorts of things. Will bring up all kinds of things. Will make you feel sorry for yourself. Will make you hate people. Will make you become completely disillusioned. The ego I does all that. So you have to wise up to that and be aware of what's going on. And always come back to the question, "To whom is this happening? Who is going through this? Who feels this way? And you'll say, "I do, what is the source of the I?" or "Who am I?" And then you follow the I to the heart. Where it will ultimately disappear. The same for everything. (SB: So I can say to myself, "Okay ego be unrewarded to infinity. Be unrewarded to the maximum. To the maximum amount?" And just surrender to being unrewarded to infinity?" If you want to do that, that's fine. But rather than think about that, keep your mind on God. Keep your mind on the I. Ask, "To whom does this come?" It's easier that way. (SB: But then there is a point where there isn't any mind to ... you know when you're in the void, when you're in the silence?) It'll take care of itself. Don't concern yourself with the silence. If you do the practice everything will happen in its own time. So you're questioning as if you know. As if you the ego is going to become this and is going to become that. But you're saying that. Forget about all that. Simply do the work and let the chips fall where they may. Everything will work out.

Even in all the scriptures it says, "If you keep your mind on God, all will go well with you." Because you are entering a new dimension. In that dimension there is peace, there is harmony, there is joy, there is love, there is realization. So if you stay centered in that dimension you will become free. Therefore don't think about the negatives, accentuate the positive. (SB: So being centered in that dimension and being stabilized or being established in that other - is very important?) Yes. (SB: Not just jump in and out of it, you know?) To be able to stay there. (SB: Stay there.) And when everything comes to you, anything comes to you otherwise, ask, "To whom does it come?"

SX: Why do you need truth?

R: To get you going. (SX: But you have to - just as you said, just do the work. Get implicit with it. Didn't you say that? I have to have faith? I have to have faith, as if there will be intervention.) For some people in the beginning stages they have to have some faith in what they are doing otherwise they wouldn't do it. (SX: I know but I'm denying it. But you said the more faith. I don't understand the greater the faith?) Faith to me is like grace. If you have faith, if you have grace, then it becomes easier for you. (SX: To me grace and faith are not the same?) Well they are perfectly the same to me. That's what I mean when I say faith. (SX: But grace just is?) Faith and grace are the same to me. Which means that faith just is, you have faith that's the way it is. You have faith in what you're doing and that is grace pushing you. (SX: But isn't that a thought, faith or is it...) If you're thinking about it, it's a thought. But you need that thought to get rid of the thought. (SX: Yeah, there's a bit of a doubt?) To get rid of everything. You have to have some faith in what you are doing. So you can get rid of it. Just like you use the mind to get rid of the mind because that's the only equipment you've got. (SX: To be natural?) You are naturally sensitive to the fact that your mind doesn't exist. But you are using the mind to realize that it doesn't exist. And when you follow your mind or the I to the source, it all disappears of its own accord. But in the beginning you use your mind you use faith. You use whatever you have to use to lift yourself up and go forward.

SB: If we had a 100% faith would that be like a 100 percent surrender?

R: It would be a 100% realization. (SB: 100% Realization.) Of course. (SB: If we had a 100 percent faith that we were realized right now, we'd be completely surrendered into that...) Yes. (SB: ...Then something would happen probably?) Of course.

R: You see Josephine none of it exists to begin with. Nothing I'm talking about exists. But we have to use words and we have to explain what a person should do to have an inkling of truth in their hearts. These are the words we use. (SX: I like the expression, "Be still and know that I am God.") Yes but how many people can be still. That's fine as far as it goes, it's a great expression. But how many of us can do it. We have to use the other methods to get to that place.

SE: Robert one time you mentioned that there were different functions to the different methods of self-inquiry? Like doing "I Am," mantra, has a different function by reducing maya and asking "who am I?" brings you more quickly to realization? I would assume that practicing "I, I" also has a different function? Could you explain or go into these?

R: "I - I" makes you understand that only the I exists. The big I. You are following "I - I". The big I is annihilating the small I and then only I or Self remains. When you say, "I Am" you are invoking the great "I Am." Reality itself and you are instantly in that reality. There is nothing else to get rid of. You remain in I Am. When you say, "Who am I?" You are again getting rid of the small I. The ego, the thoughts, the I-thought. By realizing everything in this world is attached to this I-thought. The universe, God, experiences, the body, the mind are all attached to I. And by saying, "Who am I?" Everything becomes obliterated and merges in itself and you become free.

So you use whatever method pleases you at the time. Whatever method you've got an infinity with...affinity, that is the method you use. You can alternate, you get tired of using one method you can use another method. But by all means you use whatever methods you have to use to become free.

SR: Robert this world of freedom is - I mean I certainly know what it's like to meditate and feel that bubble of joy and oneness, but I also know that the world of senses brings another degree of pleasure to (whether it be doing something creative in the arts or...) it is a pleasure so far that's just as equal as the feeling of that silence and peace that comes from quiet meditation which may not mean realization but - I guess what I'm afraid of is that I will inherit in the end just this empty void, this divorce from these sensual rewards - I don't want it to mean sensual in the sense...

R: It doesn't work that way. I understand what you're saying. (SR: Okay.) That's the way that you comprehend it. But let's look at your pleasures. Say you're having a dream an in that dream you're a great king and you have a palace and you have a fortune and you have five wives and you have all kinds of beautiful gold and silver and bracelets, rings and watches and you're an artist and you are enjoying yourself. But then you wake up and it's gone.

So with all sensory objects. They are like a dream and you will one day awaken and even if you had these things all during your life, what you call your physical life right now is but a split second in eternity and it's gone. And that means you are under the law of karma. So you'll have to come back again and again and experience the opposite to what you've experienced in that life. In order to be balanced. You continue to play this game for centuries until you wake up and go after reality. (SR: What is the substance of those - I mean it metaphorically - dreams of those who are enlightened then? What is the pleasures and the joys of just knowing in the I?) Those who're enlightened experience unexplainable joy and bliss at all times. It never goes away. It's a feeling beyond words and thoughts.

SD: Robert I remember you gave an example of looking at a sunset, how beautiful just looking at it but being you know you are the sunset makes it much better.

SR: Not all of those things still we're talking in terms of what we know as a material manifestation. (R: Yes.) But none of that is real really but... (R: Exactly.) So when you pull away manifestation you're left with just a sort of - not even a feeling because that's senses...

R: No you shouldn't say anymore because you're coming from your own experience. That is how you imagine it, it's not so. When you are yourself, you are absolute reality. And that's something you have to experience for yourself. (SR: What do those monks do when they have to leave the ashram?) Just exist like you and I. There is nothing to do. They go about their business like you and I do. (SR: Isn't there sort of a boredom after a while?) (laughter) No. See you are speaking of material experiences. Boredom comes to people who are not enlightened. When you're enlightened there is no such word. You are the cause, you are the substratum of everything and beyond. (SR: Would you want to create universes in that state just to sort of find out?) No. No. You are speaking of siddhi's. Those are yogi's who have developed powers and they fool around with those things. A Jnani has no interest in that. A Jnani is beyond all that stuff. They just rest in their bliss. (SR: Is there a little group of Jnanis that get together and share these things?) When you become a Jnani you'll find them. (students laugh)

SK: Robert the resting in bliss sounds like a pretty neat thing, huh? (R: The what?) It sounds like a pretty neat thing just to rest uninterruptedly in bliss. It'd be hard to beat. (Robert and students laughter) ...I'd like to hear that more often as a kind of a motivator.

R: Well work on yourself and find out for yourself. This is why I tell you so often, "Why should you believe me?" You shouldn't take my word for it at all. But you should work on yourself and become totally free.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 60

ATTACHMENTS

12th May, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. I guess you have no mothers. Half the people are not here because of mother's day. Happy mother's day.

It's really interesting, so many people call me, and talk to me, and tell me, "What else must I do before I awaken? I've been practicing atma-vichara, I've been practicing meditation, I've been practicing everything for twenty, thirty, forty, fifty years. How come nothing is happening?" What do you think?

This tells you why, because you are attached to holidays. It's one reason, believe it or not. (students laugh) It's an attachment. Christmas comes around. "I have no time for spiritual life. I have to decorate my Christmas tree." All the holidays that come around, we go off somewhere to see our relatives, and we wonder why we can't awaken completely. This is something to think about. Where your heart is, that's where God is. So if you are attached to anything, mother, father, country, trees, rabbits, cows, whatever, this is what is keeping you back.

I am not saying that you can't spend time with those you love, or be with those you love, on the contrary, I am saying mentally you have to feel in your heart the oneness of eternity, and until we mature, and this comes first in our lives, we will only go so far on the spiritual path. I'm not saying this because I want to see everybody come on a holiday to satsang. As you know I couldn't care less if one person came or nobody came. But for your benefit, for your good, think what you put first in your life. If you do not put consciousness first, absolute reality, God, then you will never see the light. You will never completely awaken. You have to virtually give up everything mentally.

It's like that story, if you remember in "The Autobiography Of A Yogi," by Yogananda, Lahiri Mahasaya, one of the triuna of Yoganandas' path. He had been meditating for years practicing Kriya Yoga, doing all sorts of austerities. He developed many siddhis, powers. He was able to levitate, but he never became fully awakened, yet he was so sincere that Babaji appeared before him and told him, "Look, the reason you never awaken is because in your heart you always want to live in a palace, with servants, good food, dancing girls and everything else." So Babaji materialized the palace for Lahiri. And Lahiri stayed there for a period of time until he got disgusted and tired of it. Then it disappeared, and he was all cooked.

The reason Babaji did this for him, because he was a very devoted person and spent his life in meditation. But he had one last thing to get rid of, the palace. Therefore it was materialized before him in order for him to live in it and to see if that's the answer. And of course it wasn't, so then it disappeared.

Whether this story is true or not makes no difference. It's symbolic. We have things in our mind that worry us, concern us. Thinking about the future, thinking about our health, and our loved ones, are all these worldly things that come to mind. Yet all the Sages have told us, you have to let go of these things. Don't worry about your so-called body. Do not concern yourself with your relatives, or the world, or man's inhumanity to man. Drop it. If you don't drop it you'll never make any headway.

So it is with us. We all have something we're leaning on for support, and we're afraid if we lose that we'll be finished. How can you ever be finished when you realize you are of a divine nature, that your real state is Brahman, ultimate oneness, pure awareness. No matter what your body and mind seem to be going through, no matter what you think, you can never get rid of your real Self, because your real Self just is. Your mind may tell you otherwise. You may be mesmerized in the world, believing you have to have this, and you have to have that, and you have to live here, and you have to live there, and you have to be with someone that you think you're supposed to be with, and you're afraid of being alone, or you're afraid of being with the wrong people, many fears, many false beliefs. These are the things that are keeping you back.

You and your Self are the universe. You are the whole universe. You are the Self, omnipresence, all-pervading. This is your real nature. If you just have a glimpse of this, how can you possibly fear anything? If you learn to live in the present and become spontaneous, forgetting about the past, not concerning yourself about the future, but understanding who you are right now, can't you see that this will take care of everything?

It reminds me of this old story about Krishna and Arjuna. They were invited to a rich man's home for dinner. When they entered the home and they sat down at the table, the rich man abused him. He told Krishna he doesn't believe anything he says. His teaching is a waste of time. He told him, "Why don't you go and get a decent job someplace?" and Krishna never said a word. When they were finished, Krishna blessed him and he said to him, "May your prosperity increase a thousand fold, and may your riches become a million more than you have now," and they left the home. Arjuna wondered about this, but he didn't say anything.

The following morning they were invited to breakfast to a poor man's house, and the poor man had no possessions except for a cow. But the poor man fell at Krishna's feet when he came in, and he worshipped Krishna and Arjuna, gave them the last bowl of rice he had and sang glories to Krishna. When Krishna and Arjuna were leaving the house Krishna blessed him also, and he said, "May your cow drop dead soon," and they left.

And Arjuna couldn't hold it in any longer and he said, "Krishna, tell me what you're doing? What's going on? You went to the rich man's house and he abused you, and you blessed him and told him his wealth will multiply. And you go to the poor man's house who loves you, and his only possession is a cow, and you told him his cow will drop dead. What is the meaning of this?"

And Krishna said, "You see, the more you're attached too, the less of a chance you have for enlightenment." So I told the rich man his wealth will increase. This means he will be attached to his wealth for many, many incarnations. Thousands of incarnations he will be attached to his wealth, and he will never become enlightened for a long time. Now the poor man, his only attachment was his cow. When he got rid of his cow, he would be finished on this earth, and he will become self-realized. So I told him his cow will soon die and he will be free.

This story is very significant of the way we live. We have something we own, a person, place, or thing. We cannot get it out of our mind. We're attached. Because of this attachment we go through many lives, it appears, and we go through many experiences, simply because we are attached to something. It can be mental or physical.

Even if you hate someone, if you hate someone or something with a passion, that's attachment. You will come back to this earth, or to another planet similar to this earth, again, and again, and again, and you will meet this person that you hate so much under different circumstances again, and again, and again. One time he may be your daughter, he may be your mother, he may be your husband, he may be your wife. But that person that you despise so much will meet you again, and again, and do things to you in order to upset you. And you will hate again, and again. You will never be free until you understand.

The understanding is to turn within, to forget about the person, but to see your own reality, to trace the I-thought to the source. After all it is the I-thought that hates and loves, that has attachment to person, place or thing. When the I-thought is transcended, only the Self remains. Then your karma is finished, your body is finished, your world is finished, your God is finished, and your home free. But as long as you allow a person, place or thing, and it may be your own body that you're attached to, your own mind, that's person, place or thing also, as long as you feel deeply those things, you will never become free until you let it go.

You have to reconcile yourself with the whole universe, the mineral kingdom, the vegetable kingdom, the animal kingdom, the human kingdom. When you have become friends with the entire universe, you will not have to do atma-vichara. You will not have to trace the I, or worry about the I. Just the reconciliation with the universe will free you. After all, when you love everything, unqualified, what else can you do? There's nothing else. The total love of the whole universe kills the ego. For it is the ego that plays the other games with you, that makes you love someone special or hate someone special, that makes you despise certain animals and eat them, that makes you think poison ivy is worse than a rose, that causes you to qualify life. A Sage sees everything as equal. No thing is worse or better than any other thing. And just by hearing this, allowing it to go into your heart, feeling it, will lead you to an awakening.

Think of the problems you think you have. Why are they a problem? What difference does it make? There is nothing in this world that's that important for you to want to feel badly, where you want to get revenge, or you're afraid that something will happen to your body, you're concerned about a loved one, you're worried about the world situation. When you like that, you are assuming responsibility for these things. After all you didn't ask to really get born. You didn't ask to get born into the family where you were born, into the nationality, into the religion that you were born into, into the city and state and country that you were born into. The power that takes care of that knows how to take care of you. Don't you see? There isn't anything you have to do to help.

In other words, God doesn't need your help. All you have to do is to take a deep breath and say, "Take it God. I'm finished with it. I will never worry again. I will never be upset over anything again."

Again think, what is the worst thing that can possibly happen to you. You can die. There is no such thing as death. You all know this. You can lose your fortune. You came into this world without a fortune and you're going out without a fortune. Have no concern about these things. Karmically you have and you're going through the experiences you have to go through, but that's for your body, not for you. Do you not see by now that you're totally free? Your real nature is absolute goodness, parabrahman, absolute reality. You are the Self, the all-pervading Self. What can you possibly fear? What can anyone possibly do to you?

The other day I was speaking to a fellow from Bangladesh, and you are aware of the problems they're having there. So he told me, "Those problems are for the ignorant. I was in the cyclone. I was there through all these calamities. I laughed, because I realized this is really a cosmic joke. It appears that God is picking on all the Bangladesh people because they have the worst calamities, and I stood my ground," he said. "If I was supposed to leave my body at that time I was well prepared, because I have been practicing self-inquiry for many years. I had no qualm whatsoever. It's because of this I'm here in America. I had no concern about coming to America. I've been here before. But something happened, I was able to get a visa, and I wound up here without even thinking of coming here."

That's like the story that I always tell you. The same things happen in the nazi death camps all over the world. The suffering is done by the ignorant. Now this may seem strange to you, especially to some people here who don't know me too well. It appears as if I have no compassion. It appears as if I don't care. On the contrary, I care more than you can ever know. I also realize that nothing can happen to anyone. Nothing ever happens to anyone.

We go to the example again of looking through a keyhole. When you look through a keyhole you only see a part of the picture. So you look through a keyhole and you see a guy in Bangladesh getting hit by a cyclone, drowning, and you say, "Poor soul." But then you are allowed to open the door, and now you see the complete picture. You see the previous life. The same fellow was part of the inquisition in Spain, and it was his job to torture people by drowning them. And you move to the other end of the picture and you see that the person he drowned and himself are both laughing now. The whole thing was a lie. It never happened. Nothing ever happened.

It's like you're watching a movie. In the movie there is a war going on. Everybody is being killed, torn to pieces. But then the movie is over. Nothing happened. They were just images on the screen. When you are aware of body-mind, and you think you are the body-mind, then your life is simply a superimposition on the screen of life, on consciousness. It appears to be happening to you. But in reality no thing is happening. You are free. You are whole. You are complete. And there's only one of you. There never was you and me. There is only the one, and that one is absolute reality. You are that one. You are the body of bliss. Wake up!

Get rid of all those feelings that are beseeching you to do all these stupid things. Awaken. Be free. Simplify your life. Have no fear. Fear is another thing that you become attached to and it keeps you back.

Look at the world. The world is a cosmic joke. It appears to be real, the good things, the beautiful things, the horrible things. They are all impostors. This world is a world of duality. For every good there has to be a bad. It has to balance. For every bad there has to be a good. For every up there's a down. For every forward there's a backward.

We can never understand this world. It's too complex. Get out of it, not by committing suicide, but by transcending the mind and body, and awakening to your real Self. That's how you get out of it. Stop feeling sorry for yourself. Stop paying so much attention to your thoughts, to the world, to your body. Let come what may. Surrender totally to yourself. Yourself is God, consciousness. Begin to identify with the I am, not with conditions. Leave conditions alone.

As I told you before, you are not responsible for anything. Get rid of your guilt feelings. Turn within. See the truth. Become the truth. Do not look to others for advice, what to do, how to live. Be a lamp unto yourself, as the Buddha said. All the answers are with you.

Some of you are saying, "Well, what about you Robert? Can't we come to you for advice?" I am a guide, a mirror, for you to see yourself, and to guide you within yourself. I can only see you as one way, perfection, consciousness. I see you as myself. When you look at me, you're looking into the mirror. What do you see? You're seeing yourself. How are you seeing yourself? As depraved, homely, sickly, as an ego maniac? Drop it! Awaken!

There is no thing that wants to hurt you. It is all in your imagination. It is your imagination that causes your problems. Now do not let what I tell you make you cynical and sarcastic. While you are on the path of self-discovery, you help others. You do what has to be done. It will happen by itself. If you're supposed to feed the homeless, then feed the homeless. It will happen by itself. If you're supposed to go live on top of a mountain, and never see civilization again, it will happen by itself.

The main thing to understand is that you have absolutely nothing to do with it. You may think you're taking action, and you may say to yourself, "If I don't do it, no one will. If I don't take care of this thing, everything will fall in on me." What can fall in on you? No thing is ever that bad. What you're really talking about is change. You are attached to a certain condition and you're afraid of the change. That's what you really mean. But if you've been working on yourself, and you have taught your mind to rest in the heart center, you have trained your mind not to go out, by going out I mean leaving your heart and going into the world and becoming the world, then if your mind is subdued, only joy can come to you, due to the fact that what we call the substratum of life is total bliss. When you turn within, you merge with the bliss and you become a body of bliss. The choice is yours.

If holidays are so important to you, Easter, look what fools we make of ourselves during Easter. We think we're doing something great. Jesus never knew anything about Easter or Christmas. We make up these holidays. There's nothing wrong with enjoying yourself, but don't make it into a fetish.

I remember when I was a young kid about twelve or thirteen, my family always wanted me to spend the holiday with them. And at that time I even felt in my heart, "What good would that do? External things do not matter," and I used to go downtown to listen to Joel Goldsmith. Where your heart is, that's where God is.

Today, think, "What is the thing I am attached to? What is so meaningful for me in this world?" and realize it is that which is keeping you back. Let go of it mentally, by turning within, and realizing that, "I feel this. I feel I need this. Where does the I come from?" Follow the I-thread to the source and become liberated.

That was my mother's day message to you. (laughs) No more.

Any questions?

SB: Is God our father or our mother? (R: You said?) Is God our father or our mother? (R: Both.) (SH: Or neither?)

R: Or neither yeah. If look to God as a person, God is neither male nor female. But if you look to God as yourself then God becomes absolute reality, consciousness.

SG: Robert I can't understand the teaching that I have no freewill, that I have no choice... (R: Oh.) ...can you help me on that?

R: Sure. Most of us have such a big ego that we have been trained from childhood, "Unless you do this, this will happen. You're responsible, take responsibility. Make something of yourself." All of this enforces the ego. It has been my experience, as well as throughout the scriptures the ancient scriptures of many countries. And everything that transpires is a result of consciousness. In other words you have absolutely nothing to do with it. The world as you see it appears to be an emanation of consciousness.

Animals are conscious but they are not self-conscious. They come under the universal law of cause and effect and they have no idea that they exist but they do. Somehow we exist as an animal but we have become self-conscious. We therefore believe that we are responsible for every action we take and we have got free will to do everything we do. But I can assure you that when I lift up my finger to scratch my head this is all preordained. When a leaf falls from a tree this is all preordained.

Look at it as a movie. Every inch every iota of the movie has been planned. The writers wrote everything about the script before it became a movie. Even when an actor turns around and blinks, it's written in the script. Life is a script everything has been planned.

Now we have to have some kind of freedom or we would be automatons, robots. We do have freedom. Freedom not to react to any given situation. Freedom to turn within and not to react to anything. But to see the perfect reality within and become free of the whole game. But as long as we're playing the game, we are actors in the play. We're playing our part. But the script has been written before you got here. You are just an actor in the part. As long as you believe that you are the actor you will take on new parts, life after life after life. But as soon as you realize that you are not an actor, you're not the director, you're not the producer, you are none of those things.

You are the Self that never directed, never produced, never acted. You are the all-pervading Self, that is totally free, that has never been bound...(tape break) ...you'll be free.

Say the script calls for you to get hit by a train in ten years. So ten years from now you're going to be walking on the railroad tracks and a train will hit you. That's the script. The only way to get out of the script is to realize the truth about yourself. That you are not the actor and there is no script, you become the Self and you're totally free.

How does that grab you?

SX: But then there is no you either.

R: Me either? What do you mean? (SX: Well if there's no you there is no me.) True. (SX: So we don't exist?) True, but do you really know that or do you know it intellectually? Something you read in a book? (SX: No I didn't read it in a book.) Did you have that experience? (SX: I just realized while you were talking...) That's good if you can realize this and have your own experience of it that is the way it should be. (SX: I don't know what that means?) It means you're free. (laughter) (SX: There's nobody to be free?) Then you're free. Then nobody to be free is freedom. (SX: But that's incomprehensible?) Of course it is. (laughter) It's supposed to be. If you can comprehend it, it's not the truth. This is why I tell you so often. Do not believe a word I say, for I speak nonsense, doesn't make any sense. (SX: I didn't mean that.) That's good you should. (SX: I mean that I didn't mean that it was incomprehensible, in that it was unbelievable. I just meant you cannot comprehend it.) You cannot, that's true and that is the way it should be.

SH: Why should it be that way? (R: Why not?) There is no should in it, that's just the way it is. (R: Sure.) Where does the should come in? (R: I put it in.) Take it out we don't need it. (student laughs) (R: It's gone.) Okay.

ST: Robert, is that why psychics can see into the future of your life because I had something happen when I was 11 years old when I met an Indian psychic at a party here in Hollywood. She told me things that I've kept track of that have become true?

R: Psychics only know about your human life. If the psychic is really good, they can probably tell you somethings about your human future. But who wants to know that? I want to be become free, that's what you should say. I want total liberation. I don't want to know about my continuance of living. I want to die to my body and to my mind and become pure awareness, consciousness.

So psychic readings are for the immature. Who cares about the future? There is no future. There is only the now, the present and I'm dubious about that.

SH: Why are you dubious about the present moment? (R: Because where does the present come from?) Nowhere. (R: Nowhere, there is no present.)

SX: I don't understand why we have this compulsion to be liberated?

R: Because we think we're bound. When you believe you're bound you have a compulsion to be liberated. But as you awaken you realize that there is no bondage, then there is no liberation.

SL: You often said if this and this and this would happen then you would be free and it seems, I just want to ask, free from what?

R: Free from bondage to person, place or thing. (SL: But if you don't really feel bound?) Then you are already free. (SL: But I don't close my eyes and see pure consciousness, I mean...) Nobody does. (SL: Nobody does? There is nothing to see?) There is no pure consciousness that you can see. (SL: What?) There is no pure consciousness for you to see. (SL: Separate from me?) There has to be a seer to see pure consciousness. And as long as the seer exists you're still bound. (SL: Also, many of us should probably see that looking over our past lives that we really didn't do anything, things just happened.) True, but don't dwell on that, forget about your past life. (SL: Okay.) Forget about the past completely. Turn within and find yourself, now. (SL: Only to understand this point that...) We become completely bogged... (SL: ...that you said animals exist under the law of cause and effect we do too?) Umm, as an animal (SL: As a body?) As a body. (SL: So our practical life, our work life, our working mind all of this under the laws of cause and effect.) Umm. (SL: And doesn't that also mean that awakening would also be happening through the laws of cause and effect?) No. Cause and effect are under the laws of karma. But karma and cause and effect does not really exist. Only in the mind. When there is no mind there is no cause and effect. There is reality. So rather than look back at the past, but try to improve the future it's better to turn within and become completely clear, become consciousness and you will not worry about the rest of those things. (SL: There must be some other level of ... probably lots of people here they just don't worry. When things happen they just happen, they look up and they say, "Oh, that's happened." Even though someone else may judge it to be cataclysmic or...) They are all degrees of seeing things, true of course. The truth is there are no things to see. No thing is happening... (SL: No evidence, nothing?) No events have ever transpired. It's like a dream, Wake up! Forget about degrees, steps, either you're awake or you're asleep. Do not get caught up in degrees. That's what yoga is all about. When you get involved in yoga practices, meditation and the rest. You get involved in degrees and it keeps you back. And you come back life after life as maybe a great yogi, but you are still bound. You don't want to be a yogi. You can be yogi bear. You want to be liberated and you are liberated. Wake up and forget about everything else.

(silence)

See I can feel that some of you are lost in your thoughts. When you sit quiet instead of quietening your mind you are allowing your thoughts to take hold of you to control you. Can't you see that this is the biggest problem you've got? Coming here often enough you know you should not allow your thoughts to run rampant. You should catch your thoughts by observing them, by watching them and asking, "To whom do they come?" and following it through. Do not allow your mind to control you. It makes no difference how serious you think your problem is, if any. Only your ego has the problem.

SH: You should do the same with sense perceptions as with thoughts?

R: Yes. Same thing. (SH: Who is seeing? Who is hearing?) Who watches? Who sees? Who is the witness? (SH: The mind is just like a sense that perceives thoughts? It's like a sixth sense in that sense?) Yes. First you observe your thoughts, you watch your thoughts, you become the witness to your thoughts and then you question, "Who is the witness? Who is watching?" And you go back to I again. Everything all your troubles are attached to the I. When the I comes down from the brain and rests in the spiritual heart centre in the right side of your chest, then your body-mind disappears and so does the world and everything with it. That should be your practice, not listening to your thoughts and worrying.

Say for instance the doctor gives me two days to live. So what? There is nowhere for me to go. So I'll function without a body, big deal. (SL: Function?) Sure, exist, be. (SL: Function is sort of like work or a production of something.) Well it means liberation to me. What's in the words? It's all semantics. Do not take every word literally.

(pause)

R: Do we have any announcements?

SE: (Ed mentions about chanting and the date of the coming bhandara)

(tape break then tape starts abruptly as satsang is wrapped up)

R: ...Remember to worship yourself, to pray to yourself, to bow to yourself because God dwells in you as you, peace. (pause) Have a good mothers day. Next month is fathers day. Then there is ground hog day.

SL: Tomorrow is my birthday. (R: Your birthday, it's nice to celebrate.)

SB: How about ego's day? (R: Ego's day? Yeah. (students laugh))

(tape ends) [TOC]

YOU ARE INHUMAN

16th May, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, om. Good evening. I get to drink water, you don't.

It's good to be with you again. Welcome. I want you to ask yourself the question, "What is my real reason for coming here tonight? Why have I decided to come to a meeting like this? What do I want to achieve? What am I looking for?" If your real honest with yourself you will find that most people are interested in improving their humanhood. They want to become better human beings. They want to improve their affairs, their health, their finances, their positions, their status. And of course you realize this is the wrong reason for coming here.

We're not interested in your humanhood, for the premise of this teaching is you are inhuman. You are not your body, nor your mind, nor are you the doer. So to improve your humanhood is folly. You're not trying to become better human beings. You're trying to forget that you are a human being and focus your attention on your divinity, on your Self, on the I-am, until your humanhood has been transcended and transmuted. That's called liberation or awakening, which is really your real nature. Then you are free.

Sometimes it's difficult to understand, "What if I'm dying of a disease? What if I'm impoverished? What if people are trying to kill me? How can I forget about that? If I become self-realized what will happen to my body? Will it continue being sick, or impoverished, or waiting to be killed?" By asking a premise like that, question like that, you're taking the wrong direction. You don't exist as you appear. You have no body. The body appears to be real, but upon investigation you will find that it's not. When you discover your reality, your real nature, the body is transcended. It no longer is the same thing to you. It may appear real to others, but to you it's no longer there. It is like the water in the mirage. It appears to be real, but it's not. As far as your bodily functions are concerned, they will go on. That's how it will appear to others. Your body will appear to go through experiences, but not to you, when you are awakened. You will appear to be the doer to others, but not to you. You're not trying to hide it, or make-believe that you don't have a body. You do not even identify with something that makes you think you don't have a body. You become yourself, absolute reality. That's what you've always been, pure awareness, sat-chit-ananda, I am that I am. That is your real nature right now. That's what you really are.

This is why it was difficult to understand when people like Ramana Maharshi or Ramakrishna were dying from cancer. Devotees were weeping, crying, and both Ramana and Ramakrishna tried to explain, "Don't be fools. I'm not going anywhere. I am where I will always be. What you see is not a true picture." Yet the devotees still couldn't understand, because they were coming from a human standpoint, and of course in the human world, there's suffering, there's death, there's birth, there's misery, there're all kinds of things. And there are also beautiful things. But they are all part of the same maya, the same grand illusion.

Therefore try to understand this. Everything will work out. There is absolutely nothing to worry about. All is well. The more you try to think about your body, in order to improve it any way, the worse it will become, for you are using your mind to out-picture something that perhaps is not your karma. When I tell you, "Do not worry about your body," I know from whence I speak. Your body does not exist. It never existed. It never will exist. Your real nature is unbounding joy, love, peace. You are not what appears to be.

Do not be afraid. There is no thing in the universe that can possibly hurt you. Everything is all right. If you believe in a God, see that God as omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent. Realize that that God is your true nature, that God is you, no one else, but not as your ego, not as your body, not as your mind, but as you. You are that. Understand the true meaning of the Self, unalloyed happiness, pure intelligence, ultimate oneness. You are that. You focus your mind on God, by realizing I am. I am not this nor that, just I am. I have always been and I will always be. Do not pray for things. Spend your time identifying with your Self. Praying for things is a waste of time. You may get the things, but you'll be sorry afterwards.

It reminds me of the story of this Catholic man who wanted $50,000 to remodel his home. So he went to his church and he said, "Father, I have been coming to this church since I was a child. Now I need $50,000 to remodel my home. Can you please let me have it?" And the father said, "Son, we do not lend money here, nor give money. Go home and pray to Jesus and you may get it." So he went home and got on his knees and he said, "Jesus, I have to remodel my home. Please give me $50,000." Nothing happened. He did this everyday for a month, and nothing happened. So he said, "Jesus, I'll make a deal with you. I'll take $25,000. Can you see your way to let me have that?" Nothing happened. He prayed for $25,000 all month, and nothing happened.

So he got angry. He got up one dark night and went to the church, snuck in, and stole the statue of the Mother Mary, Jesus' mother, took it home, got a handkerchief, tied it around her mouth, got another handkerchief, tied it to her eyes, and said, "OK Jesus. If you want to see your mother again, you'd better get me $25,000." (students laugh)

That's the way we pray.

SF: Did it work? (laughter)

R: We think that God is going to give us gifts, presents, if we pray hard enough. And sometimes we get them, and that's unfortunate, for then we believe that whatever we need, we just have to pray. Prayer has it's points. It can increase your concentration, and make you come closer to the deity of your choice, but asking for gifts is a mistake, for you just might get them, and then your problems will really start.

Forget about your body, your needs. Everything will work out. Ask yourself, "Who has to do all these things? Who's worried? Who fears?" and wait. The answer will come, "I am. I fear. Then what is the source of the I?" And trace the I to its source, by holding on to it, by following the I, abiding in the I. The day will come when you finally awaken and you will be free. What I'm simply telling you is this. Make your life simple. Keep inquiring, "Who am I?" Whatever your need may be, whatever your position is, wherever you come from, makes no difference. Do not compare yourself with anyone else. Keep inquiring, "Who am I? Where did this I come from? What is its source?" Follow the I to the spiritual heart center, on the right side of your chest. Allow it to merge.

The spiritual heart center is the Self. It is infinity. Watch yourself, be aware of your thoughts. Whatever thoughts come to you, good or bad, always ask yourself, "To whom do they come?" You do this all day long. Catch yourself. Remind yourself. When you ask, "To whom do they come?" observe the thoughts that come into your head. Become the witness. Then ask yourself again, "To whom do they come?" Do the same thing. You can do this when you're meditating formally if you want to, or do it during the day, all day, even when you're sleeping. Forget about time. Forget about the world. Remember, when I say, "Forget about the world," I'm not saying to ignore your responsibilities. There's something that will take care of them. There's something that knows how to take care of your body, that you believe is real.

That's the wonderful thing about this teaching, you do not have to wonder about your body. You do not have to worry that if you do not do so and so, such and such, the work will not get done. Your body will continue to do whatever it came here to do. It has absolutely nothing to do with you. Leave your body alone. It will always take care of itself. You do the work you came here to do. That's abiding in the Self, the source, the spiritual center on the right side of your chest. The I appears to have come from that. The I appears to emanate from the spiritual center. That's how it appears to rise, when you wake up. When you were asleep, the I subsided in your chest, in your heart. When you wake up, become aware, what happens? Notice how the I becomes larger. It goes from your heart to your brain. When it gets to your brain you identify with the world. You say, "I am hungry. I am thirsty. I am late. I need this. I need that," yet when you're falling asleep, those thoughts begin to leave you as the I subsides again into the spiritual center. Become aware of this. Watch what happens. Observe. Catch the I doing all these things. This is called abiding in the I, when you watch the I becoming stronger as it goes to your brain, and you become worldly, and again when you fall asleep, the I leaves your brain and goes back down to the spiritual center.

The whole secret is to keep the I in the spiritual center at all times. This is called liberation. And this happens by inquiring, "Who am I?" What you are really saying is, "What is the source of the I?" You have been watching. You have been observing. You have been observing the I going back to the spiritual center at night, as you're falling asleep, and you have been observing the I coming to life again, as you wake up, and you inquire,

"What is this I? Who gave it life? Where did it come from? What is its source?" and you keep still. As thoughts come to you, you inquire, "To whom do they come?" You do this again, and again, and again. One day something will happen. Your I will melt into the source while you're awake, and you will experience yourself as consciousness, as pure awareness, as absolute reality, and you will be free.

(silence then tape break then Robert continues)

Om, namah Shivaya, peace. We're open to questions, statements, criticisms, whatever you'd like to talk about feel free to do so.

SV: Is praying for the earth, praying for people is that egotistical? What I'm saying, leave the praying, leave everything to God and that's just praying? Is there any benefit from each other?

R: There is benefit to it if you are sincere and you forget about yourself and you realize that you are the Self of all. When you realize that you are the Self of all your prayer becomes universal. It can be of some benefit. It is better though to know who you are. If you understand your true nature then again you realize your omnipresence, for as consciousness you are all-pervading. And when you are all-pervading it encompasses every mineral, every vegetable, every animal and every human. Then you don't have to pray you just have to be. But in the beginning stages prayer can be beneficial. As I mentioned before, it makes you one pointed after a while. It makes you realize that the object you are praying to is none other than yourself. And that's real prayer when you remember who you are. So when you pray for somebody else or to improve the world condition you are invoking duality. There is you and the world condition. There is the one praying for a purpose. There is only one purpose and that is the Self, which you are already. At that point prayer becomes fruitless. For there is no one to pray, for whom should you pray? The Self? The Self is already perfect, bright and shiny, it doesn't need any help. The universe will be taken care of, you don't have to worry about the world. Awaken and then see if you have to pray. But first awaken, then see if there is any question like that.

SL: Robert when you say that the I abides in the heart centre at the right side of the chest, if the body doesn't exist how can you find it in a place that doesn't exist?

R: Due to the fact, the Self is the spiritual centre. You are that Self and you're using your mind to abide in the Self. When the mind is made to abide in the Self then the mind and the body disappears and only the reality or the Self is left, which has always been. So, as long as you believe you are the body then you try to abide in the Self, which is the centre in the right side of the chest. But, when you merge there will be no body, no centre, no Self, only consciousness.

SC: Robert it's kind of interesting in the bible, it says the heart of the wise man is on the right and the fools is on the left.

R: Yes it does. (SC: That's what you're telling us.) Yes. By fools they mean that the belief of a body and a mind is foolish. Wisdom, reality is the Self, the real Self. So when you abide in the Self that is wisdom. When you abide as the body that's ignorance. (SC: I have a feeling Robert that although your eyes are open you're not seeing anything with a purpose?)

Well there is nothing to see, except the Self. It's like a screen and it's images. I see the whole universe as superimposed on the screen except I'm aware of it. Then everything is really the screen. The images come and go. So I see myself as the universe. All this is the Self and I am that. It has nothing to do with Robert. It is pure consciousness and pure consciousness is self-contained. I am is that.

(silence)

SG: Can you say that one should not ignore ones responsibilities. What is ones responsibilities? How does one know his dharma?

R: One's responsibilities is to know the Self, is to know who you are. That is the only responsibility you really have. Everything else will take care of itself. As far as your physical responsibilities and your world responsibilities go, the power that knows how to grow mangoes on a mango tree, that knows how to make it rain, will take care of that. Have no fear you will be looked after. So your only responsibility is to awaken, that's it.

SU: When you are in that state are you aware of any ego, listening?

R: If you are in your Self where would the ego come from? There is no ego that exists whatsoever. The ego appears to exist when you are the body. It's because of your ego that you believe that you are the body. But when you awaken there is no body there is no ego, there is no world, there is no universe, there is no God, there is no delusion, there is no awakening, there is only the Self. So you should inquire, "To whom is the ego? Who thinks that they've got an ego to get rid of?" If you really had to get rid of your ego you would have a fight on your hands because the ego would resist. But since the ego never existed to begin with, all you have to do is come to that realization and wake up.

We've got some prashad tonight. So we can pass that out.

(Getting the prashad ready and passing it around to students (general talk)

R: Any more announcements or comments or anything you'd like to say?

SM: You said something once Robert about transcriptions, how people should read them. Take a part of it and study it each night and...

R: Well the way to read these transcriptions, if you're interested, is to stay with it for the week until you get another one. But first go through it and then start all over again. Take it paragraph by paragraph. Cogitate on it, ponder it, feel what it means to you personally and do this until you get a new one. Do not read it like you do a book and put it down and say, "Where is the next one." But work on it, identify with it, assimilate it, all these things help.

Remember to worship yourself, to love yourself, to bow to yourself, to kneel to yourself because God dwells in you as you, peace. I love you, be happy. Until we meet again, all is well. (SC: Thank you, Robert.) Thank you.

(tape ends) [TOC]

THE LAND OF THE JNANIS'

19th May, 1991

Robert: Peace, shanti, shanti, Om, Peace.

Greetings and salutations from the land of the Jnanis. The land of the Jnanis is where you live. You are all Jnanis, but some of you believe you're a body. And as long as you believe you are a body, you separate yourself from the land of the Jnanis. You believe you belong to the earth, and if you're earthbound, you have to partake of all the problems, sufferings, happiness, joys, that come from the earth. You have to choose who you shall follow, if you should follow the divine urge that tells you that you are absolute consciousness, or the call of mammon, which is the world. You have to make that choice.

The choice you make determines what happens to you from here on. It's very simple. You either realize that you are not of this world, that you are absolute reality, your divine nature is pure awareness, and you rest in that, or you worry, and you fear, and you try to make things happen, and you're always scheming, and planning, and looking at the future with dismay, worrying about the past. The choice is really yours.

And even when some of you say, "I am absolute reality," you're still referring to the body, for you are saying, "I am," and you don't know I am as consciousness. You're saying, "I am absolute reality," meaning that your body, your ego, is absolute reality, and this is a great mistake. You have to understand when you say, "I am absolute reality," I am and absolute reality are both synonymous. You're declaring the highest truth. You can say it this way, you may say, "I am is absolute reality," for if you're having problems, if you think something is wrong, and you say, "I am absolute reality," you're really saying my problems, and my negative thinking, is absolute reality. That's what you mean by I am.

So remember what I am really means. I am is God. I am is nirvana, emptiness. I am is consciousness, and that is your reality. So there's no real difference between me and you. Absolute reality, consciousness, is all-pervading. If it's all-pervading, how can you be something else? You see the folly of your thinking? There is only absolute consciousness. There is only the reality. It is all-pervading. There's nothing else.

Just being aware of this, your thoughts stop. There is nothing to think about. There is no thing you have to do. There are no mantras you have to keep chanting. There are no formulas that is going to turn you into ajnani. There are no yoga practices that you have to keep doing. You simply have to be aware that absolute reality is omnipresent, all-pervading, and there is no room for anything else.

I am is Brahman. It goes further than that. I am is Parabrahman, beyond Brahman. It's unpronounceable, unfathomable. You are that. You are that consciousness, and there is absolutely nothing to think about. There is no thing you have to get rid of. There is no special reading you have to do. There is no one you have to really see. You simply have to be aware of the fact that absolute reality is all there is. There's not even room for a thought, for a question, for an answer. There's no room, because the absolute reality takes up all the room.

There is nothing to wonder about. You do not have to be worthy. You do not have to deserve it. There is no use thinking about your past, because your past never existed and never will exist. The past and the future are just dreams. Awaken from the dream by realizing absolute reality is the only power. It is everywhere. There is not the world and absolute reality, and then you have to overcome the world to find your reality. There is no world to overcome. There is no God to pray to. Brahman is yourself. Shiva is your consciousness. You are that.

What else is there to know? You do not have to be a scholar of the Upanishads. You do not have to memorize various passages. You have to become like a little child and stay centered in the present. No one exists but you. You are the only existence. There is no other existence.

If you took this room and everything in it, the tape recorders, the bodies, the flowers, the carpet, and began to melt it down to it's most minutest particles, you would get pure energy from everything. Everything will come from the same source. That source is absolute reality. It is the substratum of all existence. And that source is you. You are that. You are nothing else. Everything else is a lie. You're searching, and you're striving, and you're looking for this, and you're looking for that. Give it up. Stay put. Do not allow your mind to think past your nose. Catch your mind. Observe it thinking, and laugh.

Where do the thoughts come, that you think about? They are formed by habit. For years you've been using your mind to think, and you believe the only way you can survive is through thinking. But now you are beginning to understand that what you call your mind is not really your friend. It is some optical illusion that keeps you earthbound, and makes you worry about your affairs, and concerns you with the ways of the world.

But what if you understood that the world doesn't exist? The world is like the water in a mirage. It appears to exist, just as your body appears to exist, but when you investigate you will laugh, for there is nothing at all that exists. If you wish to listen to your mind, you're going to have a hard time on this earth, for you will find that some things go good one day, and seem to go bad the next day. And then you're happy when you get things going your way, and you become miserable when they go the other way.

This is the way of the world. It plays games with you. You have to awaken. You have to surrender all of your games, all of your mental attitudes, all of the past and future, all of your beliefs and conceptual thinking. All of these things must go, all of your objects and subjects, all of your so called human intelligence, everything you've learnt. It has to be transcended and then you'll be free.

But as long as you hold on to the slightest thing — it may be that you're in love with a rose. If you look at the rose and believe in the rose, it will keep you earth-bound. You are the rose. The rose exists because you exist, just as the world exists because you exist. When you cease to exist, the world ceases to exist. When you cease to exist, there's only the reality, and you become absolutely free.

(Musical interlude.)

Many people still can't understand why people who become self-realized seem to suffer, physically or otherwise. A week doesn't go by when somebody doesn't ask me this question, "How can a person who claims to be self-realized like Ramana Maharshi and Ramakrishna and many others, die such horrible deaths? Is it worth going after freedom like that? Is it worth becoming liberated when you're going to die a horrible death of cancer, or something else?"

Now this kind of question is completely ludicrous to me. It's ludicrous to me because who asked the question, the Jnani or the ajnani? Who suffers? Can't you see by now, that what you see is only in a certain dimension. Where most of you are right now, you see birth and death, sickness and health, poverty and riches. You see duality. So naturally your body was born to die if that's what you see, and that's where you're coming from, and suffering appears to ensue. But from the Jnanis viewpoint, there is no one who was ever born, and no one suffers.

Ramakrishna appeared to be wasting away, and some of you say, "How can you say that? Look what happened to him? We witnessed it. We saw it. We read about it." Who's this we? Who are you anyway? If you consider yourself a human being, naturally you are going to witness suffering. But did Ramakrishna admit he was suffering? Did Ramana Maharshi admit he was suffering? They were laughing all the way to hell. No ones ever suffered, and no one will ever suffer. It's the way you see things. You have to lift yourself up, and you have to see things from a different viewpoint. You did not come to this earth. You were never born. Your body is not even maintained and sustained. Neither is the world. There is only the absolute reality.

So many of these Sages, to make the public feel better, they say what happened to these people is they took on the karma of their devotees, now that's a lie. It's a lie because there's no karma! There is nothing to take on! It appears like this to the ajnani, who beholds, with his or her eyes, somebody suffering.

Now I don't want you to go out and laugh at the people in the hospital who are dying, or go to a dying person and say, "You're not suffering. You're just making believe." That would be nonsense, stupidity. When you realize a person believes that they are suffering, you should never tell them they're not, because at that stage of life they don't know what you're talking about. It is therefore your duty to help. It is your duty to come to the aid of everyone in trouble, as long as you believe you are human, and you are the body, and you go through experiences. So does everybody else that you see. But when you come to the life of a Sage, it's a completely different ball game. The Sage doesn't see the same things that you see.

A good example of that is the chalkboard. Imagine the Sage as the chalkboard, and you draw a picture of a human being suffering, dying of cancer, wasting away. Everyone who looks at the chalkboard will relate to the human being drawn on it. They will not relate to the chalkboard. They will relate to the picture, especially if the picture looks real and covers most of the chalkboard. But did anything happen to the chalkboard? Did the chalkboard get hurt? Was the chalkboard born? Did the chalkboard grow old and die from cancer? Now you can erase the picture and the chalkboard is all the same, as it was before. No change.

Therefore do you see yourself as a dying individual, who gets older, and has problems, and might catch a disease? Or do you see yourself as the substratum, as consciousness, as pure awareness, and a so-called problem is merely an imposition upon the Self? How do you see it? Ponder this.

How do you see all the situations in the world? Think of a gigantic chalkboard if you will, and now someone is drawing pictures of the whole world on the chalkboard, the whole universe, galaxies, planets, people, places, things. The whole chalkboard is covered with images. Does the chalkboard feel this? Does the chalkboard feel the good images and rejoice with it, and cry over the bad images? The chalkboard remains ever the same. New pictures come, old pictures go.

And so it is with most of us. Your life is painted on the chalkboard, and then when you appear to drop your body, someone appears to draw a new one on the chalkboard, and that's called reincarnation. And the picture that is drawn on the chalkboard of your new body, goes through those experiences in accordance with karma. That's part of the grand illusion. But nothing ever happens to the chalkboard.

A Sage is like the chalkboard. His or her body may be appearing to decay, to waste away for one reason or another, but the Sage is not identified with that. To others it may appear that way, but that Sage is absolute reality, all-pervading. There is nothing but the Sage. There's no room for anything else. There's no place for anything else. The Sage is the Self. The Self is all there is.

You must subsequently awaken. When you hear these words, chew them up, assimilate them. Let them go into your spiritual heart center. Understand what this means. You are free. You have always been free. You have no bondage to anything. Do not believe what your eyes show you. If I make hospital visitations, if I help the homeless, it doesn't mean that I'm agreeing with this or accepting it. It is just being done. Again, I do not become arrogant. I do not become cynical. When I see a homeless person I do not say they are not really suffering. Of course they are, because they are the images on the chalkboard.

This is the maya. This is the illusion. This is the dream, and they're caught up in that dream. It's all prearranged, preordained. That's the experience they're going through now. But when they wake up, then there's no such thing as anything being prearranged or preordained. That all goes out the window with everything else, into the garbage. Then there's only pure awareness, ultimate oneness, and there's nothing else.

This is what you have to work on, to clear up your idea of what's going on. And the easiest way to do this is, no matter what you see, or what you believe, or what feelings come to you, simply say, "To whom do they come?" Find out. To whom do these images come, these chalkboard images? "Who sees them? Who identifies with them? Who becomes angry over them? Who sees disease, poverty, lack, limitation, man's inhumanity to man? Is this reality?" And then you'll realize they are chalkboard images, that's all they are, and you'll be able to erase them.

You begin to understand that all these images belong to the personal I. Imagine a string, and you tie onto the string everything in the world, and everything in the universe. It's all hanging on to the string. If you get rid of the string, there'll be no place for these things to hang onto, and they'll have to dissolve. It is the string that gives them their power. The string is your personal I.

When you wake up in the morning, the personal I comes out of your heart center and runs up into your brain. You then identify with the body, and when you identify with the body, the I expands and you become the world, and you say, "I see the sky, I see the moon, I see man's inhumanity to man, I see love," and you see all these human things, which you gave birth to.

Can't you see now, they all came out of you. They came out of your mind. This is what the teaching of no-mind means. When there is no mind, there is no existence. So the idea is to transfer them back to whence they came, and you do that by tracing the I-thought. It's only a thought. You trace the I back to its source. As far as you're concerned, the source is the spiritual heart on the right side of the chest. Has nothing to do with chakras. It is absolute reality. It is nirvana, your spiritual heart. The I and the whole world goes back into the heart. Then there is only self-contained absolute reality and nothing else.

Do not make it complicated. Do not be analytical. Simply realize the source of your problems is I. I belongs in the heart center, not in my head. As long as I is in my head, I relate to the world. When I abide in the I, hold on to it, and you do that by inquiring, "For whom does the I come?" or "Who am I?" the I will finally disappear, and only the source, or Brahman, will be left. That's what you are. That is your real nature. Abide in it, love it, be it and be happy.

I consider what we covered today is of the utmost importance. Therefore if you feel that you did not quite understand what we were talking about or if you have any kind of question pertaining to that feel free to ask. Because what we covered is actually the whole teaching, that's it. It's simple, to the point, you do not have to be a scholar, you do not have to go to India to find any kind of a guru. You simply realize that everything is happening within you. Everything that you believe has been programmed and what you are is karmic. When you awaken all of that is gone and you become all-pervading. Keep it simple. Forget about all the formulas, the processes, just be the chalkboard.

Any questions?

SU: You, you're the chalkboard?

R: I'm the chalkboard? We're all the chalkboard? (SU: I mean there is no chalkboard then without the I?) Of course but the example is, we are like the chalkboard. (SU: You erase the I? What do you do with it?) The I goes back into your heart centre and becomes the Self. The I was always the Self. (SU: But what is the Self without the all-pervading which would include the chalkboard?) The Self, the chalkboard and the all-pervading are synonymous. They're all one and you are that. That's you. (SU: So you won't have to...) You won't have to what? (SU: You won't have to erase the chalkboard?) You erase the chalkboard because the chalkboard is like the stick you use to turn the fire and you throw everything into the fire and burn it up. All your thoughts, your emotions, your past, your karma, everything is burnt up. So the stick that is left over that you turn the fire with is the chalkboard. (SU: You mean you just turn away from it?) Then you throw it in and get rid of that. (SU: I mean, can't you turn away without trying to destroy it?) No because there has to be someone to turn away. There is no turning away. When you see the truth it all disappears. Just like when you're dreaming. In your dream you are going through all of this, teachings, you're going to teachers, you're learning about chalkboards, but all of a sudden you wake up, what's left? It's all gone. You're the only one that exists. The chalkboards are gone, the classes are gone, the teaching is gone, God is gone, the universe is gone, you're awake. It's the same thing. So you use all of these things as examples while you're asleep. But when you awake they're not necessary because you're free, you're the Self.

SB: In order to fall into the spiritual heart centre in the right side of your chest, does the mental attention have to dissolve and that is when you fall into that?

R: You have to abide in the I. When you inquire, "From where does the I come?" That's mental attention, you're putting your attention on the I. But the more you inquire the weaker the attention becomes and the weaker the I becomes. Until the attention and the I both fall into the heart and then there is absolute awareness. (SB: So ultimately it's like a dissolving of the whole structure of attention, concentration?) You can say that but remember if you think of it as something dissolving, it's like thinking of a piece of ice that has to dissolve. It may take centuries. It's better to realize that you have nothing to dissolve. For nothing ever existed to begin with. You are the imperishable Self. Never born, can never die, you are that. Abide in that. That's what I mean with what I was talking before about making it too analytical. Using too many procedures looking for formulas, drop all those, just be the Self and awaken. Be what you are. And you will find everything takes care of itself. The Self takes care of itself because it is the only Self that is all-pervading. So when you drop all of your mind stuff and your formulas and your thinking, the Self automatically takes care of itself and you are that. It's very simple.

Let's not make it complicated. Even by thinking about it you make it complicated because thinking about it presupposes that there is a thinker. There is a subject and an object and that brings confusion. Therefore do not allow your mind to get involved in all the game play of subjects and objects, dissolving things, trying to become something. Surrender all of that and just be who you are.

SF: Robert what does self-contained mean? When you say that the Self is self-contained?

R: It means it's all-pervading. The Self is contained, everything is contained within the Self, it is self-contained. There is only the Self and there is nothing else. There is not the Self, and. There is no room for anything except the Self and you are that.

SU: The Self is all possibilities besides being all-pervading? (R: You made Bob jump. You scared him. (laughter) What was the question?) You said the Self is also all possibilities?

R: The Self is not all possibility, the Self is only the Self. It is absolute awareness. But it has no possibility. Possibility for what? (SU: Anything can occur?) There is no place for it to occur. Think of something that takes up all the space in this room. How can anything occur, there is no space? Where would it occur? There has to be space. So the Self takes up all of space and there is no room for anything else. (SU: So nothing ever happens?) Nothing has ever happened. Nothing is happening. Nothing will ever happen.

SG: The birds aren't real? (R: The birds?) Yeah.

R: Well if the birds are real so is war and so is man's inhumanity to man. And so are the trees and the squirrels and the leaves. They are real as long as you believe you are the body. If you believe you are real then everything you see with your eyes is also real. Therefore you do not deny the world, you merely work on yourself to the best of your ability to remove the I that is the perceiver. When the perceiver becomes demolished so does the world.

SM: What was the word? (R: Demolished.) Who demolishes?

R: As long as you believe you are the personal I, then the birds and everything else are real. The birds as well as everything else in the world remember is the image on the blackboard that you drew. But it doesn't affect the blackboard one iota. You can erase the birds and draw squirrels. Makes no difference to the blackboard.

SU: What happens to love?

R: Nothing. What do you want to happen to it? (SU: Well if there is no love there is nothing?) Excuse me? (SU: If there are no birds there is nothing, how can there be love?) Without birds how can there be any love? (laughter) (SU: Well...?) What you really are Josephine is so divine and so blissful it makes the birds seem like cockroaches. (students laugh) (SU: I don't like that!) Your true nature can never come up to the birds. The birds are just mental expressions. Of course they're beautiful enjoy them. But then the birds have to die and then you cry. (SU: You can just love them.) You love them, then they die, then you cry, then you love some more words. (SU: Can you get the love without crying, I don't know I can't but can you?) Well when you say, "I can't," who are you referring to? (SU: I mean the state I'm in now, I haven't reached the state where I can just love.) Then get out of that state you are in now and become free. (SU: Just love?) Just love sure. The Self is love. Most of the things you love right now, you love for a reason. You love the birds, but if one sat on your head and started pecking on your head you wouldn't love the bird any more. You only love the bird when it's doing what you want, singing. (laughter) But when it goes to the bathroom on your head (laughter) and does other things then where did the love for the bird go? (more laughter) That is how fickle human love is.

SB: And then for thanksgiving we eat the bird. (laughter) That's the way we give thanks to God, we eat the birds. (R: We eat the bird, right. Well we're cannibals.)

SU: You don't stop loving your dog because he does something.

R: No but you slap him when he does something you don't like. (SU: We don't because he's not responsible.) You're not responsible also. Everything is an emanation of your mind. Stop the mind and the world will stop. (SU: You don't try to stop the mind either.) No don't try. I'm using semantics. (SU: I know what you're saying.) Keep the mind quiet, quiescent still. (SU: Will it subside on its own?) Yes, if you don't bother it. Remember the example I always use, if you have a friend and you do not pay attention to your friend, will your friend stay around? Your friend will leave. And so it is when you do not pay attention to your mind, the mind will subside. But when you're always thinking about your mind and identifying with your thoughts the mind becomes stronger and stronger and stronger. So do not pay attention to your mind. You do that by inquiring, "To whom do these thoughts come?" And they will come less and less and less and less and less until the mind is absolutely quiet. Then the Self within you will grab the mind and snuffle it and pull it into the heart. And you'll be free.

SM: When you have problems Robert and inquire, "To whom do the problems come to?" they just dissipate.

R: You're right if you keep practicing that and asking, "To whom do the problems come?" Something happens. You start to see things from a different viewpoint and you rise above the old hurts. The same things that used to hurt you previously disappear, you have risen.

SB: Robert the mind seems to be only resistant to the silence of what is?

R: Well you're using fancy words. (SB: Well I'm just thinking it seems to be whatever taken as a whole. That's all it is really, just resisting this surrendering in the silence, that it is the case.) That's how it appears to be. (SB: Yeah.) But remember your reality that there is no mind to resist. See don't hold on to the point that you have something to overcome because you'll always have something to overcome if you do that. When your mind seems to resist, do not feed it any more power by thinking it's resisting. That alone is a drawback. But simply inquire, "For whom does it resist?" And don't think about it just inquire. And you'll see there is no mind to resist. (SB: So inquiry breaks the identification?) Yes. Remember do not believe there is anything that you have to overcome. For you will spend eternity overcoming. There is nothing that exists that you have to overcome.

SG: Robert, it seems that all that's been said is so abstract... (R: Umm.) ...and when people before were saying, the birds are beautiful you shouldn't love them because they will die.

R: No I never said that. I didn't say you shouldn't love them because they are going to die. I said the people who just love humanly also weep humanly. For the things they love ultimately die. So how can that be real? Anything that dies, can that be real? Can that be eternal? Can that be absolute? (SG: No but isn't it important to appreciate the beauty of the absolute reality expressing through the forms whether they die or not?) As long as you feel you are the body you should enjoy everything, of course. You should not hold back. I'm not trying to tell you as a human being to say the birds do not exist or the world does not exist. I'm speaking from absolute reality terms when I say that. But what I'm saying is, do what you have to do from where you're coming from. As long as you feel identification with the body then your world is very, very real to you and you have to act accordingly. So instead of trying not to see the birds, feed the birds, feed the homeless, do what has to be done but see the truth within yourself and to the extent you know the truth within yourself, to that extent will everything begin to change outside. (SG: But isn't that why also the birds become beautiful because we see reality that we see in them is within yourself and we can feel yourself as part of that oneness?) We are many facets. So one of the facets is to see the beauty of the world. But that is not absolute reality. It's only a facet of consciousness. As you go higher you begin to see the birds have come out of your mind. They are an emanation of your own mind, of your own thoughts. And when you take the I back, the birds, the worms, the corpses, the human beings, all go with the I back into the centre and then what you felt about the birds becomes a million times stronger within yourself and that is called bliss.

It's beyond explanation how you would feel when you draw back into yourself. You have been giving credence to everything that exists. It came out of your divine nature. As you draw it back then that divine nature becomes your Self instead of the birds. And again it's a billion times stronger, the beauty and the joy and the harmony. We take the word bliss for granted. But bliss is a word that cannot even be explained, it can only be experienced. And when you feel your own bliss, by your own I mean, the Self bliss which is omnipresent all-pervading. Then all those feelings you gave the bird intensifies a million times within yourself and yourself is the Self of the universe. There is nothing else. But the question you asked comes from human values. From humanhood. So again naturally as long as you identify with your humanhood identify with the birds and the trees and the flowers and the roses and everything else, you have to.

SU: But how can you draw the birds back into yourself and not draw back the corpses?

R: You do. (SU: Yeah but what happens to that, is that stronger too?) It's all dissolved into bliss. (SU: Why?) Because bliss is the only reality. (SU: You mean that there is the bliss of pain?) There is no pain. Who sees pain, who feels pain? Pain is only felt by your humanhood. If your humanhood is gone there is no pain. That is what we were talking about all night, all afternoon. The Sage feels pain that's how others see the Sage, but the Sage himself feels nothing. Even when he appears to hurt. The others see the hurt but not the Sage.

SB: Didn't Ramana say there is pain?

R: No. (SB: No? Nisargadatta said there is no pain...they asked him whether he was in pain when he was dying and he said there is pain, he didn't say I'm in pain but he did say there is pain.) Well I don't know what he was referring to, so I can't talk for him. But pain is part of the human experience.

SQ: Are you saying that if we identify with our limitations that we identify with the emotions that go with the world and the limitations of the world and circumstances of the world. That we experience the thing we experience all because...?

R: Of course, but you don't have to identify with that. It's because you identify with the personal I then all those things come by themselves. (SQ: And then when you said identify with your limitless...) Instead see the I dissolve in your heart. Bring it back to the heart centre to the source and then you become abominable love. That is what I mean when I say, "Be what you are."

SU: Is it like an emanation? (R: Like a what?) An emanation?

R: To have an emanation... (SU: I mean if it goes back into the Self and comes out...) It doesn't come out. It doesn't go in or come out. When the I goes into the heart then the Self appears as it is. There is no more coming, there is no more going. (SU: And no emanation?) No emanation. Because you have to have a source for an emanation. You're going back into the source which is reality. There is no emanation, there is nothing left. (SU: Can the source stop emanating?) No it's doesn't emanate anything? To emanate there has to be something that emanates as. (SU: Itself that emanates.) It just is. (SU: But if its nature is to...) It has no qualities. It's beyond the human qualities. Human attributes. Beyond that. (SU: But all that resides in it?) It is that. All the stuff you're talking about is burnt up in it. Just like a fire. You throw your fears into the fire and your emotions and your anger and your conceptual thinking and your preconceived ideas, all that goes into the fire and gets burnt up. Then you also throw the idea which we were just talking about, into the fire also. And then the realization that there was no fire. There was nothing to be burnt, it never existed.

SH: Is this what you do just have a big laugh? (R: If you like to laugh?) Cosmic laughter breaks out. (R: Of course, you're right, you do laugh.)

SB: If there is no you Robert who laughs?

R: The laughter laughs, just laughter. Nobody's laughing, just laugh.

SF: Robert we are so crystallized in our body minds. Whenever we come here to hear dialogues and to hear you. It's very tough, it seems that you keep repeating and repeating again and again... (R: I repeat it until I get it right.) ...and also, we keep asking you again and again the same questions. I was grown up in the Catholic tradition and I remember when I was a kid they used to give me the catechism... (R: Umm.) ...it's a little booklet with little teachings that you have to cram in your head. (R: Um-hm.) And I went to a Zen centre one time and a custom there was to chant, before any session they would chant the heart sutra. In which the main teachings or the whole summary of the teaching was there. (R: Umm.) They used to chant, the whole group, I would say with so much strength and conviction. That I believe that all that would probably leaves it marks on the people who were chanting them. I was going to ask you Robert, maybe if you could dictate us a resume which would serve us like a sutra, a chanting sutra for us, so we can do a little bit of that before we start these meetings. It's an idea.

R: Well we have chants before we start. (SF: No something like a summary of the main points of the teaching in honor to Robert.) Oh I see what you mean.

SE: The Robert sutra.
(general discussion)

R: It sounds nice but isn't this more confusion? (SB: It's more stuff for the mind to fight over.) And then we're going to believe in the sutra.

SF: No there is conception, a very strong conception on the body-mind. (R: I know what you mean.) To counteract that there could be something that crams in your head the main points of the teaching Robert.

R: At a certain point you're right and if you want that by all means we'll do it. But don't make it your God. (SF: No of course not.) This is the reason I try to shy away from writing books or even making tapes or doing things like that because people are depending on those things, instead of depending on themselves. (SF: Of course if taken in the right perspective, I mean that is just a chanting material, it could serve its purpose.) If you want that we'll do it. I'm here to please. (laughter)

SU: I was in a Zen centre too with the chanting, it didn't make any difference. (R: Yeah.) I don't mean, I don't object to it, but it didn't do it. Everything has to happen by itself.

SG: It hasn't solved the problems of Catholicism.

SE: Let's do it in sanscrit so nobody can understand it.

R: And then we'll only have the elite people who understand it.

SG: And then we get a priest and pay them to interpret it for us. (laughter)

SM: In Catholicism they say if they get a child before they're 7 years old and indoctrinate him into Catholicism, then you'll have him for life. (R: Didn't they say that about communism? Yes, yes.) (laughter)

SY: How about no criticism, why is there a need for criticism? (SM: That's right.) Why is there a need for criticism? (SM: Well it isn't criticizing we are just stating a fact. It wasn't intended that way.) (R: All is well.)

R: Yes. We can do that Horat. (SF: Robert it's just an idea, I mean, you know?)

SD: I think that's something great.

R: It's not only that but I know what he means. Like Ramana Maharshi had the thirty verses and they would chant that in the temple all morning.

SU: I guess the main thing is, form is emptiness and emptiness is form. That was the name, I did it. (Mentions a chant)

R: Yes. So we'll let brother Ed make it up. (laughter) He can be in charge of the sutras. (laughter)

(tape ends) [TOC]

HOW BAD DO YOU WANT TO AWAKEN?

23rd May, 1991

Robert: Greetings. It's good to be with you again. It's always a pleasure to be with you. I don't know why? But it is. Because I'm with myself. The Self is all there is. So when you are with people of like mind you're really with yourself.

It's really interesting how many people want to be enlightened, to be self-realized and yet when you look into their lives, they put everything else first. By putting everything else first, I mean they worry about their jobs, about their families or about the world situation. They concern themselves about their happiness, about the future, about the past. How can you possibly wake up when you have all these things on your mind?

And another thing that is funny to me is, all the holidays we take, vacations. Someone called me the other day and asked me, "How much longer will it be before I awaken? And by the way, I'm going to Acapulco for a memorial day."

Well this an enigma to me. I recall when I was about 13, 14, 15 years old I wanted this so much that I used to have to sneak out of the house to go listen to Joel Goldsmith speak, back in New York. And in the winter time I had to take a train and a bus and a train again. It took me about two and half hours to get downtown. But something in me was driving me toward spiritual people.

What I'm getting at is this: Whatever you put first in your life that's what you ultimately become.

If you think your work is number one because that's what supports you, you're looking at this thing the wrong way. What supports you is the Self. Work is only one of the channels of the Self. If you know the Self you will always be taken care of because the Self is self-contained harmony and bliss. Therefore I should think your first obligation should be toward finding your Self or finding out who you really are.

What about vacations, holidays? Wherever you go you've got to take yourself with you. If you are a miserable person you're going to take your misery wherever you go. The first day or so may seem as though you were taking a break from your everyday experiences. But soon you will find fault with the hotel you're staying in, with the restaurant, with the food, with everybody because that is what you do when you are here.

It seems to me that if a person really wants to awaken they will put the teaching first. Now it makes no difference to me. I'm not saying this because I want to see you here all the time. As you know you've got the freedom to do what you like. I'd be the last one to tell you where to go or what to do. Sometimes I'd like to tell certain people where to go. But you're free to do what you like.

You have to come to the conclusion of what I'm talking about by yourself. Something within you has to be so strong, you've always got spiritual life on your mind. Why do you have to go anywhere? You are the universe. There is no place for you to go. After all you remember that the whole universe is an emanation of your own mind. You are creating the universe. Where do you have to go?

If you're looking for happiness and peace, it's right within you. If you're looking for a change of environment, it's right within you. Whatever you need is within you. There is no where you have to go for anything.

You have to ask yourself, how badly do I wish to awaken? And this will determine what you do.

When some of us are experiencing good karma, so-to-speak and we have the pleasures of life in this world, sometimes we go further away from spiritual life because we assume we're happy. Since we have the so called good things of life. We have forgotten that everything is subject to change. Your fortune can end tomorrow. And even if it doesn't you still become earth bound. So the next time around you will probably be a homeless person.

The universe is a cosmic joke. It plays games with you. It wants you to become attached to things. Your mind appears to be very strong. It will tell you all sorts of things to keep you attached. There are very few people who break out of it. In the Bhagavad-Gita it tells you, out of a thousand people, one searches for God. Out of a thousand who search one finds him. They are referring to the Self.

You cannot possibly find yourself when you are engrossed in the world. I'm not advocating that you become a hermit or a recluse. I'm simply saying, first things first. Focus your attention on the Self, your body will take care of itself. Something will take care of your so called body. It will not starve. This something can take care of your body better than you can ever hope to. So you do not have to keep thinking about your affairs and your body and the world most of the time.

You must begin to understand that you are the only one who can dissolve the maya and awaken to the truth of your being. You can tell where you're at by what you do all day long. Just think about today, since you woke up this morning. How often did you think about your higher Self. How often did you practice self-inquiry. How often did you surrender completely. Not too much, you identified yourself with the worldly situation. You identified with maya. With things, with persons, with places and then you tell me I want to awaken. I want to become self-realized.

Of course the truth is that you're already self-realized, you know that, but those are just words. What are you doing to prove it?

When you worry you're moving away from self-realization. Even though you may believe that you've got something to worry about. It may appear very important to you, but from a higher standpoint there is absolutely nothing to worry about. Absolutely nothing to worry about. No matter how it may appear to you, at least realize that it is an appearance and that is how you see it from your viewpoint. Rise above it by asking, "To whom does it come? Who is experiencing this?"

When you have fear. Fear of any kind, you are pushing yourself away from liberation. What can you possibly fear, consciousness is all there is, consciousness is bliss. There is nothing else. The mind has invented the rest and causes you to fear. Hate, revenge, all these traits and even the good things, they're two sides of the same coin.

I want to remind you that you are not trying to change bad human hood into good human hood. What you are trying to do is to transcend both. Everything will be all right if you stick to your sadhana. If you take time out to practice self-inquiry, or surrender, or just to sit in the silence. You can do these things while you are working. You really do not have to meditate formally.

So look at yourself and see what you've gone through just for today. Doubts, suspicions, apprehensions, mixed with feelings of ecstasy perhaps. Some joy here and there, some happiness here and there. You know the average person is happy when things go their way. When the world is turning the way they want it to. But that doesn't last long. Soon something comes along and things are no longer going their way. They become upset, confused, disillusioned.

Self-realization has absolutely nothing to do with the world. In other words it doesn't matter what you're going through. Whether your experience is sick or healthy, rich or poor, happy or sad, whatever. It has nothing to do with self-realization. Your reaction to those things either cause you to come closer to it or move you away from it, by your reaction to every experience. You have to handle every experience just the same.

Say you won the state lottery and you have sixty-million dollars. How many of you would say, "To whom does this come?" (students laugh) You only say it when there's something wrong, right? For if something goes your way you forget all about it. And you'll be on the next plane to Acapulco. Funny but true. How many of you would come back to Sunday celebration if you won sixty-million dollars in the state lottery?

Do you see how strong maya is, it plays games with you. It makes you believe you need spiritual life when things are going wrong. To be born is a curse and all the experiences you are going through are because you were born. But isn't it better to do what you have to do to awaken and get it over with? Instead of playing the game of karma and reincarnation and this and that, awaken!

Start to understand that I am not the body-mind phenomena. I am not the doer. What comes to me is only an appearance of karma. But I am not that, whether it's good or bad makes no difference. Who experiences karma? Who experiences human happiness and unhappiness? Who goes through these things? I do? The I is the answer of course. You have a personal identification with I. As long as you believe I exist as the body, I exist as the mind, you'll suffer accordingly. Through all the experiences you go through, some will be good, some will be bad and you will have the yo-yo syndrome.

One day you'll have something good happen to you, next day something bad, something good will take place all week and something bad will take place for two weeks. Something good will take place for three weeks. It'll go up and down like a yo-yo. Wanting to extend your good experiences and eliminate the bad experiences.

Psychology will not help you. Psychiatry will not help you. Getting stoned out of your head will no help you. Liquor will not help you. Due to the fact that you've got to awaken from these experiences. All these psychological experiences end, then you're back with yourself.

The only thing that will help is to find out from where the I comes from. Where does that first pronoun come from, I? It must come from myself when you start to think about it. For it doesn't come from outside of me, due to the fact that every time I say I, I'm referring to myself.

But what self am I referring to?

When I say, "I am happy, I am sad, I am hungry, I am full." Where does that I come from? Who gave it birth? What is its source? This procedure is called abiding in the I. You are tracing the I to its source by inquiring of yourself, "Where did it come from?" if you like, "Who am I?" This is abiding in the I.

You will soon discover that the I comes to life every morning as you awaken. The I comes to life and it becomes stronger as you go through the day. But if you abide in it, trace it and follow it you will realize that it really has no source. The I is like the water in a mirage. It appears to exist but it's a non entity. You must discover this for yourself. It will be the greatest discovery you ever make. By discovering this you will have unbounded peace, unalloyed happiness, joy. Just by discovering the I has no source. It never existed. You were never born and you can never go any where when you die. For there is no where to go.

You are that which has always been and which will always be. Sat-chit-ananda. You are the ultimate Brahman, pure awareness. That is your true nature. That is you. Not the I. I'm speaking of the personal I. There is no I, but you have to find this out for yourself. This is why in the practice it is said to follow the I to the source which is the spiritual heart on the right side of your chest. When the I goes back into the spiritual heart, it's the same as discovering that the water in the desert is a mirage. This awakens you. When you awaken everything is dissolved.

There is no longer a mind, so-to-speak. There is no longer a you or a me. There is no longer a universe or a world. There is no longer a question of liberation. There is no longer a question. For there is no one left to ask a question. There is no one left to have an experience. There is no one left to see the world. There is no one left to have a problem. You become an embodiment of total joy. You actually do not become an embodiment of total joy because you never existed. Total joy just is. It isn't this and it isn't that. It just is.

So you see, there is really nothing you have to do, there is nothing you need, there is no place you have to go, there is no special book you have to read, there is no special teacher you have to see, this is between you and yourself. The more you become enthused about the world and its conditions the more bound you become. Let go of everything. If it's difficult for you to practice self-inquiry, surrender everything to your infinite Self.

In other words, let go of the responsibility. Give the responsibility to God. Who is none other than your own consciousness.

Do not think you're so important that you have to overcome a problem. That is all you're doing when you think you have a problem to overcome. It makes you feel important. I've got to solve this problem, I've got to overcome this situation. As if I am somebody important. I doesn't exist. If I doesn't exist neither does your problem.

You know by now that your problem exists because you believe in your I. When you realize I does not exist everything disappears. This is what I mean when I tell you sometimes, there are no problems, there never were any problems and there never will be any problems. But as soon as you begin to think there are problems.

Even while you're sitting here listening to me, if you allow your mind to think doesn't a problem come up in your life that you're thinking about, that you think is so important at the present time? But if you were spontaneous and live in the eternal present, the eternal now, forget about the past, don't worry about the future but live in this particular second, in this second there are no problems. If you can only stay in this split second, noone is hungry, noone is ill, noone is in need, noone is suffering.

As you begin to stay in that split second, this split second expands into a minute, into two minutes, into ten minutes and as you abide in it, it turns into eternity. You are always in that split second where nothing is happening. Where no thing is taking place. That split second is bliss, pure intelligence, absolute reality and you are that.

So again, it begins when you get up in the morning. You observe the I. You watch yourself thinking I got up, I just woke up. But now here's the catch, do not allow the I to go any further. As soon as you watch yourself saying, "I just woke up." Try to catch yourself and ask yourself the question, "Who is the I that just woke up?" For in that split second prior to awakening you were in bliss, no thoughts. But as soon as you begin to think of the I, the world comes into play. In that split second before I came along you were awake. Yet there was no world, there were no people, there was no universe, there were no problems. In that split second. But as soon as you began to think of I your troubles began. Because you're thinking about the day, I'm hungry, I have to take a shower. I have to get dressed and I begins to do its mischief.

That is why it's very important to observe the I coming out. If you can really observe it you will see that the I is coming out of your spiritual heart on the right side of your chest. But a funny thing will happen. As you observe it, it will go back, isn't that interesting? As you observe the I or as you question it, "Where did the I come from?" It will stop. It will stop its procedure, it will stop its journey to the brain where you become body conscious. All these things happen in a split second. So you have to be aware, you have to be alert, you have to watch for it. I admit it takes some effort in the beginning but it's well worth it. Think about this again.

Just before you awaken to the I, you are already awake in that split second. In that split second there is no world but you are awake, you are conscious, you're totally happy, you're totally self-realized in that split second. But then the I begins its journey from the heart to the brain. Now if you can observe the I and question its authority, it will lose its momentum and slow down. And begin to return to the heart.

If you can get it to return to the heart, you will be conscious but you will be liberated. You will go about your business like you always do. You will take your shower, you will eat your breakfast, it will all happen spontaneously. There will be no thoughts. The only experience you will have is total bliss. Total happiness, total joy and yet your body will go about it's business. It can happen all at once or it can take time. But it's worth the effort isn't it? Even if it takes you a lifetime, at least you will be free at that time.

What is more important than this? Can anything be more important than this? This guarantees that you do not return to this earth. It guarantees that while you are alive in your body, so-to-speak, you will be a jivan-mukta, self-realized in the body. This is your only salvation. But you've got to do it.

These teachings used to be handed out by the Rishis from mouth to mouth to explain it. It is most difficult to comprehend the books. Even though some of them are very clear...

(tape break then Robert continues)

...something within that knows what to do to make it happen. But if you try to understand with your brain, with your head, you will forget. And when tomorrow morning comes you will get up and your I will take over immediately. You will say I'm late for work, I'm in a hurry, I'm this and I'm that and you will forget everything we're talking about this evening. But if you are listening with your heart, when tomorrow morning comes you will spontaneously be able to catch yourself.

I will repeat again how to do this. When you first open your eyes, in that split second you are conscious. The I has not risen yet, but remember it's all happening in a second. So you've got to be aware, you've got to be awake, intelligent. Watch and you will notice that the I begins very faintly and becomes stronger. You can shout out, "Who are you?" That's the same as saying, "Who am I?" Who gave you permission to awaken? Observe, watch. The I will begin to lose momentum. The I will become weaker and weaker. The way it usually happens with people, with most people, is they're able to catch it for maybe a few seconds and then the I will take over completely.

Do not be disappointed, that is the worst thing you can do. It has taken most people years, centuries perhaps to go all the way. Be happy with what you've got. But as you begin to do this practice diligently, everyday, that split second where you observe the I, will expand into a full second, into two-seconds, into three-seconds. In other words for those three-seconds you will be self-realized to an extent. You will be conscious, period.

You will not be conscious of this or that, you will be conscious. And you will feel something you never felt before, a joy. You will know you're on the right track. Then when the I takes over completely you can get up and go about your business and ask yourself, "Who am I? What is the source of the I?" During the day as the thoughts come to you, be receptive, be alert, question, "To whom do these thoughts come?" They come to me, "Who's me? Who am I? What is the source of the I?" Practice that all day. The next morning you do the same thing.

If you do this my friends I can assure you, things will begin to happen to you that you never dreamed possible. May you all experience bliss and your true Self.

Questions? Comments? Statements? Complaints?

SL: Can you achieve basically the same state as you're falling asleep as when you're waking up, which is...?

R: If you catch yourself before you fall asleep... (SL: So you sort of can?) You will watch the I going back into the heart. When you wake up the I comes out, when you to sleep the I subsides. Yes, you can do this, the only problem is, you'll fall asleep. (SL: I'm going to wake up in the morning to try it.) When you wake up in the morning it will help because if you follow it during the night, before you fall asleep the searching will continue as you awaken. In other words it will be easier for you. If you're watching a TV movie before you go to sleep this will be on your mind as you fall asleep and as you wake up you will be in a state of stupor and you will not be able to catch the I. But if you look for the I as you fall asleep and you watch it entering your heart, this by the way is good for insomnia for you will find you will fall asleep much faster as you watch the I subsiding into your heart. When you wake up it will be that much easier to continue watching the I arise. So yes it's a very good practice as you go to sleep.

Instead of thinking about your boyfriend or your love affair or the food that you just ate or anything else. If you simply observe the I. The way you do that as you're talking to yourself and you're thinking, "I'm tired," observe the I as tired, "I'm sleepy," the I is sleepy, "I can't sleep," the I can't sleep. Just be aware what the I is doing. That is all you have to do and then as you continue to fall asleep, in that split second prior to falling asleep the I will disappear into the heart and again in that split second you will be self-realized, but then you will be asleep.

SL: Robert is it your influence that has made all of us so calm that we're ready to go to sleep? (laughs) (R: Whatever.)

SG: What did you think of Joel Goldsmith?

R: I think he's a great soul. I enjoyed him very much. Are you familiar with him? (SG: Yeah. I like his books.) Joel Goldsmith was my first teacher I ever had. He was the one who encouraged me to go see Yogananda and Yogananda sent me to India. Everybody sends me away. (students laugh) I wonder what that means?

SH: And where did Ramana Maharshi send you?

R: He sent me into my Self. (SH: That is not away, that is home?) That's right.

SC: This entity that's watching itself go to sleep or is telling itself, you make it sound like it's a separation between watching myself going to sleep, telling myself I'm going to sleep. Is it the same I doing all this?

R: It is the same I yes, but you have not experienced that situation. So since you have not experienced the real I you have to use your mind to catch your mind. The mind is doing all these things. You're using your mind to destroy itself and that is the procedure you use. Of course in reality there is only the Self. In reality everything I said tonight is nonsense, because none of it really exists. There is only consciousness, absolute reality, the Self. But those are only words if we've not experienced it. So there has to be a procedure for the ajnani to use to become awakened and that is the procedure.

SY: And how do you accomplish it during the day, when you're working and living during the day?

R: You keep asking yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come?" Every time thoughts come into your mind whatever you think about, good or bad or indifferent. You keep inquiring, "To whom do they come?" It makes no difference how many times you have to do this. You simply keep inquiring. And you will notice as the days go by the inquiry comes less and less due to the fact the space in between thoughts becomes greater and greater. In other words you are thinking less and less. (SY: Does that hinder the everyday worker-world.) No, on the contrary, it makes the everyday worker-world better. For the universal presence takes over and causes your work to be more proficient. When you have to think as an ego about your work the ego has to learn about the work and the ego is very limited. But the universal from whence the work comes from anyway knows how to take care of itself. And will take better care of your work than you can do as an ego. Have no concern about this, you will find it's true as you continue to practice.

SD: Robert have you not also said that in place of self-inquiry we can simply be the witness?

R: Yes, witnessing leads to self-inquiry. If you can just watch yourself. Watch the I at work, watch the I at play, watch yourself thinking, become the witness, the observer. Finally the time will come when you have to ask the question, "Who is it that watches? Who is the observer?" And that has to go also.

SG: It seems like this watching the I when you go to sleep has a way to tend to be a good way to die too wouldn't it?

R: Well if you haven't practiced prior to dying... (laughter) ...when it comes time to die you will be in fear and you won't be able to practice at that time. (SG: You should try to do it before hand trying out...) Of course try it out. (students laugh) Exactly. If you do it enough, you will realize nobody dies and that thought will be gone from your mind about dying. But if you wait for the last moment to start practicing it will never happen.

SK: In a way it's kind of funny because we're trying to get back into a state we never left and away from something that doesn't exist.

R: Exactly. (laughter) (SK: It really has its comic aspect.) (laughter) It really does but why don't you awaken now! And stop playing those games? Wake up! (pause) You refuse to wake up. If you will only wake up now everything else will become redundant.

SH: Why do we refuse to wake up?

R: Because you insist on playing karmic games. (SH: Pretending you are what you aren't?) You want to play hide and seek. You want to hide your Self and think you have to go find it. (SH: It's sort of stupid?) Of course. So awaken and stop being stupid. (SH: Thank you I will.) (students laugh)

SR: Robert, the Self, the ultimate, created this game of hide and seek though too, it or whatever it was had something in mind. It must have served some purpose otherwise it wouldn't be?

R: On the contrary, the Self is self-contained absolute reality. It never did anything. It only knows itself. What appears to be happening is a mirage. None of this is really happening. (SD: And who sees the mirage?) Whoever wants to see it. (SR: Where is the essence of the mirage and what's its foundation?) What is the foundation of the water in the mirage? When you see water in the desert what is its foundation? It doesn't have any. It never existed. But once you realize it's a mirage you will never be fooled again. For every time you pass it you will laugh you will say that doesn't exist. It's a lie. And so it is that this livingness is a lie. No thing exists as it appears. (SR: It must serve some purpose because there is so many I's experiencing it?) It serves no purpose. There is no purpose for existence.

SY: Then why are we? (R: You're not.)

SR: Why aren't we? (students laugh) (SY: Why is it so hard for us to understand it all?)

R: For whom is it hard? You're making it hard by believing you do not understand. But in reality you are already free. The best course of action to take of course is to be quiet. In the silence your freedom is revealed. But as you get attached to the world all kinds of questions arise and there is no end to it.

For instance, when you get involved in the world you say, "Why is a dog a dog? Why is a cat a cat? Why is a tree a tree? Why is there a sky? Where is there grass? Why are there people? Why are there cockroaches?" It never ends. It's like what came first the tree or the seed? There is no answer because it doesn't exist, it's like a dream. The dream doesn't start with creation. It just begins. And then you wake up and the dream is over and so it is with this. When the bubble burst and you awaken you'll be free.

SH: All a big put on, a big hoax?

R: Of course. (SH: Make believe?) It's all make believe, it's all hypnosis. (SH: As if?) Mesmerism. (SR: That's deep, deep conditioning here.)

R: Well don't agree with that too much because if you think you've got deep, deep conditioning, then you will think you've got something to overcome that is hard. And will take you that much longer. Focus the attention on I and do not think how deep the conditioning is. For in reality there is no conditioning at all.

SG: Robert it seems just to be the result of thinking and... (R: Of course.) ...and obviously like the question — it seems that at one time I used to believe that my thinking ran the organism. Now it seems that what the thinking does is it just makes predictions all the time. Like I predict I'll scratch myself and that is fairly close, the prediction maybe close but the thinking is not running it, it's just sort of making predictions?

R: Yes that's true. Scratching yourself is karmic it's preordained. (SG: And I think I'm going to scratch myself because that is relatively close, not past my nose it may be true but thinking what is going to happen an hour from now, I don't know, but that's just another projection?) Yes.

SJ: That's creative thinking.

R: That's creative thinking? (SJ: Yes.) Get rid of it. (laughter)

SK: Sounds like, coming from here, peace on earth sounds next to impossible?

R: You've got it!

SR: Do you suppose that this illusion will just sort of evaporate on its own someday, some time, some period?

R: There is no illusion that has to evaporate. It appears like that to you but it doesn't exist. When you awaken you will realize that there never was an illusion. Noone is asleep and noone is suffering. (SR: Do you suppose sometime in the future the game will be called off though? That noone has to wake up or do anything?) There is no game to be called off. The game never began. If you believe a game began you would be looking for a time when it will be called off.

SH: It just plain isn't there, it does not exist, period, full stop? (R: Right.)

SR: It's just a game because we think it's a game?

R: Right, it all has to do with your thinking. (SR: Because we only exist because we think we exist.) Yes.

ST: So do we have to give up our awareness of the world?

R: You don't have to give up anything. Everything will take place on its own. You merely have to follow the I and see where it came from. (ST: Then does awareness of the world continue without being aware?) There is noone left to be aware of the world. Yet your body will continue to function as long as it has to. (ST: Does one observe the world?) There is noone left to observe. (ST: Is there a conscious awareness of the world?) There is noone who is conscious to be aware. All these things are the ego that you are referring to. (ST: So one walks around the dark but everything is taken care of?) You do not walk around in the dark, you walk around in the light. (ST: Without seeing?) You see but not what you think you see. It's like the example I always give of the screen. There are images on the screen when you show a movie. When you become awakened you become like the screen. All the images are taking place on the screen. There is a beginning, there is a middle, there is an end. And noone is aware of the screen because they're watching the movie. They're identifying with the images. When the movie is over, only the screen is left. In the same instance, as you awaken the universe is a superimposition on the Self. In other words you become aware that the whole universe is an image on yourself. You therefore see what everybody else sees except you're aware of the reality.

SH: But you are still aware of the image also?

R: The image is there but it's like an image in the reflection. You see the reflection but you are the mirror. So you see the world but as an imposition on yourself.

SJ: Sat-chit-ananda? (R: Same to you.) (laughter)

SG: When I ask myself, "Who these thoughts occur to?" it's sort of like a stack of a stale sense of energy somewhere behind I, it's very personal. It's sort of like a stalemate or something because I don't quite...

R: If a stalemate goes on you can do one of two things. You can become the observer of the stalemate and watch what is happening until it clears up or you can totally surrender everything to God and allow God to take care of the stalemate for you.

SR: Robert, the ultimate is like a great void, soundless, colorless, sensation-less, I suppose on rolling, I'll add possibly the feeling of bliss but it's like a giant void where there is really nothing, nothing is going on.

R: How do you know? (SR: Pardon?) How do you know? (laughter) (SR: My mind is leading me to this state where there is nothing that is familiar. There is nothing that exists so there is a void.) Ask your mind, "To whom does this come?" (SR: Well that part I know, that it's coming to the lie that I carry around.) For if you've reached the void you're talking about the inner Self, the Self will pull you in. Will pull the mind right into the heart and you will be in bliss. The void is the step before realization. (SR: I guess the ego fights very hard. That's what it feels like to me. It seems to really be put up a battle in clinging on to all the memories and dreams and aspirations, as it starts to suck in toward that point.) That may happen to you. It's part of the samsaras, the hidden tendencies, the latent tendencies that have come with you from past lives perhaps. But as you become aware intelligently that none of that exists and that there is nothing to fight and nothing to fear and you just observe in a happy way what's going on in your mind, your mind will become weaker and weaker until it gives all of that up.

SY: You said some people just move into the silence, just sitting smiling, not talking, happy. Are they in a certain state?

R: Who knows? There are a lot of people that sit and smile and they don't talk and they are idiots. (laughter)

SH: You look to see whether they are drooling or not. (laughter)

R: Don't worry about others, work on yourself and free yourself.

SG: In psychology there is this whole idea of sudden reversal. Like you see a perception, it's an old lady or it's a young lady, there is a sudden reversal that the brain seems to do. It seems that enlightenment is the same sort of thing, where there is a reversal but it seems real and becomes unreal and what is unreal become real. Seems like there is a sort of a sudden process, sudden rever- sal that occurs. Is that...? (R: To an extent you can say that.) If that's true then it doesn't seem like a whole lot that you can do about it, I mean you can prepare yourself but either there is going to be the sudden reversal or there is not?

R: Do not try to figure it out. Do not analyze it. Whether it is a reversal or not reversal everything has to go. The idea of a reversal has to go. All of your ideas, all of your concepts they've all got to go. There has to be only silence, quietness and everything will take care of itself. If you think of all these psychological terms you will become totally confused. Let go of everything.

SJ: At the same time that concept points out, what do you call that? Predetermination, predestiny. (R: Um-hm. What about it?) His comment points out predestiny in a way. (R: True.)

SG: Either there is going to be this reversal or it's not. Whether it's ready to happen, whether you're in Acapulco or sitting in a monastery it's going to happen.

SJ: It's like when something gets so bad you start laughing. Something gets so intense, it blows it away and the illusion drops or whatever length of time.

SR: When a person is self-realized a tremendous energy emanates from that source. When a person still thinks they are the mind or the body that tremendous energy is dammed up. What is there about this awareness that can release such fantastic energy and to flow out into the environment?

R: When you become awakened and you're in a body. The body becomes a focal point of the universe and all of the energy of the universe flows through that body by itself. This is what is called grace. You become like a magnet for this energy. It comes by itself. (SR: It's like the mind is like a barrier?) The mind is a barrier. (SR: It's the wall, huh?) The mind has to be transcended, annihilated.

SH: By mind you refer to thinking process, to thoughts.

R: To thoughts, yes. (SH: No thoughts, no mind.) Exactly. The mind is simply a bundle of thoughts.

Now if you have trouble with anything I was talking about you can always revert to the I-am meditation. Which we will practice right now. So make yourself comfortable. It's better to close your eyes. First you become aware of your breathing. You observe yourself breathing. You sort of practice vipassana meditation. You observe the feelings and sensations in your body and in your mind. You just watch.

(pause)

If you feel there is tension in your body, you simply observe that. By watching the tension it will go away. After your body is calm and relaxed you ask the question, "Who is the observer? Who is observing?" And the answer comes, "I am." Now with your respiration, you practice "I Am." As you inhale you say, "I," as you exhale you say, "Am."

(long silence)

(tape break then tape starts abruptly with Robert)

...our bhandara Sunday until about 5 or 6. The occasion is Ramana Maharshis' Maha-Samadhi which was last month, so we're a little late. But we're always looking for a reason to celebrate, so we use that reason. Usually when you have a bhandara the purpose is to feed the poor. But since we can't get the poor to climb up the hill here and I don't think Henry wants the poor in the house anyway..

SH: It's up to you Robert. If you can get them up here we'll feed them.

R: We'll let it go, bring a friend if you like, who is poor in spirit. And those of you who do not come on Sunday, you're supposed to bring your favorite dish, meatless. Something you'd like to share with us. Like a cheesecake. (laughter)

SJ: Like five cheesecakes.

R: From the cheesecake factory or whatever. Anything else you would like to add to that Mary?

SM: Ah yes, I know a lot of people have helped to print these transcripts up and we figured Sunday it'd kind of nice to get to be a lot of people here. So if I could get at least five more people to get ten copies of this particular one and we will give it to the community people that will be coming.

SL: Does anyone have a copy of Robert talking about his earlier life, I've always missed that one.

SM: I don't know if we've made that one up yet?

SF: What tape is it, do you know the date?

SM: It's quite a way back, I think I have...

R: That was when Ed was doing it.

SM: Yeah. When Ed was doing it.

SL: If somebody has one if you bring it I'll copy it.

(tape ends) [TOC]

EVERYONE IS SEARCHING FOR HAPPINESS

26th May, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It's good being with you again. Welcome to the Jnana Marga society. We have a nice crowd for a Memorial Day. I guess you didn't have anywhere else to go. (laughter)

Everyone is searching for happiness. Everyone wants happiness. Even the bank robber robs a bank because he believes that the results will bring him happiness. People get married, get divorced, have children, find certain jobs, believing this will bring them happiness. We have learned, as we go through the vicissitudes of life, that these things bring partial happiness.

Everything you do in this world is subject to the law of change. The wise person begins to see this at an early age and does not pursue the things of this world, but rather begins to try to understand him or her Self. "Who am I? Why was I born? What is the purpose of life?" As one begins to dwell on these things, the inner guru, the Self, will give you a push and you will find that you go towards a spiritual path. If you're inclined by action, you will follow the Karma Yoga path. If your disposition is towards emotion, you will follow the bhakti path. If you lean towards intellectualism, you will follow the Jnani path.

The mistake most intellectuals make, when they begin to follow the Jnana Marga path, is that they believe if they study hard enough, if they read so many books, if they visit so many teachers, they will awaken. This is a grave error. Most intellectuals who follow Jnana Marga, unfortunately became very cynical, very cold, very arrogant. They stop caring. This is only in the beginning stages. They believe that they are absolute reality and they can do no wrong, and of course they fall flat on their face soon, and they develop humility.

If they keep on searching, if they are sincere in their heart, again the inner guru, the Self, will push them towards an outer guru. The outer guru may be a tree, a bird, a river, a mountain, or a person, but the true devotee does not care which one comes, as long as something comes. A true devotee surrenders completely to the will of God and turns within for peace, for happiness. A true devotee begins to understand that there's only one life, one presence, one Self, and I am that. When I refer to I am, I'm not speaking of Robert. I'm speaking of absolute reality, of consciousness, of sat-chit-ananda.

Sat-chit-ananda is our true knowledge, our true being, our real Self. We believe we're human, we go through life with problems. Some of us have material happiness, believing that's enough. But, as we find out soon enough, there comes death in the family, sickness, lack. These things pass, and then, when you believe all is well, something happens again and you keep searching. You keep inquiring.

If you are sincere in your quest, you will find that all of a sudden happiness, bliss, joy, begin to become your friends. You put all your trust in the universal. You no longer look to the world for your good, for you begin to understand that the happiness you've been looking for, you already are, and the quest really begins. The yogas, prayers, meditations, are a way to come to reality, but the way to understand the Self is through self-inquiry, through atma-vichara.

If you're fortunate, you start from the top in your spiritual quest. You start from the top by realizing there's only that which has always been. There is only pure intelligence, absolute awareness. All the things I see, everything I behold, is the Self.

Something tells you that the whole universe is an emanation of your own mind. When you sleep, the world disappears. When you dream, this world disappears. When you awaken, you are in this world, but the dream state and the deep sleep state have disappeared. You begin to wonder about this, and you say to yourself, "I slept, I dreamt, now I am awake." Yet it is interesting to note that I was always present. I was present when you slept, when you dreamt, and now you're awake. Who is this I and where did it come from? Who is the witness called I?

As you begin to search for the truth of this, if you have been sincere in your quest, you will be led to a Master, a Sage, who will explain to you that the personal self is only a thought or an idea. It is called the I-thought. It is not real. It's a thought. Where does it reside? In the spiritual heart center on the right side of your chest.

This is called the spiritual heart. It has nothing to do with your physical heart, it has nothing to do with your chakras. This is the abode of the Self, of consciousness, of reality. The I-thought appears to come out of reality and goes to the brain. Once it identifies with the brain you begin to say, "I am." "I am this," and "I am that." When you form the I am, the world, the universe, becomes real. It has come out of you. Everything, the whole universe has come out of your mind. You have created it, and it appears real.

Therefore the Sage explains to you, the job you have is to trace the I-thought back to the heart. When the I-thought goes back into the heart center you will become liberated. By liberation, it means you will see yourself as consciousness, and the whole world as a superimposition on your Self. You then begin to understand that human happiness ensues because the mind or the I-thought goes outward, creating all of the illusions of the world. Everything in the world is transient, subject to the law of change. Therefore it cannot be real. What is real must be permanent, and that resides within you.

So you search for a method in order to trace the I back to its source. And the method given to you is to hold on to the I, to abide in the I, to trace it back into the spiritual heart. The way you do this is you inquire, "Who am I? To whom has the I come? What is the source of I?" When thoughts come into your mind, you simply inquire, "To whom has these thoughts come? Who's doing the thinking? I am. Well, who am I?"

Automatically, as you keep practicing this process, you will find that things in this world become blissful, for you're beginning to see through the illusion, you're beginning to see through reality. You're beginning to know that I am is really consciousness, self-contained absolute reality.

Months go by, perhaps years go by. You do not look for results. You carry on with the practice. You do not react to conditions. Your humanhood begins to melt. You continue to identify with the Self under all circumstances. The day will come when you are no longer a personality. You have become that which you've been seeking, and life becomes simple for you. You no longer struggle or fight for survival. All fear has left you. You have discovered you are not the body or the mind, and you are not the doer. This has all been surrendered to the Self. You have become free, no longer in bondage, absolute bliss. You understand all is well, and everything is unfolding as it should. You were never born. There will never be a time when you die. You have risen. There is no longer anything you need to possess, there is no longer anything you need to own, yet you partake of all the good things of this world. You become satisfied, happy.

You cannot explain this, you cannot share it, but those who come into your presence feel the grace which is always available. Yet you do nothing. There is no one left to do anything. The I has been completely transcended. There is no individuality. There is perfect peace, always, unalloyed happiness, always the same, eternal, without modification. Awaken to your Self.

What do you spend most of your time doing? You become what you do. If you spend your time inquiring, "Who am I? From whence does the I come?" you will one day awaken. If you spend your time relating to the world, reacting to conditions, having a mind filled with fears, superstitions, prejudices, nonsense, you will go on like this until you get old and drop your body, and you will be under the illusion of karma and reincarnation. You will appear to take on body, after body, after body, until you give up the belief that you are the body. Become free now. Do not resist.

(silence)

Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om. Peace. Peace.

If you have any questions at this time you'd like to discuss or ask, or statements you wish to make, feel free to do so.

SZ: Sir, I'm a new comer here and I must ask you, are you speaking in metaphors? That I am to go to pick up because you make life sound like such a burden. And I look out this window at this beautiful illusion and I think that, that satisfies me. I need nothing more at this time this place. I envision myself riding over those hills on my horse or taking a swim, well aware that everything we see is a pattern of imagery or particles in constant change. These trees are growing and decaying, growing and decaying, the waters flowing. Why should we look beyond that?

R: That's a very good question. As you look at the trees, as you swim in the ocean, as you ride your horse, that is all well and good. But what if the horse trips and you break your legs? (SZ: That's happened.) What if you walk down the hill and stumble and hit your head on a rock? And you go blind? Is that all there is? Is that it? When you look at the leaves when you look at the flowers, they last for a time and they die, just like the human body does. Therefore for every enjoyment there is an equal and opposite reaction. The way of this world is duality. If you experience one you have to experience the other. We seem to be happy at a time because things are going our way. We're so called enjoying life as it appears. But then there is a war, or there is a death. Where something comes along and spoils the enjoyment. We then become disillusioned. For the thinking person the question arises there must be something else. This beauty that changes cannot be all that there is. And we start to search within ourselves for that is where the answer lies. If we are sincere we begin to understand that there is a substratum of existence which is bliss and which makes this appearance of beauty seem like kindergarten.

The Rishis of old have told us this. Great Sages have taught this. Do not go after the beauty of the world for that only lasts for so long. Find the beauty within yourself. Find the truth within yourself that is forever. The real beauty within yourself does not stop at death of the body. It's a continuum, it's forever. When you awaken you see the world as a superimposition on yourself that comes and goes.

Think of yourself as a chalkboard and someone is drawing all sorts of scenes on the chalkboard. Happy scenes, then they're erased. Unhappy scenes, and they're erased. And this continues over and over again. But what happens to the chalkboard? Nothing, it remains forever the same. So it is with the Self. The Self is absolute consciousness. Pure awareness. Nirvana. Absolute reality. You are that, it is you. There is no coming and going, there is no change. If you touch a semblance of this in your heart you will feel such joy that you will search forever for the truth of your being and then you will truly find happiness.

SU: The bliss that you have as an experience you have in the body, the body is no different from anything else, I think we're picking on it. (R: (Robert laughs))

SY: Please may you repeat the question?

R: She said she thinks we're picking on the body. The bodies like everything else. Which is quite true, the body is like everything else, it's transient, it's impermanent, it becomes old, you drop it and that is the end of that. So there must be something else for the thinking person. Umm?

SU: It does not keep you from awakening. It's not the fault of the body we don't awaken?

R: Only if you identify with the body and you believe your body is the permanent Self. That keeps you from awakening because you have chosen to believe that something that is transient, something that is never the same is reality. But how can anything that changes be reality? You are not the same person you were forty years ago. When you were born you were no larger than the size of a pinhead. When you were first conceived. And then you turned into a little girl and a young lady and you got married and you had children and you've gone through all kinds of experiences. Changing, changing, changing, never the same, how can this be real?

It stands to reason that that which is real must be eternal, permanent. So the body can never be your reality. Use your body for what it came here to do. You have your body in order to find yourself. To discover who you are. If you were a tree or an animal you would not be able to do this. But because you have a mind and a body or so it appears, you're able to discover your true nature. So use your precious time to awaken. To realize the truth about yourself.

SS: What becomes of that inner core that you speak of? The real part of your being.

R: Nothing. It doesn't become anything because it never was anything. (SS: Well it must be something?) It is not something. In our finite thinking we believe that everything must be something. That is our ego that tells us this. (SS: How do we grasp it?) By turning within yourself, by diving deep, deep within your heart. By inquiring, "Who am I?" By looking at your thought patterns and questioning, "To whom do these come?" Every time you have a thought, you ask, "To whom does this come?" It comes to me. "Who am I? Who is this me?" And as you question, "Who am I?" The space between the question will begin to grow and you will begin to experience moments of bliss, of total joy, total freedom, and they will go away. But once you experience, unless that touches you, that total bliss you will never go back to your humanity again. For you will want to taste this forever. (SS: Is that Self separate from yourself or herself?) No, it is your Self. What appears to be yourself is called maya. It's an illusion, it's a thought, it's an idea. It's like the water in a mirage. When you see the water in a mirage it appears real. When you run over and try to grab it, you grab a handful of sand. But yet it appears real when you look at it. And so it is the body appears real when we look at it. But in reality it doesn't exist. It never existed and neither does the world. It's like a dream. When you have a dream, the dream has no beginning, no middle and no end. It doesn't start from Adam and Eve. You just dream in parts and then you wake up. The difference between this life and a dream is that this life is a little longer. That is how it appears. (SS: But is it practical?) Of course it's practical? (SS: Umm?) It is, definitely. (SS: How can we at any time ignore the realities of this world we're going to get run over at an intersection.) That is not going to happen because your body will take better care of itself than you could ever want it to. When you begin to search for yourself. When you begin to try to understand yourself your body is not going to go to sleep or become dull. The same power that grows oranges on an orange tree, that grows wheat in the wheat field, will take care of you and will take care of your body.

Your work will be done better everything you do will be more efficient because you will no longer interfere with it. So you can keep your mind on God or your Self and your body will continue to do what it came here to do. Try it. You'll be surprised.

SR: Robert can I ask a theoretical question? (R: Of course.) This idea of this, no thing and it's a mirage, which I try and grasp a lot and I kept thinking, if I come over and pull your ear and it hurts is that my illusion or is it yours?

R: Imagine you're having a dream and we're sitting here like this and you say, "Robert I'm going to come over and pull your ear." (SR: I'm going to make it hurt though.) So it's a dream hurt. It hurts in the dream. (SR: But it's my dream?) You're dreaming the dream that you're coming over to pull my ear. (SR: How are you taking this?) I am part of your dream. So it hurts.

SU: But it's hurting you?

R: Of course because I'm part of the dream. (SU: It's your dream?) I am in the dream I am involved in the dream. (SU: But that's your dream if it hurts you.) No it's not my dream, he's dreaming the dream there is only one dream. (SU: It doesn't hurt?) It doesn't hurt? (SU: Yeah, It doesn't hurt his ear, it hurts yours.) Because he's pulling my ear. (SU: It doesn't hurt him it's not his dream, it's your dream.) I didn't say it hurts him. Of course it hurts me because that's part of his dream. And lets say you came over in the dream and said, "Bob your dreaming that you're pulling Robert's ear." He would say, "No I'm not." And I would also say, "No I'm not," because it hurts. So it's not a dream but then he wakes up and it's all gone. The whole thing was part of the dream.

SR: How about if I pull my ear and it hurts me. How does that — what does that mean?

R: There is no difference, it doesn't mean anything. You can be dreaming and shoot yourself in the dream, pull your ear in the dream, pulled somebody else's hair in the dream. All that is going on in the dream but then you wake up. And so it is with this. Everything here seems to be real and some of us doubt, some of us are angry, some of us want to get even, some of us want to prove something. It's all part of the mortal dream. One day you will awaken and it will all be over. (SR: Do you mind if I pull your ear?) Well no I don't mind you can pull my ear. (laughter)

SG: Robert, well now who created this dream? (R: Noone. It doesn't exist.) (laughter)

SH: Takes care of that. (laughs)

ST: Then what do we wake up to then?

R: You wake up to the Self that you are no thing. And that no thing is bliss consciousness. (ST: Then what do I need the body for and who gave me the body?) Noone gave you the body and you don't need the body. The body is an illusion it's a thought. It's an idea. It appears to be real, just like in the dream. (ST: Because of the pain feeling, feeling the pain and...) Whatever you feel, it makes no difference. You can feel happiness, you can feel pain, you can feel wonderful, you can feel anything it's all part of the dream. But when you wake up it's over. (ST: But what do you wake up to, that's what throws me off like okay, I'm dreaming right now and lets say in my dream I see this room, I see everyone here, I smell the food and I look at the candles and the pictures in my dream. And then I wake up, what do I wake up to?) You wake up to bliss, to consciousness, to absolute reality. The finite cannot comprehend the infinite. The mind can only think so far. It is virtually impossible to explain what bliss really is. You will have to experience it through yourself. (ST: But does it come in little parts or does it come in a big chunk?) The true awakening comes all of a sudden. But prior to that there are little instigations. There are little realities that you begin to feel. That you know that there is something more vast and more beautiful then you could ever imagine. (ST: And then will it stay with you or will it leave you?) The real Self, the real bliss has always been

you. Therefore once you experience it, the you is gone and you have become reality. That is permanent. Once the I, the me, the you has been transcended there is no coming back you are free forever. (ST: With a body you can be free?) You no longer look at your body as a body. The body is simply a part of the superimposition that is on the Self. It is like the world. You still see the world, but you're like a mirror and everything is a reflection. If you try to grab the reflection you grab the mirror. But you are the mirror, so you are the Self and you cannot be grabbed you are totally free, pure awareness and your troubles are over.

SU: How do we know the bliss isn't part of the dream, what's the difference? I mean the rest of it is okay too.

R: The difference is, when you awaken from your dream, you realize that the dream is over. In the same instance when you awaken to yourself... (SU: You could still be dreaming?) No, you know you're the Self. When you awaken to your dream are you still dreaming? (SU: Yes I've awakened in my dream and I'm still dreaming.) When you woke up this morning and you had a dream last night, you weren't still dreaming. (SU: No but I have had dreams where I awake in the dream but I did not awake.) Yes of course. But then when you woke up in the morning you were aware of your dream. (SU: Yeah how do we know that's not another dream?) When you awaken to your Self there will only be the Self. There will no longer be dreams or a dreamer to have a dream. (SU: We don't know that, you're just telling us that.) Then experience it for yourself. (SU: So until we do we're just taking your word for it.) Don't take my word for it. I never told you to take my word for it. I usually tell you as you know in the beginning, "Do not believe a word I say." Why should you? Have your own experience. Find out for yourself. (SU: I don't know it?) Find out, practice. (SU: I do but I still don't know for sure.) One day you will, never give up.

SY: If spirit never sleeps what is it that wakes up?

R: If spirit never sleeps what is it that wakes up? (SY: Um-hm. What is it that wakes up?) Nothing really wakes up because in reality nothing was ever asleep. We use these terms as a metaphor, sleeping, waking up. You are that Self that has always been and will always be and will never disappear. That is your reality. You never were asleep therefore you don't have to wake up.

SB: Isn't it the I-thought that wakes up, Robert in the morning?

R: The I-thought doesn't wake up, the I-thought disappears. (SB: No I mean in the morning?) Oh when you wake up in the morning the I wakes up, the I comes out of your chest, your spiritual heart and begins to become the world your mind and the universe. (SB: So it's the mind that wakes up, the memory wakes up.) The I-thought appears to wake up... (SB: Yeah.) ...and that causes the world.

Do we have any announcements Ed?

(Announcements about format of bhandara (memorial day))

SB: Robert when we ask, "Who am I?" And we stay silent we don't try to answer it. (R: Yes.) Well what ensues then. Do you try to completely release everything into the silence, completely release our attention?

R: When you ask, "Who am I?" And you answer it, it is the ego answering. So in order to destroy the ego, you pose the question, and you wait, you pose the question, and you wait over and over again. You ask, "Who am I?" (SB: What if there is no thoughts to inquire of?) Then you keep still, you observe, you watch. The I will one day disappear. And when that happens, your true Self will shine forth abundantly. (SB: Do we try to release our attention from the brain?) No. (SB: Just completely let go and relax? Because I know from when I am silent that my attention instead of being focussed kinds of falls down into the heart area.) It happens by itself. (SB: Yeah.) If you try you'll keep it back. (SB: Yeah, just relax completely so there is no focus of attention at all.) Yes. You let go and then it happens. (SB: Then there is a sort of a pressure on the right side.) Yes. That's good... (SB: That's correct?) ...that's correct.

(announcements for satsangees about photos of Robert to buy then questions continue)

SB: Robert what happens after that. After you let go and there is pressure on the right side. What do you do after that?

R: The inner Self is pulling your mind toward annihilation. And once your mind is annihilated you are your Self. So you simply observe, you watch and you do not react. If any thoughts come you ask, "To whom do they come?" And then you go back to, "Who am I?" And you let nature take its course. (SB: So the whole inquiry then is just to help you stop identifying with the I-thought and start identifying with this silence?) The whole inquiry is to destroy the mind. To destroy the I and the ego which are all the same. And as you continue to inquire the ego and the mind become smaller and smaller. Until they become completely annihilated. You're doing well, keep it up.

SU: Did you say there — did I understand you — there is no dream to wake up from?

R: There is no dream to wake up from because you never dreamt. (SU: That means it's all okay, huh?) Everything is okay just the way it is.

SH: Not only just the way it is but however it may go, with no exception. (R: Exactly.) It's still okay, there isn't anything except okay. (R: Right.) That's far out. (R: That's the way it is.)

SJ: People, come on up... (calling for people to eat)

(tape ends with chanting in the background)

[TOC]

Transcript 65

WHAT IS, IS GOD

30th May, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It's good to be with you again.

SH: You always say that. (students laugh)

R: It's true. (laughter)

A devotee of Ramana Maharshi, who had been with him about twenty-five years, had a son that died, and he was grief-stricken. So he begged to have an audience with Ramana. Now Ramana rests from twelve to two. He agreed to see his devotee. When the devotee entered the hall, Ramana was reclining on his couch with his eyes closed, and he started to cry and tell him all his troubles, how much he loved his son. And then he asked Ramana, "What is God?" Ramana didn't answer. He kept still for about fifteen minutes. Then he opened his eyes and he said very softly, "What is, is God." We'll talk about that tonight.

What is, is God. It's like when someone asks the question, "Is the world real?" The world, by itself, is an illusion, but God, as the world, is real. As we progress we find there never was a God, so there never was a world. But for the sake of talking, because God is, the universe is. Everything, from the lowliest microbe to the fullest galaxy, is God in expression. Everything is God. Every leaf, every piece of clay, every star, every planet has no basis for its existence, by itself. Because God is, everything else is.

That's what Ramana meant when he answered, "What is, is God." He was trying to explain to the devotee, "Your son dying, that is God. Your son living, that is God. There's no real difference. Only in your mind."

We differentiate only in the mind. If the mind were made quiescent, quiet, there would be no differentiation between death and life. We make the differentiation because we think. It's a mental concept that someone dies, and that's bad, but someone lives and that's good. There's no such differentiation. There is only God, and everything that exists, everything, is God. There can be nothing apart from God. But then I say that God doesn't exist, except in your mind. That is the reason that, in reality, no thing exists. Do you follow that?

As long as you think, there will be existence, person, place and thing, but when you stop thinking there's no room for existence, because there cannot be the silence and existence. Everything that appears to be opposes the silence. The silence is consciousness, absolute reality, sat-chit-ananda.

The Self exists as itself, yet when you begin to modify it you say, "Well, God exists." God is the first modification of consciousness, and it's God's job to create the world, and then to dissolve the world, and then to create the world. Who gave God that job? Henry? Henry didn't do it. Who did? Why would God want to create worlds, universes, and then dissolve them, and after a period of time bring them back into existence?

Yet this is what we read about in all the scriptures. This information is for the ajnani, for the man steeped in ignorance. You have to explain to this man how the world became existent, or he will not be satisfied. You therefore go into all the modifications. There is the Self and the Self is consciousness. Consciousness modifies itself, and you have God. God modifies itself, and you have existence.

Ramana realized that if he explained this to the devotee, the devotee wouldn't understand. If he told the devotee that only the Self exists, and your son didn't die because he was never born, it would be too much for the devotee to comprehend. Therefore, instead, he said, "God is. What is, is God." It made the devotee feel better, for he realized that his son was in God's hands, and all is well.

But yet, if we have a questioning mind, we question, "Where did God come from?" and "Why does God appear as all these things? What is its purpose?" Most of us know there is no purpose. No thing exists the way it appears. Your real nature is pure awareness. Pure awareness is the universal. There is no place for anything else. In other words, you cannot have existence as it appears and pure awareness. Otherwise you would have diversification, as the appearance shows you. There's a beautiful tree, there's a sky, there are flowers, there are animals, there are insects. If pure awareness, or the Self, is self-contained, how can there be anything else? Where would the room come from?

It's just like space. When you have a room filled with furniture, what happens to the space it takes up? And then you take the furniture out of the room. Has the space changed? Nothing has happened to the space. The space is the same whether the room is filled with furniture, or not. And so it is with reality. Reality exists. The Self exists as the Self. But it appears as if there are things in the universe, as if there is a universe. There are people, there are animals, there are planets, there's the vegetable kingdom, the mineral kingdom. All this appears as real. You therefore have to ask the question, "To whom does this appear? Who sees this?" You know by now it's the I. The I is the culprit. If it weren't for the I there would be no universe, there would be no God, there would be no creation.

So Ramana couldn't tell this to the devotee, because the devotee wouldn't understand. He therefore said, "What is, is God." The world appears to exist. The world, by itself, could never exist. So the next step is to say that God exists as the world.

But I say to you there is no God, and there's no world, and nothing is as it appears. The appearance is called false imagination. And whose fault is it? The I, blame the I. Whenever you make a mistake, say it's the I's fault, because there are no mistakes. It sounds funny because it's true. If you did not identify with I, no thing would exist. Things only exist because you identify with your I.

Now the grand secret is to follow the I back to its source. If you really follow the I back to its source there is no God. Where would God come from? Even as I talk about the word God, some of you are still thinking of a figure up in the sky, an anthropomorphic type of deity. Who created him? It's the same old question. If God created the universe, who created the God? There is no verbal answer, for it goes beyond thought. You'll know the truth about this question when you quiet your mind. When the mind is no longer in existence the answer will reveal itself, for you will be the answer. Otherwise there's no answer. But I can assure you there's no such thing as God, there's no such thing as creation, and there's no such thing as the universe. So there's no such thing as the world. And there's no such thing as you. There's no such thing as I. What is left? Silence!

(long silence)

Robert continues: I realize that many of you are bhaktas, and I'm taking away your enjoyment. I'm taking away your God that you worship, be it in the form of Buddha, Krishna, Jesus, Moses, whomever you like to worship. But I speak at many levels. As far as a Jnani is concerned it's virtually impossible for a God to exist, separate from yourself. But yet, such people as Nisargadatta Maharaj, Bhagvan Ramana Maharshi, and many other Jnanis did bhakti. Ramana used to pray to Shiva in the form of Arunachala. Nisargadatta also prayed to Shiva. So the question is, why did they do that? And the answer is, for the sake of others.

To get to the stage where God does not exist for you any longer is a very high transcendental stage. I do not expect you bhaktas to give up your worship. As you know, on Sunday we have puja and we have chanting. To whom are we chanting? To Hari, to Ram, to Krishna.

I must again tell you as long as you believe you are the doer, that you are the body and the mind do not fool yourself into thinking you're not, for if you weren't you wouldn't react the way you react to situations. So as long as you believe that things are real, then you have to pray to God, because God does exist for you. You can call God the law of karma. In reality karma does not exist. Yet how many of us have such reality? Therefore the best thing for you to do is to practice the Jnana practices, but keep doing your puja. Do not give it up. If you're doing japa, whatever practice you have, keep it up.

But practice self-inquiry, and as you practice self-inquiry you will notice something very interesting happening to you. You will notice that little by little you begin to give up your worship, slowly but surely, until the day comes when you become the object of your worship. If you've been worshipping Krishna, you will see yourself as Krishna, and so forth. If you try to act like a Jnani before your time, you will have a lot of problems, for you will develop, "I don't give a damn" attitude, and that's not what we're talking about.

I'll give you an idea of how a Jnani acts. There was once a Jnani who lived in a little shack on the mountain by himself. He was radiantly happy. He was coming back from his walk, and he saw some thieves breaking into his house. He crept up by the window to see what they would take, and of course he owned nothing. There was just a torn blanket on the floor. So the thieves started to curse, and one said to the other, "This guy has nothing here. Let's just take the blanket and leave." So they took the blanket.

The next day he intuitively perceived that the two robbers were caught by the police, so he hurried down to the police station to see what would happen. And when the sergeant saw him he said, "Come in. Are these the men who stole from you?" And he said, "Yes." So the policeman asked him, "What did they take?" and he said, "They took my hat, and my shirt, and my pants, and my shoes." And the two thieves started screaming, "What a liar this man is. He didn't have anything. He just had a torn blanket." And the sergeant said, "Is this true?" The Jnani said, "When I put the blanket on my head it becomes my hat. When I put it around my shoulders it becomes my shirt. When I tie it around my waist it becomes my pants. And when I walk on it, it becomes my shoes." Of course the sergeant laughed and he said, "Shall I press charges?" and the Jnani said, "No." The two thieves became his disciples.

The meaning of that story is, because you're a Jnani it doesn't mean you don't have compassion. A real Jnani has more love and compassion than anyone else, but it's not attached to anything, and he'll be the first one to run to somebody's aid, to help somebody. It sounds like a contradiction, but it's not. For while the Jnani carries a body, the body becomes under the Jnanis jurisdiction, and becomes an instrument for good in this world. Therefore you can never judge a Jnani, for you have no idea what a Jnani is or what he is. You can see a Jnani praying to God, just as ardently as a bhakta, yet the Jnani knows there is no God, but does it for the sake of others.

So when I tell you there is no God, and there is no universe, and there is no world, and there are no people, there's only absolute reality, do not take it too seriously. See where you're coming from. Be true to yourself. Do not fool yourself. Whatever you're into, whatever you're going through, if you sit in the silence and practice self-inquiry, things will begin to stir within you. Things will begin to happen. You will find that your feelings change, your reaction changes, you become less selfish, you develop loving kindness, you understand what this universe is all about, and you are at peace.

(long silence)

I feel what we've covered so far is very important, so let's have a discussion about this. Are there any questions or comments you'd like to make?

SD: Robert, do you think that worshipping God, or believing in God, impedes realization?

R: On the contrary, worshipping God makes you pure. It makes you pure enough so that you can follow the I back to the source, whereas, if you did not worship God, you would just know everything intellectually, and you would have a hard heart. Worshipping God softens you up, makes you mellow, kind, causes you to become one pointed, and lifts you higher. So, by all means, worshipping God is good. But what kind of God will you worship? Worshipping God in the form of a sat-guru, or in the form of a Buddha, or a Christ, whatever, is even better. (SD: Why so?) For if you worship God without form, the energy is not as strong. For what kind of a God are you worshipping? An invisible God that has no form, no shape. Therefore you have doubts. You're not too sure, and the energy you send out is not that strong. But when you worship God as form, you can give that God all of your energy or totally surrender to that particular deity. That's the purpose of worship, to finally, totally surrender your ego, your pride, your body, your affairs, your life, to that deity. And then you become that deity itself.

SG: Is it better, Robert, to focus on one form?

R: Yes, of course, for you become one pointed. It causes your mind to become one-pointed. And then your mind becomes your servant, and finally the mind disappears. It's like the sun. When the sun spreads its rays all over the place, it's not as powerful as if one ray of the sun moved to a certain place. A fire would start. That's how powerful it is. But when the sun dissipates its rays, they're not as powerful. In the same way, when you worship many deities, you dissipate your energy, and the worship is not as powerful.

SY: Even if you think of them as more or less representative of the same consciousness?

R: That's hard to do. You can't worship Buddha, and Christ, and Muhammad, and Krishna at the same time. (SY: I thought you could in the sense of them all beings the Christ consciousness.) So how will you worship them then? How will you do that? (SY: As a unit.) How can you do it? What will you think of? (SY: The underlying consciousness that they all represent.) If you can do that, that's good, that's wonderful. But I still think you'll think of each one of them, and it dissipates your energy. Whereas, if you have one, they will eventually all merge into oneness. In other words, if you worship Krishna, if you worship Krishna correctly, eventually Buddha, Christ, Shiva, everyone will become Krishna. So it's better, in the beginning, to worship one. Then the whole universe will become that one.

SD: Could you tell me something, I remember a long time ago when I first started coming to your classes, you were talking about a vision that you frequently had, in which you would encounter these entities?

R: Oh yes. I haven't had that vision in a long time. I had a vision that I was flying through the air and I went to Arunachala, the mountain. I went through the mountain, it was hollow inside. And when I landed in the middle of the mountain, there was Buddha, Krishna, Ramana, Nisargadatta, and many others that I didn't recognize. We all formed a circle. We smiled at each other and we walked toward each other, until we became one blazing light. And the light turned into a lingam. And then I opened my eyes. But I was aware that I was having a vision. And that's it. (SD: That came to you many times, right?) It used too. It's stopped now.

SJ: Did you do self-inquiry with that?

R: No. I've never done self-inquiry. (students laugh)

SH: Why do you recommend it then? (laughter) (R: Because it's the way to go.) You're a card. (laughter) (R: I'm the whole deck.)

SP: Why do you say you've never done it?

R: Why do I need to do it? (SP: Well if you studied with these people from the East, it's my understanding is that's what their teaching is.) I didn't go to them for a teaching. (SP: Why did you go?) I went to confirm my own experiences. (SP: But you said you went to Paramahansa Yogananda?) Sure, because I was a kid. I had my experiences when I was fourteen years old, and I didn't understand what was going on, so Paramahansa Yogananda explained it to me, and he sent me to India, to see Ramana, who explained it further.

SH: Ramana didn't suggest it to do self-inquiry?

R: No. (SH: Or who am I?) Never did it. (SH: You didn't need it. You were already...) Whatever. (SH: And whatever. (laughs) How did Ramana confirm your unitive experience?) With a smile. (SH: With a smile?) Umm, and most of the things we talked about were mundane. (SH: He just knew that you knew, and smiled?) I have no idea what he knew. (SH: How did you receive his smile?) (laughter) I smiled back. (SH: You smiled back, is that so?) Then for the rest of the time he inquired about my needs. (SH: Yeah.) And he wanted me to tell him about New York. (SH: Really? What did you tell him about New York?) I said, "New York, New York, it's a wonderful town." (laughter) (SH: Did that satisfy him?) Sure.

SJ: Robert, is it just insight that you can understand how direct and how powerful self-inquiry is? Is it just wisdom that... (R: I may make a joke about it, but it works.) Yeah, so it's through some kind of inner wisdom that you know. (R: Definitely.)

SL: So once again, self-inquiry is, you could breath in by saying, "Who am I," exhale by saying...

R: No, that's not self-inquiry. Self-inquiry is when you inquire, "Who am I?" (SL: And the take it to as far as...) ...the source of existence. The source of the I. (SL: Last Thursday you had us go through an exercise which you have us do periodically...) Yes. (SL: To breathe in saying, "Who am I?") Breath in saying, "I," and exhale saying, "am."

SD: I remember the one she's talking about though. You used to also teach us one where we would say, "Who am I" on the inhale, and... (R: Oh yes.) ..."I am God," or "I am that." You said it helped to become more focused.

R: Oh yes. When you inhale you say, "Who am I," between exhaling you say, "I am consciousness," and when you exhale you say, "I am not the body."

SH: I thought you weren't supposed to answer that question. Just leave it silent and open.

R: That's the other meditation. (SJ: This is just a practice.) Just a practice, yeah.

SH: To say, I am consciousness, that's just a concept. (R: That's just a practice to become one-pointed. It will bring you to the place where you don't have to practice.)

SD: But what you are talking about is not specifically self-inquiry. (R: No.) It's just to still the mind? (R: Yes it's a concept. It makes you one-pointed.) But breathing the "I am" is self-inquiry or it works the same? (R: Same thing. All meditation is a concept.)

SY: So when you breath in you say, "I," when you exhale you say, "I am?"

R: No, when you inhale you say, "I," when you exhale you say, "Am." (SY: Breath in "I," and exhale "am.") Umm. (SY: Okay. The other one is when you say "I," in between you say, "consciousness,") No the other one you inhale you say, "Who am I?" Before you exhale you say, "I am consciousness." And when you exhale you say, "I am not the body."

SD: And also just, "Who am I?" or "For whom comes the I?" Same thing huh?

R: That's higher. (SD: So the answer to her question would be, the question, "Who am I?" is self-inquiry right?) Yes. (SD: And the others are exercises.) Yes. These are all practices that make you one-pointed. And they work beautifully, if you need them.

SG: Robert, you say you went to Ramana to have the experiences confirmed? (R: Yes.) Was that experience, God knows what it's like, but conceptually it seems like it would be self-authenticating?

R: It was self-authenticated, when I was a kid, so I felt all these things, and I thought I was going crazy. So I went to find out what was going on.

SJ: Even when you're not a kid you want to understand whether you're...

R: Well if you're already grown up you can read the books... (SJ: Right I see.) ...And you can do other things. (SJ: See other teachers too?) But in my day there were no teachers except for Joel Goldsmith, and Paramahansa Yogananda... (SJ: Yeah.) ...And people like that.

SG: Was the bliss of the Self part of the experience, even though you thought maybe you were going crazy?

R: Oh yes, of course. By going crazy I mean I no longer conformed to my environment. I didn't care about school, I didn't care about my parents, I was just radiantly happy being by myself. I stopped associating with certain friends.

SH: Why would you need that confirmed? That's self-sufficient.

R: It's self-sufficient, but I didn't know what it was. (SH: Why do you have to know? Does it require some idea about it?) Because I was still in body consciousness. And the body's got to know. Inquiring minds have to know.

SP: But you know Robert, when Ramana maharshi had his realization when he was 16 years old. He didn't ask anybody about it. He just went off he knew what he had. He went to the temple... (R: No.) He went and sat at he temple as a child down below the caves and he didn't move and he stayed there for about six months.

R: That's like prior to that... (SP: And the rats were biting his body and everything and he was gone...) I understand, I understand. (SP: Nobody home.) Before that, he went into the temple and prayed to the Tamil Saints in the town where he lived.

SJ: He was very well versed in that whole situation. (SG: Yep he also had a book...)

R: He had a book. (SD: So what you were looking for was frame of reference, sort of?) Yes, because there was no one close by that I could talk to. (SD: I wonder what that was like?) And if I did what Ramana did they would put me in a psychiatric ward.

SG: That's the amazing thing that you didn't get institutionalized.

R: That's what I mean.

SJ: Maybe it would help if they could imagine what they were doing at fourteen years old. They imagine something like this happening. What next?

(Students keep discussing Ramanas experience)

R: Everyones experience is different.

SD: Yeah I was just thinking in American culture how that would be difficult and interesting, especially if I was President. (laughter)

SH: Did Yogananda send you directly to Ramana?

R: He suggested I go. (SH: To him?) To him. (SH: Had you heard of him before.) Yes. I wanted to become a monk in self-realization. Yogananda discouraged me.

SD: Also I still remember you talked about your experience in the library when you saw Ramana. (R: That happened before I went. When I was fifteen.) So it was after Yogananda? (R: No it was before Yogananda. I was fifteen years old.)

SP: Why did Yogananda discourage you from becoming a monk?

R: He told me that's not my path. (SP: Robert there is a monk over at Lake shrine his name is Triananda. He went and saw Ramana Maharshi. He went and saw Ram Dass, remember Ram Dass?) Papa Ram Dass. (SP: And he went into Samadhi when he saw him and he was in ecstasy for a week and a half and when he came out of it he said to Ram Dass that you are my guru and Ram Dass said, "Yogananda's your guru." And he said, "How can that be Yogananda's dead." And he said, "Yogananda's your guru." And he said that's where he lived in the state strange coalition, some cross coalition.)

R: Many strange things like that happen. (SP: So what did you think of Yogananda?) Great man. (SP: Did he have that realization that Ramana had?) What can I say? (SP: Yes or no.) Can't answer that.

SG: Robert, in the late shrine of Yogananda they worship five or six different statues, Jesus and six other guys. Why would he spread it out like that?

R: Because they were all on the path of Kriya yoga. They were all Kriya Masters.

SJ: It's the reni to teacher example... (SG: Jesus was also a knower?) The same yeah.

R: See the object is when they worship Yogananda, they worship a line of gurus. They are all the same. (SJ: Yoganandas' teacher, his teachers' teacher, and onwards.) Yes.

SK: I'm getting down to earth here, as far as something called love. It seems something like I can't experience, true love. All I can experience is selfish needs and security and all these things. To be in a love mode I have to realize true Self, whatever it is, there is nothing there?

R: First, what do you mean by true love? (SK: Well unconditional, I mean total selflessness. An open heart, just no walls, not worrying about the results.) Then you have to ask yourself the question, "Who needs to experience this love? Who needs it?" And you will realize it's the I that thinks it cannot love. When you follow I to the source, love will come itself because the source of all creation is love. Then it's the I that has the problem and it's the I that believes it cannot love. So inquire, "Who am I?" And when you follow the I to the heart centre, love will come of its own accord.

It's interesting that whenever I speak of my experiences, people want me to be eaten by snakes. (laughter) Spiders to bite me. They want me to waste away then they'll think I'm a great soul. (SH: Well you just haven't suffered enough.) (laughter) That's it.

SH: You had to lay it down the line. Is that true, people really think that you should be...

R: Because they read the books of certain Saints and they think certain Saints have gone through certain experiences, so everybody has to go through those experiences.

SK: See you go walk on the water or something?

R: That's why I don't talk about myself too much. The truth is of course, if you really want to know about this body and about the Self in me, know your Self. Find out first who you are and then you will know all about me. Other wise you'll see me as you see yourself. Do you see what I'm saying?

If you meet a con man. The con man is going to look at you and think you're a con man too. A con man believes everybody's a con man. If you meet a person that is filled with love they will see you as love also. So that is why I say, whatever you are, I am a mirror for you and you're always seeing yourself.

SH: That is so for everything not just for you? (R: For everything, yes of course.)

SK: So what you're saying is that you create your own reality?

R: Where you are right now, the world that you see, is the world that you created.

SD: The house that someone will live in is predestined?

R: Everything is predestined. (SD: Is it predestined to create your reality as it is?) That is the way it goes. (SD: That seems paradoxical.) Of course it does. (SD: laughs) It wouldn't be a truth teaching if it wasn't paradoxical. Everything is preordained yet you've got to work on yourself. To lift yourself up and become free.

SH: There is nothing you can do about it, and yet you have to do something about it.

R: Exactly. (SD: I don't understand Robert?) That's the game.

SH: That's maya. (R: Exactly and don't try to figure it out, you can't, so don't try.)

SM: And that means when one becomes realized and everything is preordained it doesn't exist anymore, right?

R: Right. When one becomes realized the whole game is over. There is nobody to become realized. There is nobody that is not realized. There is no universe, there is no God, there are no others, all is well. (laughter)

SK: It's not a gradual realization? (laughter) (SG: Or nothing is realized.) (laughter)

R: Touche.

SG: Robert it seems like it's a gradual realization.

R: It appears to some people that it's gradual but when you awaken there never was any graduality. It appears like that sometimes. When you awaken you know that you've always been awake. There never was time when you were asleep.

SR: Robert through your experience there must have been hundreds of those who revealed their experience and got hospitalized or were admitted. (R: This is true.) It amazes that something in you, if I understand you right tells you, you better not talk about this? (R: You're right.) Something in you knew that other people were not aware of what you were aware of. I don't understand how a young teenager knew that other people weren't aware of what you were becoming aware of? Can you explain at all how you were able to stop yourself from talking about it so you didn't get committed? (students laugh) How did you know it would be inappropriate or did someone pull you in or...?

R: No just intuition. In the beginning I used to ask my teachers about it. And the teacher sent me to the principal. (laughter) And the principal would call my mother and my mother did take me to a doctor. And the first doctor said I had hay-fever. (laughter) And then I discussed it with some of my friends and I realized fast I better shut up. (SR: So you went through a process of when it was getting dangerous.) Oh yes, sure of course. (SR: I gave you too much credit. I thought you just knew without even saying it I couldn't believe it.) No. (SR: Well thank God you learned to shut up.) (laughter)

SY: So how did you ???

R: It improved. Even now my family thinks I'm crazy. I told you before during Christmas I spoke to my brother that I hadn't seen in about sixteen years and he said, "Are you still good for nothing?" I said, "Yes, are you good for something?" But when I asked whether he was happy, he shut up.

SR: Have you been able to hold down a job? (R: Not really.)

SH: Have you ever been gainfully employed? (laughter) (R: Nope.) Good for you.

R: I have no visible means of support.

SG: How did you pull all of this off? All of this... Credit cards. (students laugh) (R: What did he say?) Credit cards. (R: Oh credit cards.) (laughter)

SH: You've been hopping from credit cards to credit card. They're going to catch up on you one day. (R: In the beginning I had inheritance, but I spent that fast in India.) You ran through that in a hurry?) Umm.

SD: That's how you got there, am I right? (R: Umm.)

SG: Didn't you become a learned psychologist? (R: I did this course in psychology.)

SD: Dealing with stress points wasn't it? (R: Umm. That didn't last long.) Umm? (R: It didn't last long.) Just asking.

R: When I came back from India. The first time I went to Denver Colorado. So I was thinking what am I going to do with my life. So at that time people were trying to improve themselves with getting rid of stress. So I opened a clinic called the stress clinic, and I put an add in the paper. So I had a bunch of clients until everything closed down because I never registered the business. Never paid any taxes. (laughter) (SD: Did you teach self-inquiry to people under stress.) Yes. That's all I did. (SD: And did you get to start a satsang?) That's how I started a group in Denver.

SH: Did you de-stress them? (R: Who knows?) You should know you were working with them. (R: I just do it and I never look for results.)

SK: How many years were you in India?

R: The first time I was 5 years. The second time 3 years and the third time 2 years. (SH: What did you go back for the last two times?) I went back to visit people I met, see some new temples. (SH: Ramana died by then?) Ramana had died yeah. Went to see who was left at Ramana ashram. (SH: Was S. S. Korn around there?) Yeah he was around there. There were a lot of English devotees who lived there. Arthur Osborne was there too.

SG: I remember reading Robert in that book "No Mind" the Arthur Osborne ... to the woman saint and anecdote of an Australian chap who was there and he was just in a laya. He didn't move, he defecated in his clothes and by his outside appearance looked as if he was in samadhi but he was dragged away and eventually he broke out of it and they sent him back to Australia. So how do you know the difference between being in that state of laya in the trance state or in a state of actual samadhi?

R: If you're a Jnani you can tell when somebody's there. A Jnani always knows another Jnani and also if a person is not a Jnani. (SG: According to his mind, the Australians, he was in a state of bliss.) He thought he was. (SG: He couldn't focus on the body he'd just sit there.) He had some physical problems.

SM: Robert isn't there a protection, a current or something to protect these people so that they wouldn't be thrown into an institution?

R: Oh yes. Mary's talking about the current that knows the way. The power that is absolute that takes care of everything. So if a person is supposed to be thrown into an institution he will. If they're not they won't. There are no mistakes everything is right. Everything is preordained and everything is happening the way it's supposed to. If you try to figure it out you'll go insane yourself.

SF: Robert, I don't know if I'm quoting rightly but it seems what I've read in "Day by Day with Bhagvan" about Ramana Maharshi it's not this world is unreal, it's a mistake to consider aside or apart from the Self. (R: Umm, this is true.) Is that the ultimate Jnanic vision of the world?

R: No. The ultimate vision is that there is no world at all and there is no Self. It's just a term given to us so we can talk about it. But no thing actually exists like that. (SF: So he was giving a particular answer probably to a particular question.) Exactly. The world is not real by itself but Brahman as the world is real. But in the ultimate reality there is no Brahman, so there is no world.

SJ: It's interesting how the buddhist concentrate on being totally present. Even more present than here now. And it seems like that's the same state. It's when you're totally present there is no world that is apart from yourself and there is no time, there is no past and there is no future, all those things.

R: Well that has to do with the bodhisattvas. They will not disappear until everyone else is enlightened. (SJ: Yeah I'm only talking about being present, that's all.) They will be present until everybody else is enlightened. (SJ: No I mean being in the present moment.) Being present in the moment. Explain that again? (SJ: Being totally present in the moment. It's like the same thing as when you are totally present in the moment there is no world.) Oh I see what you mean. (SJ: And in that kind of state it's beautiful.) If you live in the split second of this moment nothing exists. But it's only when you begin to think then existence comes into play. (SJ: Or be someone?) Yeah, but it happens so fast it's hard to catch.

SL: Something you were saying last week which is, just let your body do what it has to do because someone who asked the question about if you were working can you still meditate or concentrate and you said, yes you can. Let the body do what it needs to do. (R: Yes.) And you said when you start thinking that is when you let the I or the ego take over you can't do it as efficiently. (R: That's correct.)

SK: Well this is to clarify a point, is it right to say that the experiences exemplified by the zen Masters is it the same as you and Ramana speak of?

R: There is just different ways of saying it. But Buddhists become enlightened also. (SK: I've never got this. One brand thing instead of different kinds of enlightenment.) There is no different kinds of enlightenment. Enlightenment is enlightenment. (SK: So somebody else's words for enlightenment sound different, it's just a mode of expression.) True. Because of karma and samskaras we are inclined toward a certain path. It maybe buddhism, it maybe mystical christianity, it may be Advaita Vedanta. We're inclined toward a path from past lives.

SD: For example a christian like Mother Theresa might be self-realized? (R: Might be suffering?) Might be self-realized or be it a type of state of realization? (R: Oh, self-realized. I never like to talk about other people but Mother Theresa is not self-realized.) No? (R: Umm.)

SJ: Maybe she knows mali maybe that'll help. (laughter) (R: She's what?) At least she knows niyamali (a language), that'll help? (students laugh) (R: Oh yeah. She's a great saint.)

SD: So a saint is not the same as you are Robert?

R: That's right. The same as Mahatma Ghandi he was great soul. But the answer is always this, find out who you are and everything else will become clear to you.

Another good practice with your breathing is the "I - I" meditation. When you inhale you say, "I," and when you exhale you say, "I." Lets try that...

(tape ends) [TOC]

FREEWILL AND PREDETERMINATION

2nd June, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. Someone asked me to say a few words about freewill and predestination. I've already talked to you about those things. But we forget.

It's just like the fellow who told me he's been seeing a psychotherapist for twelve years. And the psychotherapist told him something this morning that made him cry. So I said, "What could he have told you this morning if you've been seeing him for twelve years?" He said, "He told me, no speakie English, no habla English." (students laugh)

So we talk about the same things again and again.

SB: Was he cured of his psychosis?

R: Who knows I never saw him again.

If everything is predetermined where does freewill come in? For instance if someone has cancer and they're dying and this is predetermined, everything is predetermined, so should that person use their freewill to try to heal themselves? Or should they just let themselves die?

This is quite a paradox but it's easily resolved as soon as you ask yourself, "For whom is freewill? Who is the person that predetermines anything?" And you tell me, "The inner guru." The inner guru knows the time when you're going to be enlightened and that time cannot change. So again where does freewill come in? I ask you again, "For whom is there freewill?" Freewill is for the ego. Freewill is just another game. And as far as things being predetermined that's also part of the game.

It appears as if everything is predetermined. Just as it appears that you have freewill. But I say to you that there is only the Self and you are that. Does the Self care about freewill or predetermination? You do. Can't you see the error you're making. You're so concerned about freewill and predetermination, it's like being concerned with what came first the tree or the seed, the chicken or the egg. That's how it is when you're concerning yourself with freewill and predetermination.

There is no real answer it's part of the game. Everything is predetermined. Even when I raise my hand like this (raises hand), it's predetermined. Everything is preordained it has been pre-planned before you came into birth. But don't you see the truth? The truth is you were never born. You never came into birth. Therefore there is nothing that's predetermined because you don't even exist.

SC: Excuse me Robert you're talking about consciousness, you're not talking about the human body, isn't that right?

R: I'm talking about what? (SC: You're talking about consciousness, you're not talking about the human body are you?) I'm talking about the human body that believes everything is predetermined. (SC: But you just said we don't exist?) That is what I'm saying, in reality you don't exist but you keep thinking about your life, about your body, about your affairs, about circumstances, about if everything is predetermined or if you've got freewill. Who thinks about these things? You do. (SC: How can I think about it if I don't exist?) But you think you exist otherwise you wouldn't react to conditions. So by saying you don't exist that's the highest state of consciousness. Where you do not really exist. It's like a dream. But as far as your concerned, as long as you react to conditions, as long as you react to person, place or thing, then you believe you exist.

SC: Okay, I was going to ask this question later but I think it will go along with what we're saying. I think I got a trillionth of a second flash that I'm not the body, okay, whatever it is. If I'm consciousness how does one know when one is going to die? For some it take an hour, some have days and some have ten years and it's set. A human being can live so long and not live so long.

R: But if you had a glimpse of consciousness that question would not enter your mind because there would be noone left to ask and there'd be noone left to go through those experiences. As long as you can ask the question, as long as you're concerned with who lives how long, it's not consciousness you're speaking from. (SC: Okay, consciousness is separate from the body right?) Consciousness is not separate from the body, consciousness is and you're not! (SC: Alright, right. But how does one know when consciousness leaves the body?) There is noone left to know? And consciousness doesn't leave the body because it never entered the body. (SC: So when is the body dropped, if I can use those terms. One day, two weeks, ten years, a hundred years, sixty years...) You're speaking from different levels. As long as you think about bodies dropping then bodies will drop forever. They'll never stop. You'll take on one body after the other and it will drop. When you awaken, when you become liberated there will be noone to ask those questions and you will not be interested in those things. Because they will not exist for you. They wouldn't even enter your mind.

SC: Right so as far as that is concerned there is no difference between that tree out there and me?

R: As far as that's concerned that's true because there is only consciousness. (SC: Now that's what I meant.) But you're not seeing it from your point of view where you are realized. You are seeing it from an intellectual level and that's not worth a hell of beans because it doesn't do you any good. (SC: So I suppose the next question is how is one to see it? I know it's been asked a hundred times but I'll ask it again.) You see it by asking, "To whom everything comes to." (SC: I know I've asked that...) "To whom do the trees come? To whom do the problems come? To whom does sickness come? To whom do everything in this universe come to?"

SC: If I created my own sickness, then I can get rid of it?

R: You didn't create your own sickness because sickness doesn't exist for you to create. (SC: Are you talking about consciousness or you the body?) I'm talking about you as yourself. You are your pure Self and there is no sickness, there is no body, there is noone that is born, there is noone that dies, there is noone that goes through experiences. But as long as you believe you do then you have to work on yourself until the day comes when all of these things begin to drop away. (SC: Then I'm confused between the self with the little "s" and the Self with the big "S." When you're talking, I don't know whether you're talking about consciousness or the body? And that's why I'm confused now.) First I talk about the body I talk about where you're coming from. I talk about what you see and then I say to you, "All this is false imagination. It is all false imagination. Only reality exists. Only pure awareness exists."

SC: What is pure awareness or reality?

R: Pure awareness is something that you're not right now. Pure awareness is silence. Pure awareness is where there is no question, there is no answer, there is no body, there is noone interested about knowing anything. (SC: Then where does sickness come from?) Your imagination. (SC: My imagination, then I can cure with my imagination?) If you want to use your imagination to cure sickness you will, but then other sickness will come, death will come, everything will come and you'll spend your life curing yourself. Rather than doing that why don't you find out who you really are and understand your divine nature. When you understand your divine nature there is no room for sickness, there is no room for anything. There is no room for health. (SC: I understand it intellectually but the connection isn't there.) Well what do you want me to do. (SC: Connect me of course.) (laughs) As far as I know you are already connected. (SC: But I don't know it?) So what can I do? You've got to do it yourself.

SC: I've been attempting as best as I know how. I've got your tapes I listen to them every-day I ask, "To whom do these problems come to?" And my feet still hurt. (laughs)

R: Of course your feet still hurt but your head doesn't hurt. Your body doesn't hurt only your feet hurt. Think of everything else that hurts, therefore you are a step ahead of the game. You're here, you're able to listen to these things even though you're not really practicing too much. You're still able to hear these things and you're better off than you would be if you were somewhere else. Therefore try to still your mind, try to quiet yourself. (SC: So I'm listening to you from my head instead of my heart? Or it doesn't make any difference?) Whatever you say, however you feel. Whatever you think. But the day will come when you will awaken to the fact that you are not the doer, you are not the body, you are not the mind. Until that day comes you do the best you can with what you've got. But I say to you again, the more you quiet your mind the greater experience you'll have. As you're beginning to stop identifying with the world so much and stop seeing things and reacting to them. You are going to find that you become happier and happier. That joy wells up in your heart. You become peaceful and everything will be alright. Then it wouldn't even matter what's going on in your body if you had sickness or whatever is going on. You will not see it that way.

I admit it's sort of a hard thing to comprehend. When a person like Rama Krishna or Ramana Maharshi or others were dying a terrible death of cancer themselves, the question is, "Who sees that? Who feels that?" Certainly the Sages did not feel that, but you did. You feel it for them. That is your story. That is how you see things. But I say to you that noone died of cancer. Noone died for noone ever existed. To die you have to exist. To become sick you have to be well. To go up you have to go down. To go forward you have to go backward.

Now ask yourself, "Now what have I got to do with all of those things?" You are free, you are sat-chit-ananda, you are parabrahman. If you can only learn to keep your mind on the source. Never mind what the world shows you. Never mind what the world gives you. Never mind what is going on in your affairs or in the world. Identify with the source. And how do you identify with the source? By abiding in the I. The I is really the source. As you abide in the I and the I goes further and further and deeper within yourself, it turns into the source. Which you have always been and which you are now.

So right now you're like the sun that's covered with clouds. You look at the clouds and you don't see the sun. But you know you're the sun. And you try to tell everybody that you're the sun, but everybody looks up and sees the clouds. So you're saying that you are reality, but the clouds are your body, your mind and your affairs. All you can identify with right now even though you say you are reality, is your body, your mind and your affairs. And that's like identifying with the clouds. The truth is the sun is above the clouds. It always shines. There never is a time when it does not shine. But you are seeing only the clouds, so who's fault is that? What can you do?

So you run to gurus, you run to teachers, you run to India, you run to Hawaii, you run all over looking for answers. Whereas the real answer is within yourself. The time has to come when you stop running, you stop searching, you stop reading, you stop wanting, you simply look at yourself as the source. When you look at yourself as the source, the light begins to shine brighter and brighter and soon you're cooked and you're out of this world. Even though you're in a body.

Therefore do not judge by appearances. Do not look at facts. Facts are subject to change. Anything that does not last forever cannot be the truth. So if you think you've got problems it's only because you're not seeing yourself from the right viewpoint. You're identifying with the problems. You're identifying with the world, with your body. But yet if you see it in the right perspective you will understand that it has taken you many many incarnations, so-to-speak, to even be where you are right now. This is why we must always be thankful.

If I right now were wasting away or I appear to be wasting away as a body, from leprosy, cancer and every other horrible disease known to man, I would be thankful. That this is the last of it and I'll be free.

When you have a thankful attitude it's like identifying with God, with the Self. But when you complain and you see things wrong with yourself and the world, what you're really saying karmically is I want more of that. The law of karma only knows what you feel in your mind and if you feel something is wrong the law of karma doesn't care why you feel something is wrong, but as long as you feel something is wrong it'll get worse.

But when you look at the situation from a different viewpoint and you see it as something that is subject to change, no material thing lasts forever. Therefore sickness, lack, limitation and the rest of these so-called negatives are not reality so they do not last forever. They must change.

When will they change? When you take your mind off them and identify with the source.

How do you identify with the source? You ask, "To whom do these things come? They come to me I feel them. Who am I? Where did the I come from?" And you follow the I thread. You trace the I to the source and you can say it's located on the right side of your chest. As I said before, once before, twice before, a hundred times before, you can see the source on the right side of your chest as your favorite deity, or you can see it as a sphere of light like the sun, only a million times brighter. And you see your I dissolving in the source. Then the I becomes I am and you have now become the Self.

You haven't actually become the Self you've always been the Self. You have rather awakened to the fact that you are the Self and all of the nonsense about sickness or health or money or poverty or happiness or misery are no longer a part of your life. You're just free of the whole thing.

The choice is always yours. I can lead you to the vein of gold but you better do your own mining. I can keep telling you that you are absolute reality, that you are ultimate oneness, that you are nirvana, emptiness. Your true nature is pure awareness. Parabrahman. And this alone should lift you up and make you understand that you are not the other things. But you have to keep up realizing that you are that.

When you leave here today and you walk out the door, what happens to you? Most of you begin to identify with what you see, what you hear, what you smell, what you taste, what you touch. That's the mistake you're making. You begin to act like the doer. You have to totally surrender to the Self. Your whole life, your happiness, your sadness, your health, your sickness, your lack, your abundance, they're all two sides of the same coin. Everything has to be surrendered.

Think how joyful you will be when you mentally surrender everything to the source. All the responsibility is off your shoulder. You no longer have to wonder about what you should eat, what you should wear, whether you should take vitamins or whether you should go and see a movie, whether you should go find a healer, whether you should go to India or find a spiritual teacher. Those questions will no longer come into your mind when you totally surrender, totally, completely, absolutely. You will be empty, free. And then you will understand.

There are two ways you can work with. You either practice atma-vichara, self-inquiry or you totally surrender to God which is surrendering to your Self. You have the free will to do that.

Remember when we talk about freewill, freewill is only for the ego. Does God need freewill? What you call God is all-pervading, omnipresent. If something is all-pervading there is no room for anything else. So how can there be God or the Self and your problems? That's virtually impossible. Don't you see there is no room for your problems.

But somehow you've been mesmerized. The illusion is you think and things happen. Who told you you have to think? The illusion is, the belief that if I don't think my world will fall apart. I've got to think about my business. I've got to think about my health. I've got to think about the world. I've got to think about karma or predestination or free-will. Who said you do?

The world has gone on before you came into existence in your present body. It didn't need you at all. And it will go on after you appear to leave. Therefore what have you got to think about? Why do think I have to think or I have to do this? Or if I don't do that somebody will take advantage of me. If I do not retaliate people will laugh at me. That's thinking and that's called false thinking.

True surrender is when you allow the world to do whatever it does but you're never involved in it again. Mentally that is. You will go to your work. If you're supposed to get married you'll get married. If you're supposed to get divorced you'll get divorced. If you're supposed to have children you'll have children. If you're supposed to live in a nice house you'll live in a nice house. If you're supposed to live in a shack you'll live in a shack. Everything will take care of itself without you thinking.

Stop thinking that you matter so much that you're so important. You're a grain of dust in the wind. Here today and gone tomorrow. Now that is the appearance. That's how it seems. You have to see yourself for what you really are.

When things happen you always have to ask, "To whom do they happen? Who is going through the experience?" If you do this enough I can assure you something will give. But what is enough?

I get calls from people that are here today, people that are not here today. They tell me they've been practicing for two whole days now and nothing has happened. They've been practicing for six months. The whole understanding is you give up looking for anything to happen. See that has to go. After all to whom is it to happen to? To your ego. To your small self. You are not that.

As you surrender everyday as you practice self-inquiry. The first signs you will see will be signs of peace and happiness. The things that used to annoy you will stop. The chip on your shoulder will fall away. You will no longer be annoyed by people. You will understand. As you continue to unfold you will begin to realize that you are all the people. There is no one separate from you.

As Emerson said, "I am my brother and my brother is me."

And you will treat others the way you treat yourself. And as you keep unfolding you will see that there is only one Self. And what you do to others you're doing to yourself. It all happens in due time. But if you're still selfish and you still have a big ego everything is going to ruffle your feathers. When somebody bumps into you, you will think they did it on purpose and you will look for an argument. If someone looks at you the wrong way, you will imagine what they're thinking and perhaps insult them. You will see things that do not exist but you will believe they do. The bigger your ego is, the more of that takes place in your life.

I therefore say to you, "It makes no difference what is going on in your life at the present time, drop it. Leave it alone. Live in the moment. Be spontaneous. Forget about yesterday. Forget about the way you were brought up, what happened to you, who hurt you. That's the past. Surrender it totally, completely. Do not concern yourself with the future. For the substratum of all existence is divine harmony. There is nothing but good, happiness and love. That's awaiting you. In order to experience it you have to see it."

The question I ask you is, "What do you see right now?"

Do you see yourself as a miserable sickly person? As an old person? As a person with problems? Why do you see that? Because that's how it appears? Doesn't water appear in the mirage? But the water's not real. Doesn't the rope appear as a snake? The snake is not real. Doesn't the sky appear as blue? And yet there is no sky and there is no blue. In the same way, whatever appears to be going on in your own life is only for a time. It appears to exist.

It's like watching a movie. You identify with the movie, it has a beginning, a middle and an end and that's it. But while the movie was going on you identified with it. You didn't think of anything else. Now you are identifying with the movie called your life. You appear separate. You appear as if you're involved in this and involved in that. But I say to you that you are already free. You are already bright and shining. You are already absolute reality. Pure awareness. That is your nature.

Why do you want to cause so many problems for yourself? By continuing to think and imagine that things have to be this way and things have to be that way. And you have preconceived ideas of the way that you're supposed to live or the way you think you're supposed to live.

So you set up goals and then you try to reach the goals. And as many of you know when you do reach the goals they are really never what you really expected. So you set up new goals. It never ends. And because you're so involved in setting up goals the Lord of karma makes it easier for you. He let's you continue in another body. You are therefore born into a family with goals and they've got goals for you. And the goals never stop, it's unending. Until you're ready to say, "Wait a minute! Who needs this? What is it going to lead to?" A semblance of wisdom begins to make you understand I have been searching for the wrong things. For everything in this world is subject to the law of change. Nothing is permanent including this world.

You begin to turn within. You begin to realize the happiness that dwells in your heart. You begin to talk less, to think less, to complain less, to criticize less. You begin to leave everyone alone. To leave the world alone. When you see a situation that is not pleasing to your mind you re-evaluate it and you understand where it's coming from and what it is. You become peaceful, harmonious. It is only then that you can begin working on yourself really. And practicing vichara, inquiry.

But as long as you're filled with hours and times and you're always thinking about your body or your affairs, it's best if you surrender these things. Give them all to God, give up everything. Get rid of your needs, your wants. Stop feeling sorry for yourself. You are greater than you think. Do not think past your nose. The world will come, the world will go. But reality has always been where the world appears to be and you are that.

(tape break)

(Robert continues) ...if you've got plenty of questions.

SD: Robert is surrendering to the guru the same as surrendering to God?

R: There is no difference. (SD: So could you give an...) Guru, God, Self are one.

SD: Can you give an example of surrendering to the guru. Say you were ill how would you surrender that to the guru?

R: You would merely say to yourself, "Guru take this from me. I give it to you, you know what to do with it. I surrender every iota of my being to you. I no longer care about it or will concern myself about it. It now all belongs to you. My feelings, my emotions, my body, what appears to be sickness, I hand it all over to you. Do with it as you will. I am free of it." And that's it. (SD: And what would you do as the guru do with it?) Never mind that. (laughter) I chew it up and spit it out. (SD: Because you're not affected by it right? Is that how that can be done?) There is no one to be affected. Nobody's home. What you are really doing is giving it to the universe and since it doesn't really exist, it doesn't go anywhere. It becomes a non entity. It becomes God. It's always been God but you've seen it differently.

Can you see now why Ramana Maharshi when he was dying said, "Who dies? There is nowhere to go where can I possibly go. How can I be sick. How can I die?" And Rama Krishna said basically the same thing. Because to them what is called cancer is God. I know it's hard to see it like that. What you see as sickness as being a horrible manifestation, a Sage only sees God. They don't see God as the sickness, there is no sickness to change into health. They only see the Self. The Self as the Self.

A mirror may reflect cancer but cancer does not affect the mirror whatsoever does it? In the mirror you may see somebody dying of cancer but nothing happens to the mirror. The Sage is like the mirror. Absolute reality. Therefore when you give the Sage or the guru your problems, you're giving them to eternity and they're all dissolved into the nothingness they came from.

ST: So we can also spellbind you? (R: Be my guest.)

SS: Are you then giving to yourself too when you do that? (R: Am I giving to myself?)
When you give to the guru are you giving to yourself?

R: Exactly, the Self, Guru, God are one. You're giving it to yourself because the Self is omnipresent. You're therefore not doing anything to this body. This body doesn't exist. Everything is the Self. Whatever you see apart from that is an appearance. An illusion like the water in the mirage. Like a dream but it appears real.

Let's imagine again that you're having a dream and you're wasting away from cancer. Or let's say I'm in your dream and you see me dying from cancer and I'm wasting away to 60 pounds, 40 pounds, 20 pounds and you looked at me and say, "Robert look what's happening to you. How can you allow this to happen to yourself? Why don't you heal yourself?" And I laugh at you because I realize the dream. And I tell you, "Don't you see this is a dream, this is not really happening?" But you say, "Yes it is, look at you you're bleeding, there are sores all over you, you are nothing but a bone." And I just keep laughing. That's what you're seeing because you're identifying with the dream. And you're saying, "No I'm not. See I can pinch you and you feel it don't you? I say, "Yes, but it's a dream pinch." And then all of a sudden you wake up and you're yourself. None of those things really happened.

So, this life is called the mortal dream. We appear real. The world appears real there are beautiful trees, mountains. There are horrible things going on, all kinds of things are happening in this world. But it's a dream world. You are the dreamer, when you awaken you will be the Self, self-contained, absolute reality. That's how I see you now. If you want to see something else that's your business.

SC: What happens when you don't identify with what you see?

R: If you don't identify with what you see, you will not experience anything else but the Self. You will only experience absolute reality. (SC: Let's say someone is sick and they don't identify with that sickness? Does that mean the sickness will go away?) Again you're missing the whole point. To whom does the sickness come to? The sickness is a complete illusion. Just like the person is an illusion. In the dream, the dream person was an illusion and the cancer was an illusion. (SC: But it's still happening to that person even though it's an illusion.) It appears to happen. Just like the water appears real in the mirage. It's an appearance. But as long as you're identifying with the world it's real. To the extent that you believe that you are the body mind phenomena, to that extent everything is real for you. (SC: But how can you not identify with the body when the body is so obviously there?) By working on yourself and inquiring, "To whom does the body come?" And following it through. Or surrendering to God, all of your problems, all of your thoughts and all of our bodies. Taking the responsibility off your shoulders.

SB: Robert when we inquire and we ask finally, "Who am I?" And then it goes through the silent phase. Do we inquire silently, like non verbally, non mentally by going deeper into the silence...

R: As long as thoughts come you have to continue inquiring. When the thoughts stop the Self within will pull the mind into the heart and you will awaken. (SB: So we don't have to concentrate on that thought?) No. (SB: Because before you were saying to imagine where the light is to the right side, but that's still the ego imagining right?) Yes. The ego has to imagine that in order to destroy itself that is the beginning stages. Remember you use the mind to destroy the mind? (SB: So which one should we do if we're...) You do whatever you have to do. (SB: If we inquire and go into the absolute silence we don't have to worry about concentrating on anything?) No you don't. Concentration automatically stops. because there has to be somebody left to concentrate. (SB: Concentration is of the ego then.) Yes. (SB: So even attention is of the ego?) Yes. (SB: It will all happen by itself?) All movement is of the mind, of the ego. When movement stops then there is reality. Which ensues of it's own accord.

SB: So the basis of movement is the word right, the sound current the sharp?

R: The sound current, that's the movement. (SB: The first movement in creation?) Yes. (SB: So I followed the sound current for 12 years and I got a headache from so much concentration.) (students laugh)

SJ: One headache in twelve years that's pretty good. (laughter)

SB: No it was a continuous 12 year headache. (laughter)

R: Well now you know what to do. Take an aspirin. (laughter)

SB: Flush it down the toilet and call the doctor. That's what my doctor said, take two aspirin flush it down the toilet and call me in the morning.(laughter) So really Robert what you're saying is there is only two things in creation like - no that's not a good way to put it - there is motion and motionlessness. Motion is ego mind and motionless is everything?

R: When creation begins there is the sound current. But the sound current doesn't really exist because it's beyond the phenomena. Therefore the sound current, the silence that you're trying to experience is part of your mind. But when you stop thinking then the true silence comes.

SB: But we were supposed to concentrate on the light and the sound and that was supposed to bring God into expression and it's supposed to take us back. But then the ultimate thing is after a hundred years of doing that is seeing all the inner planes and concentrating on the sound current and becoming that and then it goes back to this point of where we are starting with right now. In other words we're starting with the non-manifest.

R: We're starting from the top. (SB: From the top instead of starting from the bottom and going through creation with the sounds and planes and lights and all that.) Yes. (SB: So this is the absolute direct way.) If it's right for you, practice it. (SB: Because that is always duality. There is always me concentrating on the sound current.) Umm. (SB: So you're beginning with duality and then eventually beyond the highest planes there is no more light and sound and then it's a matter of absorption and here we are starting with the matter of absorption.) You are starting from the ultimate. I'm not against any path. All paths are good because they take you away from world thinking. But where you go is determined by your karma and by predetion. So you are here because you are supposed to be here. There are no mistakes, all is well.

(tape break)

Every once in a while your raw talent comes out. We've got a lot of poets here. A lot of good writers and what I'd like to do is share with you a writing that comes from Lee. Lee is sitting over there asleep. (laughter) (SB: No he's drunk.) (laughter)

R: He wrote something very beautiful and I'd like to share it with you. We'll have Dana if she will, read for us. (SD: Lee says that he would have preferred to remain anonymous.) (laughter) That's what they all say.

Dana reads:

*Beloved as you write this love poem to yourself fill the song and poet with your love till nothing else remains. A universe ecstatic.
Beloved I feel your love hugging friend I feel your lust offering a short skirt. I've seen your joy seeing my lady smile. I feel your awe knowing this.
Beloved I ask to feel your love, yet the love I feel for anyone or anything is you loving you. So fill me with love for all your creatures, for all your forms, your loving feel Beloved fill my eyes with the ecstasy of seeing you in all your forms.
Fill my ears with the ecstasy of hearing your song in all your voices.
Fill my heart with the ecstasy of loving you as all your creatures, fill me with the ecstasy of you being you.
Beloved I think of you and bubbles begin rising and tickling from my centre, filling the universe.
Beloved I thought I was a flute being played by you but now I know I'm your breath vibrating as a body entombed.
Beloved hugging any of your forms my arms are filled with you and I know
I am you hugging you.
Beloved every poem you write fills me with greater joy. Such grace, such ecstasy.
Beloved now I see the cosmic joke. Thinking I lacked always withheld.
Knowing I am everything you give me more and more, upon gift upon gift.
If I weren't infinite I'd burst.
Beloved you give me the task of loving my beloved and reward me with her joy when she meets your love, such grace.
Beloved you must know when I win, how else can I explain the path without pain? You lure me on with joy after joy and light upon light, lest I search with fear. Seeing the progression I trust. Drop al resistance and kneel to the ecstasy.
Beloved it can't be me I'm no bhakti my love calls to you.*

If the words flow to this Jnani learning labels proving you.

Beloved your timing your networking push coincidence beyond credibility you're such a show off.

*Beloved now I see the cosmic joke, thinking I was separate I was left alone.
Knowing I am one you fill my life with others, full of love and light, If I were infinite I'd burst.*

Beloved you've appointed me your energy junkie. Sending me from place, to high place letting me be the one for whom your experience, your light and vibration, such a gift.

*Beloved now I see the cosmic joke. Thinking I was in time things took forever.
Knowing I'm eternal everything happens now, joy upon joy, if I weren't infinite I'd burst.*

*Beloved now I see the cosmic joke thinking I was in space all this removed from me.
When I'm infinite you put everyone here, lovers and beloveds, if I weren't infinite I'd burst.*

Beloved will you speak to me direct me, use me, let me be your tool or shall I be consumed by this ever increasing fire of bliss and ecstasy. Ecstasy until there is only you.

Beloved I know you're having a blast experiencing all this joy through me, I am.

Beloved When I think thy will be done I giggle at my breath.

Beloved every face reflecting your light in every face in the thousand faceted jewel.

Beloved when I finally unite with you it won't be through works, not through meditation not through your fire. I shall simply burst with joy.

Beloved scan the monkeys in their trees that I might hear in the ensuing silence, your song.

Beloved you must be testing me, trying to find out how much joy I'll permit before I panic or shut down or block, well I am only beginning to let.

Beloved the more I let the more I get.

R: And that was written to the divine mother.

SL: Well Robert I have a question. (R: Okay.) With all of this joy that we feel, I think there is some kind of threat that comes from this teaching that what goes up goes down. I feel the same way he does. Everything is just so wonderful, I mean... (R: It is wonderful.) Yes but what is this thing that, what goes up has to come down?

R: This is the way of the world. When you only identify with the world everything that goes up, comes down. But if you identify with the Self, that is permanent and that is always and that is true love. The world is miserable by itself. But the world as God is beautiful. (SL: But as long as the focus is on the Self then everything is alright?) Of course. How could it be any different?

Any more questions or statements? Ed do you have any announcements?

SE: Yes. Satsang begins at 1:30 now, not at 2 o'clock. We chant for the first half hour and if you don't want to participate that's fine if you just want to sit and wait for 2 o'clock to come, but if you do come in please don't talk because it's very difficult to get the chanting to go. It takes 15 - 20 minutes for people to get into the chanting. Chanting is a very high spiritual practice and we'd like to see if it works out to do chanting successfully. Arak is here today and he may come in the future and we can't always depend on him but when he's here it's special.

R: We have prashad thanks to Ruth. Lee did you want to say something?

SP: Yeah I have a picture of Ramana Maharshi for those who want it.

R: Oh great. We have prashad. Ruth brought us a lot of beautiful rolls today. So why don't you bring them over here and I'll hand them out.

SL: Also if anyone who didn't see the pictures of Robert last Sunday they are over by the donation box for anyone who wants to sign with a red pen on the back to get a copy.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 67

BEYOND THE WORLD OF MAYA

6th June, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It's good to be with you again in this lovely room, with Henry, in his house, and the dog, and the sun shining in my eyes. Welcome. I see a few new faces here. I want to remind you that I do not give speeches. I do not give lectures. I am not a philosopher. I do not give sermons. I give nothing. I am nothing. If you've come to hear a profound lecture, forget It.

There is really nothing to say. Words are superfluous. The only reason I use words is so you can detect the silence in the words. Silence is truth. You cannot explain truth in words. The words become meaningless, redundant. The truth comes to you of its own free will when you prepare yourself through deep surrender to yourself, giving up all attachment, giving up your body, your mind, and everything that's important to you, to the Self. As long as you're holding on to anything, the reality will evade you. The reality only comes when you give up yourself, when you give up your ego, when you give up your needs, your wants, trying to make something happen, desires, when you give up trying to become self-realized, when you just give up. Then something wonderful happens. You begin to expand. Not your body, but the consciousness which you are. You become all-pervading, absolute reality. It happens by itself.

Everything that you feel, hear, touch, smell and taste is maya. Everything is maya, the grand illusion. Most of us really do not understand what maya really is. My trying to explain maya is maya. Everything your eyes behold, that you believe is so important, is maya. Everything that you hear, everything that you read, everything that you try to do to better yourself, it's all maya. It reminds me of a story.

Once the Buddha and his chief disciple, Nerada, were having a discussion, and Nerada said, "Master, what is this maya of yours? You claim everything to be maya. How do you explain it in simple terms? What is maya?" And the Buddha said, "Well, lets take a walk. I'll explain it to you." They walked along a dirt road. The Buddha didn't utter a word. And Nerada said, "Master, are you going to explain maya to me?" The Buddha said, "Oh, yes. But I'm thirsty right now. Can you please go get me a glass of water?" Nerada obeyed. He walked down the road. He saw a house. He knocked on the door and a lady opened the door. Nerada asked, "May I please have a glass of water?" The lady said, "Yes, come in." The lady beckoned to her daughter. "Go get this gentleman a glass of water." Nerada looked at the daughter. She was beautifully voluptuous. He had never seen such beauty in his life. And the old lady said, "Would you like to marry my daughter?" And Nerada said, "Why not?"

So they got married. Nerada worked in the fields. He had two sons and a daughter. The years passed. One day there was a hurricane, and the land was deluged by floods. Water started to come into the house. Nerada piled all the furniture up in one place, and the whole family went on top of the furniture. But the water still started coming, deeper and deeper, higher and higher. They finally had to run to the roof for shelter. There was a pole on the roof, a clothes pole, and they were all hanging onto the pole for their dear life. The winds were blowing at 150 miles an hour. Water was rising higher and higher. Finally the daughter had to let go, and she drowned. Nerada was distraught, but what could he do? Then his first son couldn't hold on any longer either, and he let go, and he drowned. This time Nerada was truly upset. He couldn't understand what was happening. And the other son let go also. Then the mother-in-law let go, and Nerada said, "Well, she was old anyway." Then the wife let go, and Nerada really was upset. And he was just about to let go also, he couldn't hold on any longer, when he found himself standing beside Buddha with a glass of water. And Buddha said, "What's the matter with you? Give me my water." Nerada said, "Now I know what your maya is."

This is also true of us. We get so involved in the world, we take everything so seriously. The first mistake we make is we think we're important, the body has importance. We try to educate the body. We want to make the body feel good. We do all sorts of things to the body, as if it matters. We become concerned over worldly issues. We do not understand that everything is predestined. Instead of trying to find ourselves, instead of trying to ask, "Who am I?" we're concerned with worldly situations. We get involved in beautiful things in the world, believing that's going to last and that's reality. We get involved in ugly things in the world, and we want to get rid of those ugly things, and change them into beautiful things. We're so involved in the world, we have no time to think of reality.

Unfortunately it is only when a catastrophe comes along, like a death, or a sickness, or a severance from family for some reason or another, that we begin to question, "What is life all about? I'm born, I die, and in between I struggle, trying to achieve happiness. And when I achieve it, it's not what I thought it was. What is reality? What is life?"

As you make the request known to yourself, something happens. You find a book. You find a friend that is, perhaps, a few steps higher than you. You begin to ask questions. You begin to read. And then you begin to understand that there is something else besides being born, going to school, getting a job, having a family, getting old, retiring, and dying. Life is more meaningful. But yet you say, "I have not tasted this. I only know my humanhood." If you continue being sincere, you will be led to a teacher, or perhaps a river, perhaps a tree, something that you can focus on, and you will begin to go deep within yourself. I don't like to use the term meditation, because it's been so misused. You begin to dive deep within yourself. You start to experience feelings you never had before. You have moments of bliss, but they go away, and you're back to your old self. You start to think more about life, what it's all about.

Then one day something happens to you. You begin to realize that it is your thinking that has caused you the problems to begin with, the illusion, the maya. It is your thoughts that are the problem. You ponder this. The guru within you has been awakened. Because of your sincerity, because of your wanting to awaken more than anything else in the world, the guru within you leads you to an outer guru that has gone farther than you. And the outer guru tells you the personal self is only a thought, an idea. It is called the "I-thought." You must follow the I to its source, which is on the right side of the chest. As you abide in the I, it will turn into your Self, which is consciousness, absolute reality. You will then be liberated.

This is only the beginning. You begin to practice, and in your practice you have many experiences. You visit occult realms. You hear beautiful music. You see geometrical figures. You have visitations from Sages. And you run to the guru and you tell him your experiences. He explains, "That's nothing, kindergarten. You must go beyond. All that comes out of your mind. Your mind is the cause of all existence. It is your mind that gives birth to the universe, to God, to people, places and things. You must annihilate the mind. "How do I do this? By asking and inquiring, "To whom does the mind come? Who has a mind?" By observation. By intelligently observing your thoughts, becoming the witness to your thought process.

You begin to practice this, but life interferes. Things happen. You get caught up again and again in maya, the grand illusion. You take things seriously. You think the world has something to offer you, because all sorts of good things begin to happen in your life. And then, of course, it reverses itself, and there is a death in the family again, or you lose your position you've had for twenty years. You go into bankruptcy. So again you begin to inquire. And you run back to the teacher. The teacher tells you, "Do not react to conditions. Do not pay attention to the things of this world. Your body will do the work it came here to do. It has nothing to do with you. Whether you're in bankruptcy or whether you're a millionaire, whether you're sickly, or whether you're well and whole, whether you live in a hut, or you live in a castle, do not take these things seriously. But rather keep turning within. Go deeper. Dive deeper than you've ever dove before. Whatever happens to you in this world, simply observe. For the truth is that the substratum of all existence is love, harmony. There is nothing in the universe that wants to destroy you or hurt you. It is simply maya." Again you ask, "What is maya?" and the teacher relates the story that I told you in the beginning, also makes the student understand, the water in the mirage, that is maya, something that appears to be real, but upon investigation you find it's not. The whole world is like that. The whole universe is like that. Do not be fooled again. Do not take anything seriously. Turn within. Do not react. And you vehemently make up your mind to go deeper this time, and not get waylaid by maya.

So you begin to inquire resolutely, absolutely, every moment of the day. Whenever a thought comes to you, you ask, "To whom does it come?" Whenever you observe something on television, or in the world, that seems to upset you, or make you happy, you remember to ask, "To whom has this come? Who's experiencing this?" You forget sometimes. But you keep remembering more often than forgetting. No matter what the situation is, good or bad, you stop getting caught up in situations, and you inquire, "To whom does this come? It comes to me. I feel this. I feel this maya. Then who am I? What is the source of the I that feels this maya. Where did that I come from. Who gave it birth? Who am I?"

Of course you never answer that question. You pose the question again and again. And you notice something else happens. You stop getting involved in wordy conversations. Before you used to talk, and talk, and talk, and talk about everything on earth, about the weather, about people, about places, about things, about situations, about the world. Now you no longer have an interest in this. Something tells you it's a waste of energy. You become more succinct. When someone asks you a question, you say yes or no. You no longer go into wordy explanations. Your life becomes simpler and simpler. You become happier and happier. It happens by itself.

And you find that you're always inquiring, "Who am I? To whom does this come?" You begin to abide in the I, tracing the I to the source. As thoughts come you keep asking, "To whom do they come?" You have no goals. You have no ambitions. Yet your body continues to do the work that it came here for. And it does the work better than you ever did it before. You're amazed. You no longer analyze things too much. You no longer try to put things in the right perspective. You no longer stick up for your rights. You have found peace. You go and you share this with your teacher. You tell him how far you've gone, and what's happening to you. And he tells you, "Oh, that's nothing. You have to give all that up. The thought that something is happening to you, that you're improving, that life is better for you, that you're happier, you've simplified your life. All that has got to go also."

You inquire how to get rid of those things fast. And the answer is, "Through self-surrender." Not only should you inquire, but you should also surrender everything. All your thoughts, all your needs, all your desires, your body, your mind. All that, should be surrendered.

"To whom should I surrender, Master?"

"To yourself. The Self that is omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent. The Self that is all-pervading. The Self that is ultimate oneness, pure awareness, sat-chit-ananda, para-Brahman. Surrender to that Self, for you are truly that."

And you are amazed by what you have heard. You begin to do just that. While you are at work, while you're washing dishes, while you're watching TV, you always remember to surrender. And one day the inner guru pulls your mind inward to the source and you awaken. You become liberated. You become yourself. Then you're free.

SF: Question time?

R: Any time.

SF: Okay. I've been wrestling with this free will versus destiny matter. I'm told that "not a hair falls from my head without my fathers will." Then they turn right around and tell me I should obey the ten commandments, I should love God and love my neighbor. I'm supposed to pray, and meditate, and live an ethical life. Now that apparently leaves me with a lot of things to do, and my question is this: for the jiva, who thinks he can make a choice, he does have free will, but for the atman, where there's no movement of any kind, thoughts and things arise simultaneously, spontaneously without going through the filter of the mind. When they do arise they're recognized as unreal and need not be taken seriously, and beyond that all of this discussion, all of these words and arguments, including the question of free will versus destiny and all the discussion, it's all part of the leela. I wonder what you think of that scenario?

R: Since you know it's all the leela, why do you ask the question? (SF: To try to get somebody to corroborate my ideas, and they are still in the mind.) The teaching is a paradox. It is true that everything happens by itself. Everything is predestined. And yet we still have to make choices. It's only when you ask yourself, "Who has to make choices?" that you realize that there's nobody there to make a choice. There never was anybody there to make a choice, because the I never existed. You never existed as a body or as a mind. Therefore, there is no one who really has to do anything. But as long as you feel that you are the body, that you are the doer, that's when you have to practice moral conduct. That's when you practice the ten commandments, as you said. It is only for the populace, the masses, to make them understand that there's such a thing as moral conduct. But this is also an illusion, like the sky is blue, like the snake in the rope. For in truth, maya never existed, the body never existed, the mind never existed, the world never existed, God never existed, the universe never existed. You are truly para-Brahman, sat-chit-ananda, and if you concern yourself with the questions you asked, it pulls you deeper into maya. Rather, inquire of yourself, "Who am I? Who is the I that wants to know these things? Who is the I that needs to know this intellectual wisdom?"

It's like what came first, the tree or the seed, the chicken or the egg? There's no valid answer. It is only when you discover your true nature that you realize that this world is an illusion. It has no subsistence of its own. Everything is Brahman. The world, the universe is like images on a screen. The images appear to be doing what were doing right now, but the screen never changes. The images change. When you awaken you become like the screen and everything, everything in this universe, is superimposed on consciousness. You observe, but you understand, and all is well. (SF: Thank you. I think my answer came when you asked me why I asked the question.) Good.

SR: Robert, on this subject of maya that you're discussing just now, I'd like to tell you something that's happened to me, and I don't know whether nothing has happened, or is this an example of maya. I left the room just now because something happened Sunday, and I remembered that I took something out of my car, and I don't remember ever putting it back. I became convinced that I never put it back. I realized I never put it back. So I went and checked and there it was. And then it made me recall, a few weeks ago I was walking across a street, two streets, and all of a sudden my keys disappeared, and I didn't know where they were. And I looked for two hours and I couldn't find them. So then I found one key to do part of the job I needed to do, and I had it in my hand and I was about ready to do something with it, when it disappeared. Hey what's going on? I gotta get out of this place. Is this maya or am I just dropping things and not knowing about it. So I said maybe these keys are going into another dimension. Do you have any experience with crazies like that?

R: We shouldn't give too much credence to things like this. It's just like yogis who can dematerialize things and materialize things. In this world of maya, all kinds of things happen. Some things you call miracle. Some things you call terrible. You lose things, you find things. But do not give this too much credence. Do not give it too much energy. Observe, watch, and ask, "To whom does this come? Who's going through these experiences of losing keys or finding keys?" And you will realize that it's the I-thought. It is always the I-thought. You follow the I. You inquire, "To whom does this I come? Who's experiencing I?" Something will tell you that the whole world and everything in it, including your keys in your situation, is attached to the I. Therefore you need not trouble yourself by trying to straighten out the world, or to find your keys, or to lose your keys, or to think about these things. You merely have to annihilate the I. Then everything will go with it.

The I is the first pronoun. The second pronoun is am. When you realize I-am, you become free. This is called being. Not being this or being that. Just plain being. I am. It's quite a different situation than identification with the body. The body will continue to lose keys, find keys, have experiences, yet you will not. You will be free from the whole ball of wax. Yet to other people, to others, it will appear as if you're finding keys or losing keys, or whatever you're doing. It appears to you as if finding keys and losing keys is a reality. Yet when you discover the truth about yourself and you awaken, you will no longer be connected to your body. At the same time you will appear to be a body to others, and they will see the games that you're playing with your keys. But you will be free from that. Yet your body will continue to play the games. It's a paradox. Your body appears as the water in the mirage, as the snake in the rope. But yet, when you awaken, you are no longer the body. And there is no body. But the body appears to others as being real.

This is why when a Jnani dies, or appears to be suffering, nothing is really happening to the Jnani. But to the ajnani all kinds of things are happening. They see the suffering. They identify with sorrow, with death, and with everything else. Therefore, I say to you, "Do not disturb yourself by these things. Inquire "To whom do they come?" and be free."

(silence)

R: Feel free to ask questions or make statements at any time you choose.

SR: Is it true that if you go further back towards the real I, that you become more and more magnetic?

R: When you go back toward the real I, as you put it, you are expanding your consciousness, so you become others. And you're able to say, "Everything, the whole universe, is the Self, and I am that." So the magnetism is only because you have become the trees, the earth, the sky, people. They are all you. There's only the one and you are that. Naturally people would be attracted to you, for they feel themselves in you.

Oh, someone asked me to say something about the transcripts. Most of you see me about four or five hours a week, and to stay on the path, keep reading those transcripts that we give out. It's like being together. As you read those transcripts you will keep remembering what to do. The proper way to read them is to go through the transcript once, completely. Then, preferably before you go to sleep, to read paragraph by paragraph, pondering each paragraph, falling asleep as you contemplate what you read, so that you can assimilate and digest the words. Then it's like we're together all the time. There will always be transcripts here for you. Feel free to pick them up. They're free.

SL: Does anyone have a copy of a transcript that when Robert describes his life, I don't have that one. Can anybody get back to me?

R: I think I know the one that you're talking about. (SK: Yeah I think it's number 14, I'll make copies of it.) Isn't that the one Alan made up?

SL: I'll make copies if you bring it to me. If anyone else would like one, who else would like one? (SJ: I think everybody would.)

R: Well who took the copies over here? (SM: Everybody did.)

SL: Well how many people need them then? (Show of hands) I'll make 10 copies then.

R: Dana did you bring anything to read? (SD: I'm sorry Robert I can't help you I didn't bring anything to read.) Okay. If you find interesting literature to read, then feel free to share it with us.

SL: Lee can I advertise the fact that there are copies of your poem now on one sheet, and many people who weren't here on Sunday didn't hear it. It's really an exquisite poem.

SM: It's going to be put out in a transcription. Fred did you start it? Lee is going to put it out in transcription, on Sundays transcription, and he's going to make out forty copies. Is that right Lee? (SH: Umm umm.)

R: We have a lot of talented people here, poets, writers, mystics, musicians, singers, all kinds of people.

SG: Robert, what are the most common pitfalls or tricks of the mind when somebody is doing self-inquiry? Have you noticed some that your students refer to you?

R: Well, the main one is the mind will make you think it's real. It will tell you after a while, "Why are you wasting your time doing this? You could be busy doing something else, getting drunk, going to a movie, watching TV, going bowling. Why do you waste your time with self-inquiry?" And then it will also tell you, "Look how much time has elapsed. And nothing has happened to you yet. Give it up. Go back to your old way of life."

Your mind is not your friend. It will bring up all kinds of things. It'll start by bringing up fears, fears of the past, even fears of past lives, and you will wonder what's going on. You will see black spaces in your meditation, sometimes, and you will be frightened. You may see all kinds of negative conditions taking place in your mind, and you will be encouraged to stop asking for a while. Always remember, most people have gone through this, and the way to succeed is to keep inquiring, "To whom does this come? Who sees this. Who's going through this?" It's always the I. Abide in the I and become free.

SD: So, if you find yourself in the void, or blackness as you said, then you inquire, "To whom this void comes?"

R: Yes. And bear in mind that there is nothing that can hurt you. There are no devils, no demons, no anti-Christ. All of that is mental. And by inquiring "To whom does it come?" they disappear.

SK: Why does the mind seem to always go to the negative?

R: Because the mind is trying to save itself from annihilation. It doesn't want to be destroyed. Therefore it will scare you. It will cook up all kinds of schemes so that you will forget about self-realization. After all, who wants to be destroyed? The mind wants to continue its nonsense. Therefore it brings up all kinds of negatives, to frighten you so you'll give up the practice, sometimes. Sometimes it may show you wonderful things also. It will tell you, "You don't need this. Look what you've got! You've got all these beautiful people around you, and you've got everything you want out of life. This teaching is only for negative people." (students laugh) Your mind will do anything. It will play all kinds of games with you. Keep up the self-inquiry.

Many of you like to meditate. This is why I share the I-am meditation with you, for if you have to meditate, the best form of meditation is I am. We can do this right now. You start by making yourself comfortable. And you usually close your eyes to remove obstructions. You begin by becoming aware of your breath. You practice a form of vipasana meditation. You observe your feelings. You observe your breath. You do not try to change anything. You are simply becoming the witness to everything that's going on.

(pause)

All the while you are relaxing deeper and deeper. As you continue to observe, you forget about your body. You watch your thoughts. Then you finally ask yourself, "Who watches? Who is the witness? Who is the observer?" And it comes to you, "I am." With your respiration, you inhale, you say, "I," you exhale, you say, "am," over and over again, with your respiration.

(20 minutes meditation)

R: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace, peace.

Do we have any announcements?

SL: Is this article you said, is it for everyone to take or..?.

R: Everyone to take. Everything here is free. You can take Henry's chair, his furniture anything you like.

SU: Yeah take it all if you like.

R: We have some prashad. Very important that you eat prashad.

(tape ends) [TOC]

HAPPINESS

9th June, 1991

Robert: It's good to be with you again. We have just the right amount of people here today. This is the way I like it. And I know everybody, so I don't have to be careful what I say. I can insult you and do anything I want.

Let me ask you a question. Are you really happy? I mean really, really happy?

Student: No.

Robert: That's an honest answer. Why? Don't answer that. The reason why somebody really is not happy, is because they don't really know yet who they are. That's the only reason. If you really were aware of who you really are, your real nature, happiness would exude from every pore of your body. It's just wonderful. Happiness is. There is really no reason for anyone to be unhappy.

People who are unhappy take the world too seriously. They take themselves too seriously. They take life too seriously. They think things are real, and they're going to last. It makes no difference what position you're in right now. It makes no difference what's going on in your life. It makes no difference where you are, or who you are. The only thing you have to do is come to terms with yourself. When you understand yourself, how can you possibly be unhappy? Your Self is the Self of the universe. Your Self is consciousness. Consciousness is just being conscious of your happiness, being totally conscious. When you're totally conscious you have to be happy. Why? Because what we call happiness is the substratum of existence. It's the underlying cause of everything.

Do not judge by appearances. Do not look at things and believe that's the way they are. Live in the moment. Can you be unhappy in the moment? The only reason, again, you're unhappy is because you're thinking of some condition or situation you don't like. True? You're thinking about something from the past or you're worried about something that's going to happen in the future. That's the only reason you're sad and not happy. But if you learn to live in the moment, if you learn to become aware now, how can you possibly be unhappy? Because now is bliss.

Just don't think. Experience now. If you're really not thinking and you're experiencing now, you're in bliss. Now is reality. Now is ultimate oneness. Now is liberation. But as soon as you allow your mind to tell you, "Oh this is nothing but a bunch of b.s.," why do you think so? You are thinking of a condition, you are thinking of a situation in your life that you don't like. You're thinking of something that's wrong some place, somewhere. And you believe it's going to last forever. We do not change conditions. We change ourselves. As you know, you've changed conditions most of your life, and when you get into a new situation, everything seems rosy. But then after a while you turn right back to your old ways. The novelty has worn off and again you're unhappy. You therefore have to do things to be happy. You have to watch a lot of TV, or go to the movies, or read newspapers, or read books, or get involved in some kind of situation, so you don't think. The only reason you get involved in all kinds of physical, material situations, is so you will not have to think. You will be too busy to think. But when you're alone, when you're by yourself, when there is no one around, how long can you sit by yourself before you become mad at yourself or angry over something, and you turn on the TV, or drink a bottle of beer, or go bowling, or do something.

Even those of you who go look at nature, climb mountains, enjoy flowers and the trees, are doing so because you really believe that the joy, and the love, and the experience you see out there is external to you. So even the beauty of the so called world is erroneous. You're running away from something. You're looking for beauty outside of yourself. You have to learn that you are the beauty. You are the joy. You are the flowers that you enjoy so much. You are the trees and the ocean and the sky and the mountains. It's all coming from you.

If you really realize that you are that, would you run around seeking things? Everything that you want is within you. You are that. Even relationships. You look for relationship with someone so they can make you happy, so you can enjoy their company, so you can love them, so you can be with them. But I can assure you that within yourself is a greater love, a greater joy, a greater peace than you can ever find anywhere else. True. You've got it all. There is nothing, no thing that you need from the outside. And nothing can ever happen to you, because there is no one to make it happen, except yourself.

When you begin to think erroneously, you imagine all sorts of things are going to happen to you. You imagine that you'll lose your job, that you'll be bankrupt, you'll get sick, you'll die from disease. You have all kinds of imaginings. This is the only thing that makes you miserable. If you can only learn to look within, if you can only learn to dive deep within yourself and identify with the Self, merge with the Self, I can't begin to tell you the joy you would feel. There is nowhere you have to go. There is no one you really have to meet. There is no thing you have to do. You simply have to be yourself. You are the joy of the world.

The question arises, is a guru necessary? Is a teacher necessary? Think of that question. The definition of a guru is from darkness into light. "Gu" is darkness and "Ru" is light. That's why when you hear children saying gugu, gugu, they're in darkness. They're experiencing the world, so they say gugu, for they have already subconsciously realized that the world is darkness. But when you say "Ru," that's the light. Therefore a guru should always be a Sage that takes you from darkness into light. How does the Sage take you from darkness into light? By doing certain things in order to make you realize that you are the one. Not by saying, "I am the guru and you are my disciples." By making you see that you are that one that has never been born, that can never die, that is imperishable, that is absolutely sat-chit-ananda. You are that one. And you are that one just the way you are right now.

What do I mean by that? Just the way you are right now? If right now you are thinking about you are the body, or you are the doer, or you've got problems, or there's something wrong, that's not you. But if you're living right now as we just mentioned before, in the now, the eternal now, then you are that one, just the way you are right now, right now, in this split second. If you think, you spoil it, for thoughts are always about the past or the future. Even if it's the past minute or a minute into the future, you're spoiling it, because you're not centered in the now. So you are Brahman just the way you are right now. The guru should be able to tell you that, and make you understand it and see it and feel it.

Not everyone needs a guru. A guru can be a tree, a mountain, a lake, a flower. You've heard this before, but let me explain it. When a tree becomes your guru, the tree is no longer an ordinary tree. It's you. You are identifying with the essence of the tree, which is consciousness. You're not seeing the tree as a tree. It's the beauty of the tree or the mountain, or the lake, or whatever, that first attracts you. But if you just see the tree as a tree, you'll be disappointed, for the leaves drop off, bugs attack it, people chop it down. Yet if you identify with that tree, spontaneously, intelligently, that tree becomes you, and the essence of the beauty is the essence of your beauty. In that respect the tree is your guru. Therefore a guru in the human form is a being whose words in the silence you feel in your heart. And just like the tree, the essence of the guru is your essence. There is only one.

Therefore when a student is sincere in their spiritual practice, when they put that first before anything else, when they continue to work on themselves, automatically the guru within yourself, the essence within yourself, like a magnet, will attract and pull you to a guru outside of yourself, which is really yourself, that can cause you to rise higher and become liberated. You've got to stop seeing yourself as a human being. You've got to catch yourself. Whenever you think something is wrong, someone has hurt you, someone has rubbed you the wrong way, when things do not go right at your job or at home, do not be like the ordinary person and react to it. And do not believe that if you do not react, things will get worse.

I cannot tell you enough that every situation that happens to you is necessary for your growth. There are no mistakes. Everything that you've been through, everything that you're going through, is absolutely necessary for your spiritual growth. If it does not look kosher to you, realize it's your mind reacting. It's your ego reacting. And the way to handle it, is to just observe. Do not get involved by arguing, fighting, trying to change things. Just observe. If you can observe without getting excited, then you've passed that test and you will not have to repeat it. But if you get angry, you get upset, you want to get even, you're always thinking about it, and you have hate and animosity, even though you move away from that situation, you will meet that situation again, and again, and again, until you learn not to react to it.

The universe is a university to educate the soul. Before we can go any higher and awaken, we have to have these little realizations where we begin to feel that there is nothing wrong. There is absolutely no thing wrong. All the good of the universe is yours. There is absolutely nothing wrong, nothing. If you can only live in the moment and feel what I'm saying, everything in this world, in this universe will become you. That's why people like Jesus and others have been able to say, "All that I have is yours," meaning that consciousness is bliss, and bliss is expressing itself as the world, as the universe, as yourself. Live in that bliss. Refuse to acknowledge anything else.

It appears that if you do not acknowledge something, something will go wrong in your life. But you are not made for something to go wrong in your life. There is absolutely nothing wrong anywhere, so how can anything go wrong in your life. Even those of you who believe God is running the show, God couldn't be good and bad, or there would be a capricious universe in which we live. The moon would crash into the sun, wheat would grow one time and roses would grow another time from the same seed, when we live in a capricious universe.

There are not two powers here. There is one power and you can call that God. It is all-pervading. If it is all-pervading, and there is no place where it is not, how can there be a problem? For in order to be a problem there has to be God and something else. But all you've got to do is a little meditation, and you will see that there is only God as everything and there is no room for God and anything else.

So you say, "Where does sickness come from? Where does lack and limitation come from? Where does man's inhumanity to man come from?" I have to ask you, who sees it? Who sees this? Most of the world's populace. Most of the world sees lack, limitation, disease, man's inhumanity to man, and this is why these things perpetuate themselves, and appear to be collectively everywhere in the universe.

But then there are the few of us who step out of the parade. And they hear the beat of a different drummer. That's how it begins. They no longer acknowledge evil as a reality. It may be a fact, but whose fact? Those who are living in the dream world. And again all facts are subject to change. Therefore anything that's a fact can never be reality. Reality presumes that it is the same for ever and ever without change. Harmony is reality. Love is reality. Joy is reality. Bliss is reality. You are reality, just the way you are, not when you think.

When you begin to think, you can argue with me and say, "How can I be reality when I'm experiencing this and experiencing that?" You're thinking, that's why you say this. But if you stay just as you are, in the moment, then you're reality. As you begin to think about these things, you raise yourself higher and higher, and again, because you're cleansing your personal consciousness from all past karma and samskaras, the inner Self, the guru within will lead you to the guru without, and when you sit in satsang you will hear all these truths which are spoken in the silence, and something will happen. You will begin to feel that there is no birth, there is no cause for this universe. It will just come to you. Situations are not what they appear to be. The universe is but a dream. It will come to you all by itself.

For instance, the Rishis of old did not have pen and pencil to write notes, or have tape recorders to record tapes, or have newspapers or books to read. Yet if you read the Upanishads, the Vedas, you will find that these Rishis, these Sages, even though they didn't know each other, all came to the same conclusion about reality. For they were able to dive deep within themselves, and they were able to see that this world does not exist, the body does not exist, the mind is non-reality. They were able to merge their body-mind in their own nature, which is consciousness, absolute reality.

They then became absolute reality, pure awareness. And they wanted to spread the word to the world, but they couldn't, because they realized the world doesn't exist, so there is really no one to spread anything to. Yet when they think of themselves, all others are included. It therefore appears as if there are others. And amongst the others are certain people who are ready to be liberated. And these people sat at the feet of the Rishis, and they became Sages. And that's how the word was spread. Then writing began, and manuscripts were written, and many people were able to come into this truth, through reading and through listening to the Sage.

But now I must tell you the truth, that none of this exists. Everything I told you is for kindergarten students. Why should you have to do anything to awaken when your divine nature is already awakened? Why should you have to strive or overcome conditions or straighten out your life? In the dream that you're dreaming you give importance to your humanhood. That's the only problem you really have, giving importance to your humanhood. And once you do that, every other lie comes into experience. That you got to straighten conditions out, you've got to do this and you've got to do that, but they're all lies. Consciousness has nothing to do. Absolute reality is absolute reality just the way it is. It doesn't have to practice any sadhanas, chant any mantras, or do anything. Why not awaken now? What are you waiting for? Make up your mind that you're going to awaken right now, and allow your mind to turn into your heart, which is pure awareness. Do it.

Some of you are still asking, how do you do it? Through silence, experiencing the moment, the now, the reality. Nothing is happening now. No one is suffering. Now is the only moment you've got. Abide in the now. Everything is perfect right now. Feel It. Don't think about it. Feel it. There are no yesterdays, there are no tomorrows. All of your so called sins have been transcended. No past and no future. You are fully alive now. Right now. Enjoy.

(silence)

Remember as your mind starts thinking, grab hold of it by observing it, and go back to the now. Whenever you float away in thoughts, keep remembering to catch yourself.

(silence)

There are many of you allowing your minds to run away. Stay in the moment. There is no thing happening in the moment. The moment is eternity.

(short silence)

If you're doing this correctly, you should start to feel a joy welling up within you. A joy, a bliss, a peace that you never felt before. Feel it. Nothing else exists except for this peace, this love, this awareness. Call it by any name you like. Doesn't matter. You are that.

(silence)

Anything you want to get off your chest?

SL: It's a nice day, that's a beautiful song. (R: Good. That's a nice remark.)

R: We have a small group here today, so you can ask a question that you've been holding in and nobody will know about it.

SB: Robert I think this is an insect world.

R: An insect world? What do you mean by that? (SB: Well by just observing people including myself they act more like insects. Running all over each other...) What kind of insect would you like to be? (SB: No I wouldn't like to be one but I just observed that...) A grasshopper? (SB: I like the ants crawling all over this...) That's how you see it. (SB: That's the way they act. If you ever drop down to see it you would notice it.)

R: But then you should ask yourself, "Who sees this? To whom does this come? Who's the one that thinks that everybody is an insect?" And "Why do I think that?" Because you are identifying with man's inhumanity to man. You're not seeing God, you're not seeing reality, you're not experiencing consciousness, you're experiencing the opposite. So you feel that everybody's an insect crawling over the top of one another.

It's as if you're having a dream and you believe the dream is true. But if you ever woke up you would realize it's not so. So it is with you. You are seeing these insects because you are thinking it's a rough world, people are this way and that way. But who sees that? We usually see what we are. So you must be the chief insect. (laughter) When you see other insects crawling all over. But know the truth about yourself and you will know the truth about everyone else.

(short silence)

SK: Robert just wanted to say that our 17 year old kitty cat is dying right now so I'd like to ask everyone if you could just add a little prayer on her behalf right now. And in your prayers when you pray ... because she's going downhill fast and I'm sure every little bit would help.

(short silence)

R: Kerema I can tell you from the bottom of my heart that your kitty cat is in good hands and there is nothing to worry about. Do we have announcements?

SM: Can we read this? (R: Yes.) It's called, "Don't Quit."

When things go wrong as they sometimes will.

When the roads you're trudging seems all uphill.

*When the funds are low and the debts are high.
When you want to smile but you have to sigh.
When care is pressing you down a bit.
Rest you must but don't you quit.
Life is queer with it's twists and turns.
As everyone of us sometimes learns.
And many a fella turns about when he might've won if he stuck it out.
Don't give up thou the pace seems slow.
You may succeed with another blow.
Often the goal is nearer than it seems to a faint and ... man
Often the struggler has given up.
When he might have captured the victors cup.
And he learned too late when the night came down.
How close he was to the golden crown.
Success is failure turned inside out.
The silver tint of the clouds of doubt.
And you never can tell how close you are.
It maybe near when it seems afar.
So stick to the fight when you're hardest hit
It's when things seem worse that you mustn't quit.*

SM: And here's another little poem on the end called "How to Count."

*Count your blessings and save your crosses.
Count your gains instead of your losses.
Count your joys instead of your woes.
Count your friends instead of your foes.
Count your smiles instead of your tears.
Count your courage instead of your fears.
Count your full years instead of your name.
Count your kind deeds instead of your mean.
Count your health instead of your wealth.
Count on God instead of yourself.*

SM: I think that's beautiful Robert, thank you. And I have one other announcement to make. All of you who like Davids music so well, I know I do and I have some tapes available with the words of the tapes written on the inside. And we'd like to sell them for ten dollars a piece. If any of you are interested please contact me. They are beautiful, I know I like them.

R: You want to say something about another lesson? (SK: No.) Kerema and Ed put together another lesson. This is really a good one, so if you want to make copies of it, let me know and I'll give you one. If we each make ten copies we can bring them back here next week and everyone can get one. So if maybe four or five people can make ten copies. If you want you can come over and get one, Mary?

Don't all come up. Two more left. Give this one to Lee.

SH: That's special for Lee.

SB: Could you announce Josephines' phone number?

R: Oh yeah, Josephine wants to come here but she needs a ride. So anyone who would like to pick her up, let us know. Where does she live? (SB: She lives up in the ... near Laurel canyon or lookout mountain up on the top of the mountain there.) Anybody who comes that way, you can have the phone number and go and get her. (SB: Call her up and she'll give you the directions. Even if you could pick her up like once a month or ... it doesn't have to be every night.)

R: These transcripts by the way are for your own personal use and you can share them with your friends. But as you know I don't have ambitions or goals, so please don't send these to radio stations or TV stations. I got a couple of calls as a matter of fact yesterday I got a call from Ramana ashram in India. They received one of these lessons from somebody and now they want me to run around the Krishna centre and do all kinds of weird things. Which I would rather not get involved with. (SB: Ramana ashram wants you to run around the Krishna centre?) Yeah. A guy by the name of Reddy called me. He said he remembered me when I was there 35 years ago. And he wanted my address also. So when they come over with a group they can stay at my house. (laughter) We're not prepared for things like that here. Please don't send them to strange people.

SE: Everybody in spirituality's strange.

R: I know. You're right. So don't send them to anybody. (laughter) We're not prepared for anything like that. To run an ashram. And of course I don't want to go on any TV program or have any radio discussions or do anything like that.

What else shall we talk about.

SE: Talk about death.

R: There is no death, there is only life. So there is really nothing to talk about. Death is a lie, who dies? Only the ego.

SB: Does the cat have an ego?

R: The cat has it's own ego, sure. (SB: Can an animal get realization?) Of course. Everything can get realization because everything is already realized. (SB: What's stopping the animal then?) Nothing. (SB: Are they realized?) Everything's realized in reality? The leaf, the cockroach, everything is realized. (SB: It's only the human being has that's in trouble huh?) The human being is part of everything. The human being is not in trouble. You're separating yourself. There is only consciousness and the world exists as consciousness. Therefore everything that exists is consciousness. (SB: So even the mind doesn't separate us?) Nothing separates us. There is no separation. It's all false belief. All separation is false belief. When I speak of oneness everything is incorporated. Animals, insects, trees, oceans. Everything is God, so everything is realized. There are no exceptions, there is only one and you are that.

SM: So Robert instead being sad when there's death and that goes for animals and people we should kind of - not rejoice but be glad that the soul or whatever has gone on to realization?

R: No we don't have to be glad and we don't have to be sad. Just be. The only reason we have other thoughts and other emotions, glad and sad is because we separate. They're here and we're here. If we were able to see oneness then we would realize that everything is us and there is no death, there is eternal life. Death is a misnomer, nothing dies.

SH: Things change, there is continual change?

R: To whom? (SH: To anybody who wants to look.) The person who sees change is the person who believes they are the body. When the body doesn't appear any longer there is nothing to change. As you see yourself you see the world. So as you see yourself change, you're getting older or you're getting smarter. Then you see everybody else changing also. But when you realize that you are unchangeable, you've always been the same and you are the same, you're like the chalkboard. Then all of your images are just imposed on the chalkboard. (SH: And there is nothing appearing or disappearing on the chalkboard?) The chalkboard, things appear, things disappear and you appear to appear. (SH: Appear to appear but don't actually?) They don't actually appear they just appear to appear. And then they appear to disappear. So on the chalkboard there is a picture of you as a baby, than that's erased, disappears. Then you're a teenager, that's erased. Then you're growing up, that's erased. Then you are like you are now, so that's erased. But the chalkboard never changes. So are you the chalkboard or are you the change? (SH: I'm the whole bowl of wax.) That's right, true and all is well. (SH: I think you have a point there.) Points on my head. (laughter)

SY: I'd like to share something. (R: Sure.) I have a seven year old daughter who likes to occasionally bring up the question of death. And it's usually when she's falling asleep at night, she gets into these thoughts. She said, "I think maybe it's a relief when you die, get out of this calf muscles and this tight skin." And then she said, "There is one thing you can never get rid of." And I said, "So what's that?" And she said, "Your heart."

R: Umm. That's clever. Where'd she learn that?

SY: She comes with it. She was talking about last night how she thought it was pretty silly how we celebrate birthdays. She didn't see the point of celebrating the day we were born. And then she talked on and on about it a little bit and then she said, "Well I guess it's good to celebrate our joyfulness."

R: Sounds like a good kid. How about the rest of your kids? (SY: They're all the same.) How about your husband? (SY: He's good too. I think he's any problem.) Good, you mean you'll hold on to him for a while?

SN: When you wanted to celebrate Ramana's birthday at the ashram. Ramana said the same thing about birthdays. He says it's ironic that we celebrate a day of birth because actually it's kind of like a day of death. The day of birth that we think we're separate is kind of like suicide. It's the birth of the ego, but it's the death of the Self. So why would anyone want to celebrate that? That's what Ramana said. (R: True.)

SL: Because you get presents. (SY: Who wants presents?) (laughter) And everybody gets together and wishes you well.

SH: And say you don't look a day older than you look in ten years. (laughter)

R: As long as you believe that you are the body you can celebrate birthdays. Because if you believe that you are the body and you don't celebrate your birthday, then you'll be sad. (SH: Really?) True. Won't you? (SH: Yeah.) In other words you can't tell yourself, "I'm not going to celebrate my birthday." But you haven't received your realization yet because then you will be thinking about your birthday anyway. You'll be thinking you're a year older and if you celebrated your birthday you would've gotten presents. So you'll feel upset. Ramana was able to say that because he was in a different category. This is what I mean when I say sometimes, "We shouldn't fool ourselves." Do not make yourself suffer. For instance when I tell you that nature, the trees, the mountains, the oceans are within yourself and you don't need to go anywhere. This is true if you can experience that, but if you can't experience that yet don't lock yourself up in your room and refuse to look at anything or acknowledge anything and keep saying, "I am the Self." You'll go mad. Do what comes naturally. Enjoy everything until the time comes when you can enjoy yourself.

SE: I think you ought to open an ashram in India. (SH: Ed is going to get you in an ashram one way or another. (laughter) We've got you heading for an ashram Robert. You're sure gonna need it.) Get one in the mountains about 8 or 10 thousand feet where it's nice and cool. Twenty acres, ten houses.

R: Whatever has to happen has already happened and we just have to sit back and watch it unfold. Any more comments?

SB: Robert you said our only freedom is not to react to conditions and I was thinking about that and I thought, our only freedom is not to be I.

R: That's right the I reacts to conditions. So when you're not I nobody's left to react. That is why the first thing you do is to remove the I. (SB: So our only freedom is not to identify with the mind.) By annihilating the I. When you kill the I the mind goes too. (SB: So everybody's doing it wrong? The whole world.) I don't know, forget about the world. (SB: The whole world is doing the opposite.) Never mind what the world is doing, what are you doing? (SB: I'm doing it opposite.) Well do it!

Remember to worship yourself, to love yourself, to pray to yourself because God dwells in you as you. I love you peace. All Is Well.

(tape ends) [TOC]

IF WE ARE CONSCIOUSNESS, WHAT HAPPENS TO THE BODY?

13th June, 1991

Robert: It's good to be with you again, welcome. I haven't seen most of you since Thursday. A long time. All is well.

Someone asked me a question. They asked me, "Robert, you say we're not the body. We are consciousness. If we are consciousness what happens to the body?" Now that's a sort of interesting question. I explained this before. We'll go over it again.

There are not two. There is not the body and consciousness. There is only one. When I say you are not the body. That's what it literally means. You are not the appearance of a body. The body is an appearance, it appears real, but you are really consciousness. In other words what you think is a body is pure consciousness.

An example of that is the water in the mirage. In this instance the sand is consciousness and the water is the body. You see the water in the sand but you don't know it's a mirage. When you try to grab the water, what do you grab? Sand, because the water never existed. But it appears to exist. It looks real and you will swear that there is water there. But once you discover it's a mirage you will never be fooled again. Every time you pass you will laugh, for you will know through experience that's really sand.

And so it is with the body. The body appears as if its real but upon investigation there is no real validity to it. What do I mean, "Upon investigation?"

If you put the body under an electric microscope, you would see vast spaces, tremendous spaces between each cell, between each atom. So the body is not what it appears to be. The body is a bunch of atoms revolving around a central core. It is not how it appears. So we can say, that the body is not so. There is only consciousness.

But do not get confused. Do not think that I am not the body I am consciousness as if there are two, the body and consciousness. The body just does not exist as it appears. So we can say that the body is really consciousness. It is not a body. And if you get confused about this, go to the example of the water in the mirage and say to yourself, "The sand is like consciousness. The water is like the body. The body appears real as the water appears real." But upon investigation you find that the water is sand. So upon investigation you find the body is consciousness. There is no body."

But you have allowed your I-thought to produce the body as it appears. The body is only an I-thought. "I." That is the body and the mind. In order to function, the body makes up a mind. So you have consciousness as the reality, but then for some reason you become mesmerized and you believe in I. Once the I-thought comes into play a body comes into play. In order for the body to function there has to be a mind. The whole thing came out of you. You invented it from the I-thought.

We now go backwards. We begin to intelligently, comprehensively realize that the body is non-existent as it appears. Again if you put your body under an electronic microscope you will not see a body. You would see fantastic spaces between each atom. And the atom is not a body either. Therefore scientifically there is no body. If there is no body, a mind is not necessary, then there is no mind. There is only consciousness.

Unfortunately as long as you identify with your body the whole world and the whole universe becomes real to you. The world is only real because you believe you are a body. Take away that belief and there is no world. You say, "How can I exist when there is no world?" When you make that statement you're speaking from the standpoint of an individual who believes he is the body. When you're talking from that standpoint you can say, "How can I exist without a body? And there is no world, how can I exist without a world?" That is from the body's point of view.

But can't you see if you come to the realization that you are not the body the world is not necessary. For consciousness is not individualized. Consciousness is all-pervading, self-contained, absolute reality. Consciousness is omnipresence. In other words, when you discover, I am consciousness then you become eternal, omnipresent and nothing else exists, but consciousness. There is no room for anything else consciousness is the absolute reality, the pure awareness. There is nothing else. But you have to come to that reality yourself.

When I tell you about this, I am speaking of my experience. I see my body and I see your body, but I see it like water in the mirage. I cannot be fooled, for I realize that I am that I am, sat-chit-ananda. There is only consciousness.

The trick is not to identify with the body and the world. And you do that by realizing, I is the culprit. You follow the I back to its source and then you wake up. And you will wake up as consciousness, not my consciousness or your consciousness, just consciousness.

The question also arises, how can we all be consciousness and yet be individualized to be aware that we're consciousness. It doesn't work that way. You are not individualized. You are one ultimate consciousness and we are that.

The finite mind cannot comprehend this, it's beyond the conceptual thinking. For when you begin to think of yourself as consciousness, some of you tell me that you become dizzy thinking about that. But the idea again is not to think about it. For when you think about it you're using your mind. You have to become aware. The awareness has to awaken within you. And the awareness will tell you that you are consciousness. Without words, without thoughts, without reasoning, without questions. You are pure unadulterated consciousness but not as an individual, as all-pervading, as omnipresence.

Another question people often ask me which is a continuation of this, "Robert when I get tired of practicing atma-vichara, self-inquiry can I say that I am Brahman, I am God, I am consciousness?" Yes, you can if you understand what you're doing. When you say, "I am God," for instance, I am not referring to Robert as God, or Fred as God, or Mary as God. That is from an egotistical point of view. The ego can never be God. What you really mean is, "I am, is God." I am, God, consciousness, they're all the same. So yes you can say, "I am consciousness," or "I am Brahman," or "I am God," but it's wrong to say, "I as an ego am God." Your ego will become more inflated than ever.

And this is the mistake that most of the New Age groups make. Occult groups. They like to go around saying, "I am God." But they're referring to their physical self. Even when they say, "I am not really the body, I am God," they still think "I am" still refers to their mind-body principle. But it will not be correct unless you go beyond that and realize, "I am is God, I am is consciousness, I am is absolute awareness, I am is pure intelligence. I am that." That is correct.

And when you make that statement to yourself you do not stop to evaluate it. For if you evaluate it, you are using your mind to come to a conclusion. And you never come to a conclusion in your mind. The way the mind becomes weaker and weaker, is when you never come to a conclusion. For when you do not come to a conclusion the mind becomes stupefied. It's caught off guard. It doesn't know where it belongs. It loses its power.

You therefore say, "I am Brahman," which actually means, I am is Brahman. That takes you away completely from your body. You do not even think about your body. I am is consciousness, I am is absolute reality, I am is sat-chit-ananda, I am was never born, can never die, I am. You do not think.

Now you can practice self-inquiry. For when you say, "I am," and you keep silent, as soon as the mind begins to tell you anything you practice self-inquiry. You ask, "To whom does this come?" And again you never answer. Again if nothing comes to you, you can again make the statement, "I am is sat-chit-ananda." Nothing else, quietness, silence, no questions. If a question comes to your mind you ask, "To whom does this come?" If something says, "It comes to me?" You follow it all the way through. "Who is this me? Who am I? What is the source of the I?" You hold on to the I and follow it to the heart centre where it disappears. Then you can go right back and say, "I am is God," and go through the same procedure.

If you do this often enough, I can assure you that something within you will give and you will breakdown your bodily thoughts. You will think less and less of the body. As the days pass, as the weeks pass, as the months pass, you will stop concerning yourself for the body.

Many people tell me, "Well Robert you take vitamins and you take care of your body?" And that is true. It is the body taking care of itself. The appearance is taking care of itself. I do not give it any thought. Someone presents me with a bottle of vitamins, I take them. I do not think this is going to make me stronger or this is going to make me feel better.

Let's face it, how long will the body last at all? No matter what you do to it, it's going to disappear one of these days, one way or another. So all the taking care of your body in the world is not going to change predestination one iota. Yet some of us are so wrapped up in the body we think we can prolong life. We think we can make the body live forever.

Would you want your body to live forever? Would you want to go through thousands of years? Watching mans inhumanity to man? Sticking up for your rights? Carrying a chip on your shoulder? Trying to fix things? Most of us can barely stand for eighty years. Imagine if you had to it for two hundred years or three hundred years. It would be unbearable. Therefore there is a time when you drop the body, so it appears. In reality there is no body to drop but that's the appearance. And if you've been practicing and you've been a good boy or a good girl there is no longer a need to take up another body. You exist as consciousness.

But to the extent that you've been involved in your body movements and the belief in the world and the belief in your mind, to that extent you will be drawn back to the earth as another appearance. You will go through the same rigamarole again and again. Until you become non-attached to your body or the earth.

When I speak of being non-attached, I don't mean you're supposed to forget about your body, so-to-speak and let it rot. You do not take a shower and you stink. You think you don't have to eat and you waste away. You do these crazy things like yogi's do, believing they're doing penance. All that is unnecessary.

If you pay attention to consciousness your body will always take care of itself. It will live out the years it's supposed to live and you will find that everything will unfold as it is supposed to. You have to trust life.

As long as you feel that you're tied down to the body and to the world you have to trust life. You can do that much. In other words you have to believe that the universal is your friend. It can do nothing but help you and love you. You have to begin to understand, when you're thinking from a mind-body standpoint that there is one life and that life is God and that life is your life now. The substratum of all existence is bliss and you are that.

If you have to use your mind, this is the way you should use it. Think of those higher things. Think of yourself as absolute joy. That all of your needs are met from within. Everything you need will be supplied from the power within yourself. It's better not to think like this at all. It is better not to think. But if your mind appears to have dominion over you, think of the higher things and the day will come when you no longer have to think of those things at all. You will become pure awareness, until then do the best you can.

Try to stay happy. Do not allow any condition in this world to upset you, make you angry or cause you to react in a negative way. For when you understand the way the universe is setup then you will realize that in whatever you way you react you're doing it to yourself. For there is only one Self. What I think about you and what I do to you, I am doing to myself. This is why I can only love you. I am not interested in what you are, or what you do, I can only love you. This is the way you should think if you identify with the body.

But the best way of course is to inquire, "To whom do all these thoughts come? All these good thoughts, all these disturbing thoughts, who thinks them? Why, I do." Hold on to the I, follow the I to the source. That is the best way.

But if you have to play mind games, begin to feel as if your real nature is God and all is well, there are no mistakes. Everything is in its right place unfolding as it should. Do not feel sorry for yourself. Everything that has been happening to you has been preordained. And the way to get rid of it is not to attach yourself to your problem, but to inquire, "For whom is the problem?" Over and over and over again until you become free.

(silence)

Questions, statements and answers?

SR: Thinking that ethical training or ethical striving for a consciousness identified with its body, possibly is doomed to failure but rather maybe what is needed is for the consciousness to give up its identification with the body and that maybe the only chance that ethical behavior has of being manifested. Could you correct me if I'm wrong?

R: Consciousness never identified with the body to begin with. Consciousness has never identified with the body. Consciousness has not become anything. It is self-contained absolute reality. Everything else has to go, but don't blame consciousness. Consciousness is the reality and there is nothing else. Everything else is an emanation of your mind.

SR: Would you say that there is no chance for moral behavior on this planet until everybody is identified with consciousness only?

R: No you have the whole idea wrong. (SR: What?) Moral behavior, immoral behavior does not exist as far as consciousness is concerned. That is only part of the mind. When the mind goes no thought like that comes to you. That kind of thinking only is developed through the mind. As long as you're thinking with your mind you will think of amoral behavior or moral behavior and the rest of it. When the mind becomes transcended no question like that arises. (SR: So whatever happens is just accepted?) There is no one to accept anything. (SR: Whatever happens is just observed?) By whom? There is no one left to observe. (SR: Whatever happens just happens.) (laughter) There is nothing happening. (laughter) Nothing has ever happened and nothing will ever happen.

SR: Can one keep maintaining that consciousness and do so called duties in a working world and kind of see that nothing is really happening?

R: Again you're working under the wrong premise. (SR: What?) There is nobody to observe. There is no one to do anything. The doer is eliminated. There is only consciousness. That's it. (SR: So when the boss says do this George, this is your duty today, these three things, what should be experienced?) The body will take care of itself. (SR: Just does it without thinking?) It will do whatever it came here to do. (SR: But it requires the mind to perform the task?) The mind has nothing to do with it. (SR: It just performs the task without thinking?) It's like the power that grows mangoes on the mango tree, that grows wheat, that makes the sun shine. The same power moves your body and takes care of it. You have nothing to do with it.

SR: So even if it's something that ordinarily requires some thinking or some analyzing in this person, in this case, when one is identified with consciousness it just happens without thinking.

R: But there is no one to identify with consciousness. Noone is left, to identify with consciousness. There is only consciousness and the appearance of the body will take care of itself. (SR: Can I say to the boss, who me? I'm not here. Who are you talking with? Who are you? What are you...) From what point of view do you ask the question? From your ego point of view. If you were self-realized that question would never ensue but everything would be taken care of properly. (SR: We should always be seeing the bigger picture?) There is noone left to see any picture. You are still speaking as if there are two. (SR: That's as far as I can go is seeing the bigger picture.) Who sees? (SR: Or being aware of the bigger picture.) Who is aware? Can't you see when you awaken there is no one left to do anything.

SK: So who is it that awakens?

R: Noone, because noone ever went to sleep. (SK: What is it that transcends the ego then?) Nothing there never was an ego to be transcended. The ego never existed. It's just for the sake of talking that we talk about an ego. When you awaken you will realize there was never an ego, there is no mind, there is no world, there is no universe, there is no God, there is only that which has always been and you are that.

(silence as tape ends) [TOC]

JNANA, SIDDHIS AND SPIRITUAL HEALINGS

16th June, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. Happy fathers day.

SH: Thanks dad.(laughs)

R: Thank you. I think it's awfully funny. I was talking to Tom driving up here. After last mothers day we had a little discussion, what comes first in your life. So this time I received a few calls from people apologizing for not being able to come because of papas day. Never feel as if you're obligated to come here. You are a free soul. Your heart will always tell you what to do. I do not give you karmic debits for not showing up. Go where you like. Do what you want. Be happy.

I think we'll talk a little bit about Jnana, siddhis and spiritual healing. Many people ask me, "Robert, how come Jnanis never get involved in spiritual healing, nor cause miracles to occur? Why don't they use their powers, like Sai Baba, to produce verbuti, necklaces, rings? Why don't they heal people like Jesus did?"

Now that's a pretty intelligent question. First of all you have to remember what a true Jnani is. The word Jnana and Jnani have been used very loosely in this age. A person who practices bhakti is a bhakta, devotion and devotee. So it's easy to say, "I am a bhakta," no matter what level of consciousness you're on. But when you come to Jnana, it's completely different. You can't say I am a Jnani if you're practicing Jnana. A Jnani is a sacred word. It implies that you have transcended the universe, that you are no longer your body or mind phenomena. You are totally liberated. And of course if you were, you would not say that I am a Jnani, for there would be no one left to say that. You would remain silent.

When we speak of such things as spiritual healing, and we try to compare Jnanis to people like Sai Baba, Jesus and others, where we'd be better off if we would not compare at all. Every teacher has their place, and every teacher did what they were supposed to do. Those of us who are aspiring Jnanis should not even think of those things. We should not have concepts or preconceived ideas of what somebody is supposed to be or not to be. We should rather practice self-inquiry or becoming the witness, spend our time doing that rather than comparing teachers and trying to understand why a Jnani acts the way he or she does.

The answer of course is very simple. There is no one home. No one is left to perform miracles. When you perform miracles, it is an emanation of the mind. Miracles are in the mind. There has to be a subject and an object. There has to be a doer and something to be done. Immediately you can see it has nothing to do with Jnana. A Jnani is totally free of those things. Yet it is true, when devotees think of the form of the Jnani grace begins to flow. The grace is already flowing, but the sincerity of the bhakta, the strong desire for devotion, love and freedom, pick up the Jnanis grace and he also becomes free.

This is why it is written in the ancient scriptures, in the Upanishads, in the Vedas, that the words and the silence of a Jnani is more powerful than what you consider God to be. For God is unmanifest grace. Shiva, the Self, is unmanifest grace. But the Jnani is a channel through which the grace flows. And again those devotees who put realization in their lives first, they want it more than anything else in this world. They want it so badly, they don't want it. They want it as bad as wanting food or water. Then they become silent and the grace begins to flow by itself. Here's a story that explains what I'm talking about.

There was once a sadhu who was totally destitute, very, very poor. And on top of that he had cancer and was wasting away from cancer. For years he had prayed to God, "Oh God, if it is my karma to have these things going wrong in my life, please give me the strength to be able to bear it. I don't care if you remove them from my life, but just give me the strength to be able to bear it." This is sincere prayer. This is how you should pray. Not to pray for something to be taken out of your life, not to pray for enlightenment, not to pray for things, but to pray to be able to have the courage and the strength to go through whatever situation you're going through.

Anyway, after doing this for many years, God finally heard his prayer. One night he had a vision. God came to him and said, "You have been very sincere. You're a true bhakta, and I will abide in your request. I will send someone to see you. Do whatever he tells you to do and you will be free." The sadhu opened his eyes, he couldn't believe it. And the next morning he waited for someone to show up. Finally at about 9 a.m. there was a knock on the door. He opened the door and there was a great Sage standing there. He was able to feel that this was a real high evolved Sage. And the Sage looked at him and he said, "I have two bananas here. One banana is to take away your poverty, and the other one is to heal your cancer. But you must follow these instructions. Eat the first banana at 11 o'clock, and eat the second banana at 11 p.m. And he left.

The sadhu was so happy, so overjoyed. He couldn't wait for 11 o'clock to come. At exactly 11 o'clock he ate the first banana, and he sat down in meditation. 12 o'clock came, 1 o'clock, 2 o'clock, 3 o'clock, 4 o'clock, nothing happened. He was getting disappointed, and he turned on the radio. He had a little radio. The day before he had bought a lottery ticket and they announced the winning number, and it was his. He had won 50 million dollars. He was overjoyed. Now he couldn't wait for 11 o'clock to come, 11 p.m.

And about 10 o'clock there was a knock on the door. He opened the door and there stood a disheveled old man, totally emaciated. He appeared as if he had not eaten for about a month. He was in rags about to drop dead. He held out his hand, "Food please, food," and the sadhu didn't know what to do. His only possession of food was the banana. He was thinking to himself, "What should I do?" I am supposed to eat this banana at 11 o'clock, but here is another human being who is dying from want of food. Surely God would think that he comes first. So he gave him the banana. And the old man left.

He went to sleep that night, and God appeared in the dream. He had another vision. And God said, "Well, did you follow the advice of the Sage I sent you?" The sadhu explained what happened, and God said, "You fool! You just gave away your one chance to be healed of cancer. The old man who came to see you, if you had let him die, his karma would be finished. For he was once a great king in a previous life, and there was a famine on his land. He hoarded all the food in his castle. He allowed all of the people to die. They begged him for food, but he wouldn't give them any. He saved it for himself and his family. He had plenty to spare. Because of this he came back in this life as a beggar. He spent his whole life begging for food. He was always hungry because he never got enough. He began to realize the truth, why he was a beggar, and he had turned within. He was about to drop the mortal coil and become free. But you interfered and stopped the process. Now you will be very wealthy, but you will shortly die of cancer, and have to go through the whole thing again. You will be born to a family that is sickly. You will develop cancer at an early age and have to remember the truth about this story, to become free and healed once again."

Now the moral of the story is simply this. If you find a Sage that your heart tells you is an enlightened being, you must listen very carefully to his eloquence and silence. You must listen to what he or she has to say in the silence. Even when the Sage speaks, it comes from the silence. The words are really silence.

A true Jnani has no time to go around the country healing people. He spends his time in the bliss of eternity, all-pervading, omnipresent. This means that a person in Japan, who tunes in to the vibration of the Sage, can become healed of a physical problem, and yet the Sage has absolutely nothing to do with it. If he comes to the Sage and thanks him and says, "You healed me Master," the Sage will deny it, for he mentally, humanly, had absolutely nothing to do with it, since he has no mind and no body. But it is the grace that flows through him that can be picked up anywhere in the universe.

Now let's talk about you. Some of you sitting here today believe you have problems, mental, physical, or otherwise. This is the first mistake you're making. For there exists only one power. You can call that God. There are not two powers, God and something else. There is only the one. Your job is to identify with the one. Your job is to understand that there is no room for anything else. If God be all-pervading, omnipresent, where would there be room for mental anguish, or sickness, or lack, or limitation, or anything else. The trees do not want for leaves. The flowers do not fail to bloom.

Look at yourself and see your desires, what you're really looking for. It is only when you take your mind off your humanhood, that something may happen to heal you of a condition that you think needs healing. It's as you begin to understand, "My real nature is absolute reality. I am that. I am pure awareness. Even though I appear to have a body and I appear to think, I know that this is like a mirage, like hypnosis, and the body does not exist." So the abnormality, the sickness, does not exist. The lack does not exist.

The appearance of the world does not exist, and you identify in a simple way with your real Self.

Of course you do that by inquiring, "Who am I? What is the source of the I?" You forget about time and space, for the past and the future are in the now. You do not make it complicated, wordy, intellectual. You become simplicity itself. You simply remember everyday that, "I am not the body-mind phenomena. I have nothing to do with the world. I am really consciousness, emptiness, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda. I am really Parabrahman. I am that."

Just to remember, not to forget, to remember, is the important point. You must remind yourself, as soon as you open your eyes in the morning. Do not think about the world's affairs. The world will take care of itself. The world is unfolding as it should. Do not think about your affairs. As far as you know you are under the law of karma, and the lord of karma, Ishvara, will take care of everything.

So don't even think about those things. Do not think in other words of the world, as manifestations and do not think about the body and its problems, but rather inquire, "To whom does this body come? To whom does the mind come that keeps thinking and thinking and thinking? Who possesses it? I do? But my real I is absolute reality. Therefore the I that appears to have a body and its problems, the I that appears to perceive the world and the universe, must be a false I. Yet where did it originate? What gave it birth?"

Then you can think of the power source, the spiritual heart on the right side of your chest. If you desire, you may see a picture of your deity that you respect, in the center of the ball of light on the right side of your chest, whether it's the Buddha, or Moses, or Jesus or whomever. And you can watch the I as it comes out of that center and goes up to your brain. And then all of a sudden you identify with a body and the world comes into being. And the mind appears to sustain it all.

That's when you catch yourself. You reverse the process. You watch the I returning from the brain. You abide in the I. You hold onto the I. You follow the I-thread. You trace the I as it returns to the spiritual heart center and disappears. Then you keep silent. You just keep totally silent. If thoughts do appear you inquire, "To whom do they come?" and you keep silent again. As you practice this every day, day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year, something will give. Something has to give, and you will become free. Free in the silence.

(silence)

Shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace, peace.

Any questions you would like to ask?

SB: Robert before your enlightenment, what disposition were you in. Were you established spontaneously in silence without any teachings?

R: Since I was born, the appearance of birth I always felt different. I always felt that I did not belong in my body. I never realized what was happening but I felt out of place. As if I was carrying a load and I had sporadic realizations where I lost consciousness and when I opened my eyes hours had passed. It's only when I was 14 years old and had that experience of merging in the Self, that I realized that there is only the Self and there is nothing else. (SB: Were you without thought, were you Self abandoned, light, did you abandon the mind generally?) No not really I was still with thought. I functioned like everybody else, but I was aware that that was not me. (SB: So you were like the witness?) Sort of. I didn't know what it was. I felt that I didn't belong in my body but I didn't understand what was happening. (SB: So you were more focussed in consciousness then you were identified with thoughts, is that true?) Both. The thoughts were, who am I? Without using those words. And I always used to think, why was I born? What is the purpose of life? I'm a child, I'll grow older then I'll die when I'm old, can this be me? And then I would forget about it for a while and be like everybody else. But then it would come back by itself and sort of haunt me, that I did not belong to the world and here I am.

SL: Robert those of us who are allegedly living a creative life and who have been trained and praised for good imaginations, find it very difficult to stop images and flights of fantasy and romantic notions about this teaching from flooding the mind?

R: Do not try to stop anything. Simply inquire, "To whom does this come?" Always go back to the inquiry. (SL: Continuous.) Continuous. "Who thinks these thoughts? What is their source? To whom do all these thoughts come?" Never let a day go by when you do not do that and as you persevere, something will begin to give, ultimately. (SL: It is a strange feeling or something that happens?) To whom is it strange? (SL: Yeah.) All these things you have to inquire. "Who has the strange feelings? Who feels this way? Who feels that way? To whom does this come?" And as you do the thoughts will come less and less. And the space between the thoughts will expand greater and greater everyday.

SL: And then those of us with a practical nature, do also wonder, what is the actuarial percent of having this happen? I just read somewhere that there is just so few people who make this?

R: Never mind what you read. There are all kinds of stories about all kinds of things. Keep your mind on yourself. Abide in the I. You are unique in your own individual way. Do not compare with anyone, be yourself. You can read ten different books and they will give you ten different ways of doing things. Dive within yourself, go deeper and deeper everyday and I can assure you something will give and you will eventually become free.

SB: Robert is there a stage I've read about bhaga-samadhi, is there a stage that your consciousness is so identified with itself that even the objects of the world are out shined and they disappear in consciousness. That is called bhaga-samadhi.

R: Yes. When the objects of the world totally disappear, then you will be left without a body. There will no longer be a need for your body. (SL: It's called translation.) Then you will be dead. (SB: But even with the eyes open, the objects supposedly ... being so identified with consciousness the objects appear only... I mean there's no objects they are out-shined and there only is consciousness.) What is consciousness? If there is only consciousness what is it? Who is to experience it? As long as you still have a body as it appears you will always observe the trees, the people, the flowers, the world. But you will not be attached or fooled by those things. (SB: Isn't there a point though if you're so absorbed in reality that the physics of everything changes and you're out shining images.) You are aware, when you take the case of the chalkboard. That you are like the chalkboard and the images are superimposed on the chalkboard. And then they are erased and new images are drawn. Then they are erased and new images are drawn... (SB: Isn't it a radiance, a certain kind of a light, radiance?) You go beyond the light and the radiance. The radiance and the light is of the mind.

SB: That's like the outshining like if you're so absorbed in the radiance that even the objects just absorb into the radiance and they are out shined in the radiance of that consciousness?

R: That's all of the mind. (SB: Is that right?) That's all of the mind. Pure consciousness can never be comprehended by the finite mind. There are no words to describe it. There is nothing you can do or say... (SB: So it's not even light?) It's beyond light. (SB: So in that state if your eyes are open the objects still appear?) The objects appear as appearances, but they still appear or you would leave your body. (SB: Is there a state where the objects dissolve in light with your eyes open?) When you leave your body. But as long as you appear to be carrying a body or it appears to be doing that you'll see objects. But you will know that they are not objects. They are like water in the mirage, they appear to be real but they are not. And you can't be fooled by anything in this world. This is why a Jnani loses all concept of fear. There is nothing that can frighten him. There is nothing anybody can do to him or her. They're free, totally free. But they see objects. (SB: But the funny thing about the image is everything that we're sure of is real, is absolutely unreal.) Acquire that experience and see it for yourself.

SG: Has anybody who as heard your teaching become enlightened?

R: Can you say that again? (SG: Has anybody who has heard you or followed you become enlightened, that you know of?) Yes.

SE: Last week I asked Robert, a tree, how the hell can you say that that's unreal, that it's an illusion and Robert said, "It's like a dream, when you wake up what happens to the tree." So this morning I was kind of agitated so I called Jean Dunn, up north in Packerville who was Nisargadatas student. I said, "Jean what do you mean that the world is unreal." And she said, "Well it's like a dream, when you wake up what happens to the dreamworld?" And I said, "I've heard that before." And I said, "What's real then?" And she said, "The absolute is real." And I said, "How do you know the absolute?" And she said, "Find the sense of being, the source of being inside of yourself, the Self and just dwell in it. And keep dwelling in it." And I said, "I have been doing that." And she said, "Well it worked for me." (laughter)

But it seems like the Jnanis get together and coordinate their stories. (laughter)

R: Yeah. I told her he was going to call you in a couple of minutes. (laughter)
(general talking and laughter)

SB: Maybe it's so hard because it's so extremely simple. Maybe the hardest thing in the world is to be the infinitely simplest...

R: Of course, all you have to do is awaken now. Where you do not think of a minute ago, or a minute from now. You just awaken. The past and the future have become condensed in the now.

SE: Would there be any advantage to having intensives like they have in Zen? Where for a week you do nothing but practice, "Who am I? or "I am?"

R: All these things help but in the last analysis it's between you and yourself. You and I know many people who have been to Zen monks, been Buddhists, been everything under the sun for many many years. And they still haven't realized the Self. This is because they are usually following external procedures. Instead of introverting everything within the Self they are still reacting to outside conditions.

Taking for instance, that a lake, or a tree is so beautiful and you want to be like your tree or the lake. Where in reality the tree or the lake only exists because the mind exists. You're giving form to everything in the universe. Therefore when you become introverted and your mind goes back within the heart, the beauty and the joy and the love that you felt toward the tree or the mountain or the lake becomes the love for the Self. You are that and you're at peace. For you never have to go out again looking for beauty, looking for happiness, looking for joy. You have become a living embodiment of that yourself.

SY: Robert, I'm asking a very mundane question. I was reading here that you were 18 when you went to India? (R: Umm.) Right? (R: 17, 18, yeah.) Along the analogy that you were giving, everyone's heard of sister Theresa helping the pariahs and the... (R: Mother Theresa.) What? (R: Mother Theresa.) What did I say? (SH: Sister.)

SY: Oh I'm sorry I didn't realize it. (R: That's alright, Freudian slip.) Freudian slip, yes. Everyone's heard of Mother Theresa, if all of these poor indigenous pariahs of India came and she said, "Don't bother me, I'm about my own business today, I'm perfecting my self-realization." The question I'm asking is, how come some of the most selfish, egotistical, abominable, someone who's been in Zen or whatever and they couldn't give you a ride to get some food if your life depended on it. And they're so busy doing their own thing. So I understand that you're saying that you have to get in yourself, but there is a difference between... (R: Yes.) ...going beyond the common austerity and helping people out and being so selfish you don't give a darn about anybody.

R: Exactly I've explained this before. Most of the people you're describing are under the erroneous conclusion that they have to only work on themselves and the rest of the world doesn't exist for them. But what I say happens is this, as you work on yourself you become more compassionate and automatically you have service to humanity. You don't really go out of the way, but the people who come into your aura, into your life, you're always of service to them. You become more loving, more compassionate. But you also realize that you are the Self of all. Everybody, everything is an emanation of your own mind.

So when you find yourself and you became alive and awakened then you will include everything and everybody in this world. And you will be an asset to humanity. When you sit in the silence and do nothing. For it encompasses everything and everyone.

Whereas people like Mother Theresa are bhakta's. They're devotional people and it's their karma to spend their life helping like she does. She couldn't stop it if she wanted to. This is why she came to this earth. And yet we're all different karmically speaking. We all came to this earth for a certain reason.

Mother Theresa can never sit in a class like this. She would be looking at sick people trying to help, going around patting everybody on their head, putting bandages on people, putting mercurcom or iodine on everybody. This is her karma and this is good. There is nothing wrong with that at all. This is why it's so important to understand never judge anyone. Compare yourself to no one and compare noone to noone. But ask for the truth within yourself. Pray to God to reveal the truth to you. Where you belong, what you are supposed to do and dive deeper and deeper into the Self. And if you're supposed to help others in this world, to spend your life doing that, you will find a way. And it will happen all by itself.

So leave everybody alone, judge noone but continue to work on yourself until you become free. And then you will realize the truth about the whole thing.

SB: Robert if you remain without thoughts after inquiry will you automatically gravitate to the heart centre on the right side of the chest and feel the Self there?

R: First you have to gravitate to the heart centre before you remain without thoughts. If you do not gravitate there you will have thoughts because the I is in the brain. And it gives you the idea that you are the body, you are the mind and you are the world. Therefore the idea is to make the I go into the heart centre. Then you will be without thoughts. (SB: And do you do have to...) Inquiry. (SB: Inquiry, and do you put your attention in the right side of the chest?) You can imagine that the right side of the chest is like the sun. The light of a million suns, with your favorite deity in the centre. And you can also imagine that the I is going from the brain to the right side of your chest into the mouth of the deity until it's dissolved and assimilated and then keep silent. And every time new thoughts come inquire, "To whom do they come?"

(Attempts to put tape on.)

R: I'll get it right one of these days. (laughter) (SM: Yeah.) (laughs)

R: We have some announcements, I think?

SG: Is Dana still in hospital? (R: No she came back yesterday.)

SE: We have some Jnana orange t-shirts for those who are interested in procuring them. I was thinking of giving them out and there are different ways than that but it would only create trouble. So we decided to sell them for a cost. It will be about six dollars each if you're interested.

Oh yes also I thought it would be a good idea that we start the community meetings that we had had a couple of times when problems arose and they were a nice thing. Maybe we could start one once a month after satsang just to see, you know - things that are going on in our lives, what's going on with practice, what's going on in the sangha, beginning maybe next week. People that interested after satsang?

(agreement with few students)

SM: Last week we had some of the tapes and we sold them all out - I also want to say we have finished our latest transcription and it truly is one of the most beautiful there has ever been. I say that about every one, but it's true. (laughter) In it Robert said, "Everything is in this one." And it's so I have four of them, if I can get four people to. It really is beautiful. It really is. (laughter) I've read it ten times already and I can't get enough of it.

SL: Robert can we also copy of "What is a Jnani?"

R: Where is that? Oh that, sure of course. (SL: Do you just have one copy for me?)

Mary can make some copies and give it... (SB: Who wrote that Robert?) I wrote it.

SM: I made a couple of copies I didn't ask if that's all right. (R: Oh sure.)

SB: Maybe it should be in the transcript, copied right into it.

(general talk)

SM: Robert will like me to set it out on the table. The poem that Lee wrote, I think Dana read it once, Jean read it once. It's a beautiful, beautiful poem.

(general talk between students)

R: We have some prashad. Feel free to help yourself or whatever.

(during prashad Robert plays a song on tape)

(After song is played)

R: We usually do not sell things here but you've all met David and he's a struggling musician and he can use the money.

SB: Robert can we be making progress even though we don't feel we are? (R: Yes.)

SE: Except in your case Bob. (students laugh)

SH: You're the one exception. You just have to give up that's all.

(more general talk, students having fun)

R: Remember to love yourself, to bow to yourself, to pray to yourself, to worship yourself because God dwells in you as you, peace, I love you.

Happy mothers, fathers day, sons day...

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 71

HELPING

20th June, 1991

Robert: (tape starts abruptly) ...because you adjusted the microphone, I have to say something. So, Good evening. (Good evening) How are you? Fine I hope.

SH: All is well. (laughter)

R: Are you sure?

SH: That's what I hear you say.

R: As most of you know, I take walks during the day in the park, especially in the morning. And I meet people, interesting people. There was this gentleman I've been talking to every once in a while. And after about six months of seeing him every once in a while, speaking to him, I gave him some of the transcripts. He approached me this morning and told me he was a producer in Hollywood, of some sort, and he can get me on the Steve Edward's show and also Larry King. So I mean, I really didn't know what to say. After reading the transcripts, talking, he believes I should become famous all over the world, and everybody should know about me.

So I asked him, "Why?" He answered, "So you can help others. People never heard of you before and will be able to hear of you, and they will be helped." I said, "Why?" and he claimed it was good for everybody. So I said, "What's the point?" and I don't know what he told me. I can't remember. But we'll spend the remainder of the time talking about this.

Do we really help people? If you look at the world, the dastardly things that are going on in this world, so-to-speak, people have been helping people since the beginning of time, and the world is worse than ever. Should we really help people?

First we have to begin to understand that everything is predetermined anyway, and whether we are chosen to help others is no concern of ours. If your karma dictates the fact that you are to help others, you will not be able to stop. You will become like Mother Theresa, and you will obey the karmic laws, whether you like it or not.

But as far as a Jnani is concerned, there are no others. Others are merely himself. So by being in a body, so-to-speak, a Jnani becomes an asset to all of humanity.

For the average person, they should never even think, "Should I, or shouldn't I help others?" but they should make it a policy to help whomever is in need, if they can, and not think about it. This is your karma in any event. It has been preordained again, every step you're going to take in this body, in this plane of existence. You should take no concern about this. But if the chance arises, when you have an opportunity to help other people, by all means do so.

But a Jnani has transcended that question. A Jnani is not of this world, even though he or she appears to be in the world. They are omnipresent, all-pervading, so their existence is a benefit to all mankind. Just their very existence, because they are omnipresent, omnipotent, omniscient.

If a person advertises himself or herself, makes TV appearances, goes on the radio, writes a lot of books and so forth, you can be assured that person is not a Jnani. That's the first clue to let you know. Why? There has to be a personal I to do these things. In a Jnani there is no personal I. The personal I has been killed. So how can the Jnani act like a personal I, and make public appearances and do all these things? Think about that.

There is no ambition left in a Jnani. There are no goals. A Jnani never goes out of their way to teach classes. And the least thing they want to do is to build up the classes, to attract hundreds of people. It's not necessary. Those who are so karmically inclined, those who have paid the price in a previous life through meditation, through concentration, through searching in a previous life, will automatically be attracted to the Sage. Nothing will be able to stop it.

Everyone in this group who keeps coming back over and over again to satsang, is a being who has perfected themselves in a previous life. They have gone through the stage of effortless mindfulness, and now they're ready to go all the way. That doesn't say it's going to take one lifetime, but they're very advanced. And whether you like it or not, this is the truth about you.

There's more going on in your consciousness than you can ever imagine. Why do you think you come here? You think you voluntarily come here, but you don't. You are compelled to do so. This is your time. So you see the Jnani does not go out looking for students. The Jnani does not go looking for admiration, for a following, or to build a movement. But the Jnani remains where he or she is, and those students who are ready will be attracted like a magnet to iron. Even if the devotee lives in China or in Japan or in Africa, the vibration of the Jnani is such that he or she will be attracted, and sooner or later will come in contact with the last stage of their life, which is the Sage.

You therefore have nothing to think about, nothing to plan, nothing to worry about, nothing to wonder about. You just have to be yourself, and everything will take care of itself. Isn't that wonderful? You don't have to wonder at home, "Shall I go to see Robert this week or shall I go to a movie?" There's something in you that has prearranged everything. You have nothing to say about it. So why try to make decisions?

Many of you are learning that when you keep still, and sort of get yourself out of your way, things couldn't be better for you. You're finding peace, happiness, freedom. You're beginning to see that all is well and you're no longer concerned about the world situation, about man's inhumanity to man. Those things are important of course in this world of illusion, but you begin to look at it from a different angle, different perspective.

You know it's virtually impossible to change the world no matter how men have tried. The world is still unfolding as it should. There will always be man's inhumanity to man. There will always be clashes of personality, conflicts, wars. This is only natural on this illusory plane of existence. For if you understand that this is a plane of duality, how can things be one way?

Can you imagine a world that is totally peaceful, where everyone loves one another? It's idealistic and we wish in our deluded state that it were true. Yet this is not the nature of this planet. This planet is supposed to be as confusing and as confounding as it appears. Everything is supposed to be the way it is. Just to understand this, is an advanced state. For you realize you're not saying that you're not going to help others. You're realizing you cannot help others, even if it appears that you can. It's paradoxical.

You appear to be helping others when you help a homeless person, let's say. You give a homeless person a good meal. You put him or her up for a couple of days. You give them $50 in their pocket, and they go their way. A few days later the person is right back where they were before, yet you have done what you're supposed to do.

This is why when you do help anyone, you shouldn't think about it. You shouldn't ask, "What's going on?" You shouldn't even wonder if you did the right thing. You are doing what you're supposed to do, and then you drop it and forget it. You do not become a part of the karma game. You have risen above this. And as you become peaceful, as anger slowly drops from your consciousness, as all anxiety and bitterness and hate are transcended, and you begin to feel a wonderful peace, you begin to notice that those people who come into your aura also feel peaceful, feel harmonious. You're not doing anything voluntarily. You have just risen. You have risen to a higher state of consciousness.

A rose need not declare, "I am fragrant." By its very nature, it is fragrant. So you need not declare, "I'm doing a good deed, I am helping others." By your very nature you can't help, helping others, by your very presence. And as you continue to unfold you notice that you're getting less and less involved in the games of this world. You're playing less and less games. You leave others alone to an extent. If you can't say a good word, or help in any way, you say nothing, and by your very silence you have blessed someone else.

When you actually become your real being, when your real nature of awakening comes, you begin to realize that there's nothing left to do, there is no one to help, for you see that the whole universe is an emanation of yourself. And as you begin to go even further, you are no longer yourself, with a small s, but you are the universal Self, and even as you look at the world, you see the Self.

Again this is paradoxical. A Sage looks at the world, he or she sees everything you see, but yet they look right through everything. They see consciousness, absolute reality. It's like a burnt rope. A Sage realizes that the rope is burnt and it is of no use to anyone, whereas the average person looks at a burnt rope and believes the rope is real and can be used. So it is, when the average person looks at the world, everything their senses tell them appears to be real. They identify with all these things. They identify with situations, with persons, with places, with things. Whereas the Sage sees the same thing, but is only conscious of the Self as the universe. Do not attempt to analyze this. Remember the finite mind cannot comprehend the infinite.

This is why it is important to always see where you are coming from. What were you involved in today, as an example? In retrospect go back to this morning. What was the first thing you did when you opened your eyes? You should have been aware that the I-thought has traveled from the heart center to the brain, and now you are awake, and you feel your body and you feel the world. You should not go any further. You should now attempt to work on yourself, where you send the I-thought back from the brain, back to the spiritual center, the spiritual heart. You should immediately attempt to do this.

In other words, you should not continue the game of the I-thought telling you things about your body, about the world. And you should not flick on the TV and watch the world news, for that pulls you further into illusion. But you should immediately begin to inquire, "What happened to the I? Where is the I? Apparently it must be in my head, for I am aware of my body and the world, and I am identifying with it." This is the way you should talk to yourself, and you ask yourself the question, "But how did that I-thought get to my brain?" and you stop.

As you begin to think about this, you are abiding in the I, and if you're really abiding in the I, the I-thought begins to travel backwards. It begins to leave your head and begins to travel backward to the heart. But you have to catch yourself. This is the first thing you should do when you awaken. I know most of you forget. Yet you should have some clue that tells you, "It is time for me to abide in the I. I am not going to allow the I to bring all of these thoughts into my head."

You forget about your work for a moment, you forget about getting dressed, you forget about the time, and you realize the reason you're thinking about your body or about anything else, is because the I-thought has gone into your brain, and it now forms a body and a mind. You begin to see that the mind is nothing more than a conglomeration of thoughts. If there were no thoughts, there would be no mind. Can't you see what you're doing? As you begin to think this way, the I-thought begins to return to its source, by itself.

In other words, you don't really have to send the I-thought back to the Self or to the heart center. You simply have to inquire what the I-thought really is. You'll come to the conclusion it is, after all, only a thought. If the I-thought really does not exist, then my body and the world does not exist. Just thinking about these things, you begin to feel peaceful, happy.

I know you're saying, "Well, I don't have the time to do this every morning. I'm late for work. I've got to get dressed. I've got to eat breakfast." But again I say to you, this is not yoga or meditation, where you have to take time out to meditate and then go about your business. This is the superior method of self-inquiry, and if you just begin to practice this self-inquiry, you will notice that when it's time to get dressed, eat your breakfast and go to work, your body will do this in record time. You will not even be thinking about these things, but yet your body will shower, do what it has to do, and you'll be out of the house and you'll feel great.

This is the difference between self-inquiry and meditation. You are not meditating on anything. You're simply inquiring about your I-thought, and each step will come by itself. You will not have to think about what I'm going to say next. For instance, as you're working on yourself this way and thoughts come to you, something within you will immediately say, "To whom do these thoughts come?" You're not planning this. You have not rehearsed.

And by the way, never rehearse, never plan the night before, what you are going to do in the morning. Unless it's spontaneous, it will not work. Remember this. Self-inquiry should be spontaneous. It should not be a drudgery. It should not be something you planned. You simply begin to look at yourself. You open your eyes when you wake up. You begin to realize that just before you woke up you were in a total state of peace, in a no-thought state. You were in an effortless, no-thought state. But now you have allowed the I-thought to go to the brain, and you're thinking about your body and the world. So the thought comes to you, "How do I get back to the effortless, no-thought state? By abiding in the I. Where did the I come from? Who am I? Surely the I must have a source. That source must be quite a powerful thing in itself, whatever it is."

In other words, I'm assuming that you don't realize that the source is the Self. But just by thinking that the I-thought came out of it, it must be something powerful.

"Then why did the I-thought come out of it? What is the I-thought? I keep calling it the I-thought. It's a thought. There is no I." This gives you a clue. It makes you happy, for you realize you've got nothing to fight. As a matter of fact, some people just become still and they say nothing else. In other words, when you realize the I is a thought you become still, and the I will immediately disappear. There will be no thoughts. You will feel wonderful.

Then you can get dressed and go to work. But the momentum of what you did this morning will follow you through the day. It is true you will get involved in the world, yet you will find that you have time to think of your Self. You will abide in the I. It'll happen all by itself and you will find in your work, whatever you do, you're making the right decisions without thinking, Things do not disturb you. You are at peace with the world. You feel blissful.

Then you can begin to see what I was talking about before. You have no desire to tell people about this. People have to be ready. They have to lift themselves up by their own bootstraps. People have to be prepared to be able to practice self-inquiry, and the preparation was usually made in a previous life. Therefore something tells you it is a waste of time to write books, to go on public television, to try to expand the teaching, to do anything.

You simply live your life in a wonderful way. Everything takes care of itself, and you notice that your consciousness is expanding. It began by thinking of yourself, and now it is expanding to take in the world, to take in the universe. And then you begin to see everything in this universe as an image on the screen, and you are the screen. You never worry again. You never fear anything again. You understand the wholeness of everything, that there are no mistakes, all is well, nothing is wrong.

But you have to do these things every day, especially in the morning when you first open your eyes. That is the time to really work on yourself. If you wait until later, then maya becomes too strong and grabs a hold of you, causing you to get really involved in the leela, in the game of life. But as you work on yourself every morning, the body takes care of itself, the mind becomes extinguished, the ego turns into humility, you become happy. There is nothing you have to do.

And again, your body will do whatever it came here to do, but you have nothing to do with that. You are at peace.

(silence)

Shanti, shanti, shanti, peace.

You can ask questions if you like.

SK: Robert once in the past you - I can't remember when it was — you said the statement, "I think therefore I am." But then you said it should be another way.

SM: I think it was, "I am therefore I don't need to think."

R: Yes, what about that?

SK: I just couldn't remember the phrase of it. Thank you.

(silence)

R: Anyone know any good jokes? (SF: Yeah.) Go ahead. (SF: What did the Zen Buddhist monk say to the hamburger salesman?) I give up? (SF: Make me one with everything.) (students laugh) That's good. (laughter)

(silence)

R: Anymore jokes, comments?

SL: Tracy Ellen said that a rich man can't pass through the eye of a camel with a needle... unclear (laughter)

R: This lady is going to Israel. So she goes over to the ticket counter and she asks, "Do you take dogs?" So the ticket manager said, "Yes we do but they've got to be crated." She says, "Ok." So she crates her dog and brings it to the baggage handlers and says, "Take good care of this dog." And they say, "Okay." And she's real fussy.

Now on the way to Israel there is a lot of turbulence and all the animals get all shook up and when the plane lands, they look into her crate and the dogs dead. And she's out there screaming, "Bring me my dog! Bring me my dog!" So the baggage handlers don't know what to do because they know she'll sue. She's real fussy. They called the manager and they told the manager their story and the manager said, "Heres what we'll do. There is a pet shop across the street and they've got a white poodle just like this dog, so go buy the poodle and replace him, she'll never know the difference."

So they buy the poodle and they take out the dead dog and they put the live one there. And she screamed, "Where is my dog?" And they bring the crate out to her and they say, "Here's your dog lady, see." And they showed her the dog and she said, "This is not my dog." And they said, "Why not?" She said, "My dog was dead, I was taking her to Israel to bury her." (students laugh)

(pause)

We've got prashad to eat. You can pass it this way. You can pass it that way.

(handing out prashad and general talk between students)

[TOC]

Transcript 72

SUFFERING

23rd June, 1991

Robert: It's good being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

Someone in the group asked me to speak about suffering. I don't know if they want me to tell you how to suffer, or how to get rid of suffering. They said say a few words about suffering.

There are only a few words to say. Who suffers? I know some will say the ego suffers. But that is not true. What is the ego? The ego is the I-thought. This I is only a thought. The I does not exist. Therefore the ego does not exist. So who suffers? Your real nature is absolute reality, consciousness. Who is left over to suffer? Consciousness pervades all. There is not consciousness and something else. There is only consciousness. Therefore how can you suffer? What you mean by suffering is that the world is not turning the way you want. Things are not going your way. Does an animal suffer? Even when an animal is sick or dies it is just an experience in consciousness. So no one suffers. We have all been brainwashed from an early age to believe that certain things make us happy, and other things make us suffer. It is the belief, like hypnosis, that makes you think you are going to suffer.

If you think you are suffering because you are dying, that is a mistake. Nobody dies. There is no such thing as death. There is only eternal life, and you are that. Therefore, suffering does not exist. It never existed and it cannot exist. If you live in the now, and you are spontaneous, and you do not react to conditions, how can you suffer? It is only when you react to conditions that come your way that you suffer. As long as you believe you are the body you will have to deal with conditions. When you realize you are not the doer, you are not the body, you are not the mind, there is no one left to suffer, there is no one left to be unhappy. Consequently, you have to identify with reality, and then lose your identity in reality. Then you will never suffer.

As long as you believe you are the body, then the world is also real, the universe is also real, and God is also real. Then you have to pray to overcome your suffering. If you pray correctly, God may have mercy upon you and take away your suffering. But what kind of God is that? If God can take suffering away, he can give suffering. A God like that does not exist.

God, guru and Self are one. You are that yourself. If you cannot accept this you have to deal with the world. Dealing with the world always leads to so-called suffering. That is how it appears.

The I-thought has made you believe there is an ego, a mind, a body, a world, a universe and a God. You have to put up with all those things because you didn't follow the I-thought back to the heart. Do you see that? You won't follow the I-thought back to your heart center. If you do not trace the I, you will always suffer. The I identifies with worldly phenomena.

When you are suffering, you will look for someone to relieve you of suffering. So you look for a guru, or a healer, or someone who will take away your misery. But if you take this approach, when one misery is taken away, another ensues. There is no end to it. Samskaras from past lives will attack you. All kinds of things will attack you from all directions. You will never know what will happen next. If you try to alleviate suffering, you are doing the wrong thing, because you are trying to alleviate something that never existed! You are creating the problem situations.

It is as if you had a tumor on your arm, and the doctor, instead of looking for the cause, cuts out the tumor. Next month it grows back on your other arm. Then the doctor cuts off your arm. It grows on your leg. The doctor cuts off your leg. It grows on your head. And you are no more. The doctor did you a favor.

That's how it is when you look to alleviate your problems. You are playing games. It is all part of the great leela, the maya. You become entangled with maya, playing games with yourself. How should we go about it? We should ignore the pain, the suffering, the problems. Don't deal with them directly. Rather, search for the Self, which is what you really are. When the Self is uncovered, so-called problems and suffering will no longer be there. You can't have the Self, which is all-pervading, and problems. There is no room for both. There is either one or the other. You either identify with pain, suffering and illusion, trying to control things through external channels, or you forget about those things and turn within, diving deep into your heart center where there is peace. The choice is yours. The choice is always yours.

When we hear about healers, such as Jesus or others, we never know what happened to these people after they were healed. How long did they stay healed? From what I understand, after a couple of months, they became worse. Healing is kindergarten activity. Everyone wants to be healed from something. Why? We think we cannot put up with it. We think it is unbearable. Who thinks it is unbearable? What you really have to do is get rid of the thinker, not the problem, but the thinker!

You have been trained from childhood to believe that certain things are unbearable, and unless your life goes a certain way, nothing is right. Think for a moment what would happen if a child were brought up to believe that cancer is good, that it is a blessing. Strive for it. Try to get cancer. If a child believed this it would never suffer, even if it attracted cancer. The mind has ruled out suffering.

So it is with all your pains and problems. They are mental things that seem to be attached to your body. But there is no one who really suffers. When all is said and done, you will still be functioning, without a body or with a body, it makes no difference, and you will be free.

In the meanwhile, you are wasting your energy if you try to alleviate your problems. By your activities you are saying to yourself that the problems really exist. Therefore you have to find a way to get rid of them. Realize that the problem is a figment of your imagination, even though it appears real.

If you think of it as a dream and in it you are dying of cancer and I tell you, "You don't have cancer, you are dreaming about this. Do not identify with the cancer, identify with consciousness, with the Self. Wake up to reality." You tell me, "You're crazy Robert! Look at the tumors on my body. The doctor told me I have five days to live, and you are trying to tell me I am going to be well?" I say, "I am not telling you, you are going to be well. I'm telling you, you are going to wake up. When you wake up, there is no such thing as being well or being sick." But you don't understand what I say to you, and you go to different doctors, taking colonics, going to healers all over the world. What you should be doing is searching for the Self. Then you wake up. It was all a dream. The cancer did not exist. The searching for relief did not exist. The doctors did not exist. I did not exist. You are free.

So it is with your life now. Whatever is happening in your life comes from your mind. Your mind has created the external world, just as in a dream, where the dream is going on within you, and yet it appears external to you. You may ask, "How can the whole world that I am dreaming about be within myself? How can I create the dream?" Yet, you know you do. You won't argue about that.

But when I tell you that you are creating the world as it appears within your mind, you are ready to argue with me, saying, "How can I possibly do that? I cannot do that, the world is there. I see it!" When you are dreaming, don't you also see the world? You see the world just like you do now. You have experiences of it just like you do now.

There is no beginning to your dream and there is no end, is there? You don't begin your dream with Adam and Eve. You just begin dreaming. So it is with this dream. You have attached yourself to an illusion. The world appears real. You make the illusion greater and greater every time you identify with it. Every time you attach yourself to a person, place or thing in an emotional way, you are really saying the world is real. The world becomes more real and you will feel its problems to a greater extent because you have become dogmatic in your views. No one can tell you the world is not real.

You say, "I see the world there!" I always point out you see your dream also. There it is! You respond, "But I wake up from a dream, but I don't wake up from this dream." Who says you don't? This dream just appears to be a little longer. Yet you can awaken before you leave the body, so-to-speak, simply by identifying with the Self, by becoming the Self, by realizing that you were never anything else than sat-chit-ananda, Brahman, pure awareness, emptiness. This is your real nature.

So what do we do? We leave the world alone. We inquire within, "To whom has this come? To whom has this illusion come?" That is what you must do with every problem, with every tummy-ache, with every unhappiness and with everything you see in this world. In other words, who sees this? Who is experiencing this? Of course the answer is, "I am." I am. Who is this I? Who is the I that experiences this illusion? Where did the I come from? Who gave it birth? What is its source?

The word source is important. The I has a source. It didn't come from nowhere. In reality it does not exist. The I is a thought. As you trace it back, you will trace it back to the heart center on the right side of the chest. That is the abode of the Self. It appears as if the I arises from the abode of the Self. That is how it appears. Try to catch it.

You will begin to realize that in deep sleep there is no I. What happened to the I when you are in deep sleep? There is no one to say, "I am asleep." Where did it go? Yet when you awaken you say, "I slept." Where did the I come from?

If you watch it when you wake in the morning, you will notice the I comes out of your chest, and goes to your brain. Then it identifies with the body and the mind. Then the world comes into existence. You then say, "I see the world. I am my body. I am my mind." When you go to sleep at night, just before you fall asleep, you will notice that the I becomes weaker and weaker. It loses its power because it is returning to the heart center from whence it came. Then you sleep.

But what would happen if you didn't fall asleep and the I returned anyway? What would happen then? You would be pure consciousness. You would be like the chalk board on which images are drawn and erased. The chalk board never changes. The images change. If you allowed the I-thought to sink into the chest, into the spiritual center, you would awaken to reality. You would be liberated. You would be awake. That is the real awakening.

This happens by inquiring, "Who am I?" When you inquire, "Who am I?" or "What is the source of the I?" it is like following the I-thread back to its source. You awaken without going to sleep. When you awaken to consciousness you are in a new dimension of life after sleeping, dreaming and normal awakening. This is called the fourth state of consciousness. In that state you are in samadhi all the time. Not nirvikalpa samadhi, but sahaja samadhi, which means you are continuously awake. In nirvikalpa samadhi you have to meditate for years before you reach it. As long as you are in samadhi you feel happy and blissful. But when you come out, you are a normal human being, so-to-speak, and you partake of the world and all its fantasies. When you are in sahaja samadhi, there is no longer any meditation, there is no going or coming. You rest in that state permanently. You appear to be a normal human being, but you are like the chalk board. The whole universe, people, places and things, are superimposed on consciousness, which is yourself. You are home free.

You have to choose. You have that freedom, to react to the world and try to solve problems in a worldly manner, or to go within. Solving problems cannot be done. Historically, no one has ever been able to solve their problems. They appear to succeed for awhile, but new problems always arise, like the tumor on your arm. You cut it out and another grows back. You get rid of one problem and you find yourself involved in a new set of problems. It never ends.

Self-inquiry is a way to recognize that you are not the body, the dreamer, the mind nor the world. You have nothing to do with this universe. Yet you appear normal, like everyone else. Everything is attached to the I-thought. Get rid of the I and everything else will go with it.

So how do I stop suffering? Realize that no one suffers. Suffering is in the imagination. When the imagination is transcended, there is peace and harmony. The way to attain this, is to question yourself, "To whom does it come?" Follow it through. Do not work on your problems, do not try to solve them. Do not even think about them. If you start thinking, catch yourself. The mind has to become quiescent. When there is a quiet mind, no one suffers. There is no room for suffering. Where the mind identifies with the body and world, suffering increases.

You know what you have to do, now do it.

(chanting.)

You must have a lot of questions, so go ahead and ask.

Student: You seem to equate suffering and pain. But help me understand this if you will. An animal in a trap feels pain and tries to escape. It doesn't appear to be just an experience in consciousness?

R: An animal feels pain just like we do, but they don't have the emotions we have when we feel pain. Therefore they feel the pain. It is an experience. When we feel pain we imagine all kinds of things, such as of death or of surgeons cutting us up, which is what causes the problem. If you were able to feel pain without thinking, the pain would not be intense, no matter what it is. Even if your arm were being cut off, you would feel it, but not intensely. The intensity comes from the mind. The mind has built associations with emotions from a very early age.

S: What about a baby, it wouldn't have built associations.

R: A baby doesn't suffer, it feels pain. We feel it more intensely because we have a mind, so-to-speak, that thinks about it. If the mind did not think about the pain you'd sail right through it, even if you died. You'd go right through the pain. This is why some people, like Ramana Maharshi, could have his tumor operated on without any anesthetic. He would say, "I feel a little pain," but it wouldn't bother him that much. So pain can be felt, but not as acutely as we feel it as human beings. It is the mind that causes all these problems.

S: If the Self is the only things that exists, there can't be any volition or choice.

R: Correct. Volition and choice are for the ego. (S: Which is imagination.) Yes. Everything is preordained. Everything happens the way it is supposed to. It appears that only choice we have is to turn within and to not react to anything. That is the appearance. That is what a human being can do. When they turn within, they awaken to their Self. When they are their Self, there is no volition, no choice. There is just all-pervading beingness.

S: How can there be choice to turn within, but no volition otherwise?

R: Because choice is at a human level. At the other level you are awake and there is no one to choose. To have choice, you have to have an I. When the I is eliminated, there is no one left to choose and you are free.

S: You are saying there is no choice because, in reality, only one exists and the individual, with individual actions and decisions, doesn't exist.

R: It is like the water in a mirage. The water appears to exist, but on close investigation, you find it doesn't exist. The body and mind appear to exist. However, if you investigate by practicing self-inquiry, you will discover that the body and the mind never existed. As in a dream, it appears to be, but upon awakening you realize it never existed. (S: The body never existed?) No. It was never born, it can never die. (S: The body?) Yes. It doesn't exist. There is no such thing as a body. You can come over here and pinch me, and I will say, "Ow," but you can also do the same thing in a dream, a dream pinch. Then you wake up.

S: Robert, I want to spend time meditating and being with spiritual people, but the world just keeps grabbing me and makes me focus on this and that, and I don't want to deal with anything. How do I get out of this trap?

R: Watch your mind thinking. Become the witness to your thoughts and ask, "To whom do these thoughts come?" Then watch what your mind does. Become aware of your thinking processes. Every time the mind brings the world into existence for you, ask yourself the question, "Who is doing this? Who makes me think this way? Who is attaching me to the world?" The answer is always I. Then one day you will realize that all you have to do is get rid of the I. The I is the culprit. Do not allow the mind to dwell on things. When the mind turns, stop it by asking, "To whom does this come?" Always you will come to the I. As soon as you get rid of the I, you will be free.

S: You have said that there is no past, but things seem to have continuity, a cause and effect relation. Is this also a dream?

R: Duality is a mental concept. When the mind draws itself inward and becomes the Self, there is only ultimate oneness. As long as the mind is active, there will be duality, past and future. Make the mind one-pointed, through chanting, meditation, pranayama, whatever. When it becomes one-pointed, you pull it in by inquiring, "To whom does this come?" The mind will go inward, deeper and deeper into the Self. (S: Even old concepts, such as yin and yang or divine balance...) All are duality. All systems are part of the mind. (S: Until we awaken, aren't we governed by these dualistic concepts and forces?) Only if you believe you are. Until you are awakened do not think that anything governs you. Just ask, "To whom does it come?" Do not think you are stuck in maya and it is difficult to get out. Ask, "Who is stuck in maya?"

S: What is the next step in the sequence after asking, "To who does this come? It comes to me. Who am I? What's next?"

R: The way you are saying it sounds like you are disgusted with the whole thing. You have to have a little more emotion than that. (S: Asking, "Who am I?" is to establish the mind in silence?) Yes. (S: The mind doesn't want to accept that.) Then you have to inquire, "What mind does not accept this. Where did it come from? It came from I." Do this again and again and again. (S: This seems like a very intense activity.) Nooo..., do it in a comical way. Laugh, make a game out of it. Don't take it too seriously.

S: Didn't Ramana say inquiry was an intense activity?

R: He might have said that, but it is not that intense. He might have felt intense when he said it.

Just do it in a calm peaceful way, as if you know what you were doing. No matter how many times the thoughts come back, no matter how many times the world closes in on you, go back to asking, "To whom does it come?" All these practices help tremendously, even if you don't know it. There is more going on within you than you can ever know. Just keep the practices up, something will happen, it has to.

S: Why is it that certain Jnanis have nothing to do with money, while others, like Ramesh Balsekar and Jean Klein have large organizations? What is the reason other Jnanis have nothing to do with money, workshops, publishing books, selling tapes and have no organization to support them?

R: What does the word Jnani mean? It means absolute wisdom. One who is established in Jnana has transcended the I. If there is no I or no ego left, then why would they go out of their way to do workshops, to travel all over the world. There has to be some ego left who wants to do these workshops. The I must want to travel.

S: Couldn't it just be compassion for seekers?

R: The Jnani is compassion itself, and the Jnani is omnipresent. So if a person is in China, and thinks of a Jnani, they are saved. Therefore the Jnani doesn't have to go anywhere. The Jnani is all-pervading. There is no one to go anywhere or to do anything. I never started this class. I never wanted to do this. It just grew and happened. So I am here. It makes no difference to me if one person comes, no one comes, or if ten people come. But if more than fifty people come, I'll act stupid, and they won't come back.

S: Why?

R: Because the masses are a joke. The masses are seekers. They go from guru to guru, and they never get anywhere because they don't follow one procedure. Having one procedure, one guru, or your Self, is like having a magnifying glass. Sunshine is everywhere, but with a magnifying glass you can concentrate sunlight and start a fire. Having many gurus is like dissipating the sunshine, it becomes many, and it becomes weak. One guru concentrates it and becomes very powerful. A true Jnani has no ego, no I, no ambition, no desires, belongs to no one, and is totally free.

S: When Paramahansa Yogananda came to the United States to teach and go before great audiences, was that ego?

R: I do not discuss other gurus. (S: That sounds like a yes.) That's what you say, I didn't say that. I never discuss other people. You have to come to your own conclusions. (S: Why do you limit the number of people who come here to fifty people?) Because I don't need it. It's a bummer. Just think if we had twenty five more people how many more questions they would ask me. We'd be sitting here all night and all day answering questions. If it happened by itself, and it happened in the right way, it might work out. But, they wouldn't fit in here anyway.

S: Back to the question about money. Why is it that some gurus elevate themselves and charge a good deal of money, and charge $400.00 for a weekend intensive for esoteric knowledge, and others do not charge? Does the money just come?

R: OK, O.K, we can talk about this a little. Every teacher should be supported. For some teachers it is the only income they have. There is nothing wrong with supporting the teacher, but that should be done in silence. Those who understand will always take care of the teacher.

When it comes to advertising, when it comes to expansion and having ashrams all over the world, that is a different story. The more you organize, the more money you need to make the organization grow, and the focus is on growing. It is like having church buildings. You are always adding new or bigger buildings, and the guru has to have a Rolls Royce. It gets out of hand.

Your heart should tell you what is right. The Rishis of old never charged for anything. There should be no charge for truth. Truth is free. As far as intensives are concerned, most of the Indian teachers laugh at westerners, because most westerners believe that if they have a three day intensive they will become self-realized. It doesn't work like that. So there are intensives where you are charged four, five, six or seven hundred dollars, and everybody runs to them and nothing happens. I have no more comment on those things.

Your heart has to be your guide. If you are sincere, you will know where to go and what to do. If you are working out of your ego, you will find fault with everything. Ask yourself for those answers. I can tell you this much, everyone is in their right place. There are no mistakes. None have been made, none are being made. Those people who are with certain gurus belong right where they are, for the time being. Turn within and your heart will tell you where to go.

S: Isn't inquiry a form of seeking, indicative of an ego?

R: You have to use your ego to destroy your ego. You use your mind to destroy your mind. In the beginning the mind is very powerful. As you inquire, the mind becomes weaker and weaker until it disappears. (S: Then there is no seeking after a certain point?) All seeking stops. (S: Why can't we do that at the beginning?) You can, why don't you?

(tape ends) [TOC]

RENOUNCE EVERYTHING MENTALLY

27th June, 1991

Robert: It's good to be with you again.

Many people believe that in order to become liberated you have to take some sort of action. This couldn't be further from the truth. In truth you are already liberated and all you have to do to find your true nature is to renounce all activities. Not to be active. But to renounce mentally. When you renounce everything what is left over is the substratum of all existence. Which is absolute reality, pure awareness, the true Self.

When I say renounce I do not mean you have to leave your family, go sit in a cave or on a mountain top. I mean renounce mentally. Have nothing to do with your body. Your body will take care of itself. But mentally have no feeling for or against anything. You become neutral.

The less attention you pay to the world, the greater the realization comes upon you. The more attention you give to the world, the more delusion comes upon you.

There is an ancient story about a group of Rishis who lived in the forest. They were performing all kinds of rituals, occult practices in order to develop supernatural powers and become liberated. Now Shiva and Vishnu happened to be walking through the forest. They observed this. Vishnu said to Shiva, "Let's go down and tell the Rishis the mistake they're making. And Shiva retorted, "No, those Rishis are too dogmatic in their views. You can't say anything to them, they think they know what they're doing, but I have a plan."

Shiva turned into a handsome lad of about 24, well built, easy to look at and Vishnu turned into a beautiful maiden, vivacious, provocative. And then they walked down into the Rishis' camp. When the Rishis saw the beautiful maiden they immediately fell in love with her and stopped doing their occult practices. The Rishis had wives and when the wives saw the handsome young man who was really Shiva, they also immediately fell in love with him. There was complete confusion, chaos.

And two of the Rishis said, "Look what these two people have done to us. We'll fix them." And they conjured up an elephant and a tiger to attack them. But Shiva's power was greater and he turned the elephant into a rope that he tied around his waist and he turned the tiger into a tiger skin. Where he sat down. Immediately the Rishis and the wives realized who they were and they paid obeisance to them sitting down for instruction. Shiva said, "You can never attain realization by practicing occult austerities. You can never attain realization by being active. It is only as you renounce everything, then you awaken to your true Self."

Now let's talk about you. Many of you have been performing yoga practices, meditations, chanting, pranayama and various techniques in order to awaken. But I say to you that this will never cause you to awaken. It will bring you good feelings, it will bring you a semblance of peace, but you will never awaken through the practice of yoga unless the yoga leads to self-inquiry, or it leads to complete surrender of the ego. If you practice anything else it inflates the ego.

Take for example a person who practices Hatha Yoga. They become better and better and their ego inflates. And they say, "See what I can do? I can tie myself into a pretzel. I can put one foot around my neck and stay like that for three years." Yet what does it do for you as far as your awakening goes? Nothing. All you're really doing is prolonging the body by a few years. And since everything is preordained it really doesn't matter.

You shouldn't conceive of new ways to build up your body or your mind to improve your intelligence. You should rather renounce those things and realize that you are not the body-mind phenomena and renounce everything that tells you are. Do not go after occult practices that is the worst thing you could ever do. For you will be stuck in the occult for thousands of incarnations. Rather become free of the whole thing.

Remember when I say renounce everything, I'm speaking of mentally, not especially physically. For where you are now that's where you belong physically. Everything is preordained. You are in your right place. If you don't like where you are the only way to get out of it is to mentally renounce it by turning within, going into your heart on the right side of your chest and becoming liberated. Everything else is a waste of energy.

Take a look at your life, what do you do with your life, with yourself? How do you spend your days? Whatever you do determines what happens to you from there on in. You should practice to stop your thinking, stop the thinking process, stop thinking right now. Do you feel how good that is? When you stop your thoughts there is no yesterday and there is no tomorrow. There is only this moment and if you keep your thoughts still this moment will turn into tomorrow. Get rid of opinions, judgements.

Even while most of you are sitting here tonight and while I'm talking, you have an opinion. This is what keeps you from awakening. What difference does it make. See the truth within yourself. Know who you are. You are not the frail body that gets older every year and has so many years to live on this earth. That is not you, do not think of that. But rather turn your thoughts within yourself. Turn yourself inside out.

Listen to your mind. Listen how it tells you how things are supposed to be. Watch your thoughts, observe. Notice that you have no control of your mind because your thoughts are telling you how things are and you're listening. Therefore there has to be a way to stop this. And the way is to ask yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come? Whose thinking these thoughts?" Of course you will say, "I am. Who am I? What is the source of I?" While you're doing this if other thoughts come to you, do the same procedure, "To whom do these thoughts come? They come to me, I think them. Who am I? What is the I?" You're focussing on the I. And as you continue to say, "I-I," to yourself, you will SG: Robert, it was fun. Like always we come to a wall and don't quite go through. A problem came up and instead of thinking of the problem to make a choice that I need to make, I said, "To whom does this thought come?" And so we kept going back into the I and we never faced up to that so-called problem. Never made a choice. My question to you Robert is, from this day forth every-time that problem for which I need to make a choice comes up, can I say, "To whom does this thought come?" And keep going back into the I and never think about it and yet when the time comes that that has to be dealt with, again say, "To whom does this thought come?" And stay in the I and then the choice will be taken for automatically with no thought?

R: Exactly. (SG: Boy does that take guts but we're going to try to go for this, but I'm driving a car too while I'm doing this, is this dangerous?) Be careful. (laughter) (SG: It's fun.) There is a power which animates your body. Your body doesn't exist. But as long as you believe that it exists it will be well taken care of without your help.

SG: While I'm replying to someone who is telling me to do something or asking me, instead of trying to give him an answer, can I just stay with the I-thought and the correct words will just come out?

R: If you can stay with the I-thought everything will take care of itself. There is really nothing else you have to do, but to stay with the I, abide in the I. (SG: This is the most fantastic challenge I've ever faced.) It shouldn't even be a challenge it should just be an experience. There is noone competing against anyone. There is noone challenging. You simply ask the question, trace the I-thought to the source and awaken.

(silence)

SG: Slower pace than with thinking?

R: Everything slows down. Time slows down, space slows down. (SG: Would it take 3 hours to do a job that ordinarily takes a half hour?) It has nothing to do with your body. Your body will go on and do what it's supposed to and do everything better. But your mind will stop and you will become all-pervading, omnipresent. (SG: Will the same amount of time elapse?) As far as your body is concerned.

R: I realize it's difficult for some of you to imagine how it is to function without a mind. Yet look at the tree, look at the sun, look at the stars, the earth. Everything is happening in the right way in order to sustain and maintain life. Who thinks? There are no thoughts. It's just a happening. Everything just is. In the same way your so called physical body is part of the maya, of the illusion. It will be carried along, maintained and sustained without thoughts.

As soon as you begin to think you spoil it. After all what is the mind? Simply thoughts of the past and of the future.

Never identify with your problems. Always identify with pure awareness, your real nature. Consciousness, emptiness.

(silence)

You want to do something. You want me to say something profound, but I tell you there is nothing profound under the sun to say. Everything is simplicity there is nothing to do. There is no place to go. There is no thing to become. You are that, just the way you are. Awaken to your true Self which is what you are right now.

In other words there are not two of you. There is not your body and Brahman or consciousness. There is only consciousness and that is what you are, just the way you are right now. There is really nothing you have to do, wake up! There is really no practice you have to partake in. Wake up!

(silence)

I know it sounds contradictory sometimes when I tell you there is no practice you have to partake in and in the other breath I tell you you've got to practice self-inquiry. But it's really not a contradiction. For as long as you believe you are not the Self then you have to practice something until you know you're the Self. If I didn't give you anything to practice what would you do with yourself. You'd worry, you'd fret, you'd think of all sorts of negative things.

So when you practice, "To whom do these thoughts come? Who am I?" It makes you one pointed. It improves your concentration. When you can finally open your eyes and say, "I am free, just the way I am. I have always been free. There never was a time when I was not and there will never be a time when I will be not."

Mary do you have the Jnani oath?

SM: Yes I do Robert. This is "The Jnani." (Refer to page 9 of this book)

(Mary reads The Jnani)

R: So what else is new?

SG: Robert when she reads that you don't think about the words or the meanings, what is your experience?

R: No experience. (SG: You hear the words and instantly do you know the meaning or is there no meaning involved?) No meaning involved. (SG: Then what's the difference between saying those words and, "Johnny is a little boy and fell down the stairs and broke his nose?") You mean as far as I'm concerned? (SG: Yeah.) There is no difference.

SH: Far out.

SG: Life just goes on for you and everything is just okay?

R: If you say so? (laughter) (SG: And there'd be no difference in your reaction to her words compared to someone who came in, walked in with a gun and said, "I'm counting to three and killing you now!") There is no difference. (SG: No difference.)

SM: Excuse me, may I say something? Didn't you hear the words when it says the Jnani rests in his own sat-chit-ananda swarrupa. That's what it is. So it doesn't matter what anybody says.

SG: What's swarrupa? (R: Your nature, your real nature.)

SH: Good word. (R: Sounds good.) Umm sounds good.

SG: Different people in this room ask you different questions and you give different answers. So I was thinking, you just move your mouth or the mouth moves and the different words come out. Without thought. Is that right?

R: What can I do? Can't help it. (laughter) (SG: It's all right, I'm just trying to...)

SH: You're a hopeless case. (laughter) (R: I'm all finished.) All burnt up.

SG: Something in you must hear a difference in the different questions because different words come out? (R: Sure it does.) But you're oblivious to that something that hears a difference and knows a different answer — words of a different answer must come out?

R: Take the example of the blackboard and the images of the world are written on the blackboard. But the blackboard receives the image within itself. It is everything else. Therefore when a certain image is put on a blackboard, the answer is different due to the fact that the image is the blackboard and the blackboard is the image. So when you come to me and ask me something the blackboard gives the answer that you need because you're already in the blackboard. There is one knower and when Henry asks me something, Henry is also on the blackboard but there is still only the one. But when the answer comes out it is an answer specifically for you because it takes human form. It becomes an image when it goes out. So every word that goes out is an image. So you're specifically answered for the question that you asked. Therefore five people ask me the same question, I will give five different answers depending where they're at. (SG: It's beautiful.) I don't know if that's beautiful, but that's the way it is. (SG: Well I know it's custom made. (laughter) That's what's beautiful.) That's your opinion.

SF: When you give the positive assistance, you don't think what's appropriate, the answer just comes, is that correct? (R: That's right.) Thank you.

R: If I had to think there would have to be a thinker. That means that the mind would have to be active. Therefore you can say, consciousness answers not the mind. But again that's a paradox because consciousness has nothing to say. But as far as you're concerned the answer comes from consciousness. But in reality only consciousness exists and nothing else. So the question and the answer are one.

SK: I hope this isn't a stupid question, but if you go into a market. Do you go shopping anymore? (R: Sure.) Okay, if you go to a market and there is three different coffees, right — and ones twelve 12 ounces and ones 13 ounces and ones 14 ounces and ones 109 and ones 29 and ones — do you do the math?

R: No I just grab whatever is convenient. (laughter) (SK: Is that the way it's done? Could you conceivably do the math and say look I've only got 6 dollars in my pocket here so I've got to - I have to get certain things here so maybe I have to get the smaller size coffee. Do you go through...) No, all that takes care of itself. I pick whatever I like and it always sort of works out. (SK: It always comes out right? Do you ever leave a place where you intended to go in and get a stick of butter and six other things but you couldn't afford the butter?) Nope. (SK: You don't?) Umm. (SK: Geez that happens to me all the time.) (students laugh) That's because you're calculating too much.

SJ: The other question is do you ever end up having to wash the dishes?

R: No. That's why I stay where I am, so I don't have to wash dishes. (laughter)

SK: Could one be enlightened and still be a mathematician or a physicist?

R: Definitely. (SK: Well would you be using your mind as a tool and regard it as a...)

Nope, you wouldn't be using your mind at all because there is no mind to use. But automatically the things will be done that have to be done because your body in the world comes under the law of karma and karma takes care of everything. So if you were meant to be a physicist, your body would become a darn good physicist but you would have nothing to do with it.

SH: But you would witness it? (R: Yeah.)

SG: But when a physicist is reading a book would he be assimilating the knowledge without thinking?

R: He would be reading the book like everyone else does. But it's consciousness that reads the book and the knowledge is in consciousness. So whatever he needs to do will be done. (SG: Without thinking?) No mind, no thoughts.

SK: Isn't that true for a physicist whether he's enlightened or not, he's doing it without his mind?

R: No because a physicist has to think about the project he's working on. But an enlightened physicist would do the work but the same thoughts will not be there. The work will just be done in the now. (SK: But isn't that the same with the unenlightened physicist? When they're not thinking about themselves they're just like getting the concepts as learning?) It appears that way but an unenlightened physicist has to remember certain things and has to do certain things at the time they're working and their mind is always active. Whereas the enlightened physicist their mind is not active at all but they are still doing certain things in the same way, but it's quite different. In the last analysis noone is doing anything. It appears as if things are being done, but there is noone doing a thing.

SK: But as a physicist there seems like there is sort of three levels, if nothings happened it's all a dream. Then there is just the doing of the physicist like the enlightened ones and then the unenlightened seems to be doing that plus doing something with his mind?

R: The unenlightened always appears to be doing something with his mind and can be disturbed and stopped. But the enlightened physicist will not get disturbed over anything. But will continue the project until the end and will not even think about it. I know it's difficult to see how this can be, how you can do a project without thinking. That is why I say it's difficult to think about it. If you do not think about it it will come easier.

SK: It seems to me that it's hard to think of getting a project and thinking about it. It seems like everything gets done without thinking and then afterwards you thought you did it.

R: That's true. You will do your work it'll be done and the enlightened person will not even think about who did it. (SK: But it seems like the unenlightened, it's the same thing but they think they did it.) Yes.

ST: Why is it that the body is your Self and the world is the Self and the table and everything around you is the Self, why shouldn't the thoughts be the Self as well? Why should not thinking be something to be aspired to. Why not just regard thought as being nothing different from what you are?

R: Due to the fact, thoughts come from your mind only. When there is no mind there are no thoughts. But as long as you have a mind the whole world appears the way it is. And you believe you are a body, you believe there is a world, there is a universe, you believe there is a God and everything that you see. It all emanates from your mind. When the mind is killed all that disappears and there are no thoughts. But your body continues it's work, so it appears.

SJ: Robert, at the same time a week or two ago you were talking about thoughts still occur but we're just not attached to them, that you identify with the reality you're not fooled by them.

R: Well I hear people speaking and I read what's going on in the papers and I watch TV sometimes, but there are no thoughts that linger. Whatever I watch, whatever I see, whatever I hear, it's like it goes in one ear and out the other. It's all spontaneous. Therefore nothing is ever lingering, nothing is holding on. There is total freedom. Everything is just a happening. (SJ: Thoughts arise continuously and then you just release them?) No thoughts arise at all. (SJ: What is there not to linger mean?) What I see, what I hear, I'm looking at you but the thought of you does not linger. It's as if I'm looking at myself. (SJ: The thought doesn't linger but the thought is there in some way?) The thought of Jay does not linger. Again it's like the image on the blackboard. The blackboard is consciousness. The blackboard knows that there is an image written on the blackboard. But the blackboard does not think about the image. It's just oblivious to the image but it knows that it's there. So I see you as well as I see everything else, but yet I am oblivious to everything. But everything is still happening. But there is nothing to hold onto. There are no thoughts to decipher anything, or to analyze anything, or to react to anything.

SH: Is oblivious the right word? (R: Sure.) Because you are perceiving, there is perception?

R: There is perception to an extent but there is also oblivion. By oblivion I mean emptiness. Everything is the void. Everything is emptiness. But yet I see all the images coming and going and everything appears and disappears. (SH: But you're not oblivious to the image the moment it occurs? It doesn't linger but there isn't obliviousness when it occurs...) Right. (SH: ...or there would be no...) In the moment it is not oblivious, that's true. (SH: That's why I question the word oblivious.) Oblivious comes immediately after. (SH: Yeah.)

SJ: Like the unenlightened physicist, he's so into his work he's enlightened for the moment until after the work is done and then reflects on...

R: He still believes he is the doer. (SJ: But during the work if a person is so involved, they even forget that temporarily?) Because they believe they are the doer so they don't really forget it. They say, "I did this project." (SJ: After?) "I completed this, I did that, I'm great!" (SJ: So it always lingers as unconscious...) It's in the unconscious, the ego, it's all part of the ego.

SV: Out of the blackboard, out of reality - is there also, is there mental bodies, emotional bodies, physical bodies that come out of the blackboard? (R: No.) Just the physical body comes out of the blackboard?

R: Just the physical. (SV: What about the saying, "What you think you become. That's where you'll be." That also means thoughts are energy? And the body is actually energy itself. When you break down into its essence. Then all this is the thought of Ishvara? That is all out of the mind. The mind creates Ishvara. The mind creates all these things. Therefore when there is no mind how can there be anything left? (SV: Right, so that means the mental and the physical are the same, they are nothing, they're one. Then would they both be gone?) They both are gone, they don't exist. (SV: As far as the universe, Ishvara's gone?) Ishvara's gone. Ishvara never existed to begin with. (laughter) But if you want an Ishvara you can have him. (laughter)

SK: Robert, do you ever forget your house keys? (laughter)

R: No, not really, but I don't think about them either. (SK: How does this relate to certainty or uncertainty. It seems like the role of thinking is to deal with uncertainty. The greater the uncertainty the greater the thought.) What do you mean?

SK: Well it seems like the reason we think is because there is something important that we're not sure of or it's an unknown. So it would seem that if you would stop thinking that there would also be then a sense of certainty or there would no longer be a question of uncertainty?

R: What you are saying is mental. That is a concept of the mind. But when there is no mind there is no question of certainty or uncertainty. Those concepts don't exist. The mind has concepts. The mind wants to be certain about something or it's uncertain about something. But when there is no mind there is no one to have those experiences. All experiences are of the mind.

SV: Whenever we start categorizing and we start defining ourselves, it's all mind.

R: It's all mind. (SV: Defines with the finite?) All mind.

SH: The mind and the me always go together. If the mind disappears, the me has to disappear too. (R: Yes, yes. Mind and me...) Ego mind.

R: Yours and mine, they all go. Everything disappears.

Do we have any announcements of any kind? About the lessons?

(Student talks about transcripts and the need to have them returned and help needed to copy transcripts for others. Then Robert wraps up satsang.)

Remember to love yourself, to worship yourself, to kneel to yourself because God dwells in you as you. God bless you I love you peace. Until we meet again. Arrivederci. (laughter)

(tape ends) [TOC]

THAT DIVINE MOMENT IS NOW!

30th June, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. I welcome you with all my heart.

Remember this your home. You think you've got a home and you have an address and a telephone number and you have a family, a husband, a wife, children, parents. How long do they last? They go one by one. Where do you really belong? You belong to God, to the Self.

When you begin to understand this thoroughly that your home is in God's house, you will begin to know that, "I and the Father are one." There is no separateness between you and the source. But as long as you believe that your father, your mother, your wife, your husband and your children, your employers, are eternal, are number one in your life, you will never understand your divine nature.

I'm not saying that you have to give up your families or to give up your work, this is all mental. It's in your mind where you make the identification. Why would you identify with something that is transient? That is here today and gone tomorrow?

When I say this is your home I am not referring to Henry's house. I am referring to the Self. The Self is your home. It has always been so. There never was a time when it was not. To whom do you think you belong? Do you belong to the trees, to the mountains, to the ocean, to a person? That is false identification. You belong to the Self because you are the Self. Just the way you are. You are consciousness just the way you are. You are absolute reality just the way you are.

I know some of you are saying, "But this body is frail. I've got all kinds of problems. How can I be the Self just the way I am?"

If you stop to think about it you will be frail and you will identify with the world. But if you teach yourself not to think but to stay in the moment, in that moment you are divine, in that moment you are ultimate oneness. That moment is sat-chit-ananda, nirvana. There is only the moment, time and space does not exist. Time and space become condensed in the moment. In that moment you are total freedom.

But when you try to think about it you spoil it. When a thought arises, the moment is forgotten. You therefore have to do anything and everything you can to learn to rest in the moment. The moment is right here, right now. There are no problems and no troubles and no sickness and no lack, no evil in this moment. Isn't that true? It's only when you start to think. As soon as you start to think you start thinking about what you need, how to make your life better, how to remove certain things from your life so you can succeed and be happier. This is all folly. You can never do that! When will you learn this!

When you remove the things from your life that have been holding you back so you say, new things will pop up. It will never end. There is just no end to it. You've got to find the moment exactly where you are now. That divine moment does not exist five minutes from now or a second from now. That divine moment is now! It just is and you are that. There is no thing to search for, there is no one to see, there are no special mantras you have to memorize. Even self-inquiry is only a method to put you in the moment.

Asking, "Who am I? To whom do these thoughts come?" Is not the thing itself. It is a method. A method which does not exist. It exists in the same place the world exists, in your mind. Therefore when you cannot keep silent by yourself self-inquiry appears to be the fastest way to awaken. But it's a method, it's a practice. It will never bring you home. It will simply give you an inkling to what lies ahead.

The only time you can get anywhere is by whatever method you use. You have caused the mind to become perfectly still, quiet, quiescent. When there is no mind, nothing is happening. When nothing is happening you no longer suffer. You no longer have anxieties, you no longer believe something is wrong somewhere, you're no longer judgmental you have become bliss consciousness. In that moment, it will not happen tomorrow.

So many people keep inquiring, "How can I practice self-inquiry? Am I doing it correctly? Am I doing this right? Am I doing that right?" But I say to you, you're getting lost in the method. Don't worry whether you're doing it right or not. Keep your mind on the source, on the Self, I am that I am. That is your home. That is where you belong everything else is temporary.

Again do not think I am speaking of not having relationships with people or getting married or loving your family, on the contrary. In this teaching you do not have to give up anything. You simply have to know the truth about these things. It's knowing the truth that sets you free. And the only place you have to know is in your mind. Therefore you use your mind to know the truth and the truth is silence. That is the highest truth. By all means do everything in your power to make yourself silent.

Do not worry about your affairs. Do the beautiful trees out there worry about their affairs? Does the mountain worry about it's affairs? Does the ocean worry about it's affairs?

Everything happens the way it's supposed to. The flowers bloom, the trees grow, the mountains exhibit it's splendor and all is well everywhere. Therefore if you learnt to stay in the moment in silence you too will be taken care of by the power that knows the way and you will be led to your highest good.

Silence is the key.

It makes no difference how terrible you think things are or how wonderful you think things are they're both impostors. You are not trying to exchange negative conditions to positive conditions. We're not trying to exchange bad for good. They are two sides of the same coin. We want to transcend both. There is a place that is beyond bad and good, right and wrong, happy and sadness. That place is where you are now. Awaken to it.

I received an interesting phone call this morning from a fellow in San Diego. He apparently had just been released from state prison. After spending ten years for armed robbery. (I don't know how these people get my phone number? (students laugh) But anyway he made the story real interesting after he told me about that.) He said while he was in prison they put him in charge of the prison library. He never read books in his life. He had always been in problems and troubles since he was twelve years old. But for some reason he discovered books on Advaita Vedanta. (What are these prisons coming to?)

And he started reading these books. He said it just made a lot of sense to him he doesn't know why. But he started practicing sitting in the silence. He had plenty of time to do that. He didn't have anywhere to go. And he did this for years. He didn't know anything about self-inquiry. But he read he should practice, "Who am I?" He read something by Shankara. And he practiced, "Who am I?"

The way he explained was wonderful. For he said he wasn't really looking for anything. He was not looking to develop supernatural powers or to make himself into anything. The words he used was, "It made sense just to do it." And after a couple of years of doing this, he found peace. Peace that he'd never had before. He didn't know what it was but he felt as if the guards were the prisoners and he was free.

He related to me it was like he went into a monastery and he was put into a cell voluntarily, to be by himself, to be alone. The prison he said was a blessing to him. But he didn't call me about that, he had a question. He explained his background before he asked the question.

He said, "Robert I have been committing foul deeds most of my life. Many of them I have not been caught. I went to prison for a bank robbery but there are many other robberies that I committed and they have not found me out. Now since I have found myself and I'm a completely different person now, will I have to suffer the consequences of my karma, for all those foul deeds I committed in my ignorance?"

That's a very profound question. Let me digress a few moments and let's talk about you.

As human beings we are very imperfect. Many of you have committed foul deeds that noone knows about. It's interesting to note that in the relative world, even if you think about something evil it's as if you are committing the act. That is strange but very true in the relative world, which doesn't exist. Yet in the relative world - that doesn't exist - if you believe you have committed a crime mentally, the subconscious mind does not know the difference between a thought and an act. Thoughts are things - in the relative world that doesn't exist.

Let's imagine if you will, you hate someone with a passion and you want to kill this person. But you know that you will be put in jail or visit a gas chamber. That is the only reason that you refrain from doing so. But in your mind you see yourself killing the person everyday. I say to you that - in the relative world that doesn't exist - your mind does not know the difference between the act and the thought. It's the same thing. So, all of us have been through periods where we mentally hate someone or we mentally wish evil upon someone. Some of us have committed some dastardly deeds that noone has ever found out. And now that we are studying Advaita Vedanta and we're working on ourselves, is the karma removed?

That's the same question that this fellow asked, go back to the story. (Ed always tells me I digress from the story and never come back, this time I fooled you. I usually do that, I digress and never get back to the point.) So we go back to this fellow who wants to know - just like we want to know - do I have to go through the karmic experiences?

First of all if you were realized, liberated you would never ask that question. For there has to be an I to ask that question. This is how I answered him. The I is the world, the ego. The personal I is a thought, an idea, it doesn't really exist. But yet to answer the question you asked me means you are coming out of the personal I. If you have transcended the I and become liberated there would be noone left to experience karma. There would be noone to go through any experience for the ego, the I, the mind would be dead. The ego, the I and the mind are synonymous by the way.

They are the ones who appear to go through the rigamarole we call karma, birth after birth experiences. Cause and effect. It is the I that does all that. If you are coming from the I of course you have to go through your experience. You have to experience the effect of the cause that you put in motion - in the relative world that does not exist. Only when you can awaken do you become free from karma.

Now this doesn't mean that you can go out and rob another bank, or as far as you people are concerned, it doesn't mean you can go out and think evil thoughts, or hurt people, for if you are enlightened you would never have any idea of doing those things. As long as you have an idea that someone is trying to hurt you, someone doesn't like you, you don't like someone, you want to hurt someone, as long as you have any ideas like these you are working out of your I-thought and karma must return to you. So what should you do?

You should turn away from the past or from the present, if you don't like the present. If you're too attached to someone, if you think you've got a problem with your health, if you think you've got a problem with finances, if you think you've got a problem with anything, mentally turn from that condition. I'm not saying you have to do this physically, the physical will take care of itself. But you have to turn to your source.

You came from your source and you go back to the source. If you can find the source before you drop your body you will be liberated. It's as simple as that. When you are liberated for whom is there karma? From whom is there problems? For whom is there problems? For whom is there sadness? For whom is there anything? Everything that is disturbing you, everything that appears wrong in your life is because you identify with the I-thought.

Some of you are still afraid that if you become liberated, you will fall out of love with someone or you will not care about your job or you will believe that you don't care about anything, you will become cynical, this is untrue. You become more of a loving person, compassionate, filled with joy. You give your love to your mate in a free way. Expecting nothing in return. Your love increases a thousand times. Because you're free. You can love someone without any need, unconditioned and you don't have to think about it.

Therefore I concluded talking to this gentleman on the phone, turn within. Your past is dead we both know this, you've become a new person as you say but the I still lives in you. If the I is still alive in you your samskaras are still active. You may be inclined to rob a bank again. You have no idea what's going to happen tomorrow when you allow the personal I to exist. Therefore begin to understand that this I, this ego, this mind is only a thought, an idea. It has no reality.

You must inquire within yourself, "To whom does the mind come? To whom does the I come? To whom does the ego come?" When thoughts about your past come up. When you think about your ten years in prison. When you think about the evil acts you've committed. Immediately do anything you can to halt those thoughts. You can ask, "To whom do these thoughts come?" Or you can just remain perfectly silent and become the witness to the thoughts, not reacting to them. Not trying to stop them at all. If you do not react to your thoughts they will burn themselves out. They only become more powerful when you react to them.

As an example if you're trying to fight an illness, if you react to your illness by imagining and believing in your mind that it doesn't exist, that you're having a terrible time. Why did this happen to me? I can't take it any longer. This is what's keeping you back not the illness. But as your illness continues upon you, if you would simply observe it without thinking, become the witness to it without trying to do anything else, or inquiring, "To whom does it come?" In other words do what you have to do to stop the thought process. You use the same method with any other problem or with any other goodness that comes to you.

Remember all the human goodness is also an illusion. So if you have a good life, it is only temporary. If you do not find yourself you will have to come back to this earth again and again and again and have other experiences. You may come back again when the earth is in the dark ages once more and they're having the Spanish inquisition and you're hanging by your thumbs while your eyes are being gorged out. And then you may come back in a different life when you are a multimillionaire and you live in a castle and you're in control of thousands of people.

They are two sides of the same coin. Therefore wake up. Do not try to exchange bad for good. Do not believe that if I become a multimillionaire I'll be happy or if I get rid of my disease I'll be happier or if I live in a better home I'll be happier or if I have a new mate I'll be happier or if I have no mate I'll be happier, or if I have this I'll be happier. It's all illusion.

Happiness is your real nature. Happiness is what you are. You are that now, if you live in the moment. In that moment you are absolute reality. In that moment you are pure awareness. You are Brahman in that moment. You are sat-chit-ananda, ultimate oneness, emptiness. That is your true nature. Identify with that. Focus on that. Become that and you will be ever free.

(silence)

Do ask any questions at this time.

SC: I'd like to ask a couple questions. (R: A couple only?) Yeah. They're basic and I know we've been through it, all of us many times. Is there a spirit?

R: Is there a soul? Is there a body? Is there a god? As long as you believe that you are the body then there is a spirit. (SC: This is what we've been taught?) So what do you want me to do? (laughter)

SC: Take it away. Okay, one other one, that's been bothering me, you say we don't do anything. I'm lifting my arm, I'm forcing my arm to go up and letting it come down. Am I not doing this?

R: Of course you are. (SC: So where does the differentiation come in then? Between the doing and the non doing?) You believe you are the body. As long as you are the body then everything else is real for you. (SC: And that's what I'm talking about Robert that...) But you are not the body in reality. (SC: But this actual movement even if I'm not the body...) As I explained to you once before Nate, if you're having a dream and in that dream you are telling me the same thing that you are telling me now. And you lift your arm and you lift your leg and you lift your head and you do all kinds of things, you say, "See I'm doing this and I'm doing that," and you pinch me and you say, "See you can feel it too." But it's a dream pinch, it's a dream body, it's all part of the dream. When you awaken it's all gone.

And so it is with this world. It appears very real because you're living the mortal dream. Some of us are more attached than others. Some of us are so attached to this world that nothing can ever make them understand that they are not the world. This is most of the world. That there are classes like this and there are people who are beginning to understand that they are not the body, they are not the mind phenomena and the whole universe only exists because the mind exists. Everything is an emanation of the mind. When the mind begins to disintegrate the world begins to look less ferocious and fear leaves you until you awaken.

So everything you're telling me Nate is the truth as long as you believe you are the body. Change your identification. You of all people should practice harder and you should ask yourself, "To whom does this image come to? Who believes they are the body? What is this strong feeling? "I am the doer," come from in me?" Ask yourself, ask yourself and something will begin to give, it has to. But of course if you do not do anything like that and you keep identifying with the world by reacting to it very strongly day after day, who is to blame?

I can lead you to the gold mine but you have to do your own digging. It's up to you. This is why I always say, "Do not believe a word I say. Do not take my word for it. Find out for yourself." It's just as if I took you by the hand and took you to a gold mine and I said, "This is the gold mine dig." But you said, "Robert I don't see any gold. (laughter) I only see dirt, rocks. Why should I dig?" If you want the gold Nate you've got to dig. But you start digging and as soon as I go away you stop digging and you keep complaining, "There is no gold, there is no gold," (students laugh) and you tell everybody, "Robert doesn't know what he's talking about there is no gold." (laughter)

You never made enough effort. You never went out of your way to do it. You wanted it to be handed to you. You want me to take you to the gold mine and get somebody else to do the digging for you. If they do they'll keep the gold. It's the same with spiritual life. Do not believe what I tell you. Practice what I say and find out what happens.

SG: Back to the boy in prison Robert, that's a fascinating story. He was kind of in his own gold mine and he seemed to come up with a golden nugget. But my question is, he asked you a profound question about his crimes prior to the crimes he got caught for. Do you think he was alluding to perhaps what couldn't be tried for these other crimes because sometimes it can get retried for other crimes was his question specifically about the karma or about the fear that he could've...

R: Well the karma included all of those things. (SG: Yeah.) He was afraid that the karma from the past may catch up with him and he wanted to know if it was so. (SG: How did he feel that that was a threat to him in prison?) Well he didn't feel it was a threat to him, now he was becoming a spiritual person. And it was like he had a born again experience. (SG: Also like down the line in the next life time or something like that?) Well in this lifetime he wanted to know whether anything can catch up to him. (SG: What was your answer again, I...) My answer was, as long as he believes he is the body, he is the I who asked the question, yes. (SG: Oh I get you, now, yeah.) But when the I is completely eliminated there is no one left to have any experience. And there is no karma.

SR: Robert this may be again just totally academic but I keep wondering what is the source of the illusion, where would the illusion arise from that we would have to ever realize that there is no illusion. I know it doesn't matter but...

R: It matters. (Henry knows what I'm going to say.) It never happened. There is no source in reality for which anything comes. Consciousness is so far out as far as we humans are concerned we don't have an inkling to what it really is. The finite can never comprehend the infinite. You can never know by answering a question that you ask, "What is this source?" And "Why does the source do this and do that?" It doesn't. Again that sounds like a cop out, but it's not. There is no source. You are pure consciousness and pure consciousness is beyond description, there are no words for it, you can...

(break in tape, as tape starts abruptly with students question.)

SR: ...was that this state?

R: No because the person who reflects has been destroyed. There is no one to reflect. There is no personal I there is no mind and there is no ego. Therefore there is no one to do these things. (SR: It's like dropping the conscious mind, and it's immaterial?) It's like dropping a piece of ice in the ocean, it becomes the ocean. But it has nothing to say. It has lost its identity, but now it identifies with the whole ocean. It is no longer isolated to a piece of ice. In the same way when you awaken you become all-pervading, omnipresent. You're no longer confined to a body. There is one body that is the universal body. There is no longer my body and your body and you become totally free. (SR: I do in my sleep.) Well that's good because I don't. (laughter) (SR: It's clearer now.) See I'm using human words.

SR: No it's clear it's just that when that happens then this question just arose and then it disappears.

R: If it's clear you've got a problem. (SR: Yeah, the point is there won't be that question, or that state, it won't be arising...) When that state comes it is a state so incomprehensible that you will just be in total awe and then the total awe will disappear and you will just be. You will not be this and you will not be that. You will just be. And nothing comes after be. If you think of something that comes after be it's not that. And you are that now, but you refuse to acknowledge it.

SH: Why do we refuse to acknowledge it?

R: Because you want me to come here and teach you things. (SH: Well please don't come then.) (laughter) You want to go through all these experiences. (SH: Who wants to.) The one you think is you. The one you think is Henry. (SH: Yeah.) But there is no Henry so nobody wants to. (SH: That's pretty slack.)

SR: Robert where does this philosophy, East Indian philosophy come from that said that consciousness became bored and therefore divided into a sort of a... (R: Um.) ..."hide and go seek game." Is that just to amuse us. That's what we can achieve on while we're...

R: Yes, that's from the Upanishads. Yes, this was written for mortals so you can see that there is something that happened and something that's keeping to happen that is keeping on happening. If they didn't write about this there would be no Upanishads. There would be empty pages. It's just like the story of Adam and Eve. When you're asked how did existence begin, the priests, the rabbis, the ministers tell you about Adam and Eve. That sounds like a good explanation. But of course it never happened. (SR: I mean it's a good one.) It's a story, it's a fairy tale. (SR: What's the best story that you can tell us that isn't true that maybe we'll be able to sort of think about?) Dah. (students laugh)

SB: That was profound Robert. (Students laugh) Maya baba in his books said that God wanted to limit himself to the most limited form in creation. To search for himself through all the forms of his creation and as the forms went from stone to plant, to animals, to birds, to fish, to animal, to human. As the form got less and less limited, you know, the stone couldn't move around, consciousness was like sleeping or deep sleep and then it went on to the insects and animals, to movement it was less and less limited and it could express it's consciousness more and more and it got intuition and intellect and so God limiting itself to the infinite degree only to discover his own infinite love, infinite possibility, infinite happiness as he realized who he was. That's what it means from what Maya Baba said...

R: Well if God wants to do all that more power to him. (laughter) (SB: It's like God loving himself, discovering himself as infinite happiness or infinite love.) Good for God. (laughter) (SB: God is consciousness. It seems that way.) I thought it was really poetic and romantic. It is, it's nice. Sure. (SB: Until the stone realized he's a man and then the man realized he's not a man but he was God all along and at that point he was infinite happiness.) That's a nice story but I'd rather be superman. (laughter) (SB: I thought you were superman.) No. (SB: I thought you were mighty mouse.) Mighty mouse, that's good.

SC: Robert how do we discern the difference between the awakened dream and the sleeping dream?

R: When you are sleeping. You're asleep and everything is quiet, there is no noise, there is no one moving. When you get up, you know you've rested and now you're awake. When you dream you know you dreamt. So the I is aware of those three states of consciousness. The I is aware of dreaming sleeping and waking. Now you have to ask yourself, "Now where did that I come from?" "What is the source of the I that knows I slept, that knows I dreamt and now knows that I am awake? Where does that I come from?" When you discover where the I came from then you will transcend the waking sleeping and dreaming state and you will be free.

SK: Aren't we all destined to wake up no matter what we come to or kind of flop through a few more minor incidences in existence?

R: I like to use the term, "We're all hell bound for heaven." Of course, this life is a false identity. So you have to wake up sometime. But by being in satsang you have made the choice to awaken now. That's the freedom you've got, the only freedom. To turn within and not to react to conditions of any kind. By being at satsang you affirm that truth. So satsang is usually for those people who are ready to awaken in this life. But ultimately everybody will awaken.

SY: Could you say something about the difference between understanding something and being that understanding? Nisargadatta would keep saying if you say you've understood, you haven't understood.

R: True. Understanding something is when I am talking or you read a book and intellectually it makes a lot of sense to you. But even if it makes sense intellectually to you, you have not experienced that. If you have not experienced that, it makes no difference how long you've been reading books or how long you've been discussing truth, or how many classes you've gone to or how many teachers you've had. You have to be able to do something yourself to have an experience of the reality. Therefore there comes a time in our lives when we stop reading books. We stop running around to teacher to teacher to teacher. We stop going and identifying with certain places in the world and running all over the world. We become still, we go within ourselves a lot. We have a lot of time to ourselves. We question ourselves, we observe ourselves, we look at ourselves and then the Guru within you will tell you what to do, how to do it and where to go and everything will go well with you.

(Robert plays song on tape then Kerema sings one of her songs)

Kerema: This is called "Divine Essence."

(Kerema sings her song)

R: That's beautiful. Add it to the Jnana Marga songbook.

Kerema: Okay. (laughs)

SB: Now we need Sam to play the chorus for us. We need the chorus for this, it's beautiful.

SE: And no self records is going to come out with the record for Mary and Kerema

I have an announcement, it is announcement time?

R: Sure.

SE: We have four of the Jnani...

(tape ends) [TOC]

EVERYTHING IS WHAT YOU BELIEVE IT IS!

4th July, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace.

Welcome this Thanksgiving eve, New Years eve, July the 4th, Columbus Day, Christmas, it's all the same. The question is, "Who are you?" Do you identify with a holiday or with the Self. What is most important to you, to watch somebody shooting fireworks or to discover your true nature? You have to answer that question yourself. Whatever you give importance to you ultimately become. Whatever becomes first in your life, that's where your heart is, and that's what happens to you, sooner or later.

I'm not saying this because I want everybody to come to satsang. I'm saying this because it's the truth. What you really feel deep in the recesses of your heart is what you really are. If you give 50% to your spiritual work you will get 50% back. If you give 70% you will get 70% back. If you give 100% you will get 100% back. You can only get out of a satsang like this what you put into it. You've got to give of your heart, your feelings, your emotions. You've got to give your Self, with a capital "S," to the universe.

The universe, the world, God, everything, is what you believe it is. The only reality there is for you, is the reality of your belief system. If you believe things are tough, things are hard to come by, spiritual unfoldment is only for the few, that's how it is for you. You are the controller. You are the one who makes the decisions. Your life follows your mind. Yet when you begin to realize that your mind does not really exist, then the life you've been following becomes invalid. It just dissipates, as if you awoke from a dream. But as long as you're following the world, then your mind determines what happens to you. Your mind is not your friend. Your mind is an accumulation of past karma, past thoughts, and future worries. Therefore you should not rely on your mind. You should not even rely on your instincts. You should not even rely on your intuition. You should rely on no thing.

When your intuition, when your mind, when your instincts are transcended, then consciousness appears by itself. This is because consciousness has always been your real nature, and all you have to do is focus your attention on consciousness. You do this, of course, by asking, "Who am I?"

The sun shines. When the sun seems to disappear at night, the moon takes it's place, and it appears to shine also. But the light is only an appearance in the moon. The reality is it's using the sun's light to shine. It's a reflection of the sun. In the same instance, the light that you see here, that causes you to see images, subjects, mountains, trees, stars, the universe, is simply a reflection of the Self. It is the light of the Self. You're making a wrong identification, for you believe it is the light that shines by itself. In other words, you believe the world to be real.

But just like the moon would have no image if it wasn't reflecting the sun, so also you have an image as a body, as a mind, because you are reflecting the Self, the light of the Self. And instead of identifying with your source, you are identifying with the self with a small "s". You are identifying with your body-self. Wrong identification. To get back to your Self, your real Self, you simply have to identify with consciousness, and when you do the world will disappear. Again, you do this by inquiring, "Who am I?"

One of the most recent questions that was asked of me, and I get this question again and again, is this. You say Robert, that the body will take care of itself. You do not have to think about your affairs, or about the world. Your job is to identify with the Self. But yet, when I read the books of Sages and Jnanis, they're usually hermits. They live in ashrams or in caves. So do you mean that self-realization will cause me to leave my family, to leave my work, not to be interested in anything, to become a hermit?" And that's a very paradoxical and perplexing question.

The reason the books are written by people like that, is because it was their karma, as far as their body is concerned, to become a recluse, a hermit, to shun the world. That's why they had the time to write the books. Yet there are self-realized people who are living in the world, have positions in the world, have families, and do worldly things. They are also self-realized. You do not hear too much about them because they have nothing to say.

You see, your body is an image. It is not real. It appears to be real. Because you believe your body is real, the world becomes real to you also. And yet these things have absolutely nothing to do with you. You are apart from these things. Your real nature is nirvana, absolute reality. Everything else is superficial. You should not react to the world. I never said you should not be in the world. You can do whatever you wish. Whatever your karmic instincts tells you to do, your body will do it, for this is the reason you appear to take on a body. But you have nothing to do with those things. You are total freedom. You are not confined to a body, or to a world, or to a universe.

I know it appears strange, and you say, "How can I possibly be free, and all-pervading, and omnipresent, when I feel my body as real?" You have to ask yourself, "Who said that?" The one who said that is the one I have to get rid of. And that is your personal I. It is the personal I that wants you to believe that you are a body and a mind, and that everything is real, and that you have to become spiritual, and lift yourself up. Nothing can be further from the truth.

You are not the body. The body does not exist. The mind does not exist. It appears to exist, like the water in the mirage. The world appears to exist like the water in the mirage. Everything else you see with your eyes, and feel with your senses, appear to exist like the water in the mirage. Why does it exist like that? Because you think it does. Your thinking process causes you to believe all these things. Therefore everything has to be explained.

But in truth, in reality, none of these things exist at all. You are absolute freedom. You are total bliss consciousness. That's what you are, and there is no explanation. When you experience this for yourself, the question will never arise, "What is my body going to do with itself while I am self-realized?" Even though to others you may appear as having a body, you will know that there is no body. There is no personal I. There is no mind. You will be all-pervading, and you will be at peace. Asking all these questions is like asking what came first, the tree or the seed, the chicken or the egg?

Do not try to analyze what I say to you. Do not even try to understand it. When I say to you, "No thing exists except consciousness, and you are that," I know it appears to sound ludicrous, and that is only because you have not experienced that state. It is simply the fourth state of consciousness, after sleeping, dreaming and waking. In that state you are absolute freedom. Yet when you try to analyze it, when you try to understand it, when you try to compare it, you get nowhere, for it is beyond the finite.

The only way you can really understand what I am saying is in the silence, where there are no words. This is why I say to you, "When I appear to speak to you, I am really silent." There are no words. The only one who can hear the words that I speak to you is your mind. And if you're listening to me with your mind, you will attempt to analyze everything I say, and there will be total chaos and confusion.

The proper way to listen to me in satsang is through silence. You are not attempting to think what I've said. You're not even attempting to hear what I've said. You do not analyze what I say. You do not ponder what I say. You're simply there, in nothingness, hearing nothing, being nothing, responding to nothing. As soon as you start to think about it you spoil it, and you're back to your body-mind. As soon as you want to argue with me, or debate with me, or bring up certain points to me, you are working out of your body-mind. There can be no conclusion.

This is why when some of you, sometimes, when you see me personally and ask me certain questions, I remain silent. For there are no explanations. Even if the explanation I give to you satisfies you for a while, after a couple of hours you will be right back where you started from. And then you will say, "Let's go hear that teacher." You will say, "This teacher is coming to town. Let's go listen to her, or to him." You're working out of your body-mind. You believe some teacher has the answer. You're looking for some profound statement of truth, where you will see lights and hear sounds, and it will put you into a state of samadhi. Forget it.

Anything that happens to you, you have earned. Therefore the wise student keeps silent. When I say, "Keep silent," I don't mean just not to talk, but causes the mind to be silent. For you can be silent and you can be cursing under your breath, as you know. And you can be saying statements like, "He's crazy. He doesn't know what he's talking about." Your mind is working. Silence refers to the mind.

This is why self-inquiry has been given to you, for it is realized how difficult it is to make the mind quiescent. Therefore instead of making the mind silent, which is impossible to do for some people, you practice self-inquiry. When your mind tells you there's something wrong, when your mind wants to argue with itself, you simply inquire, "To whom has this come? Who feels this way? I do. It is I that feels out of sorts. It is I that feels argumentative. It is I who wants to get even. It is I who has a chip on their shoulder. It is I who wants to put on an act."

Once you realize it is I, you spend the rest of your life eliminating the I. It is this personal I that gives you all the trouble, that causes you to think, to argue, to discern, to be intellectual, to try and attempt to analyze everything you see. You've been doing this for years, most of you. Where has it gotten you? What has it done for you? All of your running around the world, going from teacher to teacher, from book to book, where has it really put you?

I know some of you will say, "Well I'm ahead of the game, because if I didn't read the books, I wouldn't be aware of this. If I didn't go see many teachers, I wouldn't know what they have to offer." Well, let me assure you, it is your intellect that tells you this.

Every real Sage had their experiences prior to reading books and seeing other teachers. Reading books first will confound you. There is so much to read. There are so many concepts. There are so many teachings. You will become a very intelligent idiot. You will be able to memorize passages from books, and recite them frontwards and backwards. You will show people how intelligent you are. You will think you've accomplished something. But the first negative condition that hits you, you will respond negatively, such as a death in the family, the loss of a job, loss of income, and so forth. You will respond to these things in a negative manner. This shows you you've gotten nowhere, with all of your reading, with all of your running around the world.

If you truly wish to experience a higher state of consciousness, you have to acquire spiritual discernment, which means you realize that the world emanates out of your own mind. Therefore, why should I respond to the world? It doesn't mean you have to leave the world. It simply means that you are not attached to the world. You do not react to the world. You are in the world but not of the world. You are free, in your heart. You only see the heart. The heart is another name for consciousness, for "I am that I am." I-am is the first name of God. God is consciousness. I-am is consciousness, and you are that.

This is why the first step in spiritual practice is to leave the world alone. Have no opinions for or against. Leave people alone. If someone is rubbing you the wrong way, this is all karmic. If you react to that position, to that person, you are simply setting more karma in motion, which you will have to experience again, and again, and again, until something happens within yourself, and you leave everything alone. Instead of reacting to the world and to people, you question yourself, "To whom has this happened? To me? Who is me? Where did me come from? Who gave birth to me?"

I appears to have always been with you. Since you can first remember yourself, you referred to I. I need this, and I want this. I am happy. I am unhappy. I, I and I. You start to think, "If I were eliminated what would be left?" You don't answer that question.

You do not say what you read in a book, Consciousness would be left, or absolute reality would be left. You have not had that experience, so how do you know it's true?

That's why self-inquiry is such a superior method. For you do not say, "I-am consciousness," or "I-am God," or "I-am absolute reality," or "I-am nirvana," for you begin to realize what you call I-am, your body, can never be any of those things. So rather than affirm those things, you ask, "Who am I?" What you're really saying is, "What is the source of I?" and you never answer.

Even if something makes you feel you are all-pervading, you are ultimate oneness, emptiness, you realize that can't be I, because I is experiencing that. The experiencer has to go. The one who experiences samadhi, the one who experiences higher states of consciousness, has to go, has to be transcended, eliminated. Therefore, as you practice "Who am I?" whatever comes to you, you merely observe. You realize back in your heart, that the observer has to go. As long as there's somebody there to experience anything, you have not arrived anywhere. So you continue to practice, "Who am I?" and you keep still. When thoughts come to you, you inquire, "To whom do they come? They come to me? Then who am I?"

Now again, the question that's usually asked to me is, "What is happening to my affairs, and to my life, and to my body, while I am doing this?" What affairs? What body? The wisdom will come to you, "As long as I believe I have a body, I have to question more intently, "Who am I?" The intent has to be there. The intent that I am not what I appear to be. You know that intellectually. Even though I appear to be the body, and I am wondering what is going to happen to my body as I practice "Who am I?" somewhere deep inside the recesses of my heart, I know that I will come to the conclusion one day that there is no body.

In the meanwhile, what appears to be your body will be under the guidance of the universe. That's the phenomena. The same power, which is called Ishvara, who looks after the universe, and causes the grass to grow, the flowers to blossom, the sun to shine, the fruit to grow on fruit trees, the wheat and barley that grows in the ground, and you are supplied and maintained and sustained by these things, the same power that does all this will take care of you as you appear, as an illusion.

I know it's paradoxical again, for you're saying to yourself, "How can an illusion take care of me?" The illusion takes care of the illusion, so it appears. But I say to you, persist in inquiring, "To whom does this come?" Who believes the world is real, and who believes the world is an illusion? They're both concepts. They're both wrong. Reality has no belief system. Reality is not maintained and sustained by anything. Reality is I-am. It is beingness. Not being this or being that, but pure beingness. And as long as I don't understand what that is, because I've not experienced it, I will continue to ask, "To whom has this come? To me? Then who am I? Where did the I come from?"

One of these days you will fall into the Self, and you will disappear. There will be no body, no image, no concept, no I, no mind, no universe, no God, yet you will appear to be all of those things. That's the paradox. You will appear to people as an ordinary human being, but you will know that you are the screen upon which images are super-imposed. You are not the images which keep changing. You are forever, eternal, unborn. You are the one. You are total freedom. Your real image will shine forth, and the whole universe will emanate out of you. You will not have normal feelings, but for want of a better word, you will become bliss. You have always been bliss. You have simply awakened to reality.

Again, what are you doing with your life now? What do you believe? What do you do every day? Do you allow the pressures of the world to cave in on you? Leave the world alone. Do not attempt to figure it out. Do not attempt to argue about it, whether it's real or not. You must find it out for yourself. In the process all will go well for you, no matter how it appears. Your job is to find out your true reality, to surrender to yourself, to surrender your ego, your mind, your body, the world, the universe, God. Surrender all of that to your Self. Let it all go into your spiritual heart, on the right side of your chest.

Above all do not worry about anything. You are well taken care of. The Self which you are, knows when the time is right for you to discover your reality. Have faith in yourself. Know it's there inside of you, awaiting your surrender. No longer will you fight this world. No longer will you react or respond to this world. No longer will you be frightened by this world. Your wants will become simple.

SV: Robert, I have a question. There are certain Masters like Muktananda and guru Mai, who give shaktipat to people. Is that beneficial in any way at all?

R: If you wish to become a performer of siddhis, and develop magical powers, then it's important to you. All of these things come out of the mind. There has to be someone to experience all of these things. Every power, every miracle that someone performs, is out of the mind. (SV: So if one is doing inquiry, it wouldn't benefit them to partake of this?) If one is doing inquiry they want to become the Self. They want to awaken to their reality, and that's the only goal they've got. Therefore they will bypass all these things. Powers, miracles, even if you're able to bring somebody back from the dead, what good is it ultimately? It's all in the world. It has to do with the world. It's interesting that when you practice self-inquiry all of these siddhis will come to you, but you will bypass them. You will not be interested.

It's like the example I give of the person who is invited to the king's palace to share the kingdom, and they're driving through the gates. The palace is on twenty-five acres. On the way they become fascinated with the flowers, and they forget about the king and the palace. And they learn how to grow the flowers, how to make them into beautiful flowers, and make them larger. They learn all about flowers. But then they remember the king in the palace, so they forget about the flowers and they keep driving. Then they see wonderful caves. They go on exploring the caves. They explore one cave after another, and they forget about the king in the palace. Years pass. They become fascinated over caves. They know all about caves. They know all about flowers, and all about everything else they found on the way. If they went straight to the king they would have shared the whole country, but they became fascinated in the objects of the king. They have not gone to the top.

So it is with someone who chases siddhis and powers. Where do these powers come from? What is the source of them? To whom do they come? Who needs them? You will understand that you are absolute reality, pure awareness. You are beyond all siddhis, beyond all powers, and the person who wants to experience all the siddhis has been eliminated, annihilated. You have become the Self. You are free and totally happy. So go for the gusto. Do not concern yourself with worldly powers. They come and go.

Another example of this is there were two brothers. And they told their father, one said, "I'm going out to become a worldly person, and make a lot of money, and own property." And the other one said, "I'm going to pursue the spiritual life." They left to go their own way and years passed. They returned home after twenty years. And the father asked them "What have you accomplished, my sons?" And the worldly son said, "I have amassed a fortune. I own castles and mansions and Rolls Royce's. I'm married and have a family." So the father said, "Well done."

And he asked the other son, "What have you accomplished?" And the other son said, "Come, I'll show you." He took him to the edge of the river, proceeded to recite incantations, and make all kinds of kriyas and mudras, and he walked across the river and he walked back. And he said, "See what I've accomplished?" The father said, "Follow me." He took him to a certain place in the river where there was a ferry. He paid five cents, and went across and came back. And he said "See, I can do that too." In other words, he'd accomplished nothing by being able to walk across the water. What good does that do? The only thing he'll be able to do with that is to charge admission in the circus, and show people he can walk on the water. But what benefit is it?

So it is with people who chase after powers and siddhis. They accomplish nothing. Many times they're stuck in millions of reincarnations. They have to come back again and again until they find their way out again. So go to the top, and leave the world alone.

SG: Robert, You were saying that going to these teachers and reading these books is kind of a waste of time. Then what's the value of coming here and reading the handouts?

R: No value. The only value you have in this is what you believe it to be.

Being in satsang is good because you're with like-minded people, and the shakti is greater. It sort of gives you a push to go back into the Self. If you find a teacher, or even a book, or a tree, or a rock, and you begin to study this, and you stay with it, that's the best course. But to go from book to book, and from teacher to teacher, is a waste of time. It just builds up your intellect.

SG: What about a group of teachers in the same vein. Like, in this stuff, Kline and Ramesh and Nisargadatta, and Maharshi. It seems like if you read that, it seems like they're all kind of... it's like a diamond, they're all have different facets of it.

R: They may have different facets of it, but if you go deeply into their works there are certain contradictions. Yet they're all good. Your heart should tell you where to go and what to do. But my advice is to find one of the teachers, that you identify with, perhaps from a previous existence, and stay with that person until you find yourself.

(long silence)

Sometimes, to give you a rest from self-inquiry, you may alternate and try other forms. For instance, I have found the I-am meditation to be of great benefit to people. Trying to do that for a while, and dropping the self-inquiry, is beneficial to some people. It's like when you take a certain vitamin. After you take it for a while it's good to rest for a week, and refrain from taking the vitamin. And so it is, as you get into self-inquiry, after a while you can give it a rest, and you can practice something else. I suggest the I-am meditation. Many people tell me it's been very beneficial to them. Therefore, let's practice it together. You make yourself comfortable, and you relax your body, and you close your eyes in order to remove distractions. The first thing you do is you focus your attention on your breathing. You observe your breath. Do not emphasize your breath. Simply observe it, and observe the sensations in your body, at the same time.

(silence)

After a while of doing this, you inquire of yourself, "Who is the observer? Who is observing the breath?" And you say, "I am." With your respiration, you inhale and you say, "I," you exhale and you say, "am."

(meditation)

R: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, peace, peace.

Let me remind you that the answers I give to most questions are specifically to the person asking the question. That's why I appear to give different answers at different times.

Do we have any announcements?

SM: A number of the transcriptions have come in.

R: Would you like to read the Jnani again? (SM: Oh yes.)

(Mary reads the confessions of a Jnani. Refer to the beginning of this book)

SM: Thanks Robert. (after reading)

R: Thank you, Mary. Any other business to take care of?

Remember to love yourself, to worship yourself, to bow to yourself. God dwells in you as you. Peace, I love you. God bless you.

Happy fourth of July. Happy New Year...

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 76

THERE ARE NOT TWO BODIES!

7th July, 1991

Robert: Welcome to the house of Henry. It's good to see you again. It's good to be with you. I love you all with all my heart.

We have two types of people that come here. One type is Bhakta's, devotional people. The other type is aspiring Jnanis. They're both very different. The bhakta's are usually the devotees. The aspiring Jnanis are trying to get out of their mind in unusual ways.

As an example: We had a bunch of people come here from Santa Cruz. I think they came about eight times. From the information I received yesterday is that they all became Jnanis. So I received a letter also to confirm this from Richard Hill. Do you remember him?

SM: Yes.

R: Would you like to read that letter? (Robert asks student) (SM: Yes.) I get a lot of letters and share them with you because it's interesting.

SM: (Mary reads) He says:

Dear Robert,

Long time we haven't connected. I'm visiting my mother and haven't been disturbed yet. I just got word you got another earthquake. Amazing this consciousness, well miracles never cease.

Saw Jay a couple of weeks ago. I heard he's claimed to be enlightened although he didn't tell me that. In Santa Cruz enlightenment claims are up ten thousand percent. Jim, Trish and numerous others have all registered claims. I think if you live long enough you hear and see everything. What a dream.

Well I trust satsang and all is going well. To me it boils down to, do I have to give up my sense of humor, if enlightenment means talking all this ...? (four letter word, seriously!) Well as the claims mount and the sun sets I bid ado and must express my gratitude for all your help.

Love,

Richard Hill.

PS. You can't buy a home in Marin unless you fill out the form about who your Guru is.

SM: Sounds like registration forms. (laughter)

R: I receive many letters of this type. Actually what difference does it make?

SH: You should issue certificates of enlightenment. (laughter)

R: Yes. I've been told that before. (laughter)

SG: Sell it! (more laughter)

R: It's interesting with some of these people. The first calamity that comes along in their lives they become hysterical, they go bezerk, they can't handle it and they say they are Jnanis. Well this is good I suppose, it makes life interesting.

(silence)

One of the problems we have with the teaching is that when I say, "You are not the body," many of us still believe we are spirit in the body.

As an example: When someone with a disease or any other problem comes to me and I tell them they are not the body, they believe that their true Self is within the body, but they are not that body.

Now this couldn't be further from the truth. There are never two bodies. There is not your physical body the body with the problems, and then there is another body which is consciousness or the Self. And the idea is you've got to turn within the Self and let go of the first body. In all actuality and in all truth there is only the one. The body that you identify with does not even exist.

When you first start spiritual life you pray to God. You believe God is separate from you, and this is good for most people, there is nothing wrong with that at all because at least they're praying to a higher being. If they are sincere, there comes a time when they get the experience that what I have been praying to is within me.

As Jesus said, "The Father is within me." And we go around believing that our outside body is a body of sin, but the inside, wow! That is something else that is where God lives. So if I cut that person open will I find God? But that's also good, because now you are believing that consciousness, God, Brahman is within you. And that usually goes on for years and years and years. But again if you are sincere and at this time you should have the experience of having a teacher or a Sage to go to, or you have done other things, or you have gone deep, deep within yourself. The realization comes by itself that there is no body at all. No body exists whatsoever. There is noone within. There is noone without. There is only consciousness, absolute reality and I-am is that.

In other words you come to the conclusion, there is no body to make well. There is no body with problems. There is no body that is unenlightened and has to become enlightened. There is just no body. And yet the appearance is very strong. The mind is very strong with some of us. It tells us all sorts of things. It fools us, it plays games with us, it makes us believe something is wrong someplace or it goes to the other extreme and makes us believe I am enlightened. Now the very thought that you think you are enlightened shows you that you are not. There would be noone left to claim that. The claimant has been transcended. You just become beingness. You just become your Self.

There is noone that has to become themselves really. That's why words, words, words are all fictitious. But to make you understand what I'm talking about we have to use some words. There is no-one to become anything that one never existed. Noone. You can never say, "I have become," because the I is dead if you have become. There is no claim that you can stake. There is no one left to make the claim. You just are. You have become Infinity.

How do you know when you arrive at the goal?

It begins with your Self first. You just have no connection with the body again. The body that never existed to begin with, is gone. This is very paradoxical. No body exists. You are free from that and yet everyone else sees you as a body. And they see you going through experiences like everybody else. But I can assure you that there is no body. And those words don't even come to you that there is no body because those words become ludicrous when you've arrived.

You no longer state, "I am not the body. I am consciousness." That becomes a joke. All those words, liberation, moksha, illumination, absolute reality, ultimate oneness, nirvana, emptiness they become a joke. It is only the ajnani that spots out those words and of course I do it in the teaching.

You become omnipresent, all-pervading. That is what you really are to begin with, I use the words, "You become." Yet you no longer feel anything. There is nothing to feel. There is no thing to be. There is nothing to experience. We use words like bliss. Bliss simply means a state beyond the norm that is so joyous, compared to the joy that you know. It is beyond that joy. It is too happy to be happy. It is too loving to be love. It is way beyond those qualities. There are no words that can describe it.

So what is all this talking for? Why do you want me to say these things?

Because you believe you're human and you want to listen to the word, the good word. The good word is "Silence." This is why I tell you so often when I speak, I am really silent and you sort of have to read within the lines. It's not the words, that goes to your heart. It's what you read between the lines, between the words. And what you read between the lines, between the words is nothing else but your Self. You are that.

Therefore when you are really that, the oneness pervades in your heart and there is no separation between you and me. There is no separation now but most of you insist on believing you are the body. You tell me about your pains, your problems, your troubles. Who has these pains? Who has these troubles? See you're making a mistake if you say the body, because there is no body. Don't you see now the fastest way to remove all of these things from your consciousness. Don't blame it on the body. You're giving all the blame to the body now. You used to blame the devil. Now since you got into Jnana Marga you're blaming the body. "It's the body's fault, it's not me. I didn't do it the body made me do it. It's the body that got angry. It's the body that gets sick, gets upset," and so forth. But if you could only keep inside of you someplace that there is no body to do anything. There is no body that you have to make well.

So many people tell me who have a sickness or a disease, they say, "Robert while I'm on the path and I still think that I'm a body can I cure the body and make the body well. As long as I believe I am the body?" That's a mistake because you're reinforcing that there is a body to become well. There was never a body that became sick or had a problem of any kind.

What do you see with your eyes? What do you feel? What do you see in the world?

Most of you still want to pray for the world, to bring peace to the world, to bring harmony to the world, to alleviate man's inhumanity to man. That is very well and good but you're working with an illusion. For none of these things are really happening. They appear to be happening, that's a false appearance.

Of course you should not ignore a situation when it comes in your vibration. When someone is in your vibration and they're in need of anything there is nothing to think about. The mistake you make is when you think you're helping. That inflates your ego and you're thinking you are doing somebody a good turn by helping.

This is what it means when it says in the Bible, "To agree quickly with thy adversary." It means that you should help immediately without thought. I am not helping you and you are not helping me. There is only one and what you think about the one and what you do to the one is none other than your Self. Therefore you do not think I am a good person. I help the homeless. You just do it if that's what you're going to do.

Many times I go downtown to the shelter with Dennis Weaver and a few other people and help serve food. I usually don't tell anybody about this. I don't think about this. I am not doing a good deed. I'm just doing because it's happening and yet in reality there is noone doing anything. You have to get rid of the notion, I am the doer. And if you have to think, "Should I or shouldn't I," forget it, do nothing.

It's very paradoxical but a true Jnani or enlightened Sage has a great compassion, a great love, a universal love, a universal compassion. Many people still believe that to be a Jnani you're not supposed to care about anything. Just by having that opinion, by having that belief shows you've got a long way to go. There are no thoughts, there is no idea of doing anything. You just do it. If you're meant to do it. But you don't think about it. Your body or what you call your body, that doesn't exist will appear to do whatever it has to do. It has nothing to with you.

Some people think it's virtuous to worry about others. Worrying about others comes from the ego. But doing for others and helping others without thinking, that comes from the Self. So a real Jnani does not sit in a cave and meditate all day but appears to be active in the world sometimes. But there are no thoughts, there is no attachment, there is no sense of doer-ship, yet there is pure love. Love that the average person can never understand.

Think about yourself for a moment. What do you really think you are? Now don't think what you'd like to be. What do you think you are right now? And you have to be honest with yourself. Honesty is very important. Think of what you are right now. What do think you are?

That thought of yourself has to become transcended. It has to be transcended. The thought has to be stopped. For whether you think you're good or bad or in between, it's a thought. And as long as it's a thought it will lead to other thoughts and they will lead to other thoughts and pretty soon you will have a whole bagful of thoughts to get rid of.

Therefore when you think about yourself, catch yourself. Ask yourself, "Who thinks? Who thinks?" No matter what it's about, it makes no difference how beautiful your thoughts are, you still have to question yourself, "Who thinks?" There is no beauty, there is no chaos, they're both impostors. Yet there is a ... I'm looking for the word ... there is a joy, there is a bliss that cannot be explained. That joy and that bliss is the nature of the universe. It has nothing to do with the universe. It has nothing to do with God or the world. God, the world comes from your own imagination. consciousness, absolute reality comes from your own imagination.

For remember there is no one to experience absolute reality. You cannot say, "I think I am experiencing absolute reality, or I think I am experiencing consciousness." That's laughable. There is no one to experience that. For when you awaken to that you have awakened to spontaneity. You have awakened to the moment. Where there is no past and no future. There is just that wonderful bliss.

What can ever happen to that wonderful bliss? Can anyone change it? Can anyone take it away? Can anyone destroy it?

There is no one to do those things. For there is not bliss and something else. There is only the bliss, for want of a better word, that is. And as you awaken to that your body disintegrates, so-to-speak. It doesn't really disintegrate because it never existed to begin with. You simply awaken to your Self. And this is something to be experienced. You learn to leave the world alone. Yet this sounds like a contradiction because before I said, you automatically help and you have an attitude of loving kindness. Now I say you leave the world alone. It's not really a contradiction because by leaving the world alone you automatically become an asset to others. How can that be?

As your consciousness expands you become all-pervading. It's like as if you were a light in a room of darkness. And the light shows the way. The darkness turns into light. It's as if you were one of those dimmer switches, the light turns on and on and on until the whole room is filled with light. That's how it is when your consciousness expands. Without thoughts, without emotions, without feelings. You become the light of the world, so-to-speak. And anyone in your presence receives the grace and benefits of that Self which you are.

So to the question of, "What is the fastest way to awaken?"

The answer is always, be in the company of a Sage. At satsang or otherwise and have no thoughts about it. Do not think what is happening but open your heart and you will feel the grace that exists there. Even when I say, "You have to work on yourself, is a misnomer." For there is no self or body to work on. This is just an answer to give to a question that people ask. How can you work on something that doesn't exist. Therefore I say,

"Just be yourself." So if the persons a bank robber they believe that I said they'd have to be a better bank robber and they have to be themselves so they go rob more banks.

But if you live in the spontaneity that I'm talking about, if you live in the moment, your Self is the pure Self. The unadulterated Self. The Self which is divine love, peace, happiness.

The best way to do this, again is to be in the company of a Sage and give up all desires. Give up all of the desire of wanting to attain. There is nothing to attain. There is nothing to do. There are no disciplines you have to follow. Even self-inquiry is only to keep your mind still. Everything is to quiet your mind. When the mind is quiet things begin to happen. It's not a question of agreeing with what I say or disagreeing with what I say, it makes no difference. Simply be your Self, just the way you are. When I say, "Just the way you are," I don't mean how you were five minutes ago or a minute ago. Just the way you are implies, your true nature right this moment. In this second. In this second you are free.

(slight pause)

See what you're doing now. You're thinking. That spoils it. Learn to stay without thought. Even if for a few seconds. It's hard isn't it. This is the reason you have to ask yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come?" It's only a modality to cause you to stop thinking.

(slight pause)

Some of you are beginning to feel what I'm talking about. No thoughts. Nothing to remember. Nothing to do. When thoughts come to you about your affairs, about your predicament, realize that you have surrendered your affairs and your predicament to the Self and all is well.

In other words there should be no situation that appears strong enough to set you off. Feeling miserable or feeling too happy. No thing should have that power. It's called the thoughtless state. It's really not that hard. Let go. Close your eyes, it'll help. If you have to do something, observe your breath. But if you can't, forget about your breath. After all, to whom does the breath come? To the body. Since there is no body there is no breath. Then what is? I-am. What is I-am? Silence. Open your heart, let go. There is no past, no future. No thing can ever harm you. You exist in eternity. Be still. The breath does not exist any longer. There never was a body. There is only that. Silence.

(silence)

Well do we have any questions?

SM: We have some transcriptions and we also have the list of the number of the transcriptions. So those of you who have transcriptions at home with no numbers on them, you can take one of the pages and find out what numbers they are.

R: Feel free to ask anything.

SC: Hi Robert. How do I stay in the silence? Instead of just asking myself, like... I can't say, "I-am he, I-am consciousness, I-am bliss and awareness." Just that over and over rather than following the I-thought?

R: Why don't you take a deep breath and do nothing? For it appears when you're saying all these things you're still identifying with your body. So try to do nothing at all. (SC: Yes but the thoughts keep coming, that's the reason I say that.) Surrender then. (SC: What? Surrender then, to your heart, to God. (SC: I don't understand what you meant by that?) Say something like, "Take this God." Every time you have a thought, a feeling, an emotion, give it to God. Until you become empty. Try that.

SB: Some of the other type of Anandil teachings like the Joshen teachings they don't concentrate on getting rid of thoughts. They just stay with the present and they forget about the thoughts. They stay in presence and let thoughts come and go and then they don't get involved in them, don't even worry about getting rid of thoughts. Just come to rest in presence or that Consciousness.

R: That's like Vipassana meditation. That's good, there's nothing wrong with that.

SB: I was reading something about Ramana he usually talks about getting rid of thoughts but in one passage he said just stay in presence and just forget about thoughts. Just let them come and go and don't even fool with them.

R: Use whatever method you have to use to still your mind.

SC: Let me ask you, what do you mean by stay in the presence? (SB: Stay in consciousness.) Well I still don't understand that?

R: Just stay where you are and let your thoughts come and go. Use whatever method you have to use. Do whatever you have to do but the object is to still the mind. When the mind becomes quiet, everything happens by itself. All these various methods that different teachers tell you, Zen teachers, Buddhist teachers, even Mystical Christianity, is in order to make your mind quiet. (pause) Feel how quiet you are now. It doesn't matter if thoughts come or not. Just be quiet. In other words, do not acknowledge the thoughts by feeling them. Whatever you do not acknowledge has to leave you sooner or later. Therefore when your feelings are no longer on your thoughts, your thoughts will dissipate.

SB: Robert I notice that when I'm really resting in Consciousness. I notice a feeling of presence in the whole centre of the chest area that never happened before. It's like it's being vacated from up here and a fullness in here. And then like a subtle love feeling.

R: What you are actually feeling is the inner guru pulling your mind into the heart. That's the feeling you have. Let it happen.

SJ: Robert I met someone who wants to relay a question to you. (R: Umm.) He says, "what is your viewpoint..." (R: Where is he?) Somewhere? He said what is your viewpoint, I think what he meant is what is your response or understanding of the occurrence of Saints body converting into light and not leaving a corpse behind? In anyone's viewpoint? And then, as compared to Saints appearing to leave a corpse behind?

R: All of these things are possible. Usually people who practice siddhis through pranayama are able to disintegrate their bodies. So no corpse is found. This still comes from the mind. But it doesn't make any difference. Since a Jnani is not the body to begin with, therefore he doesn't have to deal with a corpse. Only if there was really a body would you have to deal with a corpse. But since there is no body who deals with the corpse? Who has to make the corpse disintegrate? If it never existed to begin with. (SJ: Well someone's got to.) There is no corpse for the Jnani.

SJ: Another question I'd like to ask you. Some siddhas find that one must convert the body to light or rather actualize what the body already is to break the reincarnation cycle or else they'll be re-embodied? Or else must be re-embodied?

R: Same answer. Who has to do these things. There has to be someone to do all of these things and that's all mental work. A real Jnani has nothing to do because there is no existence. Therefore they never think of those things whatsoever. Because there are no thoughts. (SJ: Then what is the body?) It doesn't exist, there is no body. You should ask, "To whom is the body?" To the I. The I believes in the body. When there is no I there is no body and when there is no body there is no one to do anything. All doing comes from the mind.

SF: Robert, the thought I had, this question was asked is that reincarnation comes from attachment only, nothing else. That question it's so clear to me.

R: True. As long as there is somebody to be attached, for that person there will be reincarnation. But if there is no attachment, that means they're not even attached to their body because there is no body. Consequently you are already free. There is no coming or going. Freedom is there already and there is no one to do anything. Jay's writing all this down. (SJ: Some of it, yeah.)

SB: Robert even modern science tells us that the body is an appearance because when they look at it in the electronic microscope they say it's only atoms and atoms is only energy and energy is only light. But even modern science, material science is now saying that this appearance that appears solid is only light. That's their conclusion and that's modern material science. And you're saying it's even beyond light. So even science is telling us that it's just an appearance. So we don't even have to believe spiritual teachings we can just believe science and even that is showing us that all of this is an illusion.

R: True. (SB: But nobody believes it.) That's why you can talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and get nowhere. You just have to make up your mind that you're just going to get by yourself and be silent. Anyway you know how, until you become free.

SB: Robert what is the place of humor. What is the perspective, point of view of humor in the perspective of these teachings?

R: The whole teaching is a big joke. (laughter) It's all humor. (SB: From a material perspective it's a doubly big joke.) Sure. (SB: And then you need a single joke to take out the double joke and then we throw away all of them.) And you throw yourself away with it. (laughter)

SH: Throw yourself away. (laughs)

R: You throw the earphones away, the tapes, throw everything away.

SB: You mean it will be recycled? Recycled ego's.

SC: I'm going to ask some questions tonight. For myself I feel that I'm trying to go...before you can go to college you have to go to high school and school and kindergarten. (R: Why?) In order to...I'm talking about everyday living. I feel like I'm trying to get to a place that cannot be gotten because the mind is in the way and I know it's in the way but it seems to me that there is a way for chipping away the mind. Because I just feel stuck at it no matter what I do. The mind seems it has more power in itself because of my trying to get rid of it all at once. I mean that's my understanding, but the mind doesn't exist which I agree but how can you get rid of something that I feel is still there? Unless it's a slow erosion process.

R: What do you think self-inquiry is for? (SC: Well I ask myself, "To whom do these thoughts come to?" And then I just watch and of course nothing happens so I guess I get discouraged and...) Then you say, "They come to me." (SC: What?) "They come to me," you say, "I think those thoughts." And then you ask the question, "Who am I?" (S: Right.) And you do that over and over again until you drop dead. (laughter) (SC: What?)

SH: Until the ego drops dead. (laughter) (SK: You cleaned it up Henry.) Well I like to help Robert out.

SC: But isn't there a process where if the world was too ??? to do calculus? Which I can't do. Do you understand what I'm...

R: Of course I do. (SC: I know you do.) Self-inquiry is calculus, mathematics, geometry, algebra and 2 times 2 is four. It's all those things. Therefore if you practice self-inquiry something has to give. As you say, you're chipping away. As you practice self-inquiry you're chipping and chipping and chipping and something will happen. Even though you're having a hard time Nate, you're way ahead of the game. Keep it up. I think your main problem is you want it to happen like today. (SC: Yeah.) Forget about that, forget about how old you are and how much time you've got left. Just do it and let everything take care of itself. Remember everything is preordained anyway, so what's going to happen to you is going to happen. (pause) Would you like to read the Jnani Mary?

SM: Yes. (Mary reads the confession of a Jnani, refer to beginning of this book.)

R: Any other announcements, statements?

Kerema and Ed's cat died after sixteen years. And they are both very upset over this situation. So they are having a funeral today. Therefore let's have a moments silence for their cat.

(silence)

R: Remember to love yourself, to worship yourself, to pray to yourself, to bow to yourself because God dwells in you as you. I love you all. Peace. God bless you.

Oh we have some refreshments...

(tape ends) [TOC]

THERE IS NOTHING WRONG

11th July, 1991

Robert: Good evening.

There are no accidents. Everything is right just the way it is. There are no mistakes. You are in your right place going through those experiences that are necessary for you. There is nothing wrong. When you begin to appreciate this you will realize that the universe does not punish you, there is no God that punishes you, there is no world that is against you. Things appear to happen in your lives because it's necessary for your spiritual unfoldment at this time. What appears to be bad is really a blessing in disguise. What appears to be good may be a hindrance to you. This is why you should never judge yourself. You have to have faith in the powers that be. As you have faith enough you will become happy, just by being yourself.

To the extent that you see everything wrong in your life, to that extent do you perpetuate the condition, and it becomes difficult for you not to react. It becomes most difficult for you to practice self-inquiry, for you are letting the world show you how things are, and you are responding to the world. This is a grave mistake.

The secret is to allow the world to show you what it will, and for you not to react to anything. Have no opinion for or against. Just by doing this alone, you come to the state where you can see and feel that the whole world, the whole universe, is simply an emanation of your own mind.

Forget what you read in the papers, what you watch on TV. Do not take the world too seriously. And above all do not take your life too seriously. There is nothing that wants to hurt you. You can never know yourself as the Self if you keep reacting to your world. Absolute reality is only revealed to you when you begin to see that the world is an image. Thoughts become things. They have no reality of their own, but through your thinking process you have given them life, and then you begin to feel the pressure of the life form that you have created.

Compare yourself to no one. You are unique in your own right. Everyone appears on this earth because of karmic conditions, and you can never know that karma does not exist until you stop reacting to it. What's the use of my telling you that nothing exists, that karma does not exist, that the world does not exist, that the universe does not exist, if you continue to react to conditions. You never know how much time you've got left in your body, so-to-speak. You may drop your body tomorrow, next week, next year. And if you do not realize the truth about yourself, you will continue to come back again and again, you will appear to continue to come back again and again. You will be stuck on the wheel, until the time comes when you give up your reaction.

Think how many times today you were disappointed over something, or despondent, or angry, or upset, and you believe that you have the right to be that way. It was because of this or because of that, or because of someone, because of something. Yet you are forgetting that everything is your friend. The mineral kingdom, the vegetable kingdom, the animal kingdom, the human kingdom, everything is your friend. Especially your so-called enemies. For that's the motivation for you to see yourself in action. Your so-called enemy is really your best friend. The person you don't get along with is doing you a favor, for he or she is teaching you not to react.

There are many lessons to learn, but for whom? For you? Who are you? As long as you believe you are a human being and you are part of the earth, then you do have many lessons to learn. But as soon as you give up the idea of your humanhood and start investigating the truth, that you were never born and you never die, until that time you will appear to suffer. You will appear to go through predicaments, through situations, through rebirths, through different experiences.

But I say to you tonight that you do not have to do this. You merely have to recognize that your personal I is the culprit. It is not you. It is your idea of I. It is the I-thought that causes every problem in your life. It is the I-thought that causes you misery, unhappiness, misunderstanding and whatever. You merely have to destroy, annihilate, the I-thought. This is the reason you came back to this planet, so it appears. To find the I and destroy it. This is what you should have been concentrating on all the time. This is your purpose. There is no other purpose.

Everything else doesn't matter. It appears to matter. In reality it does not matter. That's a heavy thing for me to say, for some of you appear to have serious problems in your lives, are saying to yourselves, "How can he say it doesn't matter? This is about to happen, that's about to happen. How can it not matter?" If it does matter you will spend the remainder of your life rectifying things that matter. When you're finished with this, something else will come along. When you finish with that, something else will come along. And it will always matter to you. In other words, you will think it's very important that you change the condition. There is really no condition to change.

When that happens to you, you should immediately remember that everything is predetermined, everything. There are no mistakes. The worst thing you can do is to feel sorry for yourself. "Why does this happen to me? Why do I have to go through this experience?" It is the experience that makes you turn around and investigate who you are. If everything was going well in your life, 100%, you wouldn't care about this teaching. You wouldn't realize that things are going to change sooner or later. Nothing can ever remain the same. It's only when you have a so-called problem that you begin to think, "Where did this problem come from? Who gave it to me? God? The universe? My fellow man? Who has the problem? I do? What is this I?" And you go right back to the I again.

When you realize the I is only a thought, then you also realize that your problem, so called, whatever it may be, how serious it may look to you, must also be a thought. Can you see that? Because I have the problem. And I is only an idea, a thought. It doesn't exist for real. If I is only a thought, an idea, and I have the problem, there's no problem.

This kind of thinking in itself releases you from the clutches of your mind. Things begin to ease up. Even if your situation does not necessarily change right away, you're no longer trying to change the situation. You still have become grateful for your predicament. Again this sounds strange. You're grateful for your predicament because, again, it is your predicament that has caused you to search for the ultimate truth. As you begin to see this you start caring less and less about your predicament.

Now let me make this perfectly clear. It doesn't mean you're going to give up anything. It doesn't mean you're going to give up your family, or you're going to give up your job, or you are going to not give a damn for whatever happens in your life. That's not the attitude I'm talking about. The attitude I'm talking about is simply this. You are beginning to realize that the I that you've been calling myself, is not real. All these years since you were born you said, "I feel this and I feel that. I need this and I need that. I am this and I am that." You're now beginning to see that I is not real. So naturally again if the I is not real. All of these years of need, of want, of desire, of belief, has been false. It has been like an optical illusion. None of these things are real because my I is not real.

When you come this far you're going to ask yourself, "Then where did the I come from?" Now you're getting to the meat of it. In other words, "What is the source of the false I that does not exist? It is a thought. Where did the thought come from? Who thinks that thought?" And you go right back to I again. "I do. I have been thinking since I was born." Just think how many times today you said I. "I don't feel too good. I feel out of sorts. I feel upset. I feel angry. I feel something is wrong." It is only the I that makes you miserable, nothing else. It is not the experience that you're going through.

Let me repeat this. The experience, in itself, can never make you miserable, for it comes from an I-thought. It is believing that the I-thought is real that causes the misery, not the situation.

You consequently spend the remainder of your life trying to find out from whence the I comes. You follow the I-thought. You abide in the I. You wake up in the morning and you notice you're trying to say I again. You catch yourself. "Where was the I before I woke up? How did the I arise?" If you're doing this correctly, you will feel a sort of pressure on the right side of your chest, and this will give you an inkling to where the I came from, the spiritual heart. As you continue to follow the I back to the spiritual heart, in the process you become happier, and happier, and happier, for you are developing your bliss-consciousness, which you already are, just by following the I. And when the I finally goes back into the heart you rest in an effortless thought free state. You no longer have any effort to make and you are free of thoughts.

But this is not final yet. Many people can arrive at this state by themselves. Now the perennial question comes, "Do I require a guru to go further or to awaken to my self-realization?"

The answer is "Yes and no."

From reading all the books you've been reading, you realize there are some people who have never had a spiritual teacher, like Sri Ramana Maharshi, Shankara, a few others here and there. The trouble with reading books like that is that these books build up your ego, especially if you are a westerner. They falsely cause you to believe that you can do it on your own.

To do it on your own is the most difficult task you can ever undertake. And you're wasting your time. It's like digging a well to get a glass of water, when you can just turn the tap on. Every time you want a glass of water, you dig a well. That's how it is to awaken to yourself without a guru. But you have to make sure that the guru you follow is an enlightened Sage, and it's up to you to find this out for yourself. For only an enlightened Sage can take you out of the effortless thought free stage into pure enlightenment. For that type of sat-guru merely grabs your mind, that is resting on the circumference of your heart center, and pulls your mind in totally. You thus become totally free and liberated.

This is why I always say that this teaching is not for everyone. Many people who come into Advaita Vedanta have very large and enormous ego, a lot of pride. They want everything to happen through words. And yet no Sage has ever said that words alone will cause anything to happen to you. It is the grace of the guru that causes anything to happen to you at all, if anything is going to happen. It is your faith, your humility, your love, that will finally awaken you.

You have to make the initial effort. When you work on yourself diligently, happily, without criticism, without finding fault, you simply work on yourself, and in the process, you help others. You give others support, love, for you look at the whole world as yourself. And you forget about time, you forget about space. You merely do the work required.

When there is enough love, when you have really diligently worked on yourself, you will finally follow the I-thought to the circumference of the heart center, the spiritual heart, and you will be in the effortless thought-free state. Then the grace of the guru will pull the mind completely into the heart and you'll be free.

The question I have for you is, "What is more important than that?"

Think of the problems you think you have. They will take care of themselves if you have enough faith in the inner power of grace. As I said before, there is nothing in the universe that wants to or can hurt you, if you are diligently working on yourself. That will supersede everything else. It will put a halt on your karma, it will disintegrate your past lives, samskaras. It will cause your mind to slow down, and it will bring you extreme happiness.

But you have to put this first in your life. You have to put it before everything. This is the reason why not too many people make it. For when I tell them they have to put this first in their lives, their eyes open wide. But remember I also say to you that you're not to give up anything. You do not to give up your job, your family. You do not have to move to a cave. You do not have to dress a certain way. You simply put the teaching first in your life. I can assure you that if you do this, you will make fast progress.

But you should not have any motive. You're not putting it first in your life because you want to become self-realized. If you have a thought like that, you're keeping yourself back, due to the fact that you're already self-realized, and when you keep thinking, "I have to become self-realized," you're pushing it away, because you're saying I. The I that you've been trying to get rid of all these years, wants to become self-realized, and it can't. The I has to be totally destroyed, so that there is nobody left who wants to become self-realized. That's when things begin to happen by themselves, and that's when you find yourself in the effortless thought-free state.

This is something to think about. This is something to think about seriously.

I am not interested in attracting hundreds of people, curiosity seekers, giving seminars, or letting people come and look at me. I am only interested in those few people who are tired of living in this world as a body, because they have a feeling that they are absolute reality, they are pure awareness, they are nirvana, they are pure intelligence, and they are ready to go all the way in order to meet the goal. Yet they do not have a goal on their mind. They live spontaneously in faith, and the universe will always appear to take care of them. They take their minds off the body, and the mind becomes weaker and weaker, until they are in the state of no-mind.

When there is no mind, there is no I. When there's no I, there's no body. When there's no body, there's no world. When there's no world, there's no universe. When there's no universe, there's no karma, there are no samskaras, there are no past lives, there is no reincarnation, there's no God. There is only the Self, and you are that.

(Silence)

SF: Sir, Sri Ramana said something that there is only one consciousness equally distributed everywhere. You, through ignorance give it unequal distribution. No distribution, no everywhere. Something that I wondered was said by another Master that I wonder if it doesn't amount to the same thing. Another Master said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words will not pass away." I wonder if his words ... what he had in mind when he made that statement. Was it not the pure consciousness that Sri Ramana was referring to. Would you comment on that?

R: It was approximately the same thing. He said, "I am the truth, the way and the life." And this is what he meant, it will not pass away, I-am. I-am is truth, the way and the life and that is consciousness, that is absolute reality. Those are the words he was referring to. He couldn't speak this way to the people at that time because the people were in deep ignorance. He therefore used the term, Father. He said, "I-am in the Father and the Father is within me. We are one." But I-am is not referring to the man, Jesus. I-am is referring to consciousness that he just mentioned. I-am and the Father, meaning I-am and the Father are one. There is no difference. Not only I-am but everyone. I-am refers to omnipresence.

When he told his disciples I-am in the Father, he included them and every human being on this earth, every sentient being, the mineral kingdom, the vegetable kingdom, the animal kingdom, the human kingdom. I-am in the Father. Meaning everything is pure consciousness and consciousness is all there is.

SF: Thank you. Another thing that I've been thinking about - that since space and time are creations of the mind, if I'm contemplating a situation in which the element of time in truths then I'm not going to accomplish anything because it's not real?

R: I'm sorry I lost you, Say that again, I wasn't thinking. (SF: Sir?) I lost you could repeat your question? (SF: I better, I better...I'm going to let it ride for a while.) Why? (SF: I thought I had to change my mind but I guess I didn't.) No it was my fault, for some reason I wasn't listening to you.

SF: I have another question, I'm told not to have any desires for powers? And I wonder if this not so that because powers are no more or less real in this everyday existence of what we call the world and the danger lies that I might where I might get into a frame of mind where I'd thought they were important or that it made me different or wiser than another person, in other words they are no different than anything else in the so called world?

R: This is true what you're saying and also remember you said, "I want to obtain powers." Who is the I? As long as there is an I present, you can never have realization or wake up to yourself. Even with the powers. So siddhis or powers actually keep you back because they build up your ego. They make you believe that you are important and you can do something someone else can't. Therefore you get caught in that space. It maybe thousands of incarnations before you wake up again.

The safest bet is to go beyond all of these things. It is true on the path of self-inquiry, you do acquire certain things the average human being does not have. You're sort of able to read minds, you can predict the future, you can do all kinds of things. It comes by itself. But you are not to think of these things and not to allow these things to make you feel egotistical or to make you feel that you know something somebody else doesn't.

But you are to question yourself, "To whom do these siddhis come? Who has these powers?" And you will see that it is also I. I has become more powerful through these powers and your ego becomes inflated. Therefore inquire, "Who am I? Who has these powers?" And you transcend them and go higher.

(tape break)

I know you're going to say, "What about Jesus who did healing? And what about if you have some healing powers you can help humanity." That is a ticklish subject. Tickle me. (laughter) Who said that you have to do something like that for humanity? Who said that you're supposed to heal anyone? It's a subject that has a lot of controversy.

But all the great Sages have agreed that everything is preordained. Of course you can say, "my healing the person is also preordained." That is true to an extent. The safest bet is to become an example of an awakened soul. And as an example, those beings, those people so called who are supposed to be in your presence and be healed will likely be healed. But you will never have the idea that, "I am a healer and I healed someone." For there will be no I to make that statement.

As long as there is an I to make that statement that, "I am a healer and I can heal," there is a lot of trouble and a lot of chaos and a lot of confusion. The safest bet therefore is to go beyond that. Go right to the heart of the matter. "To whom do these powers come? Who needs healing? I do?" As long as I believe I need healing then I am still working out of the ego, I am working out of the I. When the I is gone there is no one that needs to be healed and no one who does any healing whatsoever.

If you investigate all of these so called healers that advertise in a Whole Life Times and all the other scandal sheets, they've got more problems than the patients because their I is involved in so many people and with so many problems that they pick up the symptoms themselves. And they're always quarreling with one another. The safest bet is to go beyond all these things and become totally free.

(short silence)

SK: And the memory just becomes this accumulation of - it means nothing? (R: Memory?) It goes beyond memory?

R: Memory is really a conglomeration of all your past thoughts. (S: Yeah.) If there are no thoughts then who has the memory? The memory is no longer necessary because you become spontaneous and there is nothing to remember because there is no past. There never was a past. If you have no I, you have no memory.

(short silence)

SF: I remember at one point you said I think that someone would go from the no mind state into... - sounded like a higher state which would be the enlightened state. Was I wrong in gathering that there is some difference between the no mind state and the enlightened state?

R: Yes. By working on yourself over the years and over the centuries and following the I-thought. The I-thought will finally leave you, not leave you but lead you rather, toward the spiritual heart, but it will rest in the circumference and only the grace of a guru or a Sage can pull it into the heart making it disappear entirely. (SF: In other words the no mind state can be an intellectual understanding?) Well it's much much deeper than an intellectual understanding. The no mind state is when you hardly have any thoughts. (SF: It wouldn't be the end of the ego would it?) It's not the end, but it's a very high state.

SG: It seems scary to go from a state where you have a self where you know who your self is, to a state where there is no self. It's like dying? It's suicide?

R: Well to whom does it appear scary? See that's your mind, your I that says that. (SG: Right.) It does not want to be destroyed. (SG: Right.) It will come up with all kinds of things like this. It will tell you, "What are you doing to me? Stay the way you are. Don't change." It will tell you all kinds of things and will try to scare you, this is true. It will make sort of sometimes devilish beings appear within you to frighten you. They don't exist. But your mind will create all these illusions. So you have to know to keep on with the work and to go beyond it and to go beyond it. All fear will leave you, all thoughts of demons will leave you. Your past will leave you and you will become free. You have to bear in mind that none of these other things exist.

You have imagined the world. You have dreamt your whole life into being and when you go into the effortless no thought state you are reversing the procedure. So there will be some resistance sometimes. But pay no heed to it. You simply ask yourself, "To whom is this come?" and you carry on. Do not become analytical, do not try to figure out what's going to happen. In a simple way do the work. Everything will take care of itself.

SH: Why is an enlightened Sage necessary for the mind to be pulled into the heart and to disappear? (R: Due to the fact...) Why can't it just spontaneously occur?

R: Spontaneously you are already enlightened and there is no one to do anything. But as you work in the world and with people you find that your past samskaras are very heavy for most people and you can only go so far by yourself. And then you stop and you have a dilemma. So with the help of an enlightened Sage you can go all the way. Where as by yourself you can probably get there someday but it'll be a long, long time. In other words it's faster through a Sage than by yourself.

It's like the example I gave before, if you want to get a glass of water do you have to dig a well all the time. You simply turn on the tap. But an ignorant person will think they have to dig a well every time they want to have some water. So it is with enlightenment. The average person thinks I can do it myself. I can do everything myself and that's the old ego again telling him that. When you are in the company of a Master, a Satguru, a Jnani, a Sage. When they see that you're ready and you've actually been doing the work all the time and they give you a push just to help you along.

Again it's just like taking a test in Maths, the teacher sees how studious you've been and how you've tried so hard to do it by yourself. So the teacher will bypass the rest of the students and go directly to you and give you a helping hand so you can pass, same thing.

SD: So when you said it saves time then you become realized in centuries right? (R: Centuries, sure. Millenniums. Eons.) So how long do we have to have you?

SK: Isn't time just another illusion?

R: Yes it is. But as long as you're in the world and you have not found yourself you're part of the illusion. You therefore you have to work with time to get rid of it. It's okay to say, "Time is an illusion, my body is an illusion." But the first truck that knocks you down and you start crying and screaming then there is no illusion as far as you're concerned. (SK: If you go around trying to find ways to cut out time you're feeding the illusion.) Sure, you're not trying to cut out time you are just doing the work that's necessary. That all great Sages have recommended. Take a short cut and get there faster.

ST: But this being run over by the truck business, it's going to happen or it's not going to happen isn't it, according to what you say? (R: It's going to happen or it's not going to happen?) (ST: A human being has nothing to do with what's going to happen or not?)

SH: It's predetermined that's what he's saying.

R: It's all predetermined but as you go deeper on the path all that karma is wiped away and there'll be no need to go through that experience. (ST: Are you saying that the only thing that affects the experiences is maybe how you do the practice and go deeper not how alert you are when you're crossing the street...) Yes, exactly. Everything has to do with your inner work. Your inner work will take care of everything outside of you. (ST: Is there is no premium on being alert when you cross a crowded street?) It has nothing to do with it.

SG: Just for the record Robert while we're talking about it. What we're talking about is a natural state. Where does man go wrong?

R: Man never went wrong. (SG: Well something went wrong?) For man doesn't even exist as he appears. (SG: You know what I mean?) I know when you speak of the ultimate like that, "Where did man go wrong?" Man didn't go wrong because he didn't exist. It's a dream. It's an illusion. Like the water in the mirage. Like the snake in the rope. Like the sky is blue. They're all optical illusions. And so it is with our appearance. Our appearance appears to be real but it's not. Consequently man never went wrong. For there was no man to go wrong. (SG: Consequently all the suffering and everything else and the crazy people doesn't exist either?) Exactly. But because we think it does we have to go through all the self-realization business, and self-inquiry business and do all of these things. If you were able to wake up by yourself none of these practices will be necessary. Yet the ego is so enormous in most people that we think we can do it by ourselves. Very difficult for most people.

SG: And through meditation and getting in touch with your own guru within ourselves, that's another illusion or some thing?

R: Getting in touch with your own guru within you, who is that? Who is the guru within you? His name is I. It's really the I you're getting in touch with and then you say, "I got in touch with my guru within." And that's as far as you go. The I has to go, when the I goes so does the thought of the guru within.

SH: It all seems to be a big put on, a big fake from the word go? There is no separate me, no separate I and yet we assume always that there is? (R: Right.) It's just a big charade? (R: It's the big farce.) Farce right. (R: But we believe it. (student laughs) So I have to come here and tell you about it and explain it to you.)

SK: It seems like enlightenment is realized when there is no one to be enlightened. (R: True, but those are words.) Also about life being a dream, it seems when I look back back at my life it's very easy to see it was dream. Incredibly make believe. It doesn't seem real at all. (R: Umm, True.)

SY: (laughs) I started thinking about Shakespeare and once said, "All ado about nothing."

SH: It's "Much Ado About Nothing." (R: True.) It's a big put on.

SY: It seems like working on yourself wouldn't work because you just strengthen the self?

R: Well you're practicing self-inquiry and that's a method to get you further along the path. Otherwise what would you do with yourself? You would worry, you would fear, you would react to the world. When you begin to practice self-inquiry it gives you something to do. So you're no longer a nuisance in the world. (SY: Well it seems to give the mind something to do.) Yes. (SY: It gives it a toy to keep it out of trouble.) Of course, true. Yet you have to use the toy to find yourself because you refuse to wake up otherwise.

SQ: Children don't seem to know their I at a very infantile stage? (R: True.) Do you know when they come to become I?

R: When they become sensible. When they hear their parents talking. I love you, I this, I that, and then they also become I.

SD: By that you mean that they start to see themselves as an individual? (R: Right.)

SQ: Then they enter the terrible twos. (laughter)

R: True. And here we are. (laughter) It's all a cosmic joke. (laughter)

SH: It sure is. (laughs)

R: But we want to keep on playing.

Do we have any announcements?

Remember to love yourself, to pray to yourself, to worship yourself, to be true to yourself because God dwells in you as you. I love you all, peace. Om shanti.

And we're all done for tonight.

SD: We're cooked? (laughter)

R: Not tonight. (laughter)

SH: Warmed up.

R: You're broiled.

SD: We're soup.

(laughter as tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 78

WHAT IS BRAHMAN?

4th July, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to see most of you again.

We have some new faces here today. If you're coming here to hear a great lecture, forget it. If you're coming to hear a sermon, you're in the wrong place. If you're coming to compare the speaker to other speakers, well, I won't say what I think of that. (laughter)

SH: Go ahead. (laughter)

R: You have a reason for coming here. That's the first mistake you made. There should be no reason. There should be no attitude. There should be no need. You're coming here because... that's it. There is no thing I can give you that you don't already have. There is really nothing I can do for you unless you realize who you are. Who are you? The wisest answer would be, "I don't know." For if you think you know who you are, you're on the wrong track. A self-realized person has no idea who they are, because the "are" and the "they" have been removed. There is no I to know anything. If you say "I am this," and "I am that," you're not really this or that. For the I has made that statement. When the I is gone, there is no one left to do anything or to be anything.

So again, think, "Why did I come here today? To get out of the sun? To leave my screaming family? I saw all the movies in town? I've nothing better to do? Somebody told me to come?" They're all the wrong reasons. There is no reason whatsoever.

Everything should be spontaneous. Do not plan anything in your life. When you do not plan anything, your life will go smoother. Sounds strange, but true. There is a power that knows the way. When you get your little ego out of the way, this great power will take over and lead you into itself.

What is this power? What is the undifferentiated power that is the substratum of all existence? Some people call it Brahman. What is Brahman? There are no words to describe, for any word you use spoils it. Some people say, "Brahman is the unmanifested energy that runs the universe." Yet when you voice it you don't know it. For as I said, the finite can never know the infinite.

So there is Brahman. When Brahman gets tired of being Brahman, it begins to play with itself and becomes personified. That personification is called God. God is what we call the first principle, the controlling energy of the universe. When God has had fun and created everything, he becomes consciousness, and everything is dissolved into itself.

So there's Brahman, that becomes God. God becomes consciousness. Consciousness becomes Brahman again, becomes God again, becomes Consciousness. What a waste of time. Why would Brahman want to do all this? Why would Brahman want to play with himself, or itself, or herself. Does Brahman become tired? Well, we need an explanation of creation. So that's as good as any. It's better than Adam and Eve.

Those of you who are taking notes, turn the page, keep it blank. The blankness is the reality. Everything else is really a waste of time. How many teachers have you seen in your life? How many notes have you taken? How many tapes have you purchased? How many books have you read? And you're still here. Sometimes it's better if you'd never read a book in your life, if you'd never heard a tape, or even seen a teacher.

You are what you've been looking for. The answer's are within yourself. There is nothing in the external world, for the external world is an emanation of your own mind, your own thinking and your own imagination. You created this world. Are you proud of yourself? Look what you've done. You've caused man's inhumanity to man, wars, pestilence, tornadoes. Why would you want to do that? Shame on you. (laughter) Repent. (laughter)

Anyway, there's something interesting I must be able to say. There's a great statement that I'm going to make. (Pause) I'm going to think of it first. (laughter)

Okay, Consciousness is the only power, and there is no power in effect. Think about that. Consciousness is the only power, and there is no power in effect. In other words, effect is the world and everything in it. All of your problems, so called, all of your needs, all of your wants, all of your desires, have no cause. They're all effects. There is no power in the effect, because effect is like a dream. It doesn't exist for real.

Think of all the things that have been disturbing you, illness, lack, limitation, they do not exist. Those are effects, and there is no power in effect. The same is true of the good things in your life, so-to-speak, all of your so called material happiness, family, friends, job, income, car. All effect. It has no cause. In other words, nothing created it. There is no thing to create anything.

Consciousness is the only power. And consciousness is self-contained absolute reality. You have been identifying with the world of effect. This is why things appear as they do in your life. You're trying to exchange negative to positive, bad for good, but they're two sides of the same coin, and they both have to go.

Do not take the universe seriously. Nothing is ever as it appears. Nothing wants to hurt you. Nothing can hurt you when you realize your infinite nature. You are not your measly body, that was born, and goes through experiences, and then appears to dissolve or die. That is not you. You have nothing to do with this world. This world does not exist the way it appears. But as long as you believe you are the doer, that you are the body-mind phenomena, the world is very real for you, as most of you know.

Where did this world come from? I just told you. It didn't come from anywhere. Why do you keep asking the same question? Where does a dream come from? The dream appears very real, doesn't it? Most of you had a dream or two last night that you can still remember. How did the dream begin? Did it begin with Brahman creating the universe?

Did it begin with God and Adam and Eve? The dream just began, in the middle, and it ended when you awoke, (is there such a word as awoke? Awaken, awoke, awaken, they're both lies,) and you found yourself without the dream. Your body, your mind, your self, was as it always was. In the dream you may have dreamt that you got hit by a car, you had to have your legs amputated, and so forth. Yet when you awake, it's not like that at all.

Think of the things that have happened to you in your life now. You appear to be getting older and older. Things come into your life, as it appears. You try to exchange wrong for right, good for bad. Yet you refuse to acknowledge that this too is a dream. You want to continue playing the game. You want to play hide and seek, by believing there is a God somewhere, and if you find this God all your problems will be over. So you keep searching.

You can never find your reality by searching. Your reality is where it's always been, right where you are this moment. It is you. There is not reality and you. You are not in the body of God. God is not in you. For there is no you. There is no body and there is no God. You are That, pure awareness, just the way you are.

There is really no thing you have to do. You simply have to wake up. Why will you not awaken now? Even while I am talking to you, many of you are thinking, thinking, thinking. Can't you see by now? This is what is holding you back from your freedom, from your bliss, from your joy. Your thoughts. Where did your thoughts come from? They really didn't come from anywhere, for they do not even exist.

Yet, unfortunately, most of us believe that thoughts exist, for we are bombarded by them day and night. So Sages have to come along and invent methods, means, in order to obliterate the thoughts. Meditation was invented for that purpose. Self-inquiry, all of these yogic exercises, pranayama, mantras, prayer. They're really to stop your thoughts from proceeding, to keep your mind from thinking. All of these procedures are to make your mind quiescent, quiet, still. If you were able to do this without the methods, then you would be realized. You would be your Self. You would be liberated. But you refuse to do this. You want a teacher to give you methods to wake you up. But I say to you, "Wake up now! Awake!" The methods will keep you back because you get stuck with the methods.

But it makes no difference what I say. You are still going to identify with the world, with conditions, with your body, with your mind. We therefore have to think of a way, the quickest way, for you to awaken. And of all the methods I know, self-inquiry is the fastest, if you are mature enough to be able to handle it. You begin to understand that the I is only a thought, an idea, called the I-thought. And it is the I-thought that predominates your existence. True?

How many times have you said I today? "I am going to hear Robert. I am going to eat breakfast. I am going to take a nap. I don't think I feel too good. I feel great. I need this. I need that. The first pronoun, I, dominates your entire existence. Yet it has been known by Sages, if you were only able to annihilate the I, destroy it, kill it, you'd be free. For it is the I that is attached to all of your thoughts. Therefore you begin to follow the I to it's source.

I have to tell you in truth, in reality, there is no I and there is no source, but you will not believe me. You want to play with I. You therefore follow the I to the source, and when the I has been dissolved into the source, you become free. You do this of course by inquiring, "To whom do these thoughts come?" or whatever is disturbing you. You inquire, "To whom do they come? Who's experiencing this? Who's going through this? Who thinks they are human? Who feels depressed? Who feels discouraged? Who feels there is a difference between birth and death? I do."

Can't you see now that if you get rid of the I, all those feelings will also go. So you ask, "Who am I? Where did this I come from?" You never answer that question. When thoughts come to you, you inquire, "To whom do they come? To me? I think these thoughts? Who am I?" You do not answer.

As you continue to do this process you find that your mind is becoming quieter and quieter. The confusion stops. You begin to feel happier and happier. You are no longer reacting to person, place or thing. You become spontaneous in everything you do. You live in the now.

But you're not doing that. It's doing you. In other words you have not decided, "I am going to be spontaneous from now on. I'm going to live in the now." As you are aware, how many times have you tried that without avail? You can't make up your mind that you're going to be spiritual, that you're going to know that you are consciousness, that you are absolute reality. How many times have you tried to do that, and the first thing that comes into your life, you become upset? You react. Something bothers you. Or something good comes into your life and you become elated. You react in a positive way. They're both impostors. Remember you're not trying to change bad for good. You want to transcend everything, and become absolutely free.

(short silence)

See how you're thinking? Your mind won't stay still, will it? Whose mind is it that will not stay still? Do you really have a mind? Are you the mind? Who told you this? There is no mind, there is no body. There are no thoughts. Accept this, if you want to. All it can do for you is liberate you.

We listen to the birds, we see the beautiful trees. Who sees? Who listens? Why, I do. You're caught in the trap again. For many of you believe, if I behold the beauty of the world, that's good. It's better than beholding death, I suppose. But the world is all an illusion. It is not real. The so called beauty is here today and gone tomorrow. Change is the only permanent thing of the relative world. Everything changes continuously.

Therefore, as you go through the vicissitudes of life, and you get rid of your dogmatic thinking, you open your heart. You begin to feel something different. You begin to loosen up. The first thing to understand is that everything that has transpired in your life has been necessary. No matter how it looks, no matter what has happened, everything has been necessary. The second thing to understand is, everything has been preordained. In other words, everything was supposed to happen the way it happened. There were no mistakes. The third thing to understand is that the first two things are all a pack of lies, for these things do not even exist in Reality.

Everything is preordained, as long as you believe you are the body. Everything is karmic, as long as you identify with the world and believe you are the doer. But as soon as you start to turn within, as soon as you begin to listen to the still small voice within you, as soon as you start practicing self-inquiry, your life begins to change drastically. You become happy. You no longer search for happiness, for you are beginning to realize you cannot find it externally.

You may appear to find it. In other words, you may get married and you believe, "This is great, I found what I've always wanted." Then you may get divorced and you'll say, "This is great, I finally got rid of that person." You win the lottery and you say, "This is great, I'm rich." The IRS comes down on you, and you wind up in San Quentin, and you say, "This is no good."

All of these different things take place in your life. The world is not your friend. The world is a phenomena that belongs to a dream. You've got to be mature enough to ask the question, "To whom does this world belong? Who lives in the world? Where did the world come from?" and your answer to all the questions begins with I. "I live in the world. I partake in the world. I see the world." And we're back to I again. You finally get the idea that the whole world is hanging on I. The I has to be transcended.

You begin early in the morning, when you first wake up. Before you become aware of I, you notice that you are in a state of peace, of joy, even if for only a few seconds. I was not present. You are not aware of the world. Catch yourself tomorrow morning. It only happens in a flash, in a few seconds.

Yet all of a sudden the world becomes real for you. I, has awakened. Where did it come from? If you investigate you will see that your spiritual heart center is on the right side of your chest, and the I has come out of your chest, out of your spiritual heart, out of the source, becoming more powerful as it emerges and goes into your brain. Then you become aware of your body and you say, "I am alive."

Once you become aware of your body and your mind, you become aware of the world, and then the universe. Therefore the wise person catches the I before it goes any further. In other words as the I emerges from your chest, you abide in the I. To the extent that you can abide in the I, or focus on the I, something phenomenal will begin to happen. The I will reverse it's course and begin to return to it's source.

I will repeat this again. To the average person the I begins to become stronger and stronger when you wake up in the morning. It emerges from your spiritual center and heads up your spine to your brain, where you become cognizant of the world. But for the spiritual aspirant who practices self-inquiry, you begin to watch the I doing this. You abide in the I. As you begin to abide in the I, it will reverse it's course and head back to the center. When it heads back to the center, it will rest on the circumference of the center. That is as far as you can go by yourself. You will be in an effortless thought-free state. You will be in the void, as it tells you in Buddhism.

Yet most Buddhists think the void is self-realization. That's a mistake. The void is when your I is resting on the circumference of your heart center. When that happens you've come a long way. You are a mature disciple. Yet the Self has to pull the I inside the heart. Then you become liberated. This is very rarely done by the self or by yourself. I'm speaking of the small self. Only in a very few, will the I go directly into the heart center and be extinguished.

That is why Sages are necessary. That is why satsang is necessary. For the Sage, who may be a 1000 miles away from you, as long as you have a direct line to the Sage mentally, the Sage is omnipresent, all-pervading. Therefore the Sage, and the Self, and the guru and God are one... (tape break) ...So that even if you are away from the proximity of the Sage, if you have a close association with that particular Sage, or that Sage is your guru, the Self, which is really the Sage, will pull the I into the heart, and you will be liberated. That's how it appears to work. The rest is up to you.

(long silence)

I'm sure you have some interesting questions to ask?

SD: Robert you told the legend of Brahman, tiring of itself and creating consciousness etc., and then explained that was more or less a fable like Adam and Eve but that still leaves the question of why there is even an appearance of an illusion.

R: Yes, why? There really is no appearance. There appears to appear an appearance. But no appearance exists. I always go back to the hypnosis, the mesmerism. The water in the mirage appears real but upon investigation it's not water at all, it's sand. The sky appears blue, but if you investigate there is no sky and there is no blue and so forth. These things do not exist. That is the phenomena. They appear to exist. Creation appears to exist. Go back to the dream. Why does a dream come? It comes out of your mind, it comes out of your imagination. It's external to you that's how it appears. A dream appears to be external to you. The whole universe is involved. But where does it come from? Out of your own mind. So all the rest, creation, God, people, places and things come out of the mind. They don't really exist. (SD: I mean if we are all dreaming is it the same dream?) Everybody is dreaming the mortal dream. It's just like when you have a dream, we're all in your dream. Is it the same dream? All of us in this room are in your dream. When you have a dream tonight, you are dreaming this dream and so is everyone else. But it appears as if everyone is having an individual dream. And yet there is only one dream. And when you awaken it will stop. So do not take dreams seriously and do not take the world seriously. Observe, be the witness, watch, do not react and be happy.

SL: Can a fully realized person go backwards and perform siddhis and miracles?

R: No. (SL: They can't or do they not choose to?) They have nothing to do with siddhis. (SL: You get a choice?) No. They do not even think of those things. Siddhis, miracles are a part of the I. If the I has been destroyed, the mind has been destroyed. Therefore there is no one to think of these things or to perform them. To perform miracles there has to be an I present.

SL: But for instance you can speak to us even though...where is the futility in that?

R: There is no futility at all. There is just somebody... (SL: You're trying to describe your experience for reality.) There is someone here that appears to be speaking to you. Yet nothing is really being said. It's all silence. (SL: Could there be someone here who appears to perform miracles?) There is nobody there to perform miracles. But the miracle performer would usually be a yogi of some kind. And the miracles appear to be performed. But in reality there is no miracles to be performed. But when you get to a realized Sage there is nothing in that Sage that would even have the desire to perform a miracle.

SL: If the Sage has the ultimate compassion for someone in this dream who appears to suffer. Would the Sage not then...

R: I didn't hear what you're saying. The Sage does not have the ultimate compassion. The Sage is the ultimate compassion. There is a difference. The Sage is the ultimate compassion without being the ultimate compassion. In other words the Sage is not aware that he or she is the ultimate compassion. That is their nature, that is what they are. Only the disciple, the devotee sees it as the Sage having the ultimate compassion. But the Sage does not see it that way at all. Because again there has to be someone left, an "I", to have ultimate compassion. Yet ultimate compassion is the make up of the Sage. It's a paradox.

In other words, I'll explain a little more because I know it's difficult to understand. A person is dying of cancer. They go to a Sage, and they say, "Please heal me, I'm dying I know you can." The Sage smiles and says nothing. The Sage does not get involved whatsoever. But because of the proximity of the devotee to the Sage in the unconscious level, the devotee may be healed from coming in contact with the Sage. But the Sage will deny that he or she has ever done anything because there is no one to do it.

SH: Who denies then?

SL: Did Jesus ever claim to perform healings or did they just happen?

R: There are so many works written about Jesus, who knows what the real truth is? But do not be concerned about that. Be concerned rather in finding out who you are and what you are. And then everything will be clear to you. But various Saints, various Sages had different missions in life and did different things. But again, in the real Sage there is no doer. There is no one left to do anything. But to the people it appears to be coming through the Sage.

SH: Does he deny that he has created that? Well he can either affirm or deny it? He can either confirm or deny. (R: Exactly he doesn't affirm or deny. He just remains silent.)

(Silence)

Anyone have anything else to say?

SB: Robert I would just like to clarify this. What is a true guru-devotee relationship? Because I see some teachers who have spectacular teachings but they create a dependency relationship and their devotees have to give them 30% to 40% of their income and they have to leave their houses to them and if they ever sell anything they have to give them three quarter of everything ... and I mean like one side of it is very complicated because one side of the teaching is absolutely great, on the other side, it looks like a total con. What is a true guru-devotee relationship. Is it a dependency relationship or is it a...free.

R: I do not make any comments on other teachers, but truth teachings since the beginning of time have always been free. There should be no charge and no obligation for anybody to come to a true guru or a teaching. But the real guru is within yourself. God, Guru and Self are one. Therefore when you have a relationship with a guru you have a relationship with the Self. There is no difference. And that particular guru is always with you, all-pervading, never leaves you. But you are not attached to the physical form of the guru. The guru gives you the freedom to find your Self and to do whatever you want with your life. There is no attachments to rules and regulations. There is total freedom. It's up to the devotee what kind of a relationship they have with the guru. But the true sat-guru is quiet and demands nothing.

SD: But didn't you say that when you met Maharshi that just instinctively you asked what you could do for him. Isn't that the proper attitude to the guru that you would want of your own volition?

R: Well that should be obvious. Actually if you take on a guru, the guru is responsible for your enlightenment and you're responsible for the guru's well being. It goes hand in hand. But he'd stay in the silence, there is no big thing made out of it. Everything is done in the silence. (SB: The guru doesn't demand it in order to be taking on a student.) Nope. (SB: Yeah, that's how they teach us if, all your obligations if they don't get all this, they don't even want to talk to you in any way.) What can I say? (SB: So it should be a freewill offering out of love out of devotion that springs spontaneously...) Always. (SB: ...from love?) Always. (SB: But not a demand?) Right.

Okay we have some announcements, or do you have the Jnani to read?

SM: Oh yes I have that.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 79

STOP IDENTIFYING WITH YOUR BODY AND MIND!

18th July, 1991

Robert: Shanti, shanti, shanti, om. Peace, peace.

Greetings and salutations. It's good to be with you again.

I trust you had a great week. If you didn't too bad for you. Every week should be great, there shouldn't be any exceptions. It makes no difference what your body is doing. It has absolutely nothing to do with it. Every week should be great because in reality you are consciousness. You are great! That is your true nature. Everything else does not matter. It appears to matter but to whom does it appear to matter. You are absolute reality, pure awareness, everything else is incidental. Therefore you should not take life too seriously. You shouldn't take it seriously at all.

If you look at life the way it is, it appears confusing because things are always changing. You may expect one thing and get another thing. But, if you stick to your guns and you keep identifying with the Self, what you are, then it will not matter what happens.

This is why the transcriptions that we give you are most important. Due to the fact they go over the talk and you can take your time reading it. Let me remind you once again the way you should read a transcription. Go through it, the whole thing, the first time. Then take it paragraph by paragraph. Concentrate, cogitate on each paragraph. Even if it takes you all night. Do not go through the transcriptions like you do a book and say, "Where is the next one?" But try to go through each paragraph, intensely, so-to-speak. Try to read between the lines. What does this really mean. Take your time.

If you spend your time reading the transcripts, practicing self-inquiry and coming to satsang, then you can't lose with the stuff I use. But if you run around all over the place and go from book to book, teacher to teacher, you become confused. You don't know who to follow, what to do?

Of course the ultimate truth is within yourself. You are the ultimate truth. That is where all the answers are. Sometimes it's better to stay by yourself and read nothing and sometimes it's good to concentrate on certain works for a while. But not to go in one week to thirteen different books and ten different teachers. If you do you will become completely disgusted with the whole spiritual thing.

Something else we should talk about is this: Most disciples still believe that the object of Jnana is to change bad experiences into good.

This couldn't be further from the truth. We are not trying to change poverty into abundance, sickness into health, misery into happiness and so forth. The whole idea is to realize that they are both impostors. The body has absolutely nothing to do with the teaching. Let the body do what it may. If the body wants to become sick, watch it become sick. If it wants to become healthy, watch it become healthy. If it wants to become rich, watch it become rich. If it wants to become poor, watch it become poor. Then it has absolutely nothing to do with you. You are beyond that.

To the extent you feel your real Self, to that extent you will feel your body less. So if you feel your real Self 40%, you will feel your body 40% less. If you feel your real Self 70%, you will feel your body 70% less and so forth.

You are not your body. The body cannot be anything without your mind. It is your mind that feels pain in the body. It is your mind that feels depressed and causes the body to become ill. It is your mind which catches a cold. It is your mind which develops cancer and it appears as your body. But if you had no mind your body would simply be just an inert piece of flesh. It wouldn't be sick, it wouldn't be healthy. Therefore when you think about being healthy you have to be sick first otherwise why would you want to be healthy. One leads to the other.

When you think about taking care of your body all of the time you're simply saying to yourself that you don't want to become sick, so you're taking care of your body all of the time. Therefore your mind will simply give you a taste of each experience over and over again. That is why sometimes you catch a cold and sometimes you don't. Sometimes you have a fever, sometimes you don't and so forth.

Stop identifying with your body. Stop identifying with your mind. Leave them both alone. It really makes no difference what they do. They're not important. If you're inclined to exercise, exercise, if you're not, don't. But don't keep thinking and feel guilty that you have to do something or if you don't do it something is going to happen.

You and I have both known people who have never exercised a day in their life and they are 90 years old and they are healthy as a horse. (How healthy is a horse?) (laughter) And we both know people who exercise violently everyday and then they just drop dead or they contract some disease.

It all has to do with your karma. It has absolutely nothing to do with what you do with your body. Don't believe that by eating certain foods you're going to become healthier. But if it is your karma to eat certain foods to become healthier you will do it. Do not be for or against anything.

What I'm trying to say is: Leave the world alone! Leave your body alone! Leave your mind alone! Leave others alone!

Some of you are saying, "But Robert, don't I have to learn how to control my mind, how can I leave it alone?" You control it by leaving it alone. Don't you see? By interfering with it you make it stronger because you're giving it power by admitting to yourself you have a mind that is out of control and now you've got to put a stop to it. That statement alone gives more power to your mind. When all you simply have to do is observe your mind, observe your thoughts, question, "To whom do they come?" question again, "To whom do they come?" Every time the thoughts come, observe them, but do not try to take any action to control your mind.

As I said if you do, you're feeding your mind. That is the fuel that makes your mind become stronger and stronger and stronger. By self-inquiry you're not interfering with your mind. You're simply asking in a gentle way, "To whom do these thoughts come? To me? Who am I?" Or you're becoming the witness to your thoughts and then you finally ask, "Who is the witness? I am. I am. I am." Somehow I've found, if you ask three times and you answer three times it has more effect. Have any of you had that experience?

In other words if you begin the self-inquiry process and you ask, "Who am I? Who am I? Who am I?" Three times and then you wait and ask a few times again and then you wait. And when the thoughts come to you use the number three again and you ask, "To whom do these thoughts come? To whom do these thoughts come? To whom do these thoughts come?" I somehow feel if you try that it will be more effective. The only thing that you're trying to do is to stop your mind from thinking.

You are not trying to become self-realized through self-inquiry. For you are already self-realized. Self-inquiry is to still the mind. When the mind becomes still everything takes care of itself. Remember this. You are not using self-inquiry to awaken. If you do you will never awaken. For you are using a method to become something you already are. Have no attitude when you practice self-inquiry. Have no desire, no need.

In other words do not think I have to get enlightened before I die because I don't want to come back. That is the worst thing you can do. For you are believing deeply, aren't you? That you are the mind and the body. Because you're saying intensely to yourself, "I have to become enlightened." And as you know by now, your personal I can never become enlightened because it doesn't exist. So you're working under an illusion when you say, "I've got to become enlightened before I leave my body."

Rather do the procedure. Follow the principles as outlined. Have no want, no desire, no request, nothing. You have to realize again there is no birth and no death for the Self. There is no one who ever dies, no one who is ever born. When you say, "I have to get enlightened before I die," you have everything backwards. You're believing something has to happen before you leave your body. But the happening has already happened. All you are trying to do is quieten your mind so that you can see it. Can you see that?

You are just trying to quiet your mind. You're not trying to get enlightened. You are not trying to awaken. You are not trying to become liberated. You already are. You think you're something else than that. So you practice self-inquiry which is the fastest way to wake up because you think you have to wake up.

But imagine if you didn't believe you had to wake up. You did not have that belief. Would you have to do anything? Of course not. Does God have to do anything to know he's God? Of course not. You're doing all of these things because you think you are a human being. You think you are mortal. You think you've got problems. You think there is something wrong or you can believe the opposite. You think everything is right, the world I mean. You think you're very happy. You think you've got everything you want so everything is right. That is an attachment to good things. It's just as bad attaching yourself to bad things. They are both the same they are impostors.

So if you attach yourself to material good things, you may have a so called happy material life in your body at this time because you deserve it karmically. But, there is a lot of karma you have to experience. When you identify with the good material things. And when you leave your body, you come back again, things will not be so good for you this time. You will experience the opposite for you have to have a taste of everything. Do not be fooled. Do not be deluded into believing, if I experience a good material life, I'm making progress. Think about that for a moment.

If you experience a good material life you are not making spiritual progress. It has nothing to do with your spiritual progress. It's a completely different ball game. Spiritual progress is when you transcend good and bad. When you become the witness to all your spiritual experiences.

As an example: If you win the lottery tomorrow and you win 50 trillion dollars, you become the witness. You realize this is karmic. It doesn't change you. It doesn't turn you into a blubbing idiot. You understand, this too is karmic. If you get hit by a train and they have to cut off your legs and your arms, the same thing, there is no difference. It's karmic.

If you do not train yourself to see that, you're going to have a long way to go before you become free and wake up. Everything you attach yourself to in this world, person, place and thing keeps you back. You have to become totally non attached. You have to become totally free of attachment to your body, to you mind, and to others.

This doesn't mean you become a cold fish and you don't care about others. It simply means that you understand, you realize that everything is you. Whatever is happening in this world is happening to you. You are the cause and when you realize there is no cause then there is no you and you're free.

First you realize that whatever you see in this world, the beauty you see outside, the trees, the sky, the mountains, the smog, everything is you. Then you ask the question, "Who am I?" And you realize that the I is impersonal. It has nothing to do with you. It has nothing to do with the world. It has nothing to do with the universe. The I is I-am, I am that I am. Pure awareness, pure intelligence, nirvana. That is really I.

But when you identify your I as a personal I and you say, "I am experiencing this," and "I see that," and "I feel happy because I see a tree, I feel sad because I see something wrong," then you are making the I personal and you begin to feel that you are a body and a mind. You have to suffer the consequences thereof.

So, lets talk about you.

How do you see life? What has been happening to your life since you've started coming to satsang? And since you've started practicing self-inquiry? What is going on in your life?

If everything is the same or if your affairs are becoming better you've got a problem. But if things appear to becoming relatively worse and things are happening to you that have never happened before, that is a blessing in disguise. It sounds strange doesn't it. I bet you thought I was going to say, "Things will get better for you materially and you'll be happier than you've ever been in your life." (laughter) You've got the wrong idea about these things.

Material happiness does not bring you realization. The closer you get to realization the more upheavals you get in your life. That sounds strange, it's not always like that. It depends on the maturity of the soul. There is no soul. It depends on the maturity of something or nothing. It depends on maturity..., it depends..., it..., nothing. But when you're speaking in delusion, you believe that karmically you have accrued certain debits that will come to you slowly but surely through many incarnations.

But as you begin to mature spiritually and as you become closer to the goal. As you get closer to awakening there will be many upheavals in your life. Due to the fact, all of the karma is coming to you at once. That's how it affects some people, not everyone. All of your karma that would take many incarnations to get rid of is coming to you all at one time. That's why there appears to be upheavals in your life.

So you do not become despondent, you do not feel sorry for yourself, you do not think something is wrong, you rejoice! You observe, you watch. You can say, "I wonder what is going to happen now?" and you inquire, "To whom has this come? To whom has this come? To whom has this come?" If you're doing it correctly, you will find you're becoming less and less attached to the situation. Until finally there is no situation at all. There is no longer any karma. There is no longer anything you have to go through. You become totally free.

I admit also that this is some what paradoxical for when you take great Sages like Rama Krishna, Ramana Maharshi and some others that appear to be going through some dastardly experiences of cancer where the flesh was rotting away. So you ask, "Did they have to go through their karma, I thought they didn't have any?" And that is a good question, I'm glad it's over. (laughter)

The answer of course is, they are not going through anything. It appears to us that they are. It's our experience, we're going through the experience. It's our karma not theirs. Does that make sense? We're going through that kind of karma. Sages are absolutely free from karma no matter what they appear to be going through. They're totally free. But with our eyes, with our emotions, with our minds, we observe something else. We need that experience, to watch them suffer. In truth they are not suffering, we are suffering.

Many people that I spoke to that watched Ramana Maharshi when he was dying, months later, years later, they became totally different people. The word suffering left their consciousness. That never disturbed them again. In other words, when they saw death, when they saw man's inhumanity to man they completely transcended it and realized that it did not exist.

Remember the world does not exist. Human beings do not exist. You body-mind does not exist. The universe does not exist. God up in the sky does not exist. So how can suffering exist? Can't you see that death, suffering and the rest of it is part of the grand maya. It's all a joke, it does not exist. So how can Ramana Maharshi's body die of cancer? So how can Rama Krishna's body die of cancer? If you think that these people died of cancer you are acknowledging that the world exists. You are acknowledging that suffering and death are a reality and you cannot awaken this way.

This is why when you can't help it and you still react to these things, you should try to become impersonal. Where you just watch. You have a great compassion, but you do not react. If a person needs help you help them. You do the best you can, but you do not react. Why? Because something in your heart tells you this is an illusion. I can't say in one breath that the world and my body does not exist and in the second breath say that Ramana Maharshi died of cancer. It's a contradiction.

So my question to you is: What do you see all day? What did you see today? In the world? In your life? What did you feel today? Did you feel stress? Did you feel burnt out? Did you feel there was something wrong with someone or with yourself? Did you feel things are not going right for you? Or did you feel the opposite? Did you feel everything is so beautiful in your life, you can't stand it? You've got everything you need and you're satisfied and contented? They're both impostors. If you get stuck on one or the other, you have to keep working on yourself until you become unstuck. And you do this by inquiring, "To whom has this come? Who is seeing all this? Who is feeling all these things? I am. I am. I am. Well who am I? Who am I? Who am I?"

(silence)

SF: Last week Robert I started a question and I got kind of confused and I didn't finish it. I think I have a statement in my mind now. Since both space and time are creations of the mind and exist only in the mind then if I'm contemplating situations in which time is an element then I'm spinning my wheels? There will be nothing accomplished. For instance, both desire and fear come in this category since desire expects something better to happen than the non-existent future or fear expects something bad to happen also in a non-existent future. Is that a fairly accurate intellectual concept, what's going on?

R: Whatever is going on you simply ask yourself, "To whom does this come?" You make the whole situation very simple. When you think you're lost in time and space or whatever you think is going on in your life. You go within yourself and you ask, "Who is feeling this? To whom do these things come?" And you follow it through. It makes no difference what it is. It makes no difference how long you've had it or how much it annoys you, or whatever it's doing to you. It makes no difference how complicated or how lengthy it may be. It's always the same. To whom does this come? Who is feeling this? I am. What is the source of the I? And you abide in the I, following it back to your heart centre and then everything will take care of itself.

SF: Thank you. Another thing I've been wondering about. It maybe so that whatever transpires in the waking state, is no more or less real than what happens in the dream state or hallucination or a drug trip or anything else that we think is transpiring ... no one of those is any more real than another? (R: That is correct.) Thank you. Another thing I might mention, when I first came up here you asked me why I asked these questions? I forgot what I said but these things that I have in my mind are intellectual concepts and some of them I feel are pretty solid, it also feels right to have them evaluated in the light of the absolute and I feel that you are in a position to do that.

R: There is always a personal I that has to evaluate. (SF: Well I have to change all that. To make it, IT!) There is nothing to evaluate. There is just in becoming, in being. You do not have to evaluate anything.

SF: You reminded me of what you're saying, what Sri Bhagvan told somebody, "You thank God for the things that seem to you to be good but you don't thank him for the things you think are bad and that is where you go wrong." That's a tough one.

R: Umm, It is a tough one. We have our impression, what is good is supposed to be and we have our impression what bad is supposed to be and we desire one above the other. That's the mistake. To have the desire for either. The desire has to be transcended. So that there is nobody left to have any desire whatsoever and you become the witness to everything.

SL: What about the desire to understand that everything is alright?

R: That's no good either because there is a desire that means there is a personal I. There is a personal I that wants everything to be right. What is right? There is no right. (SL: Well then know, All is well.) All is well is merely telling yourself that the personal I does not exist. (SL: So is there a difference between all is well and everything is alright?) All is well means everything is good just the way it is. (SL: Yes.) This second. Everything is well. There is nothing wrong no matter how it looks, how it appears and to whom it comes. All is well. It's like saying, "I am that!" And you become still you don't qualify it. When you try to qualify it that is when the mistake comes. You make the statement, "All is well! I am that! I-am, I, Silence." It's all the same. But when you qualify it you spoil it.

SL: I don't see the difference between all is well and everything is alright.

R: Well if it's the same to you that's fine. It depends how you interpret it in your own mind. (SL: But whatever is happening is happening?) Whatever is happening is right. (SL: Yes.) However it appears. It makes no difference what it is.

SH: Why call it right or wrong? (R: Exactly.) You're hung up either way.

R: Exactly. Everything just is.

SL: Well the word "well," also has a positive connotation? (R: Then get rid of it.) But I don't mean it that, that... forget it. (laughter)

R: I understand. (laughs) The less that is spoken the better off you are, because we get into playing mind games. When I tell you, "all is well," I do so because I want you to know that everything is just the way it's supposed to be. There is no right, there is no wrong. (SL: Well that for me is better than saying, "It's alright," or "All is well," or "Everything is the way it supposed to be," then...) Enjoy it.

SH: Is it the way it's supposed to be or just the way it is?

R: The way it is. (laughter) (SH: You have to cut "the supposed to be," out too.) Is it the way it is? (SH: Yeah just the way it is.) ...or is it just the way? (laughter) (SH: (laughs) Full stop. (laughter) The next thing is silence.) Right. (laughter) All the words lead to more words.

SG: Robert, how does compassion, you mentioned compassion move into the heart centre. How does the compassion - if none of this exists, how can compassion exist as a feeling?

R: As long as you believe that you are the body-mind then you should have compassion. When you become the Self, you become the epitome of compassion automatically. But there is a different kind of compassion. It's a knowing, a being. You just become. It's a bliss consciousness state. (SG: So there is no emotion tied to it necessarily?) There are no emotions whatsoever no. It's an experience. It's beyond an experience. It's in the silence. But as long as you identify with the body and you think you are the body then should think of words like love, compassion, joy, harmony and keep inquiring, "To whom do these come?" Until you transcend.

SL: How does this affect the life of a Jnani who married and has children, and has responsibilities?

R: There is no effect. It doesn't affect him at all. There is no difference? (SL: It doesn't affect the Self? What about the Robert for instance?) What about the Robert? (SL: About your experience in marriage and relationships?) No experience, it's just something that's going on. There is no real experience involved. It's just something that is done. The body's doing, that's the appearance. It's the same like having cancer, what I was talking about before, "Who sees all this? Who is the doer?"

SH: There is nobody to whom this happens? (R: Right.)

SG: Including the pain that would be associated with this?

R: Pain, happiness, they're both the same. (SG: If you are in excruciating pain you would also ask these things? To whom does this come?) To whom does it come? And the greater you are able to disassociate yourself from the body the less you will feel the pain.

SH: Nisargadatta answered that very nicely. When they asked him, "Are you in great pain?" He answered, "No, there is great pain."

R: Yeah. (laughs) Yes. Good.

(Silence)

SG: So when one says, "I am this," or "I am that," or anything, it's strictly identification that the mind is doing it?

R: The ego mind is doing all of that, asking that question. (SG: That's like the screen and all the stuff that's on the screen?) Umm, the images. (SG: The images.) Again try to make everything simple, do not become complicated. It's a very simple thing. You merely observe what's going on in your body or in the world, you do not react and you ask, "To whom does it come?" In a gentle way. And then you realize, "I feel this." You therefore want to find out, "Who is the I that feels this?" And if you follow the I you will find that the I never existed. So there is no one to feel anything. The whole situation is a lie because there is no I. If there is no personal I then nothing associated with I exists whatsoever.

SF: One Master said, "Be ye perfect as your father in heaven is perfect." The understanding is that no changes need be made, nothing need be added and nothing need be subtracted. (R: Umm. True.) Thank you.

(Silence)

SF: Nisargadatta also said, "I understand realization is of the fact that you are not a person."

R: Umm. But what do you say? (SF: Of the understanding of the statement?) What does that do for you personally? (SF: There is a feeling that I'm on the right path.) If it makes you go deeper within yourself then that's good. (SF: Yes sir.) Otherwise it's just intellectual jargon. (SF: Too much rhetoric.) Umm.

SG: I think I read something like that also in the same book. It says, "There is no such thing as a person just limits and restrictions."

R: We're all saying the same thing in different words, but again what does it do for you? (SG: When I say that it brings out my humanness.) So then, don't say it!

(silence)

R: Shanti, shanti, shanti, om. Peace, peace...

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 79

THE SELF IS TOTAL SILENCE

21st July, 1991

Robert: (tape starts abruptly) ...om. It's good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. I notice we have a few new faces here today. The first thing I'm going to ask you is, "Do not believe a word I say. Why should you believe what I say? Who am I?"

SH: Good question?

SC: You've been there. (laughter)

R: Do not accept what I say literally. Open your heart. Have no opinions for or against. Do not come to any conclusions. Leave your concepts and preconceived ideas outside of the door for a while and just be. Be your Self.

Your Self already knows who you are. You believe that you are the body-mind but your Self knows you're not. Your Self knows that you are ultimate happiness, pure awareness, nirvana, absolute reality. Your Self already knows this. Be your Self. Just be.

Do not listen to your mind. Your mind will tell you all sorts of things. It makes no difference if they're true or not. Your mind is not your friend. Be your Self. Be happy. Just the way you are. Sammy is happy. (laughter) Slap happy.

SH: Great. (laughs) Other side of the tape, that will do. (laughs)

R: Mary would like to sing one of her beautiful songs that she writes for us.

Mary: This is dedicated to Robert.

(Music plays and Mary sings)

Om shanti, om shanti, peace, peace, peace.

Om shanti, om shanti, peace, peace, peace.

In my heart I pray to you Robert of a thousand eyes,

Omnipresent, always free, where no one lives or dies,

I see you everywhere, absolute supreme

With your grace, we awake, from this mortal dream,

Take my mind and send it through the ego lost in time

All I have I'll give to you what I thought was mine,

In my heart I sing to you Robert of a thousand eyes,

Your pervading silence to, beyond these mortal skies,

Time and place dissolve in space but you remain the same,

Eternal blissful consciousness one without a name.

Om shanti, om shanti, peace, peace, peace.

Om shanti, om shanti, peace, peace, peace.

SM: Thank you. (R: Thank you Mary.) Thank you Robert.

R: Do you want to read the Jnani?

(Mary reads, confessions of a Jnani. Refer to beginning of this book.)

(Tape break then restarts with Robert)

Robert: Again greetings and salutations. It's good being with you again.

Most of you see me about 3-4 hours a week. This is the reason we have transcripts. As most of you know I do not give seminars or workshops or intensives. I do not travel any place giving any lectures. I do not advertise. I do not want masses of people coming here. I allow the transcripts for one reason, because you only see me for 3-4 hours a week and the transcripts are an extension of my Self. This is why every once in a while I explain to you how to read those transcripts.

Do not read them like you do an ordinary book. You go through the book and you're finished and you're ready for the next book and you go through that book and you're finished and you're ready for the next one and you forget all about the first one. This is not head knowledge.

The proper way to read the transcripts is before going to sleep and when getting up in the morning. Read through it once. Then go back to the beginning and read each paragraph pondering, cogitating, meditating, identifying with each paragraph. Even though it takes you an hour or more to go into a paragraph it doesn't matter. You have to become a living embodiment of what you're reading. You have to digest and assimilate those words, it helps.

(short silence)

There are many of us when we first got into spiritual life, we do so because we want to remove some problem from our mind or from our experience. That is the logic we use. We wish to become a happier person. We wish to remove a disease from our body. We wish to remove lack or limitation from our lives. We think we've got a problem that we cannot handle and we wish to remove this.

In the beginning stages this is all fine and well. When you get into a thing as Jnana, Advaita Vichara, self-inquiry, non dualistic work, we begin to understand it makes no difference what we're going through physically. We stop to consider our physical needs, we no longer consider these needs. We forget about our bodies. We're not trying to change bad for good. We begin to feel that this world is an illusion. We've been mesmerized to believe that the world that we hear, smell, touch, feel and talk about is not the real world. It's a world like a dream world. We make progress by pondering these things.

After a while. After you've been in this teaching for quite a while the feelings sort of die down. Many of you call me and tell me, "Robert nothing is happening." This is very funny. That's just the point. No thing is supposed to happen. What do you want to happen? When nothing is happening that is when you're really making progress.

Many of you believe that you have to make changes in your life style. You have to move somewhere. Something has to happen in your life to show that you're making progress. You've got it in reverse. Everything in your life should become a no thing. Your desires should begin to become less and less. Your needs, your wants, your bodily comforts. These things should become extinguished from your life. In other words you are transcending the world and your body and your mind. Only when you transcend these things do you begin to feel true happiness and true joy.

All of the great Sages, great Saints have told us the same thing. We're supposed to develop a state of no mind. We're not to think about our problems and our troubles, so-to-speak. For to think of these things simply increases them. Everything is karmic. Everything is preordained and everything that is going on in your life is supposed to happen. Yet you are not the life that this is happening to. You are not that. All you have to do is to wake up.

You're not supposed to learn new techniques. People run from teacher to teacher read book after book. Thinking they're going to find a special technique that will enlighten. There is no such technique. Can't you see the idea is to give up all techniques? To surrender everything? To become empty? And just wake up. But because most of you are so stuck in the world, in maya you just can't wake up when I tell you to wake up. You use certain techniques in order to awaken you. Yet no technique is really necessary but you refuse to wake up.

This is again why great Sages from time immemorial have told us only a mature soul can practice Jnana, real Jnana or real Advaita Vedanta or atma-vichara. Due to the fact that it's so simple. It's so simple that it becomes hard. For all you really have to do is wake up. That's it!

The average person cannot comprehend this. They would like me to sit down and tell them stories and give them techniques and become initiated and get into all kinds of yoga practices believing that will do it. Yet most of you have tried all these things and you're still where you were before.

You have to undo everything you've learnt. Not add to it. The mind is already filled with preconceived ideas with all the garbage that your environment has fed you, you're filled up with everything. And now you run around trying to find new techniques, new methods, new ways to become enlightened. You're adding garbage to garbage. I mean really, you have to empty yourself you have to turn yourself upside down and empty yourself out completely. Become totally empty.

When you have a dream all kinds of things are transpiring in that dream. Then you wake up, the dream is gone and you're back in this world. This world is just another dream. You have to wake up just like you do of an ordinary dream. You have to become free of this world by waking up.

When you wake up from a dream you no longer entertain the dream world. For you are awake to this world. When you wake up to this world you become aware that you are the imperishable atman. That you are absolute reality, all-pervading, omnipresent. You were never born and you will never go anywhere. You are pure existence. Absolute existence, that is all there is, is the Self and you are that.

That's the real world. You are that world. You are not the world of suffering and pain and illusion. All this happens in an instant. It does not take time. When you awaken, you awaken instantaneously. Just like you do out of a dream. When you're dreaming the self is in the heart and the I-thought is in the brain. The I-thought and the brain are both dreaming. When you awaken from the dream and this happens instantaneously, the I-thought jumps into the heart and becomes the Self and the Self is all-pervading consciousness.

This happens between awakening from the dream and actually opening your eyes. When you open the eyes the I-thought goes back into the brain making you become cognizant to the world. When you awaken from this world the I-thought will leave the brain and disappear into the heart centre. You therefore become the Self. It happens instantaneously. It happens all of a sudden. You become totally free, totally happy. (Someone snores in the background) Somebody's totally free right now. (laughter)

SH: Yay.

(A bit of commotion during the satsang. Tape break then tape starts abruptly)

R: ...he wanted to become a Zen Buddhist monk. He heard about this zendho in Japan and flew out there. He had an interview with the roshi. And the roshi explained all the rules and regulations to him and said, "By the way before you go to your quarters we take a vow of silence here. We only speak three words every ten years." So the monk said, "Okay," he went to his quarters.

Ten years passed he had another interview with the roshi. The roshi said, "Do you have anything to say?" And the monk said, "The food stinks," and went back to his quarters. Ten more years passed. He had another interview with the roshi. The roshi said, "Do you have anything to say?" "The beds hard," went back to his quarters. Ten more years passed, he went to see the roshi again. The roshi said, "Do you have anything to say?" The monk said, "I quit." So the roshi said, "I don't blame you, you've been bitching ever since you got here." (students laugh)

Things are never as bad as they seem. (commotion continues in the background) Look at yourself and see how you react to this situation. What do you feel? What do you think? These are the thoughts that have to be dealt with. It doesn't mean that you don't care what is happening. You understand the truth about what's happening. The truth what's happening is there is only consciousness. That's it. Or if you prefer you can say there is only God. There is nothing else. You're not separate from the source. You are the source. If you are the source and you understand who you are, you will know that all is well. (pause) Nate?

SC: I have a question. If I am the source, we're all the source, consciousness, reality, why does it seem that the mind and the thoughts seem to take over. I know you know what I'm saying or they seem stronger than reality if reality is all-pervading?

R: Because you are immersed in illusion. You are identifying with the body-mind. That's the first problem. You identify with the I-thought. The I-thought tells you what you just asked. What you just said. (SC: Why does they seem so strong that's what I don't understand.) To whom do they appear strong? To you. When you have a dream the dream appears to be very strong also. Yet when you wake up from the dream you realize the dream was nonsense. And so it is, the world appears to be very strong to some people because they feel it. But you're asked to go beyond your feelings. To go beyond what is appearing to happen. To go beyond your thoughts. To go beyond the body. You're asked to identify with consciousness. With reality. With the substratum of all existence. Not with the appearance. The appearance will always be. Do not deal with the appearance. Do not deal with anything. Become the witness to the appearance. Watch your mind playing all those games. Observe what is going on within yourself. I'm sure that you're able to do that for a few moments anyway.

Then you can tell yourself and ask yourself, "Who is the observer? Who is it who observes the feelings and the mind and the thoughts?" That's when you're really getting into it. And of course the answer is, "I am. I am the observer. Who am I?" When you get that far, there will be quietness there will be stillness. There will not be an answer.

When you pose the question to yourself, "Who am I? Who is the observer?" There is no answer. The answer is infinity. Beyond concepts. Beyond knowledge. Beyond the body-mind phenomena. Something that cannot be seen, cannot be known by the mind. So whenever you ask a question, Nate. You are always coming from your mind. From the ego. But you're told to go beyond it. Allow the appearance to do what it wants. Don't fight the appearance. Just become still. Ask, "Who am I?" and become still. Everything will take care itself.

See Nate you always believe that you are the doer and unless you're doing something nothing will happen. This is the way we've been brought up. Our school, our parents, the environment told us unless you do something you will get nowhere. (laughs) And that's just where we want to get. No where. We have believed all these years we have to get somewhere. But we want to get nowhere. When you get nowhere you will be free.

So every time you ask a question Nate, you're doing it from the point of doership. I Nate am alive, I am the doer. I know, I feel, I experience. Always I, there is the solution. Get rid of I. If I am the doer. If I am the person who feels this way it makes sense if the I is dissolved there will be no one left to feel this way and you will be in a new state of consciousness. Doesn't that make sense. So whenever you ask a question realize that it is I, Nate asking the question. I want to know because I am experiencing pain, misery and so forth.

Therefore as I tell you all of the time. Catch the I. Abide in the I. Follow the I-thought back to it's source. When the I-thought goes back to it's source which is on the right side of the chest, the spiritual heart, you then become Nate the enchanted one. You become a typically new person. You're no longer you're old self. You become pure intelligence. Which is altogether different from the Nate that's sitting here now.

Again you can look at it this way. You're having a dream and in that dream you are a pauper. You have no food, no money, no job. You go from house to house begging, begging. No one will give you anything. You are becoming emaciated, you're wasting away and to top it all you're dying of cancer. Now you're really wasting away.

Then you see me walking along the path and you say, "Robert, do something for me, help me, look what is happening to me," and I tell you, "Nate, I have a great compassion for you, but you're dreaming. This is all a dream," and you look at me and you say, "How can you say that Robert, look at me, look at my state. I haven't had any food in twenty days. I've got cancer tumors all over my body." Then it appears as if you die and you wake up. You find yourself in bed. You laugh at yourself, you're still alive. You smell the roses, you enjoy the trees, the sky. You never died.

And so it is with life. We believe this world is the reality. We believe that everything that is to have and give and experience is in this world. We've learnt somewhere if we're good we go to heaven when we die. But nobody has ever proven this. It makes no difference where you go when you die, what matters is what you are doing with your life now. For what you believe about your life now determines what happens to you when you die. If you awaken there will be no death. If you stay deluded and you keep believing you are the body-mind, well there are all kinds of stories that go after that. You have to come back again and again in different bodies and go through the experiences of karma until you awaken.

This is why I said as I did before that this teaching is not for everyone. Most people can just not comprehend what this is all about. They say, "I'm alive. I'm in the world. I can practice pranayama, breathing exercises, I can practice yoga exercises. I can learn to meditate to find peace of mind," and that's as far as you want to go.

But I'm saying to you, you've got to rid of everything. You have to transcend your body, the world and your mind. It's up to you. I'm not here to try to convince you of anything. I'm not here to try to tell you what's right and what's wrong. I am simply here to experience the Self. And if you can see yourself as absolute reality you will become the happiest being that ever lived.

We hear words like bliss, divine joy, ultimate happiness. Yet I say to you that you cannot experience these things as a body. It's impossible. The body just cannot experience any of these things. As long as you are the I, by being the I mean you say, "I am Joseph, I am Henry, I am Robert, I am Mary, I am Joan," that I is a lie. You are not that. Were you Joseph or Mary when you were born? Who were you when you were born? You didn't have a name. You just appeared to be born. A name was given to you and now you identify with your name. Just like a dog identifies with it's name. You call a dog by it's name it will answer. We're the same as animals when we are the body. We aren't any different from an animal. We're only different in one way, an animal is conscious and we are Self conscious.

Because we are Self conscious that should give you a clue and make you understand that you are the Self. The Self is not the body or the mind or the world or the universe. The Self is pure beingness. The Self is. The Self is total silence. There are no words to describe the Self. Yet you are that.

You can only find the Self when you become quiet. This is why the procedures that you learn such as atma-vichara, self-inquiry is to bring you deeply into the silence. To get you to a place where there is total quietness. Total peace. Once you are in that place, the Self will reveal itself as you.

It's like the sun. The sun is hidden by clouds and noone can see the sun. Sometimes a glimpse of the sun comes out but then the clouds dissipate and only when the clouds dissipate can you see the entire sun. (tape break) The belief in your body, that's like the clouds. Your mind like the clouds. You believe the body mind is real. All of your experiences that you go through you believe are real, that's like the clouds.

But then one day by inquiring, "To whom do these experiences come? To me? Who am I?" One day something happens and the clouds begin to break away. Your body, your mind begins to disintegrate, break up and your true Self comes shining through with all it's joy and bliss and you are free. Do not look at time. Do not think to yourself, "I have been practicing for a whole week now and nothing has happened or a whole month or a whole year or even a whole lifetime. It makes no difference."

Just remember, whatever you believe, whatever you do, you want to be led to the silence, to that quiet place. Where there is total silence, total peace and when you get to that place you will be forever free.

If you feel like asking a question at this time, feel free to do so. You can ask two questions.

SG: I have a question. Sometimes self-inquiry is difficult for me so I hold on to the I-thought. I spoke once of Ramana's book where he said, "I, I, I," and I don't understand why I'm doing that either. Is it different from self-inquiry or do they help each other...I just wanted some more clarity.

R: If you hold on to the I-thought you're holding on to the self. Your real Self is the I-am. The only I there is. So by holding on to the I-thought it will eventually lead you to the heart and you will become the I. The I-am. (SG: Isn't there a false I and a true I? I mean...) There appears to be. The false I you're speaking of is the I-thought. In the beginning there is the I-thought. That's the I you use everyday. I am happy, I am sick, I am rich, I am poor, I need this, I need that, I'm going through this, I'm going through that. That is the I-thought. It is an idea. It doesn't really exist. It has come out of your heart and it has gone to your brain and so you identify with I am the body. I am the world. As you keep meditating on "I-I." The I-thought begins to leaves the brain and go back into the heart.

SG: So I'm holding on to the false I and eventually that will just dissolve?

R: It will go back into the real Self, into the real I and you will become yourself. That is a good policy if you can do it. You see the reason that some of us get a little disgusted with some of this is because it's too simple. Imagine all I've got to do is sit here and say "I - I. I - I." We think we want some substance. Like mantra's or japa or prayers. We think we have to do something profound, but I say to you that there is nothing profound you have to do. You have to become simple like a little child. Laugh at yourself. Do not take your life seriously and simply abide in the I. You're abiding in the I by doing this and you will become stronger and stronger and your I will become weaker and weaker.

SG: I have one other question, reading some works on death and when one is dying and one is releasing hold of the body. Can one just continue with self-inquiry in the process when the subtle experiences start to arise? (R: When you die you mean?) Yeah. I was wondering what Advaita kind of...

R: Unless you've been practicing before it will be most difficult to hold on to the I when you're dying. For with the average person when death starts arriving there is total fear and you become more engrossed in the I then ever before. That is why upon death according to the ancient scriptures the I leaves the body and grabs hold of another body and then you go through the same experiences of I.

SG: But what can one do when one is dying and maybe in the first three days - was looking at - that can happen any time you know?

R: As I said, it is not what one can do when you're dying. You will not have any choice because a death experience will be so frightening to you, it will be so powerful in your mind, you will not be able to do anything. But, if you've been practicing eliminating the I all of these years, perhaps you have not come home yet, awakened yet, but you'll be an advanced devotee and you will not hold on to the I, you will simply smile as you leave your body and you will realize that you are I-am, consciousness.

SG: Because in the book I was reading they said the mendala appears and at the centre is the white light and if one just surrenders to that light then you can let go more.

R: In this teaching you have to ask yourself, "To whom does the white light come? To whom does the mendala come?" To the ego, to the I. The I is experiencing the vision of the mendala. It does not free you. You cannot become free this way. The whole I has to go. In other words, the object and the observer have to both become annihilated. You are the observer, the I is the observer it's observing the mendala. They both have to go. The only good that can do you I think, is because you are experiencing the vision of the mendala you can become a buddhist monk in the next incarnation. And you'll sit if front of mendala for thirty-forty years. Contemplating the mendala. That is as much good as you'll get out of it. (laughter)

SG: Well in this teaching the light is supposed to be our Self, you know, who we really are. You know and they say that if you get distracted by other worlds and that's where you end up then you're in doubt, you have like a chance a special opportunity...

R: Again you will not be able to do those things unless you've been practicing meditation before. (SG: Right.) That is why in the Tibetan book of the dead they explain you have to practice how to die for years before you die. To die correctly. Most people do not do this. But we go further in Jnana. We go beyond the light. When you split the atom there is a tremendous light. When you go deep within yourself you will see fantastic light. It's like seeing visions. You're seeing the source of your existence. But you're not seeing the real source. Which is nothing.

You're seeing the source of your existence, the light. The question is, "Where did the light come from?" Go beyond that. That is the only way you become free. But lights visions, mandala's, colors, those are all in the occult world. We're told to go beyond the occult. Beyond the visions. Beyond the light. To become totally liberated, totally free. One must destroy the I who sees all these visions, all these lights and you do that by inquiring, "To whom has the I come?" or "Who am I?"

SG: For me also I use devotion. What helps my self-inquiry is really remembering you or imagining Ramana or somebody...

R: Devotion is excellent. Devotion is excellent because it stops you thinking about yourself. It gets your mind off your body, off your mind, off your affairs and you realize the guru, God, and you are one. So you become devoted to the Self. Which is none other than you and you become free that way too. So devotion is very good.

(loud bang)

R: Horat is wrecking your house. (SH: It's time.)

SR: Robert how important is service to the Jnana process in which you're talking about? (R: You mean service to the Jnani?) Service to others as opposed to self-inquiry alone?

R: Who is that who wants to give service? You have to ask yourself, "Why do I want to help others?" Is it to expand my ego? Is it so that I can say, "I'm being of service?" If you practice self-inquiry diligently, if you're supposed to be of service you will be. You have nothing to do with it. Your body will do whatever it came to this earth to accomplish. So if you're supposed to be of service to the homeless. You will. But when you say, "I am going to be of service." That's a mistake. For you become flattered by this. The ego becomes stronger because after all I am being of service. I have helped someone. I did it. And when someone pats you on the back and says good work, you eat it up. (laughter) So it's the ego that goes through these things. Remember I'm not saying you should not be of service, I'm simply saying they're both wrong. Know your Self and then see who is of service.

SH: Well then the Self really is doing everything that is occurring... (R: Yes.) And we're under the illusion that there is a separate me who is involved in it?

R: Exactly. The Self is, and anything that takes place in this world is the Self, not you. When you think you are yourself or your ego that is when suffering begins. But if you leave yourself alone and inquire where the I came from, then the Self will take care of all your needs and the needs of others through you.

A good example of this is Mother Theresa. I don't know if she's familiar with Jnana Marga or not, but when you ask her and you tell her, "You did a wonderful job." She gives you a dirty look. (laughter) She didn't do anything she believes. Everything is being done through her, but she takes no responsibility and no credit for any of her work. That's being of service in the right way. In other words she never really said that, "I am going to go to India and be of service to the untouchables." It happened through her. And her body is the vehicle that takes good care of everything. But she never believes she is of service and she never believes she's not of service. She just is.

How is Pam doing?

SJ: She's alright, much better.

R: Do we have any announcements Mary?

SM: We've got a bhandara next week at 1 o'clock and Sid called and said to tell everybody, "please bring main dishes. And not potato chips and just bring some main dishes," he said.

R: Does anything have to be in the main dish? (laughter)

R: We're going to have some music so be here at 1 o'clock next week. Anything else to say?

SJ: Can we celebrate Thursday night?

R: Sure, we can always celebrate. Do we have prashad?

(tape ends by the unwrapping of prashad.)

[TOC]

ABSOLUTE NOTHINGNESS

25th July, 1991

Robert: Good evening. Welcome to absolute nothingness. I call this teaching absolute nothingness because we're not trying to learn anything. It is a mistake to believe you have to learn something or that I can give you knowledge. The truth is you have to unlearn everything you've ever learnt and become no thing. When you are no thing, then you're everything. So again, welcome to absolute nothingness.

The problem we have is that our head is filled with so called knowledge. Since we were born we have had materialism shoved down our throats. In the church, in the school, in the environment, and we think we're something. But we're absolute nothing.

It reminds me of this story. It was the high holy days, Yom Kippur, the Jewish holiday. And the rabbi was preparing by looking at the torah, the holy scrolls, and repenting. He beat his chest saying, "I am nothing, I am nothing, I am nothing." The cantor happened to be there also. The cantor is the one who sings all the songs in the synagogue. He saw what the rabbi was doing, so he went next to him and also started to beat his chest saying, "I am nothing, I am nothing, I am nothing." Then there was the janitor who saw everything going on. So the janitor dropped his broom and walked over and looked at the torah, started to beat his chest, "I am nothing, I am nothing." The rabbi looked at the cantor and said "look, who thinks he is nothing." (students laugh)

And so it is with us. We hear about nothing but we're filled with everything, and that's the only problem we've got. If we were only able to empty our minds, and then get rid of the mind altogether, we'd really be something.

Anyway, I was walking in the park this morning like I usually do. I started speaking to a gentleman. He happened to be a Muktananda devotee. And he asked me to tell him the difference between Jnana Marga and kundalini shakti. Of course in reality none of them exist. By holding on to either one, it keeps you from becoming liberated. The idea is to let go of concepts and names and forms. But we had a discussion and I guess we'll talk about that, since I can't think of anything else to talk about.

What is kundalini shakti? They're Sanskrit words, meaning the serpent power. It is said that when a person meditates intensely on shakti, or when one practices Tantric Yoga, the kundalini, the serpent power, begins to awaken at the base of the spine. Already you can see the fallacy of this, when something has to awaken in your spine. Your spine in reality does not exist, neither does your body. So how can something awaken in it? But nevertheless in all the kundalini books it tells you the same thing.

The so called kundalini, which is like a serpent, begins to rise up the channel which is adjacent to the spine. As it touches each chakra, there are seven chakras, that part becomes enlightened. When it goes up to the crown chakra, on top of the head, the entire body becomes enlightened. That is called kundalini shakti.

How can a human body become enlightened? Jnana Marga is not any better or worse than kundalini shakti. I'm not trying to downgrade any teaching. All teachings are important. All teachers are important. Everything is unfolding as it should. Everything is in it's right place. But how can a body develop powers, supernatural powers, and then you believe that's enlightenment. What kundalini shakti does, supposedly does, when it reaches the crown chakra, supernatural powers are developed.

Yet I can truly tell you, when the Jnani has observed people with supernatural powers, they have not been very happy. They quarrel amongst themselves. It makes no difference what you can produce out of the air, it makes no difference if you can raise people from the dead. This has absolutely nothing to do with enlightenment. The reality of it is you are consciousness. You are absolute reality. Trying to develop powers holds you back. Trying to become famous inflates the ego. Trying to develop anything holds you back from really awakening.

Now let's talk about you. Everyone has gone through many experiences in their lives. These experiences are good no matter how they may appear to you. I don't care if it's the most horrendous, horrible experience on earth. There is nothing wrong in the universe. Whatever you're going through is necessary for your next step of unfoldment. If you believe it's bad, or there's something wrong, then you continue in that state, and you never grow out of it.

Then it appears as if you leave your body, when it's time to leave your body, and you go through it again somewhere else. You go through the experience again and again until you give up your attachment to it. It makes no difference what the experience is. The only thing that matters is how you react to the experience. The experience is very necessary or you would not be going through it. When you understand this, you can only be happy.

Do not compare yourself with anyone. Do not believe that fate has dealt you a bad card and that you're suffering mentally, or physically, or financially, or otherwise, and saying "Why did this happen to me?" You are not to blame. You're identifying with the world, with the body, with the mind. This is the only reason you believe you're suffering. No one really suffers.

If you really understood who you were, you would never believe that anything was wrong with your life. To believe something is wrong with your life is blasphemy. That is the only blasphemy that exists. When you believe you're not in your right place. When you want to change. When you think somebody is doing something to you. When you have fears, that's blasphemy. For what you are saying is this thing called God does not exist.

I use God synonymously with consciousness. You think God, consciousness, does not exist and that you have to struggle for yourself. You have to overcome burdens and you have to pay the price. Even the belief that it's karmic is wrong. The best thing you can do is not react to anything, but to act from your heart with love, compassion, peace, and let the chips fall where they may.

As you begin not to react to conditions, you find that your thoughts become weaker and weaker. Your mind, which is merely a bundle of thoughts, wants you to react. The greater the reaction, the stronger the mind. And the stronger the mind, the greater the maya. You get pulled into the game.

When you stop reacting, the mind doesn't like that. Therefore it will bring up all kinds of things. It'll show you all kinds of pictures, make you feel all kinds of negative conditions, so that you will want to react. You therefore have to watch yourself, pay attention to yourself, watch how you react to conditions, watch the nature of your mind.

The nature of your mind is supposedly composed of three elements. These three elements are called gunas. There is the satvic guna, which is purity. Those are the people who are filled with compassion, filled with peace, but it's all part of your humanhood. There is the rajas guna, which is action. Those are the people that are lawyers, doctors, Indian chiefs, workers. They have to keep acting all day long, doing things. And then there is the tamas quality of mind. The tamas quality is inertia. It's the dark part of you, greed, selfishness and so forth. Most people are composed of all three of them.

The whole idea is to transcend your mind, kundalini, gunas, everything. Do not get involved in yoga practices. It keeps you earthbound. Get involved in trying to understand who you are. Try to realize that I have to experience the gunas, the kundalini, enlightenment. I want to experience these things. Focus on the I. The I who wants supernatural powers. The I who has problems. The I who can't seem to get along. The I who believes something is wrong and something is right. Focus on the I. Who is the I? Where did the I come from? When you're sleeping at night the I is not there, for you're asleep, but something is still watching you sleep.

The kundalini people say that when the kundalini shakti travels to the head you become enlightened, but the Jnani sees it differently. The kundalini rises from the heart, from the right side of the chest and goes through a channel to the brain. But when it gets to the brain, this is not enlightenment. This is when you become aware of the world. You become aware of the body, and the mind phenomena. It is when the kundalini goes from the brain back to the heart, the spiritual heart center, that enlightenment comes.

So when you're asleep, what you call the kundalini is in the heart, where it's supposed to be. The kundalini is really the mind. It's just another name for the mind. When you're in deep sleep it rests in the heart where it's supposed to be. But as you wake up in the morning, you become cognizant of I. That's because instantaneously the mind, or the kundalini, or whatever you want to call it, rushes up to the brain, and that's how you become conscious of the world. So the object is to cause the mind, what some people call the kundalini, to go back into the heart center, which is on the right side of the chest, and stay there. When that happens you are awake and liberated.

Therefore the best time to catch yourself is when you awaken in the morning. You should remember these things I tell you in the morning. As soon as you open your eyes, in that split second before you become cognizant of the world, the kundalini, the mind and the I, (and by the way they're all synonymous, they're all the same thing), is resting in the heart. Therefore the second that you open your eyes, you are enlightened, you are liberated, you have no problems, there is nothing wrong, all is well, just for a split second.

Then you spoil it, for you become aware of the world, and yourself, and your body. You say, "I am awake." What has happened is in that split second, the I-thought, what some people call kundalini, some people call the mind, has risen to the brain. As soon as it merges with the brain, you become aware that you are a body and a mind. And then you become aware that there's a world, and a universe, and a God and everything else. In other words your existence only remains because you have allowed the I to go to the brain.

Therefore atma-vichara, or self-inquiry, is simply to cause the I-thought to go back to the heart. And when it returns to the heart you become the Self once again, the Self that you always were. You become consciousness. You become pure awareness. You become your Self. And in that Self there is total emptiness, nirvana. There's no mind, there's no body, there's only the pure, unadulterated Self. If only you were able to stay in that Self. The only time you're in the Self is when you were asleep. When you're dreaming, the I is dreaming. When you're awake, the I is awake. But when you're sleeping, the I becomes the Self.

Why do you want to get into a state where you are the Self? Because in that state all is well. It is a state of total happiness, of total bliss, of total love. It is your true nature. It is what you really are.

Therefore again I remind you, the best time to become aware and practice is as soon as you open your eyes. You should immediately ask yourself, "Who am I?" As soon as you wake up. What you are saying is, "What is the source of the I? Where did the I come from, the I that tells me I am awake, I am the body, I am the mind, I see the world, I'm hungry, I'm getting dressed, I'm going to work? Where did that I come from?" Ask yourself. And follow the I. Imagine it going back to the source which is your spiritual heart. And simply inquire, "Who am I?" If you have to get up a half hour earlier, do so.

This is not meditation. Self-inquiry is not meditation. You are actively inquiring, "Who am I?" You are not meditating or concentrating on anything. Even when you follow the I-thought back to its source, you are not concentrating. You're simply observing. You become aware of what you are doing. You say "Who am I?" and you wait. Then you say "Who am I?" again. You remain silent. "Who am I?" again. And now perhaps thoughts are trying to dominate you. Thoughts become stronger. Do not feel slighted. Simply ask yourself "To whom do these thoughts come?" and wait.

You will soon realize that I have these thoughts. We're back to the I again. You inquire "Who am I?" and you wait in the silence. You ask again, "Who am I?" You wait. As thoughts come, you ask, "To whom do these thoughts come?" Makes no difference what the thoughts are. The practice is always the same.

Do not put a time limit on it. Do not keep thinking that you're going to be late for work and you have to hurry. The time you spend in self-inquiry should be a time when you know the phone is not going to ring, you have time. Do not be hurried. When it's time to get dressed, then get up, you can keep playing the game. You can ask yourself "Who's getting dressed? I am? Who am I?"

Remember the reason you're doing this is because in reality there is no one getting dressed, there is no body, there is no I, there's no procedure. You're therefore inquiring so you can come to this conclusion. When I tell you there is no body, there is no mind, there's no world, there's no universe, this is the Jnanis experience.

If you repeat this, and you say this to yourself, you can become disappointed sometimes. For when the vicissitudes of life hits you in the face and makes you sort of depressed. For you're saying "I am consciousness. I am not the body. I am pure awareness," but yet you seem to be going through problems. So it can make you give up the whole thing. This is not a procedure to take. The procedure to take is to admit nothing until you experience it, but to go in reverse. Instead of saying "I am consciousness," you realize, if I find the source of I, then consciousness will present itself. You therefore work in transcending the I.

You can do this all day long. You're eating breakfast, ask yourself "Who is eating breakfast? I am. Well, who am I?" and you keep silent. Whenever you say "Who am I?" you always keep silent. As other thoughts come to you, you again inquire, "To whom do these thoughts come? To me? Well, who am I?" Now you're going to work or wherever you're going. Even when you're driving your car you can practice this. You don't have to worry about going into a daze. It's not like meditation. You are awake when you do this. You therefore can ask yourself, "Who is driving the car? I am. Who am I?" and you wait. "Who am I?" again. As thoughts come, you do the same thing. "To whom do these thoughts come?"

Then you get to the office. You're going to find something very interesting happening. If you've been practicing these things all the way to work, you will find that you become happy and your work becomes more efficient. You'll be able to do your work easier than you've ever done it before. It's marvelous. It happens like that.

When you have time and you're not concentrating on your work, ask yourself again, "Who works? I do. Who am I?" You do this all day long. When you go home, you're eating supper, you ask yourself "Who eats supper? I do? Who am I?" As you're going to sleep, you ask yourself "Who's going to sleep? I am? Who am I?"

By the way, if you've got insomnia this is the best thing you can ever do for yourself. It'll make you fall asleep right away.

As you practice this way, something very interesting is going to transpire. As the days pass, as the weeks pass, you will notice that you're asking the question less and less. You're saying "Who am I?" and now five minutes pass, ten minutes pass, and there are no thoughts. In the effortless no-thought stage there is total happiness. You find you're just happy for no reason at all. You can be going through the worst calamity physically, but yet you have a happiness you've never felt before. And your work is being done more efficiently. You're no longer reacting to person, place or thing. You just feel good.

How long does it take before you become awakened and liberated?

This is determined by the effort you put into it. If you inquire only in the morning, you've got a long way to go. If you inquire all day long, you can never tell what's going to happen, but I can assure you that your life will change drastically. It has to. You know why? Because you have no time to think of your problems. You have no time to think of the world. When your mind is not thinking of your problems or the world, it becomes weaker and weaker, and your problems become less and less important. You become a blissful, beautiful person.

You have to do it. I can lead you to the gold mine, but you have to do the digging. I can share these things with you, but unless you do it yourself, you will never know that your real state of mind is consciousness. Your mind is really consciousness. You are pure awareness, absolute reality. You are sat-chit-ananda. You were never born, you can never die. You will live forever, just as you are now, as the Self.

Prove this to yourself. Find out for yourself. Do not believe what I say. Do the practice and see what happens.

Questions?

(silence)

SU: When you say, "Who am I?" and then you remain silent and then at another time you say, "Follow the I back to the source?" Now I don't understand what that means, "Follow the I back to the source."

R: Actually, follow the I back to the source when thoughts invade your mind you ask, "To whom do these thoughts come?" They come to me. I feel these thoughts. Then you say, "Who am I?" then follow the I back to the source. You do this by focussing on the I, abiding in the I. You simply watch the I. By asking, "Who am I?" you are abiding in the I, it takes of itself. Just by inquiring, "Who am I?" You will notice that you become aware of the I and the source of the I is the spiritual heart centre on the right side of the chest. The I goes back into the heart which is really consciousness. Pure awareness.

By inquiring, "Who am I?" You are following the I. That's how you follow the I. It happens by itself. But then as the thoughts come in and interfere with the procedure that's when you ask, "To whom do these thoughts come? They come to me." Then you go right back to, "Then who am I?" and you're following the I. It happens by itself. You will become cognizant of the I as you practice and you will feel the I going back into your chest where it's supposed to be.

Keep it simple, uncomplicated. Do not attempt to analyze it. For when you analyze it you're using your mind, analyzation makes the mind stronger. We're trying to destroy the mind. Annihilate the thoughts. By asking, "Who am I?" The thoughts become annihilated in due time. Is that clear? (SU: It is, very clear.)

R: That's actually a good question. Many people who begin this practice always wonder, "How do I follow the I?" By asking, "Who am I? Who am I? Who am I? I - I." And you will find that you're actually following the I. Sometimes you can say, "I - I," instead of "Who am I?" You can just repeat to yourself, "I - I, I - I, I - I, I - I," it leads you to the same source. As most of you are aware self-inquiry is a procedure we use because you refuse to wake up. If you would only wake up you wouldn't have to do all these things. And then you would laugh at yourself for thinking you have to do all these things. But you refuse to wake up. Why won't you wake up?

For some strange reason you would prefer to identify with the world and all of the things of this world. With your body, with your affairs, that of course prevents you from waking up. Just let go and wake up and you'll be home safe.

SH: Why is that preference so strong, that perverse preference?

R: This is what is called maya the grand illusion. It appears to be strong. It's like the water in the mirage. The water appears to be real, so the world appears to be strong and our thoughts appear to be strong. But emphasize the word appear. (SH: Really they aren't though, they're quite flimsy.) They don't even exist. (SH: Well that makes them flimsy.) (laughs) Of course. But we think they do, so we have to use a method to get rid of them. Simply be yourself. Take a deep breath and say, "I am." And forget the whole thing. Doesn't that feel wonderful? Inhale deeply and say, "I," and exhale and say, "am." Don't you feel good? That's of course another exercise you can practice with your respiration. "I am." If you keep yourself busy practicing these things I share with you, you will not have time to think of your problems and when you do not think of your problems they go away.

(long silence)

Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace.

Would you like to read the Jnani Mary?

SM: Yes, Robert. (R: Can you see?) Just about. (Mary reads the confessions of a Jnani)

R: (After the reading) Thanks. (SM: Thank you Robert.) Jay were you going to do something? Tell us. We've got nowhere to go.

SH: Who wrote that, that Mary just read? (R: This body.) You?

R: Why don't you explain what you're doing.

SJ: Arty. Is it the formal tonight or tomorrow? (SL: Tomorrow.) But it may be starting tonight. This is celebrated to be the full moon of the guru...in July. So we'll do a Artie.

(tape ends) [TOC]

USING THE "I AM" MEDITATION WITH SELF-INQUIRY

28th July, 1991

Robert: Welcome to this glorious celebration. What are we celebrating?

SF: We're here. (SB: Groundhog day?)

SL: And Dana feeling sick too - but we're not celebrating that! (laughs)

SB: Today is Ramana's birthday? What is the official celebration, guru...?

R: Jay what are we celebrating?

SJ: I don't know? We celebrated Thursday night. We can celebrate today also.

R: Well we're here. (laughter) It's good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. Mary can you read the Jnani? We'll have a reading first.

(Mary reads "the confession of a Jnani," Refer to beginning of this book. Tape break cuts out the reading as Robert continues referring to the reading.)

This is the truth about each one of us. Everyone here is absolute reality, pure awareness. This is your real nature, right now. Not some time in the future, not when you get enlightened, not when you search for the answers, but right this minute. This is what you are. Why will you not accept it?

When you think about yourself, do you think you're a puny human that has to struggle for existence and fight for survival? As long as you believe this, that's the way it's going to be for you. But as soon as you accept the truth about your Self, that you are a delight, divine, sat-chit-ananda, you will be free. You simply have to accept this. There are no rituals you have to go through. There are no prayers you have to chant. You simply have to awaken to your true nature, pure awareness, nirvana, bliss consciousness. This is what you are right this moment.

There is a story about a Jnani who was sitting on the edge of the road, with his eyes closed and his head on his knees, merged in the divine. A young boy walked up to him and said, "Master, can I be your disciple? Can you teach me?" And the Jnani said "I have no disciples and I give no teaching, but I will allow you to sit next to me for the day." The young man sat down and observed.

All day long people from various beliefs, religions, came to the Jnani, asked him questions, wanted boons, wanted healings, wanted different magical tricks to be performed. A lady came to have her daughter married. She wanted the Jnanis blessing so she could find a husband. Another one came to be prosperous in his work. And this went on all day. The Jnani never opened his eyes, nor did he answer. He said absolutely nothing.

At about 4 o'clock, a beggar came over with a bundle on his shoulders. He was disheveled, in rags. He went over to both of them and asked, "Can you please show me the way to town?" and the Jnani opened his eyes, smiled, jumped up and said, "Certainly. Follow me." He took him a quarter of the way, held his baggage for him, and pointed the road to town, and went back and sat down.

The young fellow was beside himself. (Have you ever been beside yourself? (laughter) Who makes up these cliches? "Being beside yourself?") He asked the Jnani "I do not understand Master what you did. All of these people came to you, lawyers, judges, various people from different religions, asking you profound questions and you would not answer them. But the beggar made you smile and open your eyes and you showed him the way. Can you please explain this." The Jnani said, "The beggar is the only honest man we had come today. He knew what he wanted, and he had his way."

What this means is, most people are hypocrites. They want teachings for their own benefits. They're not thinking of the absolute. They're thinking of what the teaching can do to them materially. They want to remove a problem, change their lifestyle, gain material wealth, rid themselves of sickness, and so on.

Now these are all legitimate desires, but they have absolutely nothing to do with self-realization. Self-realization is your true nature. It is what you are. It has absolutely nothing to do with your body. It has nothing to do with your mind. It has nothing to do with your affairs. For the one who is self-realized is not the body. The body can never become self-realized. The mind can never know enlightenment.

People still believe, no matter how many times I say this, that it is the mind that becomes enlightened, the body rises in consciousness and becomes liberated. Nothing can be further than the truth. You are not the body. You have no body. You have no mind. This is why in the past, Sages, such as Ramana Maharshi, Shankara and others, have said that self-inquiry is for mature persons. You have to be mature spiritually to understand self-inquiry, to understand Advaita Vedanta.

When I say to you that you are nothing, everything is no thing, and you're good for nothing, people still believe that I am insulting them. But I am paying you a compliment when I tell you you're good for nothing. This really means you are good for no thing that the senses can perceive. Everything the senses perceive is false. No thing appears as it appears. Everything is a mirage, a dream. It is not what you think it is. So to be no thing is a great blessing. To be good for nothing is a greater blessing.

Know who you are. Understand your true nature. Practice self-inquiry. Be yourself. Awaken to your true Self. Yet most people cannot do this because they're so involved in the world, that their mind keeps them from thinking of themselves as God, as consciousness, as absolute reality, and it is difficult for most people to do this. Therefore there has to be a way for the average person to come up to the point where they can practice self-inquiry. We'll talk a little bit about this.

Most people usually call me and ask me how to alleviate their problems. "How do I get rid of a bad marriage? How do I find another job? How do I remove illness from my life? How do I become a millionaire?" And so forth and so on. What I usually say is, "Do not think of your problems, but think of God."

Now I'm not speaking of the God up in the sky. I'm not speaking of an anthropomorphic deity. I'm speaking of pure reality, of consciousness. When I mention God I mean absolute intelligence. Think of God whenever your problem comes along, whenever you feel despondent, whenever you feel out of sorts, whenever you feel something is wrong, think of God. "How do I do this?" they ask. "How can I think of God? What we call God is invisible. Absolute reality has no form and no shape. How can I think of God?"

I've gone over this once before. Who can tell me? How does one think of God? How does one meditate on God? I'll give you a hint. What is the first name of God?

Student: I-am

R: Exactly. I-am is the first name of God. When you want to think of God, you think of I-am, with your respiration. I-am is the first name of God. Close your eyes and try it. Inhale and say "I," exhale and say "am." Inhale, say "I," exhale, say "am." Doesn't that make you feel good? Just by saying "I-am" to yourself it lifts you up.

So, the thing to do is this. Whenever you have a problem, I don't care what it is, I don't care how serious you think it is, whether it's personal or worldly, wherever it came from, the secret is to forget yourself. For the moment forget about the problem, for as long as you can, and do the I-am meditation. Every time the problem comes back to you, do the I-am meditation. If your mind wanders, bring it back again and do the I-am meditation.

When I explain this to some people they say, "Robert, but you tell us we have to get rid of our minds. We have to annihilate the mind, not think with it." This is true. This is the highest truth. But yet most people cannot do this.

Remember, Advaita Vedanta is really for mature souls, people who have practiced sadhana in previous lives. It's like going to school, self-inquiry, Advaita Vedanta is like the university of spiritual life. You cannot fool yourself. There are so many people who try to practice self-inquiry and they give it up.

Then I tell them to surrender, surrender completely. That's the other way. Again this becomes difficult. They try it for awhile and they always revert back to themselves, their personal self. So I give them the I-am meditation. Everybody can do that. When nothing seems to work, go back to I-am. It's really very powerful. Do not take it simply.

I can guarantee you this. If you can practice I-am for one day, just one day, all of your troubles will be transcended. You will feel happiness you've never felt before. You will feel a peace that you never even knew existed. As you keep practicing I-am, your thoughts will become less and less. Your personal self will go into the background and you will begin to feel an inner joy, an inner bliss. You will begin to feel that it no longer matters what I am going through. It makes no difference, because it is God who is going through this, not me. And God has no problems. You automatically become happy, just by using the I-am meditation.

In the Bhagavad Gita it says, "Out of a million people, one searches for God. And out of a million people that search, one finds him. It's sort of difficult. That's how it appears. But if you begin to use I-am as a meditation, and you allow the I-am to go deeper and deeper, your bodily consciousness will disappear, and I-am will take over.

If you want to mix self-inquiry, atma-vichara, with I-am, that's permissible. You can use them both together. I'll explain how.

Say you're using the I-am meditation. In between, thoughts keep popping up. Whether they're good thoughts or bad thoughts, makes no difference, but thoughts keep interfering. You can now inquire, "To whom comes these thoughts?" and you don't have to go any further. Just observe and watch. When your mind becomes silent again, you go back to the I-am meditation, with your respiration. When thoughts come again you inquire, "To whom do they come?"

As you progress in this method you complete the question. "The thoughts come to me. What is the source of me? Who am I? What is the source of I?" You begin to feel and see that the I that seems to have problems is not you. You begin to feel, I have a problem, I am sick, I am angry, I have no peace of mind, and you begin to laugh, for the realization tells you I has all these things, I don't. I is the culprit. I appears to want this and need that, filled with desires, wants, self-aggrandizement. All this belongs to the I. "Who is this I? Where did it come from? If the I isn't really me, then who am I?" And you keep still.

Now you may go back to I-am again, with your respiration. You inhale and you say "I," you exhale and you say "am." As you progress this way you're going to find something very interesting happening to your life. You're going to find there's more and more space between I-am. It'll happen by itself. You will inhale and you will say I, and all of a sudden nothing will come out of that. Then you will exhale with "am." You will inhale again and say "I."

Remember, you're not putting this on. You're not making it happen. It's happening all by itself. And the space between I-am is the fourth dimension of consciousness, after waking, sleeping, dreaming. It is the state of the Jnani. It is your freedom. It is pure awareness. Pure awareness is not the I-am. The I-am leads you to pure awareness. And when you keep practicing, "Who am I," alternating with both of them, there will be a greater space before you say, "Who am I?" again. That space is bliss. You will feel something you've never felt before, an inner joy, an inner delight. You will just know that the whole universe is the Self, and I-am that.

As the months progress, the words will come less and less. You may start off with I-am, and then you will be in the silence. You will not say another word. You will just experience the silence. That silence is nirvana, emptiness. It is no thing. It is the nothing I was talking about. You will just sit in the silence.

(long silence)

R: We're open to questions.

SL: Robert, before you said you can use "I - I," instead of just "I-am," is that still worth it's standing?

R: I - I is very effective. You can alternate with I - I. When you say to yourself, "I - I, I - I," (he jokes and says ay, ya, ya, ya, ay and everyone laughs) You can say, "I - I." Whatever turns you on. The whole idea is to do something so you get your mind off the world. When you get your mind off the world realization comes by itself. It's the world, the senses that keep you back. All these practices are to subdue the senses. Take control of the senses, of the mind. The senses are of the mind and the mind is nothing more than the I-thought.

So when you say, "I - I," or "I-am," or "Who am I?" it's all the same thing. It makes you dive deeper and deeper into your Self until your material body disappears and you become the all-pervading Self. Never born, never die, unperishable. That is who you are now. Awaken to it.

SB: Robert when the mind is quiet there is still a subtle feeling of me that is like a separation, a feeling of I even though there is no thought I. When the thought is gotten rid of then there is a feeling of I and it feels like the feeling of relatedness and I related to everything else and that's still an ego feeling?

R: As long as you feel I it's an ego feeling. So you must inquire, "To whom does this I come?" or "What is the source of the I?" When you find the source which is on the right side of your chest, your spiritual heart centre, the I will merge. Once the I merges there is no longer a feeling of I. There is a feeling of emptiness.

SB: So when the feeling on the right side comes up, don't try to do anything just...

R: Abide in the I. Follow the I-thought to the source... (SB: That's just emptiness that comes up?) And you will be in the effortless no thought stage. That is the bliss stage, it's a good place to be. As long as there is a feeling you are not there. All feelings must be transcended and the mind or the I-thought is attached to all the feelings, all the emotions. Therefore when the I-thought goes, everything else goes with it.

SB: But in one of my experiences when the I-thought goes then there is still a feeling of separation a feeling of relatedness.)

R: You're feeling the I-thought, that is the I-thought. (SB: Oh, so that's the I-thought, but even though there is no thought going on in the head.) But you are still feeling it, it makes no difference. (SB: It's a feeling of the I.) It's still the I-thought. (SB: Oh.) Whether it's in the head or in the chest, as long as you feel the I you're still abiding in the I. (SB: And further will be total emptiness, total...) Effortless no thought stage and there will be no thoughts there will be nirvana, emptiness. (SB: But there is a feeling of that pressure on your...) As long as there is a feeling you've got to work on that. "To whom does this feeling come?" and you go right back to I, "I feel it," get rid of the I completely and there'll be no feeling because there will be nobody left to feel. (SB: So it's like evaporating.) It dissipates, dissolves. It never existed to begin with, it's a thought, an idea.

SB: But then those samskaras are still there, the karmas are still there and then it pops up a little somewhere else later.

R: The samskaras are part of the I. Everything is attached to the I. When the personal I goes everything goes with it. (SB: So that's burning up the samskaras by self-inquiry?) Yes. (SB: Oh okay?) So do not concern yourself with samskaras, concern yourself with obliterating the I and the samskaras will go with it.

SB: I was listening to your tape the other night and it was like a deep understanding of it, something happened and like everything dissolved, everything went and there was a lot of joy but no body having any joy, noone having any joy. Just a feeling of a radiant joy but coming out of total zero, coming out of total emptiness.

R: You're on the path and you're going the right way. All that has to go, even the feeling of joy has to go. (SB: Who experiences the bliss?) Noone. (SB: Noone but there is this love...) The bliss comes by itself, the love comes by itself... (SB: But there is nobody experiencing it?) There is noone left to experience it.

SB: In the Jnani paper you said there is still appearance of the body (R: Umm) and that is something you can't eliminate? (R: Umm) But when you're immersed in consciousness, isn't everything light and no body appearance?

R: It's beyond light. (SB: Yeah.) For instance, I see my body, and this is paradoxical, but I know for certainty there is no body. There is an appearance. If I did not see the appearance I would not be able to function in the physical. (SB: Yeah.) So the appearance appears to be so. But it's not! (SB: You know it's not?) It definitely is not. (SB: How do you know?) I don't know, I just know. (SB: You just know.) There is nobody left to know.

SH: Knowing without a knower? (R: There is just knowingness. Like beingness.)

SB: Being.

R: There is no body, there is no world, there is no mind, there are no others. (SB: Do you ever see the body as all light like the atoms of it or something?) That was years ago. (SB: Tell us about that.) Well you see the body dissolve and the body is made of atoms and you go toward the atoms and you transcend the atoms, where did the atoms come from? The Self. (SB: Do you actually see everything opening wide with the atoms.) You can see everything. (SB: You can see the electronic structure as if you're looking through an electronic microscope?) You can see all that yes. All that is possible. But that's not the final state. You go beyond everything. When there is no thing left, not even the thinker. (SB: So existence is a trickster?) Existence doesn't exist. (laughter) It has no basis. No cause.

SB: But existence is consciousness? Is there a point when consciousness is not aware of itself anymore?

R: There is only consciousness. Pure consciousness. (SB: So it's not self conscious anymore?) There is no self. There is the Self or there's consciousness, they are both synonymous. But it's beyond words and thoughts. It's is-ness, beingness. (SB: So the whole problem for us is that we have this belief that we're the person in the body and the memories.) That all has to go. (SB: That's the whole problem.) That's part of your mind and your senses and that is what keeps you earth bound. You're not really trying to learn anything new. You're trying to unlearn everything you've learnt. You want to get rid of everything. Everything has to be transcended to be free.

SB: So it takes a great amount of faith to believe in what you're telling us. Faith to the point of giving everything up to see what happens, to feel what happens.

R: In the beginning stages you should have a little faith in yourself that you can do this and you can transcend and know that somebody else has done it and so can you. You have that much faith and then your practice will do the rest. (SB: Because the ego would say that this is all crazy and all nonsense and we're all insane.) You have to ask yourself, "To whom does this come?" Do not allow anything to interfere.

SB: Is contemplation on the Jnani effective?

R: Contemplation on the form of the Jnani is very effective. It causes the mind to subdue, to become weak. Because what is the Jnani,? The Jnani is the Self and the Self is all-pervading. So concentration in the form of the Jnani is concentrating on the Self, and there is only one Self and you are that.

SC: I just want to say that I know all of this with my head and not with my heart and I think that's what the trouble is.

R: What are you going to do about it? (laughter)

SB: Is there a surgeon in the house? (R: Horat didn't come.)

SC: One can't wonder about this. If it has to come to one then there is nothing, to do anything, it just comes.

R: Are you an open channel for it to come? (SC: I feel like it.) Or do you think about the world all day and it's problems? Do you think about Nate all day long? (SC: Yes.) Well that's what is keeping you back. Nate has to go. When Nate goes everything else will come by itself.

SC: Well how does Nate go? If I know that the heart is where it's at, me and everyone perhaps, I'll speak for myself and I have been searching many years, when I feel I've given up, still there is a little remnant in there fears that one giving up will be the end of me physically, you know...

R: Good! (SC: Well maybe it is good, I'm serious, really.) So am I. (SC: Good.) It's good. Nate has to go. You are in your own way. Inquire, "Who am I?"

SB: Robert when a person sees that energy level. They can see the atoms and they can see into things that are busted up into motion and light, what to do at that point? Keep...

R: Ask, "To whom does it come?" You don't want to see atoms or light you want to go beyond everything and open the heart to the Self and become free. (SB: But what if there are no thoughts when this experience is happening.) If there are no thoughts you won't have the experience. (SB: Maybe they're subtle thoughts.) The experience comes from the thoughts. (SB: Oh really?) Yes. Everything is an emanation of the mind. Everything comes from your mind.

SB: Could there be subtle thoughts, in other words thoughts that you can hardly feel it?

R: That's possible yes.

SB: Oh. It seems as you progress a little, thoughts instead of whole sentences there might be a half a word or like little pieces of thought.

R: Whatever it is, get rid of it. (laughter) It's a disease. (laughter) kill it! Don't spend time wasting your time thinking of it.

SB: We spend our whole life going to university, going to school learning how to be intelligent and knowledgeable and think and reason and now we have to get rid of it all...

R: That's the way of the world. (SB: We wasted our whole life.) Not really, nothing is ever wasted. (SB: So why did God give us this intellect and this faculties and...) Who says God gave it to you? (SB: Nature gave it to us?) No one gave you anything. (SB: The faculties, the human faculties prevent realization?) They don't exist! See all these things keep you back. Thinking of human faculties, of mind, all the things that come from the mind. Go beyond, go deeper. Everything has to go.

Do we have any announcements? Okay so let's eat.

SB: Are we going to have entertainment first. (R: No, after.) That's after.

SE: My Zen teacher used to say to me, "Ed you know too much, you know too much," and that wasn't a compliment.

SB: So all this food is unreal huh?

SE: No food is real.

R: It's as real as you are.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 83

YOU ARE NOT I

1st August, 1991

Robert: Well let's get on with it. (students laugh)

SH: Are you sure you want to?

R: Might as well. (SH: You don't have to.) Nothing else to do. (SH: Well, then let her rip.) Good evening! Welcome to the house of Henry.

(Robert continues) One of the questions I'm frequently asked is, "What do you do when you get bored?"

People tell me, "There's nothing to do. I want to travel. Let's go to India. Let's go to Mount Shasta. Let's go to Santa Fe." Most people think they have to do something. The truth is, the Jnani is all-pervading, and the whole universe and the Jnani are simultaneously the same. There is no difference between the moon, the stars, the earth, the universe, God, and the Jnani. Everything is a projection of the Self. Therefore where is there to go? If you have Jnana, you are at peace with yourself and the world, for all the happiness that exists, all the joy that exists, all the peace that exists, all the love that exists, is another name for Jnana. Therefore to the extent that you awaken, to that extent do you find that all is well, wherever you are.

In other words, you do not have to go anywhere. You do not have to do anything. You can sit and never get bored, or you can go and never get bored. It's all the same. It makes no difference. Therefore when you say you're bored, there's nothing happening, what do you expect to happen? Some people expect thunderbolts to come down, lightning to strike. They expect to rise into heaven or to become a saint, as they imagine a saint is. Nothing is further from the truth. For a Jnani there's no coming, there's no going, there's no hurry, there's no time, there's no space. Everything that is happening, is happening now. Not tomorrow or yesterday. It's all happening in the moment. So where is there to go?

To see how advanced you are, take a look at your life and see how bored you become. When you believe that you've got to do something or go somewhere, when you think that time is of the essence, and you think that you've got to accomplish something with your life, you're not making much spiritual progress. For in truth there is nothing to do. And yet you're doing everything, because you are everything. You have become the trees, the mountains, the rivers. You have become the babies being born, the people dying. Everything has become you. Therefore there is nothing to do but watch, observe, look, look intelligently and see that all of this is the Self and I am that.

There's always happiness. There's always peace. There's always love. It's not something you have to acquire. It is your real nature. Until you experience your real nature, you practice things like self-inquiry.

I said something on Sunday that apparently has clicked with some of you. I received three calls about it. What I said was simply this, "When you follow the I to it's source, then all of your troubles, your problems, your life, your world, become dissolved in the source. Until that happens, realize that you are not the I that has the problems." That's the point I made. And it clicked with some of you.

It is the I that sometimes feels depressed, or worried, or hurried, or upset, or fearful. It is the personal I that feels that way, yet that's not you. You are not the personal I. Even though you are following the I, you are following a mirage, an optical illusion, for you are not the I. You are absolute reality, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda. You are not the I.

If you are not the I then who has the problems? Who has the sickness? Who has the doubt? Who has the suspicions? Who has all these worldly problems that most human beings have? I do, but I am not the I. Yet I has the problem. Do you see what I mean? I has the problem. Not me, but I. In this case me is absolute reality, pure awareness, consciousness.

Therefore this is the best psycho-therapy that's ever been invented, for you can step back and watch the I having the problems. You can understand and realize intelligently that the real me, the real Self, can never have a problem, it's impossible. Yet I feel the problem. You immediately catch yourself and realize, "Yes, I feels the problem." Do you see? Not me, but I, feels the problem. Then you forget for a while and you say, "Oh I feel depressed. And you catch yourself and you laugh. You say, "I feels depressed. I feels out of sort. Not me, but I. "Then after a little while you forget again, and you say, "I feel sick." Then you remember. You say "I feels sick. Not me, but I." You do this all day long.

Finally what will happen is that you will (celebrate) separate... (you can celebrate also. (laughter)) But you will separate yourself from I. You will no longer look at your body as I. You will no longer look at your mind as I. When you realize that I is everything in the universe, I must also be the body and the mind. You then realize that you are not the body and you are not the mind, but I is. I is the body and I is the mind. I is all the problems. You separate yourself. You watch. You observe I having all these problems, and pretty soon you're having a good laugh at yourself.

You will feel freedom. If you practice this, I can assure you that you will feel a freedom that you never felt before. You will feel omnipresent. You will feel an indwelling bliss. You will come to see that the body does not exist, as a body. You will look at yourself and see the body, but you will laugh. You will know it's not your body. There is no body. It is like the water in the mirage. There is no water. It only appears so. That's the way the body is. You appear to have a body, but you don't really. I has the body. And I doesn't really exist.

Do you see this revelation you have? There's no I, there's no body. Then what gets old and dies? What gets sick? What has mental anguish? What becomes depressed? And the answer is, "Nothing." There's no one to get depressed. There's no one to die. There's no one to have mental anguish. There's no one left to do anything. You're home free.

When you feel this way, there's nowhere to go, because everywhere you go, you are the Self. No thing makes you happier than another thing. It's all the same. You no longer differentiate between objects. All the objects become like a piece of clay that you've taken to make objects out of, but you realize it all comes from the same piece of clay.

That's how it is with your life. There's no one doing anything. There's absolutely nothing to do. When I say there's absolutely nothing to do, I do not necessarily mean you're going to sit still and sit in one chair all day long. This appears paradoxical. Your body will appear to be doing things, and yet you will know beyond a shadow of a doubt that there's no one doing anything. Think about that. That's a very important point. You will appear to go to the movies, if you have a job to go to work, to come home, to get married, to get divorced, to go swimming, to do whatever you do. Yet you will know no one is doing anything. How can that be? How can you appear to be doing something, yet nothing is being done.

The sky appears blue, and yet upon investigation there's no sky and there's no blue. So you appear to be doing something but there's no doer. There is really no one who needs to do anything, or does anything. Space and time have been eliminated. You are in an entirely different dimension, where you appear as if you are moving, working, experiencing, and there's nothing being done. I admit that state is difficult to think of, yet it is the truth. No one has ever done anything. There's only one, and that one is all-pervading and omnipresent. There's only one. If that one is all-pervading and omnipresent, where is there room to do anything?

Think of it this way... (Dog cries in background as Robert says, "Gotcha," to the dog. (students laugh)) Look at it this way. If you were the only one in the universe, and you were the size of the universe, all of the planets, the stars, the moon, the earth, people, places and things would be within you. You would have no space to do anything. Yet everything is being done within yourself. It's the same thing.

This is really the truth about you. You are the microcosm and the macrocosm. When you are working in duality, in ignorance, you appear to be a small human being, and you look around you and you see billions of human beings just like you. You argue with them. You fight with them. You love them. You do all kinds of activities with fellow human beings. But as you work on yourself, and as you begin to rise in consciousness, something tells you that there's only one. There is not you and I. There's only the I and the I doesn't exist. Therefore there is no thing that you can comprehend that exists. There's no such thing as existence. There is no God that creates the universe. There is no being that causes anything to happen. The highest truth is, nothing is happening.

So you say, "That may be true Robert, but I'm suffering. I have mental anguish. I appear to be ill. I have difficulty with people." Why? Simply because of wrong identification. You are identifying with the apparent existence. As long as you identify with existence you're going to appear to exist. And if you exist, you're going to have problems. For every human being that's born has a problem. There are no exceptions. As long as you believe you were born, you've got a problem.

Therefore, somehow you have to get rid of the notion that you were born. You have to get rid of the notion that you exist, and you have to get rid of the notion that you've got a problem. In other words, you have to wake up. You have to wake up to your reality. No birth, no death, no problem. Nobody dies because nobody was born.

I can go on and on like this but if you're not experiencing what I'm talking about, how can you believe me? I know some of you here have had a glimpse of this reality, so you know it's so. But most of us have not. How can we accept this? You have to experiment within yourself. That is the only way you can ever wake up.

Do not experiment in the world. How do you experiment in the world? When you believe those trees are beautiful, beautiful sunset, beautiful sunrise, beautiful flowers, beautiful people. As good as it may sound, this keeps you back from awakening. Why? Because you are identifying with an external cause that does not exist. You do not realize that the beautiful tree comes from your mind. The beautiful sunset is in your mind. All of the beauty and all of the ugliness that you perceive is all within your Self. You are that Self.

So the person who wants to awaken, when they look at beauty, they realize that they are projecting it. When they look at ugliness, they realize that they are projecting it. They are both impostors. Two sides of the same coin. And you start to inquire, "To whom has this come?" Think about that. When you behold all the beauty outside of the window, instead of being in awe and admiring it, ask, "Who sees this?" In other words, the beauty that you see out there, really comes from in here. You are the beauty. It only exists out there because you exist over here.

When you are in deep sleep at night, who sees? There are no trees. There are no flowers. You are in deep sleep and yet you are awake. Deep sleep is the closest thing to self-realization that there is. Did you ever wonder why, when you come out of deep sleep, you say, "I feel good?" There is no one who comes out of deep sleep that feels bad. You may have a bad dream. But I mean when you are really in deep sleep and you wake up, if you catch yourself, you will see you feel good. You feel great. You feel wonderful. It's only when you start to think that the feeling changes. Check it out for yourself.

Why? Because deep sleep is really bliss. Yet it's unconscious bliss. Liberation is conscious bliss. Liberation is when you're awake and you're conscious. You're not conscious of anything in particular, you're just conscious. That's liberation. So when you see anything external from yourself, and you get involved in it, catch yourself, realize it's coming out of you, and question it, "To whom does it come?"

I know there are many of you who like to go hiking, like to climb mountains, like to become part of nature. That's okay, but do not believe that these things are external from yourself. These things are your Self. You are that. When you question, "To whom does this come?" You again realize, "It comes to me. I perceive it." Then you remember that you are not I. I perceives it. Yet, in reality, you are not the perceiver. You are not the witness. I perceives it. I is the witness.

This is a very important point, and I want you to understand it because it can change your whole life. Whatever you see in the world, you are to realize that I perceives, but do not look at I as being your Self. You have to catch yourself and say, "I perceives this," does not mean that you perceive it. It is I that perceives it. When you separate yourself from the I, what is left? Consciousness. It is only when believe that you are I, that your humanhood comes into play. But as soon you perceive that I is the universe, you have separated yourself from I, and then consciousness comes into play. You have awakened. In other words, when you can separate yourself from your I, you will be awakened and liberated.

Play this game every day. Whatever you see, whether it is your body or your mind, or other people, when someone does something to you that you don't like, the worst thing you can do is react. Can you see why now? Because when you react you are affirming your humanhood, and your ego becomes stronger. But when you no longer react, the ego becomes weaker, and weaker, and weaker. The I and the ego are the same. Whatever you see, I know most of you believe, when you see the bad things of life, mans inhumanity to man, all of the dastardly things you see on TV, you want to separate yourself from that. But it's the good things also. You are not the good things and you are not the bad things. You are no thing. You are not trying to exchange bad for good.

Play the game with yourself. Whenever you think of another person, whenever you think of a problem, whenever you think of a beautiful sunset, catch yourself. Ask yourself, "To whom has this come? It has come to me. I perceive it. Before you ask, 'Who am I?' remember to realize that you are not the I. The I that perceives is not you. In other words, what you must do from now on is, when you refer to I, you're not talking about yourself.

Can you remember that? Whenever you use the word I, you want to catch yourself and say, "I is not me." Me is, "Who am I?" Me is the question "From what source does the I come?" But the I has absolutely nothing to do with you. If it has nothing to do with you, this means that you do not have to struggle to give it up. If the I really belonged to you, you would have a fight on your hands, for you would be looking for all ways to remove the I. But when you remember that the I does not belong to you, there's nothing to fight. You simply realize, you are not I. Then who am I?

If you practice this the way I just outlined, when you say, "Who am I?" you will have a completely new revelation. You do not say, "Who am I?" until the very end, until you come to the realization that the I is not me. Therefore everything that's attached to the

I is not me. My problems, my house, my body, my family, my birth, all attached to the I. And since the I does not exist, nothing exists. If nothing exists, then, "Who am I? Remember never say, "Nothing exists and I am consciousness," because you don't know what you're talking about. They're just words. Never say, "The I does not exist, but I am sat-chit-ananda." Those are just words to you.

You have to inquire, not make a statement. Do not make a statement. This is not a metaphysical class where you make affirmations. Affirmations are kindergarten. That's just to improve your humanhood. What you're trying to do is get rid of your humanhood, not improve it. Everything is a question, "I am not I. I am not the body. I am not anything that is attached to the I. Then who am I?" If you've gotten this far, then when you say "Who am I?" you will be in deep silence, and you've come a long way.

So let me succinctly recapitulate. Starting tomorrow morning when you get up, whatever you see, say to yourself, "That's not me." Whatever you feel, whether you feel wonderful or you feel depressed makes no difference, say to yourself, "That's not me." Whatever you hear, whatever you feel, whatever you touch, whatever you smell, say to yourself, "That's not me." But then admit, "I smell it, I taste it, I touch it, I feel it, but that's not me. It is the I that is going through the experience of the senses, feeling, touching, tasting, smelling. But I am not the I. Then who am I?"

What I want you to do now is to close your eyes and practice this on yourself. Go through the whole thing. Look out the window and look at the trees, how beautiful they are, and realize, "The trees do not come from nothing, they come from I. So the beauty of the trees is I. I have nothing to do with it. But I does. So who am I?"

(long silence)

SF: Robert, I've been wrestling with a matter of faith verses freewill and as I understand that Lord Krishna told Arjuna that he had the right to action but not to the fruits of action inasmuch as the fruits are fore-ordained. And my question is, as Arjuna, do I have the right to action, in that I have...or he has had the will to make a choice, it seems to me that the action is foreordained too as well as the fruits. In other words if I'm facing a situation and I have a choice of handling it in an honorable manner or a dishonorable manner and I think I have a choice and I make a choice, but in actuality that choice is not mine? Can you comment on that?

R: The reason that Krishna told Arjuna that he has a right to the work but not the fruits of the work is because he realized, and he wanted Arjuna to realize that there are no fruits. The fruits do not exist. They appear to exist. There is no one who works and no one has any freewill to choose or not to choose. Everything is preordained. The freedom you have is whether you are going to react to it or not.

As you begin to realize who you are and you begin to see that you are not the person who chooses you become free from making any kind of a decision. And everything is taken care of for you. Everything just happens the way it's supposed to. What was the second part of the question? (SF: I don't hear very well?) Oh, what was the second part of your question? (SF: Oh, you covered it. When you said everything is preordained...in other words, the action will take place, Arjuna has nothing to do with it.) The action will always take place by itself but you will have the choice, whether to react to the action or not to react to the action. Nothing is the way it appears.

As an example: One day Krishna and Arjuna were walking along the path and they got hungry. So they came to a little town. And Krishna told Arjuna, "Let's go beg for some food and a place to stay for the night." But as they got close to the town they heard people quarreling with each other, calling each other names, fighting with each other and they begged for food, but no one would give them any. They spit at them and chased them with rocks.

So Krishna and Arjuna ran out of the town and when they got to the edge of the town, Krishna turned around and said, "May you all prosper and live a long life," and they walked along the path. And they came to another town. So Krishna said, "Let's try this town and see if we can get food and lodging." When the people of this town saw Krishna and Arjuna they fell at their feet. They garlanded them with flowers and gave them the finest house to stay and worshipped them and gave them food.

In the morning when they left Krishna looked back at the town and he said, "May everyone drop dead soon." (laughter) So as they were walking down the path Arjuna said, "What happened Krishna why did you do that? The town that abused us you said, May you have a long life and prosper and the town where they treated us good you said, may you all drop dead soon."

And Krishna explained it this way, "You see Arjuna it is not important how long you are going to live. The people in the first town, I really put a curse on them to give them a long life because they were quarreling with each other and throwing things at each other and hitting each other and the more they prosper the worse they'll get. So they've got a lot of problems to get rid of.

Now the second town we went, where the people were loving and kind they've worked out all of their karma and as soon as they leave the body, they will be self-realized, liberated. So I told them may you drop dead soon. Which is really a blessing. So you see nothing is the way it appears.

This is why we should never judge because it is the ego that judges and the ego is always wrong. You should observe your condition and realize it is the I that has the problem and that's not me, therefore, "Who am I?" If you do that you'll be safe.

I think tonight's lesson is very important. Therefore ask all the questions you want. If you don't understand this, please ask.

SF: I came across something the other day where one of the Sages told a person that realization is of the fact that you are not a person. (R: Umm.) And I was reminded of Sri Bhagvan when somebody asked him, "Should I read the Gita?" and he said, "Always," and the person added, "What about the Bible?" and he said, "the Gita and the Bible are the same," and the fellow said, "But the Bible teaches that man is born in sin?" and the Master said, "The man sense is sin."

Which I gather means that if a person thinks that he is a person in a sense he has sinned or there is separation. Any comments on that?

R: That is correct. The only sin there is, is to believe you're human. To identify with your body and your experiences, that's a sin. It's only a sin because it keeps you back from being free. As soon as you realize you are not your condition and you are not the body or the mind and you're not I, you become free. Then there is no one to sin.

SL: So how would you define sin?

R: A mistake. Sin means you made a mistake in your belief. You believe something is wrong, so you have to react and do something. As an example, you may believe that you deserve to have a lot of money, so you hold up a bank and you feel justified. The sin is not in holding up the bank but in your belief that you had to hold up the bank so you could have money. When you change the belief the sin vanishes because you become a new person. This is why it tells you in all the scriptures, it makes no difference how evil you were before. It makes no difference what you did before. It makes no difference how bad you thought you were. When you know the truth you become totally free and all past karma is totally transcended. But as long as you think you are a human being you have to experience the results of your karma. There is only one way to transcend karma and that is to wake up.

SF: Sometimes we hear the word, Jnani pronounced with a hard 'g' ... are both the pronunciations the same? (R: Both pronunciations, it depends what part of India you come from.) Sir? (Robert repeats) Oh okay, that answers that question.

SL: Why do we have to go through such trials and tribulations in a mortal sense? Once we wake up, why bother? What is that part of it all about? If we are consciousness then why do we have to bother with the material world?

R: You don't. Ask yourself, "Who has to bother?" There is no one to bother, it's like a dream. You're dreaming the mortal dream. Pinch yourself, wake up! Be free! There is no one who has to do this. See we're caught in mesmerism. We're hypnotized into believing we have to go through experiences. So it's natural to ask, "why?" But the truth is no one is going through any experience. It just appears like that. Just like the water in the mirage or the sky is blue or the snake in the rope. It appears that way, it appears real. But once you know the truth you're free. There'll be no one going through anything.

Only when you hold on to I am the body idea do you appear to go through experiences, but as soon as you give up the body idea by realizing that I is the body, not you but I then you become free. You never were the body. There's no body. But I do admit that in some people the mesmerism is so strong that it's most difficult to believe that you're not the body because you see it, you observe it. It feels, it thinks, it acts. This is the reason you have to do self-inquiry.

SF: Sir can you explain the difference between... (R: Excuse me?) ...the no mind state and enlightenment? It went over my head, I wonder if you could run that by again. (R: The no mind state?) The no mind state as compared with enlightenment.

R: The no mind state is when you've come from practicing, to the place in the silence. Where there are no thoughts bothering you any longer. You get there through self-inquiry. That is the fastest way. But that is not self-realization. Self-realization is when the mind is pulled into the spiritual heart. (SF: Can we wait till he goes by?) (As airplane flies overhead.) Liberation, moksha, self-realization is when the mind that's left over in the silence is pulled completely into the spiritual heart. At that time your whole mind, the I dissolves completely and you are free.

So the no mind state is a very high state. It's the state of bliss. But there is still somebody left to experience the bliss. When the bliss is pulled into the heart there is no one left to experience anything. Therefore you no longer say, "I'm in the no mind state." At that time there is nothing to say. Can you understand that? (SF: Seems pretty clear.) As clear as a mat. (laughter) (SF: That's about it.) Again an important part to remember tonight is that you should keep asking yourself questions. Do not make statements. Ask questions to yourself. The mind hates that.

SS: Robert what you've been talking about tonight, it seems that it comes down to the mind or the ego trying to identify from itself and trying to identify with the mystery. (R: Yes.) Is that enough to produce the shift?

R: That's enough to produce the shift. When the mind begins to wonder about itself it becomes weak. So the more you ask the question the weaker the mind becomes. If you make statements or you keep saying to yourself, "I am God," or "I am consciousness," or, "I am absolute reality," the mind likes that because it wants to be God. The mind wants to be God. So then the ego thinks it's God and you walk around with a chip on your shoulder or when you go the other way. When you ask, "Who am I?" or "Where does the mind come from?" The mind becomes weak it doesn't like that. As you said, it begins to see the mystery and becomes weaker and weaker. It devours itself, so-to-speak. But of course the ultimate truth is there is no mind. So do not concentrate on the mind doing anything. (SS: Of course, Robert.) But ask, "To whom does the mind come?"

SU: Robert you said to ask questions, but earlier you said to say, "This is not me." That is not asking the question? (R: It's like a question.) Oh. (R: "This is not me?" Question.) Okay. (R: "Who am I?")

SM: Robert does this all come about even through surrender?

R: Oh yes, definitely. If this appears to be complicated, Mary is right. All you've got to do is give it all up. Say, "Take it God, it's all yours," and let go so completely that there is no room for a question.

SL: When we're meditating, how important is it to stay physically relaxed?

R: Well first of all meditation has nothing to do with this. (SL: Well I know but when you're keeping still.) You just sit in the silence and you watch. Whenever a thought comes you ask yourself, "To whom does it come?" If you feel yourself tensing up, you ask, "To whom does this come? Who feels tense? I do." Then realize that your personal I feels tense not you and the tenseness will disappear.

SL: Is that also related to surrender?

R: In a way. In surrender you don't have to go that far. You simply take a deep breath and you say, "Take this God, take the whole burden, I no longer care." But that's difficult also because it means you have to give everything to God and not worry about a thing. Not concern yourself about anything in this world. To realize that God is taking care of it. That's true surrender.

(silence)

R: Om shanti, shanti, shanti, shanti, peace, peace.

Remember to love yourself, to worship yourself, to bow to yourself, to pray to yourself because God dwells in you as you, peace.

Good being with you once again. God bless you, I love you. Until we meet again, om nam Shivaya.

SF: Thank you.

R: Thank you. You're free to go into the world...

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 84

JUST BEING

4th August, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. (Students: Good afternoon.) Welcome. I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to be with you again.

Always try to remember that satsang is not a lecture. Satsang is being. Being with the Self. The reality of all existence. It has absolutely nothing to do with a sermon or a talk. Just by being you can overcome all your problems and become the real person you are. Just being. Not being here, or being there, just being. Being yourself. Satsang is being.

What do you think you are, when I say being? Do you identify with birth, with existence, going through life, hurrying, scurrying, trying to make things happen, trying to overcome your so called problems, searching for a better life. You're doing the wrong thing. What you should be doing is letting go of everything you've ever believed, perceived, conceptualized. Becoming like a little child. Watching the world and not reacting to it. Observing and inquiring, "Who is the observer?" Never coming to any conclusion. No beginning, no end. Not comparing, not analyzing, not judging, just being.

When you are just being, you are the Self. When you are being this and being that, you are your humanhood. When you are your humanhood you identify with the world and you go through the vicissitudes of life, having problems, trying to solve them, having opinions, being judgmental, concerning yourself with what others say or what others do. As long as you're doing these things you can never really know what spiritual life is.

Spiritual life is being empty, totally empty. No opinions, no beliefs. It is only when you become empty that you become fulfilled. You're not trying to add on new knowledge to what you already have. You're not trying to learn some mystical way of becoming self-realized. You're not really trying to do anything to find liberation. You're merely letting go of everything you've ever had.

If something is bothering you or annoying you during the day, during the night, no matter how justified you may feel, you have the problem. It makes no difference what anybody else is doing. As long as you feel hurt, as long as you feel slighted, as long as you feel doubtful, apprehensive, you must realize it's the me, the personal I, that feels this way.

People ask me, "What is the reason, what is the purpose of becoming liberated? Why can't I just live a hedonistic existence, enjoying everything on this earth. Why should I become liberated?" That's an interesting question. There's really no answer, for you have to feel something in your own heart to cause a change to come upon you. You shouldn't believe anything I say. I can only confess my own experience. I share my life with you. Yet that's my experience. What is your experience? What are you going through?

Trying to become something is the first mistake you make.

Trying to overcome your problems is the second mistake you make.

Even trying to understand reality is a mistake.

The only thing left to do is to let go of everything else you've got, your fears, your frustrations, your concepts, your ideas, your ego. Everything must be given up. There is absolutely nothing to gain. There is absolutely nothing to gain due to the fact that you are that already.

Wherever you go in the world, whatever teacher you may fall upon, whatever book you may read, whatever teaching you may discover, is really to no avail, until you decide to give up everything you're holding on to, and that hurts. Yet that's exactly what you have to do. You have to give up your so called pleasures. Say your pleasures are drinking, smoking pot, doing all those good things. All those things are doing for you is making you a little high. And as you know when you come out of it, you feel worse than you've ever felt.

Now you have to give up also your love for trees, for flowers, for life itself, due to the fact, that whatever you hold onto keeps you earthbound. When you think about liberation, moksha, freedom, bliss, absolute reality, this is your state, beyond your addictions. As long as you're doing things to make a better life for yourself in the world, you can never know reality.

Yet you may ask, and rightly so, "You mean I shouldn't care about my job, my family, my love for flowers or for mountains or for rivers? I shouldn't care for any of these things?" Mentally, you shouldn't. Your body will continue to do what it does and will feel better doing it. Everything is given up mentally. When everything is given up mentally, your vasanas, your habits, the things that have held onto you for so long, will automatically break loose, and you will find freedom.

As an example: Many people ask me, "Robert, you go to the movie sometimes, you watch TV sometimes, you read a paper sometimes, you like to enjoy the ocean sometimes. How come? If truth is your reality, if you were truly consciousness, you would be self-contained and you wouldn't care to do these things."

Who asked this question, the ajnani or the Jnani? When the Jnani appears to be doing something, no thing is really being done. There is just an appearance of doer-ship. The doer has been destroyed. You're seeing your dream. You're observing your own consciousness, where you're at, at this time. Naturally you're going to see everything external to you, the same as where you are in consciousness right now. So when you see the Jnani enjoying himself or not enjoying himself, it's all the same for the Jnani.

The Jnani can sit in a room day in and day out, and if no one brings him food, it doesn't matter because there are no thoughts about those things. The Jnani can go to the movies and enjoy the picture, yet it doesn't matter. There are no thoughts about these things. The Jnani can be in a so-called human hell or a so-called human heaven, it's all the same. It is the ajnani that sees the suffering, that identifies with conditions and judges accordingly. But the Jnani knows that all is consciousness. Nobody dies, nobody is born, nobody suffers, nobody enjoys. Nobody goes through any experience whatsoever. Yet the average person cannot see this. They can only see themselves, where they're at. And all they do most of their life is react to conditions.

Therefore if one vehemently makes up their mind that they want to become realized, they must begin to give up mentally all their judgments, their observations, their conclusions. They must become simple.

The apparent life will take care of itself. It didn't need any help from you. There is nothing you have to do in this world. Your body, which appears to be the doer, will take care of itself. It will take care of itself because it doesn't exist. It appears to exist. What appears to exist will always take care of itself. It doesn't need any help from you. When the body goes through experiences it has nothing to do with the consciousness. It is like hypnosis, like mesmerism. Everything you see, everything your senses tells you, those are erroneous conclusions you come to. And if you react to them you must suffer accordingly. This is the way of the world.

An example: I've known a person, so have you, who loves trees. They just love trees. And they hear about the rain forests being destroyed. They hear about lumberjacks in northern California cutting down too many trees. This disturbs them. They become activists and fight for their rights, the rights of the trees. This is very commendable. This sounds reasonable. But I tell you in truth, the trees do not need your help. Things of this nature have been going on since the beginning of time. And yet if you help, that's good. Sounds like a contradiction, but it's not. As long as your body activates your mind, believing that your body and mind are real, you have to stick up for causes, for you also believe the causes are real. It is only when you understand through experience, that the world is like a dream, not just say this in words, but you actually have the experience that the world is a dream.

If you are in a dream, and someone is telling you, "We're cutting down the rainforest, it's terrible, join our organization, let's put a stop to this," what would you do? Would you join the organization? Would you become an activist? Wouldn't you laugh? Wouldn't you say, "This is a dream. Why are you going to all this trouble? It's not really happening. No trees are being cut down." And of course the other person would insist, they would prove to you that they're being cut down. Yet there would be no way for you to explain to this person that the whole thing is a dream. The person wouldn't accept that. For they are witnessing with their senses their reality called the world. What can you do?

Now you see the Jnani's predicament. People come to the Jnani all day long and tell him their troubles. They're so serious about their problems. They're so real to them that the Jnani has to cry with them, and have compassion. But the Jnani is experiencing the fact that it's a dream world that the observer is seeing, and the observer of the dream world is totally identified with that world. Whatever the Jnani says will make no difference.

This is true of everything in your life. Think of what is going on in your life. The things that are so real to you. The things that you feel, that you worry about, that you become upset over. Of course you feel justified, for you are living the mortal dream.

Therefore when you see the Jnani personally, the Jnani will never make fun of you and tell you, "You're dreaming. This is not reality. One day you will awaken and be free." That sounds like a cop out. So the Jnani listens and responds accordingly. Yet you must come to the same conclusion through experience. You must not believe the words the Jnani tells you. You must have your own experience.

To get back to the question again. Why should I become self-realized? Why shouldn't I enjoy the world and live a hedonistic existence? The first reason is that everything changes. When you live in the dream world everything changes. You grow up with certain friends, then you move, and you're totally upset. You go to a new city, a new state, you have to make other friends. Then you get a good job. You buy a beautiful home. Your home burns down. You lose everything you've ever had. You inherit a million dollars. All of your relatives are at your door. Before you know it, there's nothing left, and you're in the worst position you've ever been. Can't you see everything goes from one state to another state. Everything continuously changes.

When you are on the path to liberation, one of the first things that you experience is the removal of fear. All fear leaves you. And when there's nothing to fear, there's nothing to fight.

You simply have a chip on your shoulder and you react to life negatively because you fear. There is some deep imbedded fear in your subconscious. You may not be aware of it, but you have a deep fear, and you react by having a chip on your shoulder, and you're always ready to fight life. As you inquire, "To whom does this fear come?" as you begin to see that the fear belongs to the personal I and not to you, the fear begins to become weaker and weaker and weaker. The fear begins to flee as you self-inquire, as you ask, "To whom does the fear come?"

As you continue on the path to self-realization, the next quality that happens to you is a feeling of great peace. You've lost fear and now you become peaceful. You become very peaceful. The world, things, ceases to disturb you. There is no reason why you feel peace. In other words, things have really not changed dramatically in your life. You're still aware of man's inhumanity to man. You still see all of the dastardly things on television that used to cause upset inside of you. You used to become upset something awful. And now for some reason you no longer become upset. People used to look at you the wrong way, you are ready to fight. You'll always find some fault some place. You go to a restaurant and you always believe that the waitress or the waiter is cheating you. You go to a supermarket at the checkout stand, you count everything you bought. You're afraid of being cheated. All that stops. The fear is gone, and you feel peaceful. You have a deep conviction that nobody wants to hurt you. The feeling that there are people in the world who still can cheat you, mug you, rob you, disappears, even though those people may still exist. But you have risen. You have risen. You no longer feel these things. You feel an unalloyed peace, for no reason, that has nothing to do with person, place or thing.

The next quality that comes to you on the path to self-realization is happiness. Something within you is always happy. This doesn't mean that you're laughing all the time, or you always have to have a smile on your face. That's just an outer appearance, a put on. You just feel happy for no reason whatsoever.

Eventually as you continue on the path, you feel a bliss, a bliss that is beyond understanding. The world can no longer hurt you. You haven't come to a 100% conclusion that the world doesn't exist, but for some reason you feel that the world can no longer hurt you, and you feel blissful all the time. Other people cannot see this. You want to share it with them, but you cannot. You can only point the way to self-inquiry.

As you continue on the path and you go deeper and deeper, the peace, the happiness, the bliss, become transcended. You become the Self. You become the substratum of all existence. You function as consciousness, yet you appear to people as a body. Your form becomes a transmitter for divine grace to those mature disciples and devotees who are ready to receive it, but you are doing no thing. You are not saying, "That I am something, and I transmit something." If you make a statement like that, there is still somebody left who believes they're a transmitter. There is no one to transmit anything, yet it appears to happen that way.

So you see, there is a good reason to want to awaken from the mortal dream. You will become totally free, and you will experience joy that cannot be explained.

Now let's talk about you. How do you start?

By letting go of all your problems. All those things that have been hounding you, all those things you love so much, mentally letting them go, and inquiring, "To whom do they come?" Inquiring, "To whom do they come?" Realizing, "They come to me. I feel these things. I feel hurt. I feel slighted. I feel upset. Yet I am not I. Then who is I? Where did the I come from that feels upset, that feels out of sorts?" You do not answer that query, but you feel that the I carries the weight of the problem, not you.

As you continue to do this day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year, who knows? You never know when it may happen. But one day, the I will disappear into the heart during your waking state, and you will see your omnipresence with your spiritual eye. You will feel a joy, a happiness, that's beyond understanding. You will be free.

(music played)

R: Questions?

SB: Does self-inquiry remove the samskaras that are veiling the Self?

R: Self-inquiry itself does not remove anything. But as you keep practicing and the more you know the truth the less samskaras come back to you. Samskaras, karma are for those who look at the external world as real. When you become introverted there are no samskaras. When you become introverted there is no world. There is no karma. Karma, reincarnation, samskaras are for the extroverted person. It's really amusing when you went to school they wanted you to become an extrovert. They wanted you to be outgoing. But now you're beginning to understand that the more outgoing you are the more worldly you are, the more earthbound you become. As you practice self-inquiry and you begin to focus on the Self, then the samskaras are destroyed. It's the focussing on the Self, on the heart centre that destroys the samskaras. Self-inquiry itself does not do that. It is a method to destroy them. The method you use to find the Self. And it's only when the mind dies to the Self that samskaras are destroyed.

SB: So the samskaras are in the mind and as long as we're not focussed on the mind but we're focussed on consciousness, then they're not effective anymore, right?

R: This is true. For when there is no I left, when the I-thought has been destroyed, for whom are samskaras? Samskaras are just for the I. No I, no samskaras.

SG: I'm reading Sri Ramana, Remembrances and they talk a lot about the illnesses and other things that Sri Ramana went through. It's hard for me to understand why he went through those things and I wonder if you could talk about it.

R: Of course. You answered your own question. It's hard for you to understand. Who are you? As long as you believe you're human you're going to observe sickness and you're going to observe things of this world. But when you transcend yourself, your little self and you begin to feel the reality, in the reality there is only perfection. Noone is born, noone is sick and noone dies. Consciousness is the only power. Nothing else exists.

So when we see Ramana dying, we're seeing our own state of consciousness. We're seeing where we're coming from. Ramana never thought he was dying. He never believed he was dying. To him there was no death, there was no transition, there was no change from life to death and then you're made whole in death. To Ramana life and death were one. There was no doubt about that. There was no duality. There was no sick body to become well. There was only the one and you are that one. But as long as you're living through your senses you will observe life and death and you will come to conclusions. That's why it's so necessary to work on yourself and raise yourself higher and higher until the body is totally destroyed in mind. The mind-body is totally obliterated. Then there is only absolute awareness, nirvana and in that state there is no death.

SG: So just to pursue it a little bit further, you were talking about making an analogy about dreaming about trees and somebody would ask you, "Do you want to do something about trees," if he'd awakened he would just smile, knowing there were no trees. And so Ramana allowed himself to be put through a number of arduous treatments and stuff. (R: Yes.) For what purpose was that?

R: For the purpose of his devotees. (ST: The purpose of what?) The purpose for his devotees. If he was by himself living in a cave he would sit there or lie there, smiling. But his devotees were so insistent, they wanted to preserve the body that he allowed them to enjoy themselves. It gave him pleasure to do this. So he allowed it to happen. But he didn't do it because of anything that was in him, he was above all that. It was only for the pleasure of his devotees. (SG: In the book they make it plain that Ramana was not experiencing what his devotees were perceiving.) Of course not. If he was perceiving what they were perceiving he would be like one of them. He was beyond all of that.

SH: Why would he give in to their ignorance? Instead of awakening them from it?

R: He didn't give in to their ignorance. He just allowed it to happen. (SH: Why?) For the same reason that he allowed his body to appear to be real. For the same reason his body took a walk and made breakfast and went through all kinds of experiences, why? That's the appearance. (SH: But that keeps them, his devotees in their illusion.) It makes them, at the present time in the state that they're in, it makes them feel a little better. He realized that they could not all be enlightened at the same time. (SH: But their feeling better is keeping them in their illusion.) Their feeling better keeps them in their illusion as long as that is going on. But they're able to see the attitude of Bhagvan. When they are able to see where he's coming from and that the illness does not affect him, it causes them to awaken to a greater extent.

But the appearance is that he was suffering and they're taking care of him. This is the appearance of the body, he can only be himself. So he couldn't really awaken them if they were not ready to be awakened. They were what they were and he was what he was. It's like when you talk about the gurus grace, only those who are mature students can receive it. So those who were true devotees were able to see the truth about Bhagvan. Not all of them reacted like that.

SH: Then they wouldn't want to have things done to try and cure it or something?

R: They were not interested in that. There were many devotees who just watched and they didn't get involved in that. Only the devotees that were not spiritually high took care of all those things. (SH: What I don't get is why he would give in to them and let things be done to his body which he had no interest in...) Because of a great compassion. (SH: Is that compassion?) Of course. (SH: It keeps him sick?) Not really. When they see what happened after it was over many of them had an awakening. They were able to see the folly of all that. But while it's going on they had to participate. That's just like if you were driving your car and you saw somebody being hit by a car and noone was there, would you drive by and say it's not happening? And not care about the person being hit?

You would stop your car and render aid to the best of your ability but you would know the truth. You would still render aid. So how would it look if all the disciples and devotees were watching Ramana waste away and they were all laughing and playing cards and saying, "Well this isn't happening." They haven't gotten to that state. So they have to do what they have to do and Ramana has to do what he has to do.

Remember the story I told once about the scorpion? About this Master sitting by a pond, watching the scorpion swim across and when it was nearly drowned he would pick it up and put it back on the shore. Then he would watch it swim across and when it was nearly drowned he would pick it up and put it back on the shore. And a wanderer came by and saw all this and said, "Master what are you doing?" and the Master replied, "It's the scorpions dharma to try to swim across and it's my dharma to try to save it."

So it's the dharma of those devotees to take care of Bhagvan the way they did and it's the dharma of Bhagvan to allow it to happen. (SH: Even if it doesn't make any sense?) No it doesn't. Existence doesn't make any sense, but it appears to be so.

SI: May I ask you a question? (R: Of course, that's why I'm here.) I'll make it short. What this young man wants to know, what most of us would like to know. Like when a person has cancer or many of these diseases of the body, the worst thing about it is the discomfort and the pain. (R: Umm.) So if I'm sitting here in pain and I just took my pain pill, well which I actually did, or I need to be around people so I don't feel the pain, or I have to come here so I don't feel the pain, then what is the best thing that we mundane people have to reach much of a spirituality to not feel the pain, can do? (R: You can only feel the pain but you can observe it also.) Now that is the second question that I was going to ask. If you say that we are in a cancerous state and someone else could say "well why," and you would say, "for the devotee," because they need to experience it and may at sometimes get enlightened afterward. I think most of us would say or know that only through suffering or through pain or through travail that we learn to have compassion for other people and putting in the stake. And then at the same time you'll say that is almost like it can't be vacillation because you shouldn't be really concerned what the other people out there or being at the scene of the car accident, be concerned with yourself. So is there something that a guru or an advanced man can show with a cancerous body to his devotees. Is there something they should know about suffering or the human state so they can realize that that is not important, I guess that's what you're saying.

R: It is important when you're going through it. As long as you're going through it and you're feeling it then it's important to you. You're not supposed to imagine it doesn't exist when in fact it does. Therefore you're supposed to do everything you can to alleviate the pain from yourself. If you have to take pain pills or if you have to go to a doctor, you do whatever is necessary at the time, but you can always realize that it is your body that is going through this and not you. You have nothing to do with this because you are not your body.

You can do both at once. You can handle the pain the best way you can and also keep realizing that you are not the body. That the pain is coming to you as I. It's attached to your I. Your personal I. It is the I that suffers, not you. As you keep doing these things you will notice that the pain becomes less and less. You're not feeling it so strongly. When you identify with the I and you realize that the I is going through the pain, then you suffer. But when you do not identify with the I and you just observe and you watch and you realize the I is going through the pain not you, the suffering becomes bearable. You will not stop suffering because it's attached to your body and you believe in your body so strongly, but it will become bearable and you will suffer less and less.

We're not trying to say that suffering does not exist that would be idiotic to the person who is experiencing the suffering. We are saying that there are those beings that are called Jnanis that have transcended the world, the universe and everything thereof and there is no suffering for those people. Yet others see them suffer. The suffering is apparent to others who are not in that state. Therefore you must not be judgmental. Because when you speak, you're speaking about the state that you're in and you have no idea of the state of the Jnani.

You're all looking so serious, it's not serious it's a joke.

ST: Robert can I ask you a question? (R: Of course.) If everything is preordained is that just in the world of illusion? And would that mean that there are no accidents and if a disease came would that be preordained and the healings be preordained and would your time of enlightenment be preordained, I just can't seem to...

R: Everything that has happened to you since your birth has been predetermined. It is only when you realize that you were never born and you become introverted and go within that all that stops. But as long as you are living in this world as a human being everything is preordained. Only when you rise in consciousness by diving deep within yourself do you transcend preordination. The truth is noone is preordained, it doesn't exist. But as long as you believe you are the body it does exist because the body has lived before and before and before and will continue to live again and again and again. As long as the belief in the body exists in you. When that belief is destroyed who is left to be preordained? What is left to be preordained? All that becomes redundant. Do you follow that?

ST: In a way, but it seems like it's a process. I think I've heard you say that you can awaken in a flash... (R: Yes.) But it seems to me like it's taken a long time for me to awaken and I guess that's part of the illusion too, I don't know. It seems like a process. If I can't give up my belief in the body all at once, does that mean karma and preordination lessens as the process goes on?

R: As long as the process goes on, preordination exists. (ST: In the same way?) It is only when you go within and transcend the ego and the body that preordination ceases to be. (ST: Well, I think sometimes we have flashes of knowing those things but then the world comes in again.) As you continue with the practice the flashes will expand and the world will contract. (ST: Thank you.) Forget about time just continue practicing. (ST: I'm going to do that.)

SI: May I ask another question? (R: Of course.) This one may be about how the spirit moves. Sometime three weeks ago they were selling the book "I am the Self." (R: Umm.) and one of the students of Ramana - I will not try to say the name and the young woman who was his disciple and him - And it was telling about the disciple who was lying on the floor with the snakes and the rats. And that one of the rats had died. And the rats would come and sit on his lap or knee and it would laugh, like it was in a bliss state like he was. And he felt that when the rat died or passed away that it had received the Self and in the image after it had expired there were like three baby rats dancing. And I know in the Hindu philosophy ???(student looks for a word) (R: Transmigration.) Transmigration, yes, but most people through concepts do not believe that the human body ever reverts to a lower existence and is also I guess it's like a monkey who he feels he is known in a prior existence who is a person. And this would be an anathema to many peoples belief system because they only believe they evolve over and never backwards.

R: So what's the question? (SI: Which is right? A do they both exist?) None are right and both are right. Do not go along with your belief system. (SI: Well I find that hard to believe that this is a student of Ramana, why is that written?) This is the reason why I say so often when I start the class, "Do not believe anything I say," in this world anything is possible, yet what difference does it make? What you should do is work on yourself. Read the books if you like but take it with a grain of salt. (Who made that expression up? (laughter)) You are not asked to accept everything you read.

SI: Well I don't. When you think of someone who is that evolved they should know the difference between fools folly and something that happened to... (R: You are judging!) That's a judgement, yeah.

R: Find out who you are and when you discover your own reality then you'll understand that. But people assume to have all kinds of experiences. Look at all the experiences Yogananda went through in, "Autobiography of a yogi" and other books. There are many stories, there are many books, some stories are true, some are false but never mind that, see who you are, work on yourself and don't pay attention to all those things.

SE: It's like what's the difference between a true dream and a false dream. (R: Umm?) They're both dreams. (R: They're both dreams.)

R: (answers previous student) See it appears to me that you have a very strong belief system, you're always saying this is right and this is wrong. (SI: I don't really feel that way but if that's...) I believe this and don't believe that. It shouldn't make any difference. Just read it and say, "uh-huh that's interesting," and work on yourself.

SB: Robert the mind always seems to resist consciousness and it's always looking for it's happiness somewhere else. So when will the mind realize that if it rests in consciousness that someday happiness will come over it?

R: When you stop paying attention to it. The less attention you give to your mind the more it will subside. Do not give your mind power. Do not believe that your mind is very powerful and it can cause you pain and all sorts of obstructions. Ask yourself, "To whom is the mind?" The point is to always to be aware of who you really are. Identify with your source. Do not give the mind any credit, or any value, or any power, by believing it's strong and it's hard to overcome. Rather go beyond the mind and find out how the mind arose, and to who it arose, and then you'll become free.

SH: Is there such a thing as a mind, an entity. We speak of it as though there was a mind but there is no mind there are only thoughts.

R: That's what I was saying, the mind doesn't exist. (SH: No.) The mind is only a bundle of thoughts. (SH: Right.) When you slow the mind down it means you slow the thoughts down. (SH: No thoughts no mind?) Exactly. The mind doesn't exist, neither does the body, neither does the world, or the universe. They're all out of the mind and the mind is really the personal-I. So when you follow the personal I back to the source the mind goes and everything with it.

SB: So we're always using the mind as a reference point to find the truth and that's why we never find it from that point of view.

R: Because we believe in the mind. We think the mind is very strong and we have to fight it to destroy it. It will never be destroyed if you feel that. You have to become neutral and not fight the so called mind. But observe it, watch it and follow it back to it's source.

ST: Mind has to somehow become convinced that there is something greater than the mind.

R: Not really, you don't want to convince the mind of anything, you want to destroy it, annihilate it. The more you try to convince your mind the more power it will have over you. That is why you have to inquire, "To whom comes the mind?" And you will always go back to the I-thought. Follow the I-thought to the source, the mind will go.

Would you like to read the Jnani Mary?

Now listen to this carefully, this is your true nature. This is what you really are.

(Student reads the confessions of a Jnani, Refer to beginning of this book.)

(Robert then plays a tape of students song that was written for him)

Students applaud song.

SI: Put the donations in for Robert why don't we do that, we've got to have one.

SM: Alright any donations go to Robert.

(tape break)

R: It's been a pleasure being with you again. I love you all, God bless you, thank you for coming. Remember to love yourself, to worship yourself, to pray to yourself because God dwells in you, as you, peace.

SL: Thank you.

R: Until we meet again, you can go home now...

(tape ends) [TOC]

NOTHING IS YOUR REAL NATURE

8th August, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It's good being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

What is it you really want out of life? Some of you want perfect health. Some of you want wealth. Some of you want happiness, a new life. Some of you want self-realization. Everyone wants something. This is a very big mistake. What you really want out of life, is nothing. Nothing is your real nature. You are nothing. You're not something.

If you want something out of life, that something has to change. Everything in the material world must change. Therefore whatever you want out of life is transient. It is not eternal. It has a beginning and an end.

The nothingness I speak of is eternity, omnipresence. When you do not identify with anything, everything unfolds as it should and you become very happy. When you're looking to the future trying to become something, or attain something, or improve something, you always worry, you have fears. And even if you attain it, it's not what you thought it was. When you identify with emptiness, your true nature, this is Brahman, absolute reality. Another name for pure awareness is nothing. Absolute reality is nothing. Pure intelligence is no thing. Your real nature is no thing. It is no thing that you can describe. It is pure emptiness.

The body that you believe you have will take care of itself. Your wanting of something keeps you from being your Self. It makes no difference what the something is. As long as you desire anything, it keeps you from your true reality and causes suffering. When you empty yourself out, then there is plenty of room for nothing. But as long as you have preconceived ideas, concepts, desires, wants, ambitions, hopes, you are filled to the brim. There's no room for nothing. Therefore nothing appears to evade you, and you're always wanting something.

The body that you think you are will always take care of itself. You do not have to have one thought about your body, or about your affairs, about anything, and you will live the most marvelous peaceful existence. Due to the fact that the nature of maya is pure happiness. Maya, the world as it appears, comes out of the pure happiness. As you keep thinking about things, the pure happiness can not be, for you have identified with a mind, with a body. You're not empty. You're therefore worldly. Your senses are in control.

As you let go of your senses, your desires, your wants, maya is no longer in control. It's a new ball game. The substratum, the happiness, the pure awareness, which is at the basis of everything, takes over. And even though you appear to have a body, your body unfolds as it should. All of your affairs are taken care of, without one desire.

Your body is karmic. What appears to be your body is preordained. When the body first appeared, everything about you was preordained. Whether you're going to be male or female, the kind of nose you would have, your color, where you were born. Everything was taken care of. You had absolutely nothing to do with it. Isn't it reasonable to assume therefore, that the same power that was able to bring you into this world as an appearance, can take care of this appearance, maintain it and sustain it, and do with it what's supposed to happen.

The trouble begins when you react. You're brought into this world learning the difference between bad and good. You are taught at an early age these things are bad and these things are good. Yet this is erroneous thinking, for nothing is either good or bad, but thinking makes it so. The mind thinks. It says something like this, "It's bad to be sick. It's good to be healthy. It's bad to be poor. It's good to be rich."

If that were true, why is it that most Sages were sort of sickly and never owned anything? Yet everyone remembers their names and knows who they are. But when you have a person like a Donald Trump, Arnold Schwarzenegger, these people become famous for a time. Will anyone remember them a hundred years from now? Yet a name like Ramaana Maharshi, Ramakrishna, Shankara, Jesus, Mohammed, Moses and so forth, these names will be remembered a thousand years from now, and their fame will grow greater and greater.

Now what am I trying to get at? I'm trying to get at the fact that you have absolutely nothing to worry about, nothing to fear, nothing to be upset about. The only job you really have is to stop thinking. Stop thinking about anything. I know you were taught to believe that if I stop thinking, my affairs will go belly up. All kinds of horrendous things will happen to me. This is not true. Your body is going to do the thing it came here to do, whether you like it or not. You have absolutely nothing to do with it. Why quarrel? Why argue?

Say, for instance, right now someone is doing something to you that you don't like. To retaliate is to react, and that causes you to accrue new karma, which has to be wiped out sooner or later. Therefore you come back to the earth again, and again, and again. And you go through all sorts of experiences until you learn not to react. Until you realize everything is okay, just the way it is.

When you can learn everything is okay, just the way it is, you're ready for the next step, which is, what is? What is? And you realize, "I-am." When you say, "I-am," you will not refer to your body. You will refer to consciousness. Consciousness and "I-am" are synonymous. As long as you are reacting to person, place and thing, and you have a strong body consciousness, whenever you say "I am," you're referring to your body. But as you practice bhakta, devotion, detachment, compassion, all of a sudden you will realize that "I-am" is omnipresence, and when you say "I-am," you're referring to the whole universe.

You are the universe, the galaxies, the planets, the trees, everything. And what you do to everything or to anything, you're doing to yourself. So you will think twice before you become angry, before you decide to get even, before you react. It is only when you practice this, that you can grow.

Look how excited you become about the world everyday. You're always trying to get rid of the bad, and substitute it for good. This is a great mistake. You have to remember that the true condition is neither good nor bad. You have to learn to forget about your body. Your body has nothing to offer you. You do not denounce it or curse it. You do not love it or worship it. You leave it alone. As you leave it alone it will do everything it's supposed to do. These things must be done before you can even consider Advaita Vedanta. This is why I talk about them so often.

I know so many people, all they think about is enlightenment. Yet they have bad dispositions, bad tempers, selfish, only concerned with their own bodies and what's good for it. Yet they walk around saying, "I am consciousness, I am pure awareness, I am the ultimate reality." All of the time they're talking about their body. They have not learned to transcend the body and they're paying all these great attributes to the personal self.

The personal self, the body, can never be enlightened. It's impossible. The body was not meant to be enlightened. The body has absolutely nothing to do with liberation. Yet your real nature is enlightenment, liberation, nothingness. Are there two of you, one the body and the other liberated? Are there two I am's? Of course not. There's only one Self and you are that. This means the truth is that there's no body, there's no mind, there's no perceiver, and there's nothing to be perceived. All that is a hallucination.

Have you ever had a hallucination? Well you're having one now, for you believe that whatever you see is real. It has been my personal experience that nothing the mind produces is real, and the mind is the source of all existence. What happens to existence when you're in deep sleep? It's not here. It's gone. Where did it go? It never went anywhere. It never existed to begin with, and the only time you can prove this, is when you are in deep sleep. The world appears to be going on for others, but as far as you're concerned, there's nothing, for you are in deep sleep.

The only difference between you and being in deep sleep, and being self-realized when awake, is when you are in deep sleep you are realized, but it's subjective. When you are awake and you are realized, it's objective. But the state is the same. Objects appear to the self-realized person, but the self-realized person sees right through them, like the water in the mirage, like the snake in the rope, like the sky is blue. Once you've experienced that the water in the mirage is not real, it can never fool you again. Once you have experienced that the snake, it appears to be a snake; but it's a rope, it will never fool you again. Once you have experienced that there's no sky and it's not blue, it will never fool you again. So also once you have experienced that you are the Self, the world can never fool you again.

People, things, places, all become a joke. They have no existence. When that feeling comes to you, you hardly feel that you are a body. You see your body in the world as a mirage. They appear to exist, but they do not. Therefore all fear leaves you. All desires have been transcended. If your body appears karmically to be dying of a disease like cancer and rotting away, this is all a joke to you. It's laughable, for you understand that you have absolutely nothing to do with the body. There is no condition that has the power to frighten you, for you have transcended conditions.

Now why do you want to become like this? Are you happy the way you are? For the hedonistic individual who's only interested in having a good time, time runs out fast. And no matter what they own or they don't own, or what they're doing or not doing, they have to be visited by Mr. Death. That's what they have to look forward to.

The enlightened being knows there is no such thing as death, because there's no such thing as life, and there is no such thing as birth. Therefore the enlightened being is always free, is not bound by anyone or anything, and is all-pervading. The enlightened being knows only happiness.

Remember in the beginning I said that happiness is the substratum of all existence? Not the happiness that you've experienced, not human happiness when you gain things, but a happiness that is beyond words. A happiness that is beyond description, a joy that can never be explained, a bliss that a human being can never know.

So you have a choice. What direction shall I go? It starts with you. It begins and ends with you. You have to take an honest look at your life, an honest look at your thoughts, at your desires, an honest look at how you've been living, and start to work on yourself to transcend it. The way you transcend it is by attaining a quiet mind. Stop thinking. No thoughts whatsoever. No goals. No thoughts. Do not tell yourself, "I want to attain self-realization," for that will keep you away from it. You will think there is something you have to do to attain it, whereas all you really have to do is to wake up. You take a look at yourself. Look at the way your thoughts have been ruling you, keeping you in bondage to them, how your thoughts have caused you to fear, to be suspicious, to be doubtful, to be apprehensive, to worry, and you begin to do the work. As long as the thoughts keep coming, you have to ask the question, "To whom do they come?" That's how it all begins. Forget about the world. Forget about everything.

I know some of you are saying already, "If I forget about everything, how will it get done?" As I explained to you before, before you were born everything was already laid out, and your body is going to go through the experiences it has to go through, yet it has absolutely nothing to do with you. So forget about that. Deal with the thing at hand. Admit first that your thoughts control you completely, and it's hard for you to get away from them. Then you start to work by inquiring, "To whom do they come?" Whatever thoughts come to you, you pose the same question. It makes no difference whether the thoughts are good or bad.

Some of you are still believing that to pose the question, "To whom does this come?" are only for bad thoughts, or when things are not going your way. On the contrary. All thoughts are erroneous. No matter what kind of happy thoughts come to you, no matter what thoughts come to you that are horrible, you have to ask, "To whom do they come? To whom do they come? They come to me. I feel them. Since I can think about I, I must be separate than my Self, and all of my thoughts are threaded on the I." You therefore follow the I thread to the source, realizing all the time that you are not I. You become the witness to I.

That alone makes you feel wonderful, for you begin to realize that your real nature is freedom. It is I who has the problems. It is I who has the apprehension, the suspicions, the anger, the fears, the frustrations, the needs, the wants, the desires, are all attached to I. It is even I that wishes to become self-realized.

Watch the I. Abide in the I. Just by abiding in the I do thoughts begin to become weaker. When more thoughts come, you inquire again, "To whom do they come?" and you realize they belong to the personal I. At this time, when you're witnessing the I, do not inquire, "Who am I?" but spend the time witnessing the I.

As further thoughts interrupt you, again inquire, "To whom do they come?" Again, "They come to me, to I." Again feel and realize that my real nature is safe and secure. It is I who has the problem. When you come to this realization after a while, you then can inquire, "Who is this I? Who am I?" Remember when you're saying, "Who am I? you're not talking about your real nature, who does not experience problems. You're referring to your personal I, that is separate and apart from you. Where did this I come from? Who gave it birth?

If you do this correctly, everything will come by itself. You will begin to feel and realize your Self. "When I slept, I was not bothered by I. When I dreamt, I was not bothered by I. But now that I woke up, I is born. Who gave it birth?" This kind of inquiry will cause something beautiful to happen to you. You will begin to feel that no one gave the I birth. It never existed to begin with.

I know some of you still believe that consciousness, or the Self, gave the I birth. How can this be? Consciousness, the Self, is all-pervading. It takes up all space. There's no room for anything else. In other words, there cannot be consciousness and you, or consciousness and I, or consciousness and the world, because there's just no room. There never was room for you and I. This will be a new revelation for you. You will awaken, simply by realizing this great truth.

When I say you look for the source of I, the source of I is nothing. It comes from no thing. But you will ask the question, "Then why did it come at all?" And the answer is, it didn't. The I exists like your body exists, like your mind exists, like the world exists, like the universe exists, like God exists. All of that is I. If none of these things exist, neither does the I.

The important point to remember is, when you're playing with the I, do not identify the I with the body or with your Self. Keep the I separate. Realize that your body is attached to the I, the universe is attached to the I, but the I does not exist. Nothing gave it birth. That's why as I opened up the lecture tonight, I said your true nature is nothing. You are plain nothing. You are no thing. No thing, nothing is consciousness, absolute reality, pure awareness. It is Parabrahman, it is beyond Brahman, and you are that. It begins and ends with you.

What do you do with all of your time during the day? There is no such thing as you're too busy to practice self-inquiry. This should come first in your life, because this is your life. Everything else is secondary. If this appears too difficult for you in the beginning, surrender everything to God. Let God take care of everything for you.

(tape break)

Say something like this "God, self-inquiry is too heavy for me right now. I seem to go nowhere with it. But I surrender to you my emotions, my body, my anger, my fears, my frustrations. I surrender the universe, the world. Everything that I believe, I surrender to you. Take it and do as you will with me. I am only a puppet for you. Play with me as you desire," and leave it at that. As you keep on surrendering every day, twice a day, three times a day, just by that alone fear will leave you. Your frustrations will leave you. Your mind will not concentrate on your body. It will become weaker, just by surrendering.

The choice is yours. Do what you must. But remember, to go on playing the game of life will only lead you to more life, more births, more deaths, more frustration and more ignorance. Realize the truth about yourself, and become free.

SD: Can I ask a question? (R: Yes.) Who surrenders? I really don't understand?

R: When you surrender you believe you are the body, the mind. So when you speak about surrendering it is the mind and the body who surrender. (SD: So is that the same as the I that you're trying to get rid of?) You're not practicing self-inquiry. (SD: I understand that but I was just confused about what aspect of a person or whatever you may call it surrenders, does the surrendering?) The body does the surrendering. So you are surrendering your fears, your frustrations, your mind, your ideas. (SD: Your reactions?) Everything. Everything goes, that is surrender. Of course if you're higher on the path you practice self-inquiry. But if you cannot practice self-inquiry surrender will also get you there.

SG: Robert, also Ramana says, "Surrender once and be done with it?"

R: Of course, if you're able to do this. Surrender once and it's all finished. That again is for the mature devotee. Where they give everything up and in the process of giving everything up you're going deeper and deeper and deeper. You're saying, "Take my body, take my mind, take my thoughts, take my fears, take the world, take the universe until there is nothing left and then you're free. That is what Bhagvan meant when he said, "Surrender and be done with it." Give it all away, get rid of it in one shot. You might have to keep surrendering for a year because you have so many things to give up, but keep it up.

SG: So to whom do you surrender?)

R: To your Self, God. (SG: Uh-huh.) When you are surrendering you are surrendering all of the stuff that you think is real. And as long as you believe the body and the stuff to be real then God is also real. So you are surrendering all of this stuff to God and in the process you will come to realize that you are that.

SF: I have a question sir, Indian scriptures says the Self is not known to study the scriptures... (R: Okay what's the question?) ...subtlety of intellect not so much learning but by him who learns one is he known, rarely unto him does the Self reveal his own being. I believe that comes from Indian scripture.

R: That's a great quotation but what's the question? (SF: The question is that Christ said, "Ye have not chosen me, I have chosen you." Is there a connection between this, could you comment on that?) Well that means that you and I are one. That is a very high state. You have not chosen me but I have chosen you because I am you. How could it be any different? (SF: And we're one with Christ?) Excuse me? (SF: We're one with Christ?) We're one with Christ, we're one with eternity, we're one with consciousness... (SF: Sir?) ...we're one with Christ, true! We've always been one with Christ. So when Christ says, "You have not chosen me, I have chosen you," in the ultimate that is true because there is only the Christ. There is only the Self, consciousness, reality. Everything is reality, everything is the Christ. So the Christ cannot help but choose you. For you are the only one. "I and my father are one. If you have seen me you have seen the father." (Biblical quotations) So in truth I have chosen you. There is only the one and I am is that. Do you follow this? (SF: Sir?) Do you follow this? (SF: Yes sir, very well. yes, yes sir.) Good. The Christ as you say is the ultimate reality. The Christ of the universe. So the Christ has chosen everything, everybody. Everything is the Christ.

SG: Isn't the concept of chosen a little bit of an illusion? It's not like chosen anybody?

R: Well for human beings to understand what they're talking about we have to realize that most people cannot comprehend anything else. So you say, "I have chosen you," as if there is an I and a you. The you becomes merged in the I, the ultimate I and they become one. But if the writing said, "I am you and you are me and there is only one," then the masses would not be able to follow and you would not have all these religious organizations. These sayings are to keep everybody dumb-founded so they can go to church.

SJ: Isn't all the wars about who considers who is chosen and who is not chosen?

R: Sure you have the chosen people, you have the heathens, you have all kinds of people with their own ideas and they all kill each other trying to prove they're right. (SJ: It seems like, that we're alone in...) Chosen? (SJ: Yeah. If someone said to someone else, "I've chosen you or him," as if someone deserves it, with me there is an ego feeling of, "Okay I'm special.") Of course, of course. Remember the real meaning of I have chosen you means I am one with you. There is only the one and I am that.

SH: That's the interpretation of it but the wording itself is dualistic?

R: Yes. Again it was purposely made dualistic to keep people in line.

SJ: And made by the court authorities.

R: The great authorities. When you read such a thing as the Bible you have to read between the lines. You cannot take it literally.

SK: Robert when one is consciously free or conscious of being free. To the observer it would seem that karma still is operating for that individual, yet from the individual who has merged into the ultimate reality, do they perceive the karma or do they have no perception of the karma?

R: They have no perception. Again this is why people like Ramana Maharshi, Rama Krishna and others were able to die and laugh because they had no perception of the body. The perception of the body is felt and seen by others but not by a self-realized being.

SH: It doesn't perceive a body at all? (R: No.) It just doesn't exist, period.

R: It doesn't exist. (SH: Far out.) It exists like a shadow. (SH: I can say not even as an appearance?) As a shadow.

SL: It appears, everything appears dense to you, does it not? As you see us we're not transparent shadows?

R: You are not transparent shadows. But I realize like the blackboard and the chalkboard and the images on it, that everything is an image in consciousness. You're just an image. I see it, it appears, but I realize I'm the blackboard or the chalkboard and people are drawing images. The images are superimposed on the chalkboard. You can erase them at any time and draw new images and erase those and draw new images. Yet the blackboard totally never changes. It always remains the same. So the Self is always the Self and all the changes are going on in the Self. The changes in the images are not going on out there, they're going on here.

SL: This is probably really to understand what we really need to do is self-inquiry but when I look at George I can't change my point of view, change my mind about him and I know we see each other as ourselves but still everyone is here as they are.

R: You're speaking of your present state of consciousness. (SL: Yes.) That is how you see it right now. (SL: But can you change the image of us too?) There is nothing to change, it doesn't exist. Everything just is. What would you change it to? There is nothing to change it's a mirage. (SL: I'm through with asking questions. (laughs) It just tapers into silliness, but ah...) (laughs) When you see a mirage in the desert and you go after it, it becomes sand, it doesn't exist. So you're not trying to change the mirage into anything. You just know the truth about it, that it's not real but you still see it. So the Jnani sees the world as a mirage. Everything appears but nothing exists.

SK: There was an article in today's paper about some guy he was saying that life was just a big hologram, it's all just an illusion. And I can understand that but the problem I have with it is that it feels real and I'm wondering when you evolve to a higher level does the feelings go away. I mean is there less of that aspect there?

R: There is no feeling at all in humanity. That feeling is gone. (SK: That seems to be the key thing because I guess if the feeling goes away then I think...because that's where I get fooled.) The thing that is difficult to comprehend is that you are speaking from the viewpoint of the ajnani. (SK: Um-hm.) And you can't really comprehend how the Jnani feels until you have your own experience. This is why I tell most people most of the time, do not believe a word I say but have your own experience. Find out for yourself. For the whole thing is very paradoxical. Your mind will tell you, "How can you feel something and then it doesn't exist at the same time?"

There is no logical answer for this because the Self does not deal in logic. It is beyond logic. You can come over here and you can stab me and the body will appear to die but nothing will happen to me. I will be the same. But to others there will be blood, there will be death, there will be mourning and nothing has happened, how can you explain that? There are no words to explain something like this.

SD: You once compared the way you see the world as watching a movie, that was the best allegory for me because - I'm sure everybody here or at least I did - get totally caught up in the movie and you feel the emotions and you feel like you're there but there is still a you there that can still eat popcorn or who knows it isn't real life and who knows that at the end of it you'll still be going home. I think you just suspend belief for a few minutes.

R: Who does? (students laugh) You're speaking from your point of view. (SD: Yes.) See this is why questions like this is like, what came first, the seed or the tree? the chicken or the egg? There is no human answer. It's beyond that. The only way to find out what a Jnani feels is to become one. That is why it's most important to work on yourself.

SU: Robert I want to thank you for telling us about surrender because up until yesterday I was working with self-inquiry from morning till night. I was really not sure whether I was making headway with it until yesterday when it just hit me like a ton of bricks I just couldn't cope with it. Everything like, every thought I ever had was going around in my head and I couldn't get to self-inquiry, I just couldn't get to it and I thought I'm going to have to drop out, this is too much for me. I want to really thank you again for the surrender aspect to take me through.

R: Let me remind you that when you practice self-inquiry what you're really doing is you're asking all the thoughts from past lives, from this life, to come up. So you can get rid of them. All the samskaras, all the dormant seeds waiting to sprout. When one practices self-inquiry they awaken all this stuff. Sometimes it feels as if your head is going to blow up. (SU: Oh, huge.) Sometimes it makes you feel worse than you ever felt in your life. (SU: That's truth.) And that's a good sign because everything is coming to the surface.

Whereas the average person, they experience a little karma here and there, then a little more. Then they die and they take on another body and they experience more karma. You're only given enough karma that you can handle. But to a person who practices self-inquiry you're asking for it because it all comes up. Therefore when that happens do not be frightened. You can change from one to the other. You can change from self-inquiry to surrender. When your mind is about to blow up with thoughts, you can say, "Okay God take this from me, I give it to you, I can't handle it, it's yours take it," and give it all to God.

SG: Robert is the term, "you have a choice," is that a convention of speech. Is it more a remembering of the Self when those windows appear?

R: It's a convention of speech. We really do not have a choice. Everything is predestined. Yet you have a choice when you decide to turn within. When you decide to practice self-inquiry you have made a choice. And the deeper you go within yourself the greater the transmutation of karma and predestination.

In other words the deeper you go within yourself the greater you overcome your past karma and your destiny. So the choice you really have is whether to be worldly or to turn within. Everything else is preordained.

SH: Turning within would include the position of the witness taking effect?

R: Yes, yes. (pause)

(short silence)

R: Would you like to read the Jnani Mary? (SM: Yes.) Here is the truth about you, your real nature.

(Mary reads "The Confessions Of A Jnani," refer to beginning of this book)

R: Thank you, Mary.

We've got prashad. Prashad is very important. Prashad is the teaching. The whole teaching is contained in prashad. So be sure that you eat something...

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 86

ON THE PATH
(GETTING RID OF NEGATIVE HABITS)

11th August, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. Welcome. I know some of you aspiring Jnanis do not enjoy chanting too much. (laughter) You're making a big mistake. In all of the traditions of the world there has been chanting. The Catholics, the Jews, the Protestants, the Baptists, the Hindus, the Muslims.

Why? If it weren't significant, why would they have it? Well, when you come in here, the world has had you for a week, influencing your behavior. The chanting sort of goes deep into the subjective, calms you down, prepares you for something higher. Even changes your consciousness lifts you up. Chanting is very good. At Ramana ashram they always had two hours of chanting prior to anything else, in the morning and the evening. The same with Ramakrishna ashram. Everywhere.

So, aspiring Jnanis believe only in the word. The word is insignificant. Many of you just come to hear me talk. How do you know I know what I'm talking about? Words are words. Chanting is thousands of years old and has its value.

The main difference between occidental thinking and oriental thinking is this. Occidental thinking accepts everything it sees in the external world as being good and bad. Oriental thinking, to an extent, realizing everything comes from within, does not accept everything they see, or what the senses tell them. They observe it without attachment and without reaction. This oriental thinking has been around for thousands of years. The United States is only 200 years old. You should think about this.

Most people in the west strive to be something outside of themselves. The outside world affects them. They believe what they see. The outside world includes their body and their thoughts. Naturally they believe that they are a body and a thought. They also believe what the world shows them is correct. This is not true. Everything in the world is a result of something inside of you. The whole universe is a manifestation of your thoughts.

No thing exists without your permission. I know this sounds strange to some of you, but it's the truth. The things that you hate and the things that you love in this world are your own projections, your own Self. When a being begins to realize that they are the world, they are the universe, they then become very careful of what they think about, of how they perceive things.

All things in this world are subject to the law of change. No thing ever remains the same. Consequently, if you attach yourself ignorantly to person, place or thing, you're going to suffer, for it must change. When you dislike something or someone external from you, you are truly disliking yourself. For your Self is omnipresent. You are the Self of everything you perceive. How can you dislike anything? It all has to do with you.

Everything is your Self, not some things. If you have a bad temper, if you're ignorant, if you hate, you're doing this to yourself. It behooves you therefore to love everything. Say to yourself, "I do not understand what it's all about." Be honest with yourself. But if I hate that tree outside, I'm hating myself. Why? When you are in deep sleep, does the world exist for you? You cannot say the world exists, because you are in deep sleep. You are as good as dead. The only thing about what you call death and being in deep-sleep, is in deep sleep you wake up again to this world. In death you wake up to another world. That's the only difference between deep sleep and death. So as far as you are concerned you have absolutely nothing to do with this world, when you are in deep sleep. When you drop your body you again have absolutely nothing to do with this world, and you carry on somewhere else.

Find out what you are all about. No things are as it appears.

This is the reason so many people tell me that self-inquiry is sort of hard to do. They can't keep up with it. They can't take it. This is why all of the great Sages have said to you that self-inquiry is only for mature souls. What do they mean? They mean those beings who have transcended to an extent their bad tempers, their ignorance, their obnoxious ways, their belief system. In order to have done that, you would have had to practice in a previous existence various sadhanas, spiritual disciplines. When you've done all that, self-inquiry becomes easy. You love it. It becomes a part of you. But when you still have some of your old habits, they get in the way immediately when you start practicing self-inquiry. Your ego, your mind, the I-thought is very big. It encompasses you and you cannot do atma-vichara. You get bored with it. You say it doesn't work. You say it's too hard. That is because you're filled with yourself. Your ego monopolizes everything.

Just think for a moment, since you woke up this morning, how much you thought about yourself. Doesn't everything concern you, I, me? "I'm getting up, I'm hungry, I want to read the paper, I want to take a walk, I feel hot, I feel cold, I feel this, I feel that, I need this, I need that." Always me, me, me. Always I, I, what I need. Therefore when you try to find the truth about yourself, you're looking to the external world. You're looking to the external world for a teacher, for a teaching, for a book, for a tape, for something to do something to you, something to turn you on. And when that doesn't work you go to drugs, grass, heroin, cocaine, whatever. People are looking for something to make them happy, outside of themselves.

This seems very funny to me, for your nature is happiness. Your true nature is happiness. It has always been that, never anything else. Peace is your true nature. Therefore it is amusing to me how people want to make this world a peaceful world. They want to find happiness in a peaceful world. Such a world does not exist and never will. But you cannot deny that you exist. And because you exist, everything you're looking for is within you. You have to learn to dive deep within and find that truth. But how can you when you're so concerned with the world and your personal ego and yourself? How can you if you're always thinking what other people are doing to you, what you're doing to yourself, what you need, what you have to get. How can you acquire anything else? You cannot. There's too much of you left. The you has to be destroyed. The mind, the personal I, the ego has to be annihilated. Only when that happens will you begin to feel something else.

So what to do? If you cannot practice self-inquiry, you may say to yourself, "I'll never awaken, I will never become self-realized." And then again it's funny to me, because the truth about you is you already are. It's so simple. All you have to do is get rid of yourself. You have to negate everything you think is important, good and bad. You have to stop worrying about yourself. What can possibly happen to you? What's the worst thing that can happen? You can die? Is that bad? What is life? Life is being born, going through experiences, then dying. It's when you drop your body, that the fun begins.

You have to begin to look at your life differently. Who exists? Who's living this life? When I tell you the ultimate truth you will not believe me, and I don't expect you to, because in the ultimate truth, nobody is living this life. What you see, smell, taste, feel and hear does not exist. But before you can come to a conclusion like this, you have to start at the beginning. You have to practice sadhana, spiritual disciplines. And the practice does not begin in trying to change other people to do what you want. The practice begins by looking at yourself and seeing the nasty habits that are within you.

If you have a bad temper, you cannot go through life like that. You have to first admit it to yourself and then ask yourself, "How do I get rid of it?" If you sincerely ask yourself that question, the answer will come. And this is also true of every negative habit you've got. Only you can get rid of it within yourself. Do not try to change your environment, for you'll take your nasty temper with you. When you think you can't get along with people, for no one is abiding in you, and letting you have your way with your nasty temper, and you're always argumentative, and see things wrong everywhere, by believing you're going to move to Tucson, where you'll have peace, is a lie, for you will have to bring yourself with you.

When you first go to Tucson, everything will appear fresh and new. You will meet new people, You will go to a new satsang, you'll find a new teacher, and you'll find a new job, you'll get a new apartment, and you'll say, "Hey, this is great." How long will it last before you're back again where you were before? There is no escape. The only escape is to stay where you are, see yourself for what you really are, and work on yourself to transcend and transmute all of those nasty habits.

How do you do this? When someone asks me for advice of this kind, I'm not a psychiatrist. I'm interested in spiritual life. But I also realize the folly of saying to the person, "Identify with your source. Practice self-inquiry, and you will remove your nasty temper." This is well and good. It can be done this way, but it is not easy for most people. There is a way to get rid of your nasty habits, bad tempers, emotions, whatever, depressions, all those things, and this way is not hard. What you do is you become the witness to your nasty temper, to your obnoxious ways, to your greed, to your selfishness, to your lust and whatever. You observe yourself going through this. In the beginning, I admit, it'll be a little difficult, because when you become violent, when your temper arises, it's difficult for you to observe yourself at that time. But as you begin to observe yourself when you become a little angry, then the observance becomes much greater than your temper, and here is how it works.

You watch yourself going into a rage. You observe yourself going into a rage. You identify with the rage you're going into. You totally identify with your rage. I know you're saying "But Robert, if I identify with my rage, it'll become greater." On the contrary, when you totally identify with your rage, you will see that the rage belongs to the I-thought. You will find that you realize that I am in a rage. I and the rage are the same. But I is not me. I is totally separate than me. And this will make you laugh, for you will realize that you are not the one with the bad temper. I is. Blame it all on I, and observe the I having that attack, that rage attack. As you observe the I, the I also being your bad temper, will begin to diminish. It will become weaker and weaker.

I will repeat this again. Any quality that you want to get rid of, observe it and identify with it. When you're able to look at it, it begins to dissipate. It doesn't like to be looked at.

I'll give you an example. Say you have a friend and you're always getting into an argument. Your friend has a bad temper. Usually when your friend becomes violent like that, you also become violent, and your temper starts and you have a big argument, you get mad at each other until the next time. Nobody won. Then you begin to understand what I told you. So when your friend comes back to you, and you have another violent argument, this time you don't respond. You stare at your friend, that's identifying with the I, and you do not respond.

What do you think will happen? Your friend will wear themselves out, and realizing you do not respond, will become weaker and weaker. Then the next time they see you, they will think twice before they get angry and argumentative, for they know that you're not going to respond. You've become the witness. Either one of two things will happen. Your friend will see you're not responding any longer. So he or she can't get off with arguing with you and will leave, and you'll not see them again. They'll find someone else to fight with. Or they will apologize and still want to be your friend, and change their ways.

You do the same thing with yourself. Say you've been selfish all your life. You and I know many people who have thousands and thousands of dollars in the bank. Yet when it comes to feeding the homeless, helping the poor, doing some thing for somebody, they cry poor mouth.

They don't want to think about all the funds they've got in the bank. They act as if they're going to take it with them. And they have some mistaken belief, "Well, I'll leave this to my children or to my relatives. They lead their miserable lives, because they're afraid to touch their money and live good and help others. And when they finally die, what do you think happens. All the relatives come to fight the will, to get their share of the money. They don't care about you dying. Your children spend it all in three weeks and they're back where they started from, and you're gone.

See you have the wrong outlook on things. What do you do? You witness your selfishness. You witness your greed. You try to understand it. You try to realize why you're like this. The reason you're like this is because you are brought up the wrong way. The wrong beliefs have been imposed up on you, about everything. Most of the things that most of us sitting here today believe in, are all erroneous. 99% of the things that you believe are erroneous, about life, about things, about people. But you work with it the same way. You identify with your greediness, with your selfishness, with your temper, with those emotions. You observe them. You watch them. As you watch them, they will become weaker, and weaker, and weaker, and you will grow.

As you continue to work on yourself this way, the day will come, whether in this life or the next life, where you will be attracted to an Advaita Vedanta teaching, a non-duality teaching. Then when you're told to practice self-inquiry, it will be just the thing you're looking for. It will become a pleasure for you. You've already gone through the Kundalini trips, through the Ashtanga Yoga trips, through mind control trips, through occult power trips, you've gone beyond all that. It was necessary at the time that you learned it, but now you're beginning to understand that all of that is from the mind.

Everything is in the mind, every teaching, everything. Because of your spiritual discipline in this life and past lives, you come to see, "I don't need a teaching. What I need to do is to get rid of my mind." When the mind is gone, then the I am will pervade. The I am will prevail. Then you will become I am. And the I am is not your body or anything special about you. The I am is another word for omnipresence. It is all-pervading. It is the Self, the real Self. You will feel within yourself an expansion. The whole universe will be you.

Of course in your present state you wonder about this, "How can I be the universe?" due to the fact that you're thinking of yourself as a human being. You're thinking of yourself as an entity, as an ego. You have imprisoned yourself to your body, and that's the limit. But now, because of your training and because of your discipline, you begin to feel that you are the universe. And you know that's your mind that is the universe.

So you want to get rid of your mind. And how do you begin? By again seeing your mind is really a bundle of thoughts. Thoughts about the past and worries about the future. That's all your mind really is. It's nothing else. You therefore begin to inquire, "To whom does this mind come?" When you're saying to yourself, "To whom does this mind come?" You also mean, "To whom does this universe come?" What you really mean is where did the universe come from? Where did God, the world, my body, my affairs, my belief system, where did it come from? That's what you mean when you inquire, "To whom does the world come, to whom does the universe come?" And of course the answer will be, "Why, this comes to me. I perceive it. I feel it. I see it." Because of your previous training, it will be easy for you to discern, "Look what I said? I said, "I see it." In other words, it isn't me. It isn't my true self. It is I that perceives the universe, that perceives a God. Who is this I? What is the source of the I? Where did this I that appears to be the universe come from? Who gave it birth? How did it come into existence?" As you keep practicing the answer will come, "No one gave it birth, and it never came into existence." Then there will be a silence, a quietness, and you will feel blissful. You will feel a happiness that you never dreamed existed. It will be so great, that you will immediately transcend your body, or I should say transmute your body, your world and your affairs into bliss.

To other people you'll look the same way you do now, but you will know. You will not give yourself a name and say, "Now I am enlightened," or "Now I am a Jnani," or "Now I am this," or "Now I am that." Those names were given by the people who are not that to the people who are that. The realized person has no name, for they are sat-chit-ananda. They are Brahman, emptiness, all-pervading, never born, always has been, always will be. Those words will not come to you, but the feeling of being will come to you. Pure being. Not being this or being that, but absolute reality, pure awareness. That is the final result.

So let's talk about you. What are you going to do about all this? You hear the words. They hit a nerve in some people, and some people will begin their training within themselves. Others will go to another teacher next Thursday, next Wednesday, and see what that teacher has to offer. Others will read another book and add it to their collection. Others will say, "Teacher so and so is going to be in Hawaii next week. I'm flying out to see them." And this will continue incarnation after incarnation, after incarnation.

Everything you want is within yourself. Your true teacher is the Self. And where else can the Self be except within yourself. You are that. Stop searching. Start doing, and become that.

Feel free to ask any questions.

SK: Robert you said everything is predetermined. Would the discrimination that God gives us, what latitude do we have with that discrimination? How far can we go with it? Like I've made a decision to live the rest of my life listening strictly to my heart chakra and nothing else. Not to argue with my intellect anymore, not to listen to the intellect just to the heart. I feel that I have certain powers of will that God has given me, that gives me the right to choose this path or that path within a certain perimeter. I have a hard time understanding that everything is preordained.

R: As long as you are living a worldly life, as long as the world affects you and you affect the world, everything is predetermined, everything. But as soon as you become humble and you acquire humility, you begin to turn within, instead of thinking, "I am great," and "I can do this," and "I can do that," you would rather feel that you are nothing and surrender everything to God by turning within and offering to God. That is the time when the predetermination becomes weak. But as long as you are living in this world as a worldly person thinking, I am that and this is this and this is this way and that is that way, everything, even the raising of the finger is predetermined. Only when you dive deep within yourself and you surrender your ego, your ambitions, your temper, your emotions, your idea of right and wrong, your God, and you become empty, only then will you become free.

But as long as you react to conditions and to the world you can never be free, it's all predetermined. And you go on life after life after life until you give it up. The ego appears to be very strong. It will tell you you're this or you're that and you're good person and you should become this and you should become that, that is your ego at work. You should smile and say, "No, give it all up to God," become empty. When a vessel is empty you can go to the ocean and ...

(tape break)

... is full of dirty, filthy water you cannot add anything to it. It remains the same. In the same way we have all been impregnated with delusion, with ideas of grandeur, with all kinds of heart beliefs that we are important and have a mission to perform. ("God gave me a mission," like the blues brothers, "I'm on a mission from God.") We all believe this, all that has to go. We have to develop a tremendous humility. We have to look at the bum in the street as being God. We have to look at the worst situation we can ever imagine and look at that as God and in all humility become still and quiet, surrendering completely, everything. At that time you become free and you are no longer under the jurisdiction of karma, until then you are bound to the laws of karma.

SE: To be real clear about what you talk about, what is the relationship between the world we perceive, our bodies, minds and so forth, the I-am and consciousness?

R: The world we perceive is from the ego. Consciousness and I-am are synonymous. Consciousness and I-am is when the ego has been totally transmuted and transcended. What is left is I-am consciousness. They're both the same. I-am consciousness means that you are emptiness. You are nirvana. Everything in the universe came out of you. You're no longer the world, you're no longer the ego, you have expanded and your real nature becomes consciousness without words. You really do not think that I-am consciousness or I-am. You have become that and there are no words to use to describe it. Others will use those words to describe you but for you there are no words. You're totally free.

SE: What do you mean when you say that the world is totally illusory even the illusion doesn't exist? You mean compared with your true nature it's illusory?

R: Compared with yourself, your true nature, the world is illusory. The world only exists because your mind exists but when you are consciousness there is no world. It's like a dream. In the dream everything is going on just like this but you are aware that you're not the dream. You are reality, you are consciousness.

SR: Robert, who is the...I know this is back to a question that keeps coming up and probably I know what the answer is going to be from you but I'll ask it again. Who is the author/creator of the ego that did all of this? I mean if you're acknowledging that there is an ego I that exists and we all seem to share it in this room to some degree, maybe it's academic but where did this come from and why? I think a lot of people ask... (R: I know.) Why? Why have it to start with?

R: Yes. I'm only acknowledging there is an ego for your benefit. An ego never did exist. It doesn't exist now and the only words I can use to make you understand this is the water in the mirage. When you see water in the mirage you say it's water but when you come up closer and you inspect it, there is no water it's a mirage. The same way that the ego and the world looks real. It appears real because we're so bound in the illusion. Yet nobody created it. It never was created. I admit the finite mind can never comprehend this.

How can nothing be created when I see everything with my eyes? It's like hypnosis, you're made to see something that doesn't exist. Why? There is no why because nothing does exist. If it really existed then there would be why. But since it doesn't exist there is no one to say why.

To understand this better you have to dive deep within yourself and you will find that you never existed and you do not exist now. Do not try to analyze it, you'll get nowhere, you'll go crazy. This has been my experience. But of course do not believe me why should you. But do the practice. You have to work on yourself until the question is answered.

SE: How can that which never existed, practice?

R: That which never existed does not practice. But that which believes that it exists practices. So as long as you believe something exists you have to practice until you find out nothing exists and there will be no practice.

SR: Robert I get a clear picture of, once you step through that sort of mirror of illusion then it does become clear because I can see where you would not ask the question because you now see it from a whole new view, but we see it from a different perspective. So you wouldn't ask the question any more but those on the other side of that are sort of trying to extricate themselves from that mirage out there or the idea of the mirage, I guess they're still going to ask you that question over and over and if they, once they understand it then they probably wouldn't come to these satsangs any more or they would move on?

R: Move on where? (laughter) (SR: Oh there is another teacher that talks about the next step up and you got to go there.)

(students laugh and make comments)

SB: Robert, Maya Baba I used to read Maya Baba, and he said that originally God was unconscious of his divinity and he created the whole creation to separate himself into creation and render himself and then going through all the animal kingdom, plant, vegetable, mineral, worm, human being then realizing himself as the occult stuff, like lights and sounds and higher planes, then only to realize that he's the beloved that he's been searching for and then he's conscious he's God.

R: Those are stories for children. (laughter) (SB: But it makes sense.) Of course it makes sense. To whom does it make sense? (SB: To the mind.) Of course. (SB: It makes sense that there is a reason for all this nonsense you know?) Just like "Adam and Eve" makes sense to many Baptists. (SB: Umm.) There has to be a story. If there is no story everybody will be dumbfounded. People will commit suicide. If they found out they never existed, there was no beginning there is no end. (laughter)

SR: Robert, sometime just for fun would you make up a story of the answer to why?

R: There are many stories. (SR: Yeah I know.) Read the Upanishads, read the Old testament, stories are all over the place. Volumes have been written on stories. The Upanishads are about this thick (holds up his hands to show) filled with all kinds of stories. When all you have to say is, "I am that." Who will read it.

SM: Robert, the only thing I can say is that, the idea that, "What does it matter?" it only comes from my mind "What does it matter?" (R: True.) It's only the intellect. (R: Of course, of course.) It really doesn't matter. (R: It doesn't.) It's pretty simple. It just is, freely surrender. Inquiry then surrender.

R: True. As long as these things matter jump within yourself and go deeper and deeper until you find the answer.

ST: Why would suicide be bad if it doesn't exist?

R: Who said suicide is bad? (ST: You said that's why we have stories related to us.) Oh I mean we probably could be ahead of the game. It doesn't matter if you commit suicide. The whole thing is a joke anyway. For there is really nobody to commit suicide. If you do not exist how can you commit suicide? But if you're playing the game you can commit suicide, you can commit hairy carey, you can become the bomber of the pentagon. (laughter)

SB: But if you commit suicide you cut yourself off from the possibility of realizing your divinity right now? (R: Not necessarily.) Then you have to start all over and you might become a worm and have to go all the kingdoms of nature... (SE: ...or a bus driver?) That's probably what I did in my last life and having to be here and have to put up with all you characters. (laughter) The teachings that I have read say that suicide is a great, great sin.

(students joke and laugh)

SB: It's like murder right. You're murdering the body which is not even you, it's like murdering somebody else's body.

R: Well it's not like murder because you're doing it to yourself. (SB: Yeah but you didn't create yourself so it's like murdering yourself...) Then who created you? (SB: Well who ever did. Why do all the spiritual Masters say suicide is a heinous crime?) Ask a spiritual Master. (laughter) (SB: They say that really Robert, spiritual people, realized Masters...) People say all kinds of things. They say so many things people go insane. Say less. Think less. Be yourself and become free.

SE: How does mind give rise to the world? What is the process?

R: Mind that appears to exist thinks about itself. When it thinks about itself the body is formed. When the body is formed it expands into the world and into the universe and God and everything else. So mind began to create everything that you see. If you want to change the condition, you're not going to start chopping the trees down and making this a better world to live in, you get rid of your mind that created everything.

When your mind goes, the mind by the way is another name for the ego, when the mind goes everything else disappears with it because the mind is also the personal I and everything is attached to the personal I. The mind and the I and the ego go, then there is only the Self. So the mind is the culprit for existence.

SE: How is the mind created and sustained?

R: It's not. Nothing created it so nothing sustains it. (SE: Who observes it?) No one. (SE: What's the relationship between consciousness and the mind then?) There is no relationship. (laughter) What we call consciousness is self-contained which means it's omnipresent. It's the only thing that exists. Therefore in pure consciousness there cannot possibly be anything else. There cannot be a mind, or an ego or an I because there is no place for it to be, there is no room. (SE: So it's neither inside nor outside of consciousness?) Right. (SE: It has no existence or validity or sustaining whatsoever?) There is no place for it to have that. That is why you call it the void. Emptiness. Nirvana. There is nothing else. So mind, the I-thought, consciousness, the personal consciousness they're all illusions.

ST: It seems like a constant question, but if I don't have a mind can I balance my check-book? (R: Sure.) What part of me does that? (R: The Self.)

ST: So we don't need our mind, the part that negotiates our way through the world?

R: Your mind is a conglomeration of thoughts, that's all your mind is. So balancing your cheque book is a memory in your mind. Therefore you know how to do that. Yet your body came to this earth for a certain purpose, that's the story and your body will do what it came here to do but it has absolutely nothing to do with you. In other words your cheque book will be balanced whether you have a mind or not because something in you will make it happen.

But if you identify with your mind then you'll be affected by your balance in the cheque book and you will be happy when you have a big balance and you will be miserable when you have nothing. But when you work outside of your mind then you become the observer, you do not react, you become free.

SR: Robert what do you think teachers are talking about when they talk about other loca, again maybe those are fairy tale things, like when you move from this state you move to another loca and on and on...

R: That's part of the story of existence. Of locas like the kundalini, the chackras they're all in your mind. They all come out of your mind. They have no validity of their own. You have to think of them don't you? That shows you they're in your mind. When you are free you have no thoughts about those things. But as long as you believe you exist as a person then when you die you can move to this loca, you can move to the Krishna loca, the Shiva loca all kinds of locas and you can keep localizing for thousands of years.

SH: Having to loco for thousands of years. (laughter) (R: Go loco.) (laughter)

SE: How can you say that this world is unreal, that Ben over there is unreal, that Henry's unreal or the brain isn't real or Ed in unreal or the floor isn't real, how can you say that? (R: It's easy.) You just said it I know. (students laugh)

SL: It's easy for you to say. (laughter)

R: There are no explanations. Explanations confuse you. Again go within yourself. Find out who you are and then you will know what's real and what's not.

SR: Robert it seems that electricity is the building block of all of this illusion?

R: So pull out the plug. (students laugh) (SH: Yeh Bravo!) (laughter)

SB: So that's the mind. (R: Of course) Pull out the mind that's like pulling out the plug. (R: Of course.) Can we use TNT? (R: Whatever you like.)

SU: Robert I don't know how to put this but I have been trying diligently ever since I've come here to practice what you've been telling us and then I got all messed up with the inquiry and you suggested surrender and I've been trying that and all that I can tell you is that I feel worse than I have ever felt in my whole life... (R: That's good!) ...and that I feel that I am dying. I can't breath, I just can't breath, my body is all itchy. I get up at 4 o clock in the morning, I don't know what what wakes me and I'm trying to practice but it goes beyond my ability to do that. Yeah and I just feel like I'm dying?

R: Something is moving and that is wonderful. All of your samskaras, all of your karma. (SU: Wow.) All the stuff you've been holding in for so many years is coming to the surface and you're able to get rid of it at one time. (SU: You get rid of it at one time you say?) With most people it's spread out into thousands of incarnations. (SU: Oh I see.) When you get into a path like this everything is coming to the surface so you can inquire, "To whom does it come?" and it falls out and you get rid of it. Therefore the more karma you've had, the more samskaras you've had the worse you will feel and that's a good sign. That is why people like Jesus said, "I have not come to bring peace, but I have come to set father against mother, son against husband or wife or whatever." (laughter) Peace is not the solution. Get rid of yourself and you will be peaceful.

Do not concern yourself about death or living. Concern yourself with getting rid of yourself. Be the witness, watch. Watch yourself going through all those experiences. (SU: That is what I've been trying to do.) Do not try to change bad for good. Whatever comes, watch it go out. Watch it come to the surface. Smile, observe yourself feeling that way. Pay it no mind, just look.

SU: I watch it but terror like I've never known in my entire life, I've watched it, I watch it and it's true what you say, but I say, "Who is feeling this terror?" and I say, "I." There is a release. There is a relief from it.

R: Sure because every time you say it that's some more stuff is gone out and pretty soon you'll be empty. It may not happen in this life but it doesn't matter. (SU: (laughs) Oh?) What difference does it make? (SU: That is something to look forward too.) Of course because you'll be way ahead of the game. Life doesn't end with your death you continue the process. Which means in your case you will be born to parents who are already on this path and you will start very early. You'll be ahead of the game. There are no losses only gains. But don't pay too much attention to yourself. (SU: Yeah but that's what this stuff does, it makes you pay attention to yourself.) Of course, but catch yourself. Remember to remember not to pay attention.

SH: Can you go backward as well as forward?

R: You can't really go backwards now. (SH: No?) You can take a short vacation that looks like going backward but once you're on a path like this you stay there. You can say for want of other words that you can take three steps forward and one backward that is how it appears to some people. But then you take seven steps forward and two backward. (SH: But those who aren't on any set path, they can certainly go backwards?) They can go back. (SH: With a vengeance?) Oh yes. (SH: In other words we're all saved, huh?) We're all hell bound for heaven. (laughter)

(more comments and laughter)

R: See again don't let this make you cynical. (SU: Right.) When people first get into something like this they say, "Who cares about anybody? Who cares about anything? Nothing exists." If that were true you wouldn't feel that way. You would feel a prevailing love, a compassion, a joy, but if you have an attitude of, "I don't give a damn," you're on the wrong track.

SH: That just strengthens the illusory separate I? (R: Yes.) Makes it look real. (R: Of course.)

SE: Robert was joking a couple of weeks ago when we said we ought to have a flyer that says, "Tired of the good life, join the Jnana Marga society." (students laugh)

SU: Thank you Robert that makes me feel better or I shouldn't feel better, huh? (laughter)

R: Just be your Self.

SH: The worst is yet to come. (SL: Worse is better.) Yeah, worse is better. (laughs)

SB: Robert is there a short cut if you don't want to be reborn? Let's say you're getting older and you don't want to be reborn is there something you can do that will cut through the whole mess?

R: Jump off the bridge. You can just wake up if you want, anytime you're ready. Actually all you really have to do is just wake up. (SB: Wake up to consciousness?) Wake up to your Self, to consciousness. (SB: So it means to practice every moment just to the point of...) You can become intense within yourself and just have a grand awakening. (SB: Release everything to the wind?) Whatever turns you on. (students roar with laughter)

R: For those of you who like to meditate there is nothing more powerful than the "I am" meditation. And most of you should practice this. We'll do it now, so make yourself comfortable. (Robert speaks to someone) You can lie there. You don't have to get up.

Close your eyes to remove obstructions. The first thing you do is relax every muscle in your body. You can start with your toes and tell your toes to relax, your feet to relax, ankles relax, calves relax, knees relax, thighs relax, hips relax, abdominals relax, back relax, hands relax, forearms relax, upper arms relax, shoulders relax, neck, back of my head relax, top of my head, forehead, face, eyes, mouth, nose relax. You say to yourself something like this. My entire body is now relaxed and comfortable. Nothing is disturbing me, nothing is bothering me.

Now you become the witness to your breathing, to your respiration. You practice a sort of vipassana meditation. You observe your feelings, your breath. You do not react to it or try to change it. You simply observe. You witness and you feel yourself relaxing deeper and deeper. If your mind begins to wander away bring it back peacefully when you catch yourself.

You ask yourself the question, "Who is the witness? Who is the observer to my breath, to my feelings?" and the answer comes, "I am," this is the meditation part. With your respiration, you inhale to yourself, you say, "I," you exhale you say, "am," breath naturally and normally. Inhale say, "I," exhale say, "am." This is very powerful.

(long silence to tape ending) [TOC]

Transcript 87

ADVAITA VEDANTA

18th August, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It's fun being with you again.

You all strike me as very funny, because you believe you are the body, you believe you are your mind, you believe you're your experiences. No matter how many times I tell you you're nothing, you won't believe me. You want to be something. Why won't you be nothing? It's fun being nothing. When you're nothing there's no world, there's no God to pray to, there are no others who can do anything to you, there's no death, there's no re-birth. There's just nothing. Yet the nothing is everything. Be nothing. You'll love being nothing.

You don't believe me, do you? You think you have to be something. What a group. You think you're personal, you're an ego. You're always wrapped up in me, me, me, me, me. True? You're always thinking about yourself. I need this. I want that. This is wrong. This is right. There's always something.

Nothing is the way it appears. No thing that exists is as it appears. Whether it's the world, or the universe, or other people, other situations, conditions, no thing is the way it appears. And as long as you identify with the things that appear, and are not real, you suffer accordingly. Anything that you think about, anything that your senses tell you is real, is only an appearance. If it's only an appearance, there's absolutely nothing wrong. If it were a real entity, if the world were real, if the universe were real, you would have something to worry about, for everything is subject to the law of change. Everything changes constantly. You become frustrated, you become confused, you become con-founded when you have faith in the world, because the world's always changing. It tells you something one day, the next day it tells you something else.

Even science agrees with this. Science tells us that everything is composed of atoms and energy. And when the atoms spin at a certain rate of speed, this determines what the object is. Science tells us that our eyes see a reflection of light, and the reflection of light causes the image to appear before us, as a tree, as a person, as a mountain, as an ocean, as the moon. In other words, science is beginning to see that no thing exists the way it appears to exist. It only exists because you exist. If you weren't around to see it, there would be no existence. It is only because you are around and awake, so-to-speak, you awaken the ego, that things appear as they appear to you. Yet no thing appears the way it looks.

They say that the sun, millions of years ago, exploded and caused our planets to be the way they are today, and everything is evolving. The big bang theory. That's all well and good. But where does the sun come from? They say that there is a central sun. All of the galaxies in the universe revolve around the central sun, and it takes 24,000 years for a galaxy to revolve around that central sun. The closer the galaxy gets to the sun, the more evolved the planet becomes. The farther away the galaxy goes from the sun, the greater the dark ages on that planet. They say it takes approximately 12,000 years to go as close to the central sun as you're going to get, and 12,000 years to pull away from it. In other words the planet is 12,000 years in the dark ages, coming out of it, and 12,000 years in the golden age, going back to the dark ages. That's what they say.

Where did the central sun come from? Who gave it birth? Since the beginning of time there have been individuals who have pondered this question. Where did it all come from? Where did creation come from? Out of what did it evolve? Great Rishis in India, great seers in Japan, in Egypt, thousands of years ago sat beneath trees pondering these questions. If God created everything, where did the God come from? Who created the God? There is always a something and a somebody that appears to be responsible for this creation.

So these olden day Rishis, seers, pondered these questions, and something very interesting happened. As they pondered externally the cause of creation, all of a sudden they found themselves becoming introverted. They began to look within themselves. They began to realize "I am," and inadvertently they posed the question "Who am I? Who am I?" without knowing what they were doing. They didn't even voice it verbally. They just felt it "Who am I?"

And as they did this sincerely, religiously, day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year, something happened. And it came to them "I am that." They were amazed. Remember, these great thinkers from the past did not know each other. They did this independently, in Egypt, in Africa, in India, Japan. They all came up with the same answer "I am that."

In other words, there is no external world. There is no thing but mind. And because there is mind, there is a universe. Therefore I am the creator of the universe. Everything exists, because the mind exists. And they believed they were the mind. They came a long way, for they now realized that everything was an emanation of the mind. When they had this revelation, they didn't stop there. They pondered "What is mind? Where did mind come from? If my mind is the cause of creation," they pondered "where did the mind come from?"

Again they pondered this for days, weeks, months, years, until again something happened. This time they realized that mind is the cause of the relative world, and the relative world is false. So the mind that I think is important must also be false. In other words, there is no mind. If there's no mind then who am I? It took a long time to discover that they were mind, and everything came from the mind. Now they were realizing that they are not mind. They inquired "Then who am I? Who am I?" and they abided in themselves. They became the selves.

They lost track of the body, the universe, the mind. They were not in a state of samadhi, because they were awake. During their awakened state, they became nothing. There was no mind. There was no universe. There was no God. There was no body. There were no others. There was just absolute nothingness. And they realized this is the Self. Not myself, but the Self. And they were absorbed in the silence.

From that moment on the world still appeared to them, but they were able to see right through it. All pain disappeared, worry, fear, desire. It all disappeared. It was transmuted. Now these ancient Rishis were unable to share this with devotees or disciples because it's a personal experience. Since it's beyond words, it's beyond mind and beyond thoughts, how can one actually share this? Therefore these ancient Rishis became silence. They never spoke. Yet there was such power emanating from them, that if the right devotees came to them and just sat with them, doing nothing, saying nothing, wanting nothing, desiring nothing, they too achieved the same results. It was amazing. This technique was passed down through the ages. It was commonly called Advaita Vedanta or Jnana, and it is still the supreme truth.

Now let's talk about you. As long as you want to become enlightened you are making a grave mistake, for there is no one to become enlightened. As long as you want to end your problems, and change your problems from bad to good, you're making a grave mistake, for there are no problems. As long as you think there's something wrong or there's something right, or right overcomes wrong, and we have to try to correct the condition or situation, you're making a grave mistake. You see, whatever has to happen has already happened.

There's nothing you have to do, yet your body will do. Your body has absolutely nothing to do with spirituality. In other words, the relative world, the material world that you're involved in, good or bad, rich or poor, healthy or sick, happy or sad, that world has absolutely nothing to do with spirituality. That material world doesn't even exist. Only consciousness exists. Even though I tell you all of the time, do not be concerned over your affairs, for right actions will always take place. By right actions I mean the dharma, that which is supposed to happen.

Some of you will still feed the homeless. You'll still have your jobs. You'll still do what you're doing, but it will not be you. You'll be aware that you are not that. You are consciousness. You are absolute reality. Yet, unlike yoga practices, you have to have the experience for yourself. And when you have the experience for yourself, you cannot prove or show anybody anything.

As an example, a person says they are going to practice Hatha Yoga. The result of Hatha Yoga is really to bend themselves into a pretzel, and do all kinds of pranayama breathing exercises, hold their breath for an hour, be buried alive for four days and live. All these siddhis and all these powers can be developed when you practice Hatha Yoga and Raja Yoga and Kundalini Yoga. But this has nothing to do with the Self. It has nothing to do with consciousness. The one who achieves mastership in all of these yogas still has problems. They still go through mental anguish. They have likes and dislikes. They have bad tempers. They have fears. They are still human even though they have developed these siddhis, powers, and can do extraordinary things.

All of these things have absolutely nothing to do with self-realization, with moksha, with liberation. That's why, as an individual, you have to make up your mind what you want out of life. All of you have attended various meetings in your life time. You're seeing various teachers. You've read many books. What do you want? Do you want to become ultimately free or do you want to develop different characteristics, powers? Do you want name and fame? You can achieve these things, but it will not free you.

Now why do you want to become free? To be totally liberated means you're no longer part of the cycle of birth and death. You no longer have a body, but you are conscious. You no longer have a mind that thinks all the time. You're totally free and radiantly happy. You always find yourself in the right place wherever you are. There's no place for you that's better than another place. You're free. You're liberated. You have eternal happiness, joy. You're no longer concerned about what your body is doing, for you are aware that you have no body. Even though you can see it yourself and you see other bodies, you are sure, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that there are no bodies.

This is a hard one to explain and a hard one to understand, for how can you not be the body when you see the body? Yet that's exactly what's happening. You have transcended and transmuted existence. What is beyond that cannot be comprehended by the finite mind. There are no words to describe it. So we say it's the blissful state. Yet most of us cannot understand what the blissful state is, because we haven't experienced it.

It's like trying to describe the taste of ice cream to a person who has never tasted it. No matter what you say it doesn't come out right, until the person tastes the ice cream himself. Therefore you have to experience this for yourself. And it can be experienced.

The first thing to realize is that it can only be experienced when your mind has become silent. When your mind has become silent it means your mind has been destroyed, because the mind is only a bundle of thoughts. When there is no mind, there is emptiness. That emptiness is silence, and that silence is consciousness. How do I make my mind silence? How do I silence my mind? By inquiring "Who am I?" or "Where does the mind come from? How did the mind originally appear?" In other words you must inquire into yourself.

There is absolutely no thing you can do externally. This is the reason it's not for everyone. Most yogas, all yogas, all spiritual teachings beside Advaita Vedanta are external. They're something you do externally. Yet in this teaching, you dive deeply within to discover your Self. You're not looking to develop anything. You're not looking to add anything on to yourself. You do the reverse. You remove everything you've ever known from your life, mentally. Everything you believe in, all of your preconceived ideas, all of your dogmas, everything you believe in has to be dismissed. Hardly anyone is ready to do this.

Think of all the things in your life you have to give up. I don't mean you have to give them up physically. You have to give them up mentally. You have to let go. Everything has to go. Everything that has been brainwashed into your head since you were born, has to be reversed. This is the only way you're going to get there. There is no other way. You have to reverse yourself, and not identify with person, place or thing, but with the Self, with consciousness. And again this is done through inquiring. Whenever an object enters your mind, you have to inquire "To whom does it come?" You have to question everything. You no longer accept anything at face value. And yet, as you do this, your life style will not change much, for your body will continue it's work. As you begin to understand and feel and experience that you are not your body, your body will still continue the work it came here to do. But you no longer think about it. You rather ask yourself "Who is the thinker?" and of course you always come back to "I am. I think about these things."

Slowly but surely you begin to realize you are not the I, you are not the I that thinks. "If I am not the I who thinks, then who am I?" and you wind up in the silence. There is no answer. Do not say to yourself "I am consciousness," or "I am absolute reality," for if you really are that, there would be no one to make the statement. When I make these statements to you, I am merely voicing, so you can hear what's going on. You have to get to the point where you become that, not where you voice It. And, again, the easiest way to do that is by negating everything else. Whatever comes into your mind, you simply question. You don't accept it at face value.

Say for instance you are an angry person, you've got a short fuse and people make you angry, conditions make you angry. Now instead of reacting immediately to the condition as you usually do, you question yourself "To whom does this anger come?" and you wait. You do not say "it comes to me," until it happens by itself. In other words, this procedure does not need any help from you. It will come "The anger comes to me. I feel angry," but don't just say it mechanically. Wait till it comes. You ask "To whom does the anger come?" and you become still. Sometimes, if you're advanced enough, nothing else will come for a great while. You'll remain in the silence and bliss. But sometimes the answer will come immediately "The anger comes to me." Then you ask "Who am I?" and you keep silent again.

You see the way it's done? It is not done mechanically. You allow the Self to take care of everything. You watch. You become as quiet as you can. You no longer get involved with the world too much. You observe, by becoming the witness, but you do not react.

(end) [TOC]

DO NOT MEDITATE ON THE I-THOUGHT!

25th August, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. I welcome you with all my heart. It's good being with you again this beautiful Sunday, 1991 A.D.

Ask yourself, "What is your reason for coming? What do you expect? What do you want? Do you want to listen to what I have to say?" Did you come to listen to a lecture? Did you come to observe the speakers so you can compare him with other teachers? What is the real reason for you coming here?

The reasons I just mentioned are the wrong reasons. What is the right reason? There isn't any right reason. Everything just is. When you try to analyze your reason for doing something you are negating your reason for existence. You were meant to exist spontaneously. To just be.

It's interesting how your body can do everything it's supposed to do with out your help. You are in your right place you know. Going through those experiences that you need to go through at this time. There is no use complaining. There is no use talking about it. There is no use criticizing yourself or anyone else. There is no use in finding fault. Everything is in it's right place. There are no mistakes.

Even if there appears to be something wrong in your life emotionally, physically, financially, mentally. Never judge these things. Never come to any conclusions. Live in the moment, just be. Do not be this or that, just be. When you try to be this or that you spoil it. You are unique just the way you are. You are special. You are what you are because of where you have put yourself and there is no other reason. Drop all of your preconceived ideas. Drop all your dogmas, your superstitions, your analyzations. Everything has to go, you have to become totally empty.

This is satsang it is not a lecture. It is not a sermon, it is not a talk. Satsang is very different than the things we're used to in the west. Sat means knowledge or being. Sang means in the company. You're in the company of being or in the company of knowledge. Who's knowledge? Who's being? Yours. You are in the company of your highest being. Your highest Self.

It's as if you were in the ocean. You are immersed in the ocean. You and the ocean are one. So it is with satsang. In other words you did not come to acquire knowledge or being. You are knowledge and you are being. This is your true nature, this is satsang. You are in the presence of your own divinity. In your own divinity there are no mistakes, there is no lack, there is no limitation of any kind.

Some of you people have been meditating a long time. You have come from different groups and you have learnt many meditation techniques. Some of you tell me that you meditate on the I-thought. This is erroneous. Meditation and self-inquiry are different like night and day. Self-inquiry is not meditation.

When you meditate on the I-thought it is like meditating on your disease or meditating on your body because the I-thought is the culprit that is responsible for your world and everything that is in it. It's a lie. You do not meditate on the I-thought. The I-thought doesn't exist.

In self-inquiry you hold on to the I-thought. You follow the I-thought, you abide in the I-thought. You follow it to its source which is God or the Self. Thus discovering that you are the Self and there is no I-thought. But from talking to some of you on the phone, you are living the I-thought. You believe you've got to think about the I-thought all of the time. You do not hold onto the I-thought. You only hold on to it to the extent that you follow it back to the heart centre, the spiritual heart which is on the right side of your chest. That is the only reason you abide in the I-thought.

When you meditate there has to be a subject and an object. Meditation is duality. For you are the subject meditating on an object. You therefore choose your object of meditation. Can be Buddha, Jesus, Moses, Mohammed, Rama Krishna, Ramana Maharshi any deity that you choose. Or it can be a flower or a tree or a rock or a river. You see meditation is to increase your concentration. To make you one pointed so that your thoughts may stop and the object of your meditation becomes real.

Rama Krishna used to meditate on the Goddess Kali, twenty four hours a day until she became real to him. Meditation is all good and well, it has its place and it's very helpful. But meditation is not self-inquiry. Try to remember that they're two separate things. Self-inquiry is negating the whole universe until only the Self remains.

You start it early in the morning as soon as you open your eyes. You observe yourself becoming worldly. And you realize that just a few moments ago you were not cognizant of the world at all. Where were you? And in the space in between sleeping and awakening you had an abounding peace. Think about that. In that space as soon as you opened your eyes before you became cognizant of the world there is a tremendous peace and joy. It only lasts for a few seconds.

The reason it only lasts for a few seconds is because the I takes you over. The I-thought begins to rise from your heart centre and as it begins to rise you become more and more aware of your body, your affairs and your world. It finally rises to the brain at that time you say, "I am late for work. I have to get dressed. I feel sick. I need a cup of coffee. I have a headache," and the I becomes very active.

Now the secret of self-inquiry is to find out where the I came from. Who gave birth to the I? Where did it come from? The only way you can find out is by following it back to its source. Therefore you inquire, "To whom does the I come?" or "Who am I?" the same thing. "To whom does the I come?" Think about that.

When you were asleep there was no I. You were not aware of an I. You were in deep sleep. When you were dreaming you were in a completely different world. You were aware of the I in your dream because you say, "I dreamt." And now that you are awake you say, "I am awake." It would be more proper to say, "I is awake."

We're talking about the I-thought, we're not talking about the I as consciousness. We're talking about the I-thought. You see that I-thought does not exist and the only way you're going to find out that it does not exist is by following it back to its source.

The question you ask is, "Then why does it persist? If it does not exist why does it haunt me? Why am I always saying, "I am this and I am that, I need this and I need that." Part of the awakening process is when you compare the I-thought to the water in a mirage. The water in a mirage seems very real to you and if you don't know anything about a mirage you would believe that the water is real. So when you don't know anything about your reality you believe your body, your mind, your affairs and so-called life, is real. But if it's real how come it changes all the time?

What is the definition of something being real? Something that exists the same way forever. Does your body exist the same way forever? You're are not the same person you were ten years ago or twenty years ago or thirty years ago. When you were first conceived you were no bigger than the size of a pinhead and look what came out of the pinhead. So when somebody calls you a pinhead don't feel insulted. Your arms, your legs, your arms, your hair all came out of this pinhead. You were born in order to die. For as soon as you're born you begin to die. You begin to grow older and older and older and your reason for being born is to die. Sounds strange but true.

Therefore your body cannot be real. For it was born to die and it changes constantly. It's never the same. How can you therefore hold on to your body as if it were real? And abide in your body and think of your body night and day and be concerned with your body and waste your time dressing the body continuously in fine clothes, bathing it three times a day, feeding it all kinds of exquisite foods. Doing all of these things to your body is like beating a dead horse. Whatever you do you're going to become weak in the end and die, whatever you do there is no escape from that.

Arnold Schwarzenegger likes his body. What will he think about his body fifty years from now? When he's weak and decrepit and he can't walk, these people become very delusioned, very upset with themselves. Somebody was telling me that Jack Lalanne refuses to come out of his house. He takes tranquilizers and he can't believe that he can't pull boats anymore and do all of those feats he used to do. In other words he's running away.

Isn't this the truth about all of us? So what are you doing with your life? What are you chasing? What are you trying to acquire? What are you trying to do for yourself to improve your life as a body? It's all a waste of time. You should devote about 5% of your life to your body. That's all it's worth.

The wise person somehow begins to understand this and they ask themselves the question, "Then what is reality? It is true my body is not real because it changes, changes, changes. The world is not real because it also changes, changes, changes. Everything changes constantly. Therefore what is real?" Asking yourself this question is the beginning of wisdom. For it leads to other questions. "Who am I then? If I am not the body then who am I?"

One day you begin to catch on and you say to yourself, "I asked myself who am I?" emphasizing the I, "What is this I that tells me I am human, that I am the body, that I am alive?" You begin to feel the I in your chest and in your brain. Something happens within yourself, where you begin to see that you are conscious. You are conscious during the dream state, during the deep sleep state, during the waking state.

Therefore you begin to understand that you are consciousness. Consciousness is absolute reality, pure awareness, or you can call it God. When I refer to God I am not speaking of anthropomorphic deity, I am referring to absolute reality, to Brahman, pure intelligence.

You begin to feel an inkling of this truth inside of you. When this happens to you, you will be attracted to the right book or to the right teacher or to the right environment. Where you can go further on the path.

Now in the beginning it's very exciting because you've discovered something new. You have begun searching for yourself. But it seems to me unless you have a proper teacher the initial stage wears off and after a year or so, you've read all the books, you've heard all the lectures, you've seen many teachers and you're becoming bored.

This is the time that a spiritual aspirant either goes through the friction with flying colors and gets to the other side or gives up the whole thing, becoming disgusted because they have not received illumination as yet. They have not awakened. Therefore this is the time to do the most work on yourself. This is the time to forget about your wanting realization, wanting something to happen, wanting to become free and begin to live in the moment spontaneously. Not concerning yourself with the world, with others but developing compassion. You begin to work on your greed, on your lust. Those things must go.

You begin to tolerate everything just the way it is. There is no longer anything to fight and there is no longer anything to fear. You become mellow. Things that used to disturb you have stopped disturbing you and then all of a sudden you notice your mind becomes quieter and quieter. The thoughts stop attacking you to an extent. You practice meditation and self-inquiry both together. Wanting nothing looking for nothing.

You've stopped running around the world you have settled down, for you realize wherever you go you've got to take yourself. One place is as good as another. It makes no difference where that place is. You become calm, no longer perturbed. You become the observer, the witness to your thoughts, your feelings, your emotions, your reactions. You're always watching, you're always aware, you always see yourself in action and you always ask, "Why am I doing this? Why am I acting this way? What do I really want?" You realize you have so much time to live in this body and you become more and more involved in spiritual life.

When you practice meditation you focus your attention either on a living Sage, which will bring you faster results or you can focus on a Sage of your religion that has gone. Which will improve your concentration and make you more one pointed.

When I tell you to meditate on God many people ask me, "How do I meditate on God? God is invisible." Therefore you meditate on the first name of God which is the "I-am." This is really the highest form of meditation. With your respiration you become quiet and you inhale and say "I," you exhale and you say, "am." This is really the highest form of meditation you can do. And during your waking hours when you're busy, busy, busy you practice self-inquiry.

You can do this formally also. If you wish to sit in the silence and practice self-inquiry by all means you do that too. But do not believe that that's meditation, they're both separate. And it's simple to practice self-inquiry wherever you are. In back of your mind you realize that you're trying to destroy your thoughts. You're trying to empty your mind and then your mind will disappear.

So whenever thoughts come to you, you simply ask, "To whom do they come?" You can do this anywhere. "To whom do these thoughts come?" You never answer. But the answer always comes by itself, "These thoughts come to me. I feel them. I think them." We're back to the I again. So this means if it weren't for the I, I would not feel the depression. I would not feel the doubt, the apprehension, the fear or whatever because I feel it.

This is a wonderful revelation for me. For it means if I can only get rid of the I, I will not have this problem again. And the way you get rid of this I is to inquire, "From whence did it arise? Where did it come from?" As you think about this you become silent. Almost immediately you will feel a joy a peace. A feeling of well being welling up inside of you. You watch, you observe.

Thoughts will come to you from all over the place. They will tell you, "Stop wasting your time. Go bowling." They will tell you, "This is boring, I could be doing something constructive." Your thoughts will pop up and tell you all kinds of things. They will tell you, "I've been doing this thing for a while and nothing is happening." That's all the game of the mind. You have to work it through. Whatever thought comes to you, you ask, "To whom does it come?" Over and over again. When you get tired of doing this you meditate on "I Am."

You always do something. You take your mind off the world, off your body and off your thoughts. For after all if you do not do this where will you be? You will be going through the same experiences that millions of other people go through. Fear of the unknown. Never knowing if you're going to have a heart attack tomorrow. Whether you'll be still be in this world. Fear that somebody is after you trying to take away your good things or trying to hurt you. You will have all kinds of fears. The choice is yours. This is your life.

Let us practice the "I Am" meditation. For when you practice it at satsang it becomes more powerful for you and you notice results.

The first thing you do is you make yourself comfortable. You relax in your chair. You close your eyes to remove obstructions. You begin to observe your breath. Do not emphasize your breath. You observe your breath. If your body does not feel comfortable or relaxed tell it to relax. You may work your way up from your toes to your head telling every part of your body to relax. Again you become cognizant of your breath, the way you breath normally. Your feelings, you become aware of them. You become the witness. You are observing yourself breathing and feeling.

Then you ask yourself the question, "Who is the observer? Who is doing the observing?" And with your respiration you begin the meditation. You inhale and you say "I" you exhale and you say "am." Then rest in the silence a moment or so and say "I Am" again with your respiration. After a long practice the space between the "I Am" will become greater and greater. And you will begin to feel that you are consciousness. So practice "I Am."

(long silence)

Feel free to ask any questions. Long talk hey?

SU: Okay Robert I hesitate to bring this out in the open but it's there so, I have been overcome with the greed of food, memories come back of the most marvelous meals I've ever eaten in my life and all I want to do is eat. It's in my mind I don't do it but it's in my mind pressing there. And I notice when I go to a restaurant it's not only my own food but I look around at what everybody else is eating and I want it all! And it's uncomfortable, really uncomfortable.

R: You're not alone. (laughter)

SH: We all want it all. (laughs)

R: Well these things do come up. When you begin the process of self-inquiry... (tape break) ...it's like dormant seeds ready to sprout. Things from a past life. You're bringing everything up to the surface. So you can get rid of it. This is why with many people things sometimes appear to get progressively worse because everything is coming to the surface. You're inquiring, "To whom does it come?" So it's coming up and out, up and out.

Therefore when these things come to you like that, feelings, lust, greed do not be disturbed. But joyfully observe it. Observe yourself feeling this way. Watch it, look at it intelligently and you may ask, "To whom does it come?" But as you observe it, as you inquire, "To whom does it come?" The feeling becomes weaker and weaker and weaker and weaker and it will ultimately disappear completely.

All these things do happen, but realize they are not you. Those thoughts, those feelings do not belong to you. They belong to I. You say, "I feel this." When you inquire "Who am I? What is the source of I?" The greed, the lust, the feelings will go with it and they will all dissipate and leave you forever. You just have to keep up the practice. Do not allow these fears or these so called things that come to you to frighten you or to make you feel something is wrong. Merely realize they come from the deep recesses from your mind and you're getting rid of them.

It's like when you shoot the ducks at the shooting gallery. The ducks are all flat on the floor and then they pop up and you hit one and it goes down again. The same thing with your thoughts. As the thoughts come you shoot them with your gun of inquiry, "To whom do they come?" And the thoughts falls dead and goes away. Then another one comes up and you ask, "To whom do these come? What is it's source?" And it falls dead and goes away. You keep this up. As you keep doing this you will find one day that your mind is free and you feel bliss and happiness and joy that you never felt before.

ST: Muktananda taught that the body is the temple and to distract it and take care of it, how do you feel about that?

R: The body is a temple. It's a temple that gets old and decrepit and no matter how much care you take of it, it's going to get old and get decrepit. Just like a temple. You should take care of it but not to give it your whole life. I get up about six o'clock in the morning, I do exercise, I go for walks in the park, I make myself a drink and put hundreds of vitamins in it and by 7-8 o'clock I'm all finished, that's it. That is the only attention I give my body to keep it going.

In reality the body does not exist. So if you spend too much time with it, you're putting your attention on something that is going to go anyway. If you put your attention on the Self, on absolute reality, on "I Am," on consciousness then you will become consciousness and not become a body. But sure it tells you that the body is the temple. It is a temple but must also be destroyed as a temple will be destroyed. No thing lasts forever. When you're a hundred years old and you can't walk and you have to be taken care of what will you say about your temple then? So before you get like that, find the truth about yourself and become free and liberated.

SB: The I-thought seems to act like it knows everything. It knows who I am. It's familiar with all these people and it wants this and it wants that but when I inquire and slowly start to see that the I-thought is just illusion it seems to be like abiding in ignorance like, I don't know what anything is. Like divine ignorance. There seems to be a place of not a knower when the I goes.

R: This is a good place to be. When you no longer think, "I know." I know is a statement of ignorance for as Bob says, "We do not know anything." We don't know why we look like we do. We don't know why a tree is a tree or why a dog is a dog. We don't know why we were born, why we die. We don't even know who we are. We know nothing. Therefore when somebody appears intelligent, they think they know something that is a joke because noone really knows anything. We're born into a world where things just appear to exist and we take them for granted. Why is a dog a dog? We give it a name dog. Why do we have men and women? To propagate the race, why? We know absolutely nothing. Therefore it is real funny to me when people walk around thinking they know something.

Now the interesting thing is when you begin to admit to yourself that you know nothing you become nothing and then you're everything. But as long as you believe you know something that of course is ego and always gets you in trouble. Because when you believe you know something humanity always wants to change to something, into something else. Wars begin, man's inhumanity begins, man's inhumanity to man. But when you feel you know nothing then there is nothing to do. There is no one to be angry at. There is no thing you wish to change. You leave everything alone. You do not try to convince anyone about anything and you become free. So a free person is really a person that is good for nothing.

SH: So much for being free?

R: But he is nothing that's why he's free. (SH: But he's good for that, for being nothing?) Free and nothing is synonymous. (SH: Well, that sounds good to me.) And when you're good for nothing you're free. But if you think you're free and you're good for something then you're deluding yourself. Be good for nothing you'll like it.

I know some of you are wondering to yourselves if everyone was good for nothing what would become of the world? Do not concern yourself with the world. The same power that knows how to grow mangoes on a mango tree, wheat in the field, cherries on a cherry tree, that knows how to maintain and sustain the universe as it appears will always take care of everything, even you, you have absolutely nothing to worry about.

I realize also that you have been brought up to believe if you do not make something out of yourself, if you do not take care of your affairs you will suffer. This is a blatant lie. No one was born to suffer. If you allow yourself to be the natural person you are everything will always be provided and you will be radiantly happy. But when you interfere in the process and try to change things, become somebody, do something, you may appear to go through those processes but it's not happy. There is no joy. There is no real beauty, it's all mechanical.

(short silence)

Well we've got prashad to share with everybody.

(Opens up prashad)

This is a gift from the Self. You'll never starve if you come here. Mmm, these look good, why don't you open this?

(prashad continues with general conversation)

(tape ends) [TOC]

*Note: Audio file had a date of 910829, but is the same as the transcript dated 910825. Audio date has been used.

THE PRACTICE OF SELF-INQUIRY

29th August, 1991

Robert: Oh this beautiful Thursday evening, whatever the date is. Most of you know Dana. She's in the hospital. It would be nice for people who know her to give her a call. Maybe send her some flowers.

When I say, "All is well, and everything is unfolding as it should," most of you begin to think about your personal problems, collective problems of the world. This is exactly what you should not do. As we go through the vicissitudes of life, we find we go through much friction. This is normal. There is absolutely nothing wrong. Most of us have been brought up to believe certain things are wrong. This may appear true in the relative world, but as far as the spiritual world is concerned, all is well and everything is unfolding as it should.

Whatever you believe is wrong with your life or with someone else's life, there's nothing but an unfoldment in consciousness, and it's necessary for your evolution. If you understand this, you will not react to whatever happens. You will simply smile, observe, and become the witness through each situation that comes into your life as you unfold. There is nothing in the universe that can hurt you. The substratum of this universe is divine love. It is pure consciousness. It does not know the meaning of hurt or evil or sin. Those are just words that human beings make up.

When you begin to identify with your real nature, which is love, then you sail through all the so-called calamities of life. But if you identify with the world of appearances, and as you know there are many appearances, you seem to suffer. You become angry, you become upset, you become disillusioned only because the world is not turning your way. Only because the world is not turning the way you think it should, according to your concepts, according to your preconceived ideas. Again, there is nothing wrong. Everything is right just the way it is. As you begin to understand this, you find peace.

What do you really want out of life? As most of you know, when you achieve your goals, it doesn't turn out to be the thing you hoped it would. As long as you're looking for something, you will always be disappointed. When wisdom starts to come to you, you stop searching. You stop needing, you stop wanting. You leave it alone. You live in the moment, spontaneously. And then everything unfolds where it's supposed to.

There is the story of a prime minister of a great country who used to go to a teacher in the forest and all the teacher would say to him is, "All is well and unfolding as it should." This was the entire teaching. Then there would be silence. The prime minister of the country went to this teacher for five years. He didn't understand what was going on, but he had faith in the teacher and in God and in himself. So he just kept repeating "All is well and unfolding as it should."

One day he became totally immersed in consciousness. He lost the body-mind idea, transcended the I-thought and became absolutely free, became radiantly happy, inner joy, inner bliss. One day the head chef of the palace caught his wife with one of the cooks making love in the kitchen and he became angry, he became upset. He wanted to kill her, but before he did anything, he went to the prime minister and he said, "Prime minister, what can you do to help me? I caught my wife with another man. I want to kill her. What should I do?" And the prime minister said, "Don't worry. All is well and unfolding as it should." And the chef got upset. He got mad and went away, saying to himself, "How can he tell me that? I asked him for help and all he told me was, All is well."

Now it happened that the chief of the guards of the palace was due a promotion. And somebody else got promoted in his place. And he became upset. And he decided to see the prime minister to ask his advice. He told the prime minister what happened and the prime minister just smiled and he said, "Don't worry. All is well and unfolding as it should." And the chief of the guards said, "What?" And he went away angry, mumbling to himself. He happened to bump into the chef whose wife had been unfaithful. And they related their stories to each other. And he said, "The prime minister told me the same thing. Lets fix him good. Lets plan to do something to him. What can we do?"

They happened to pass the royal barber shop and the king was taking his royal shave. The barber slipped with the razor and cut the kings royal neck. Blood was flowing all over the place. And they ran in and helped bandage the kings neck. When they left, they came up with a plan. And they ran to the prime minister and they said, "Prime minister, our king has cut himself shaving and he's in extreme pain. What do you think of that?" And the prime minister said, "All is well and everything is unfolding as it should." That's what they wanted to hear!

So they ran to the king and they said, "Your Majesty, we told the prime minister about your terrible accident, and he didn't even care. All he did was say, "All is well," laughing, and "everything is unfolding as it should." And the king says, "What! Bring him to me!" And the palace guards brought him to the king. And the king looked the prime minister in the face and he said, "Look at my neck, it's bandaged and it hurts like hell. What do you think of that?" The prime minister merely said, "Your Majesty, all is well and everything is unfolding as it should." And the king got real angry and he said, "Put him in the dungeon!" So he threw the prime minister in the dungeon.

Now it was Wednesday afternoon, and every Wednesday afternoon the king went horseback riding with the prime minister. But of course the prime minister was in the dungeon so he went horseback riding by himself. The forest was filled with Kali-worshippers. And this was the time of year when they captured someone and sacrificed that person to the goddess Kali as that was their custom in the old days. So the chief of the Kano said, "Go bring me a pure person for the sacrifice."

So they searched and they searched and they couldn't find anybody. Then they saw the king coming. They grabbed the king. They didn't care who he was, and took him to the Kali guards. And the Kali chief looked at him and he said, "Take off his clothes." Which they did. Then he saw the cut in his neck bandaged. And he said to his guards, "How dare you bring me a person like this? Can't you see he's impure? He has a great cut in his neck. We only sacrifice a pure person. Get rid of him."

They took him back to the forest and let him go. Now the king was running back to the palace and he thought this over. And he realized that if he had not cut himself, he would have been sacrificed. And he sent for the prime minister and told him this story. He said, "You were right. If it weren't for the cut in my neck, I would have been sacrificed to the Kali gods." And the prime minister said, "Not only that, Your Majesty, but I usually go riding with you. They would have caught us both and I would have been sacrificed if you didn't throw me in the dungeon. So thank you."

So you see the moral of the story? No matter how things may look, no matter how things may appear, every situation in this world has a beginning, a middle and an end, but all is well and everything is unfolding as it should.

Take a look at your life, all of the times that you interfered with the condition because you didn't believe it was the right condition. And you caused problems for yourself and for all concerned. Everything will always work out. There are no mistakes. You have to feel that. You have to have faith in yourself and in the powers that be. While you are working in this world, do not react to things. For you are only seeing a partial story.

It's like the example of the keyhole I give you. A person looks through a keyhole and they see one part of the picture. They see somebody stabbing somebody else with a knife, and that's horrible, very bad. But let's imagine they open the door and they see the whole picture. They will probably see that in a previous life the man who was being stabbed, stabbed the person who is stabbing him. And now in this life the same thing is happening to him. And when he looks further, he will see the one being stabbed and the one who is doing the stabbing both laughing. For nothing has happened to them at all in reality. So you see, we always get a partial picture. We never get the whole truth. This is why we are told not to react! This is why we are told, whenever a situation confronts us, act from the point of wisdom by not reacting. Yet, your body will do something. When I say to not react, I mean mentally.

First, if you do not react mentally, and you are at peace with yourself, your body will take the right course of action in order to transcend that situation and you will not have to go through it again. But say you react, and you seem to get your way and win, whatever the situation is. This simply means that you have put your karma in abeyance for awhile. The results have not hit you yet. You stopped them, for awhile. But according to the law of karma, you're going to have to go through it at one time or another. If you do not react mentally, divine right action will take place and you will transcend and not have to go through that experience. This is the way to live in the world.

The question is, is the world your real home? What have you got to do with this world? As you evolve, as you unfold, you begin to see that you are a spirit. You are not a body. You are not a mind. And you are not the doer. By spirit! mean your true nature is consciousness, absolute reality, pure awareness. You are really not of this world. But this realization only comes when you do the work. By doing the work I mean when you develop compassion, humility. Your feelings no longer become hurt. It doesn't make any difference where you live or where you are or what's going on in your life right now. You realize this is for a time only. And this too shall pass. So you do not react.

And you have transcended lust and greed. When this has been accomplished to an extent, you find you're beginning to feel a tremendous bliss, tremendous peace. It's at that time that you can begin to practice self-inquiry. Everything I've said to you has led to the practice of self-inquiry, atma vichara. If you have not come this far, as I just explained, you will not like self-inquiry. It will be meaningless to you, it will be boring. You will try for a couple of weeks, some a couple of days, some a couple of months, and then you will tell me, "Robert, it doesn't work." And I will smile and realize you have not done the preliminary work. You still have anger, doubt, apprehensions, suspicion. Things of the world still annoy you. You react to things, sometimes violently. Therefore you cannot practice self-inquiry. You will not like it, you will not enjoy it.

But you can surrender, if you are ready to do that. You can surrender to the Self, to God. You can allow God, the Self, to take your anger, to take your suspicions, your depressions, your apprehensions, your greed, your lust. You can give it all to God. But this is also not the easiest thing to do. For it means that you have come to the conclusion that you are not the doer.

You are more like a puppet being manipulated by karma. And so you give everything up to God. You surrender your karma, your sins, your past mistakes, everything. You let go of it. Then you find you're becoming more peaceful and you begin to search for the personal "I". You begin to feel, "I am not the body. I am not the mind. I am not my experiences. Then who am I? Who am I? Who is this person called "I"? Is it me? When I refer to my foot, my chest, my hand, who is the "my" I am talking about? To whom am I referring?"

You begin to question yourself. Remember, this can only be done when you are at peace with yourself. "What is the source of I?" You begin to look within yourself. You spend moments in the silence. In the beginning when you ask the question, "Who am I?" there's a profound silence. It will only last a few seconds. But as you continue to question, the space between each "Who am I?" becomes greater and greater and you remain in the silence longer and longer.

This silence is your true nature. The silence is consciousness. When the "I" dissolves, you become sat-chit-ananda, Brahman, Nirvana, Emptiness. And you become blissful. As the days go by, whatever you feel, whatever you see, whatever your senses tell you, you question, "To whom does this come?" You're always questioning.

As I mentioned Sunday, self-inquiry is not meditation. You can sit at certain times during the day and practice self-enquiry if you desire. You're not meditating. You're enquiring.

You're following the I-thought to the source. You do not look for results. If you find that you cannot do this, you practice being the observer.

You observe everything you go through during the day. You become the witness. You watch. And you do not react.

Then self-enquiry will come by itself. Something will open up within you and you will ask the question, "Who is the observer? Who is the witness?" And something will say, "I-am." And "I-am" is the first name of God.

So you will change the meditation and do the "I-am" meditation with your respiration. You inhale and you say "I", you exhale and you say "AM." It's okay to mix self-inquiry with the I-am meditation, as long as you're always doing something. That's the point. Always do something. Do not focus on your so-called problems. If you're doing something spiritual your problems will always take care of themselves. They will. They will always work themselves out. As far as you're concerned, keep your self spiritual. You will always begin when you awaken. If you wait too long you will forget and go about your daily business.

But if you do something spiritual when you first awaken you will carry it through during the day and before you fall asleep. Keep yourself spiritual all the time. When you wake up you can immediately ask yourself, "Who am I? Where did the 'I' come from? 'I', 'I' had a dream, and now 'I' am awake. Who is this 'I'?" The "I" slept soundly, the dreamt, and now the 'I' is awake. Interesting. And you ask, "Then, who am I?" Which really means, "What is the source of this I?" You always pause, and remember you never answer the question. When you ask yourself, "What is the source of the 'I'?" and you rest in the silence, thoughts will start to come to you. So you inquire, "To whom do these thoughts come?"

If you find you are late for work and you have to get up and get dressed, or do whatever you're doing, do not force yourself to stay back and practice self-inquiry, but get dressed. As you get dressed, ask yourself, "Who's getting dressed? I am. Who am I?" And follow it through, as you're eating your breakfast, "Who's eating? I am. Well, who is this 'I'?" And you keep it up. You keep it up. You keep it up. You keep it up. You will forget in the beginning. But as you keep up the momentum, you will remember. And you will remember more and more. All during the day, keep up the self-inquiry. Surrender. You can do both simultaneously. When something faces you that you don't like you can say, "To whom does it come?" and you can also say, "Take this from me, God. It doesn't belong to me at all. Take it. Take this burden.

Then you can enquire, "Who had to give the burden to God? I did. Who am I?" It always goes back to the same thing. This is the procedure. These are the things you must do if you want to become free. Why are you wasting your life? The things that you think you need will one clay vanish. You don't know how much time you've got left in your body. And if you haven't become of no mind, you have no idea where you're really going to go when you drop your body or what's in store for you.

If you practice self-inquiry, if you practice surrender, if you keep your mind on the source, you'll be safe. And the worst thing that can happen to you when you drop your body is that you will reincarnate into really spiritual parents, parents who have been on the path a long time, giving you the opportunity to start at an early age to become free and liberated. So what do you want with your life? Do you want to go after material things that are here today and gone tomorrow? Or do you want to become free? The choice is yours.

Feel free to ask any questions.

SM: I had a very interesting dream a few nights ago, Robert, where I laid down on my child and his guts came squishing out and I was in a panic. I saw my baby killed. I was just lamenting and weeping, gnashing my teeth. All of a sudden a voice said, "Relax it's only a dream." And I stuffed the guts back into his body and got up.

R: So what is the question? (SM: This is all a dream, relax!) Good! Everything that appears really does not exist. If you are only able to awaken without going through these procedures and all the work you have to do on yourself. And the reason you can't awaken is because you're attached to the world. You're attached to person, place and thing. That is the only reason that you will not awaken. In other words, you're getting pleasure out of the world. And as long as you're deriving pleasure out of the world, you will never awaken. I'm not saying you have to stop the pleasure and acquire pain. They're both two sides of the same coin. Enjoy your pleasure, but do not react to it. Realize what it is - Maya, illusion. It's here today and gone tomorrow. Therefore when you are no longer attached mentally, you become free.

S: Eve had that same experience that he did about waking up and saying, "This is a dream, I whenever I did alot of self-inquiry during the week. Then I'm more likely to have a dream, sort of this lucid dreaming." I wonder if anybody else has had that experience.

R: Yes, those dreams actually do come when you practice self-inquiry alot, to show you the nature of things. You will have a dream and all kinds of things will happen, and then in the dream you will realize it's a dream. That shows you you're making progress. Those are really good dreams to have. Isn't there a song, "Life is but a Dream?" I know I heard it some place.

S: There's also a song, "I've Got Plenty of Nothing."

S: Robert, you said a couple of weeks ago, you were talking about the need for a living guru and I was wondering in your own particular case, how many years were you with your teacher?

R: I was never with one teacher a long time. When I had my own personal experience I went to many teachers to observe and to confirm what I was going through. (S: So, in a sense, your experience was self-evoked?) You can say that, yes. But I was so young at the time, I thought I was going crazy. But somebody always introduced me to a teacher who let me know what it was all about and what was really happening. (S: Why did you think you were going crazy?) Because I became different than my friends. (S: That's all very sensible.) Not when you're mixed with the world. Because the world showed me otherwise. And I felt, deeply, that it was a lie. I felt the whole world was a lie. And when I tried to express to my teachers and to people in my family, they told me I was crazy.

S: Your mistake was in believing them. (R: Exactly!) You were on the right track. They were in illusion. It's hard to stand alone sometimes.

R: I'm not crazy, you are. The whole world's crazier than me.

S: You were just gaining your sanity and thinking you were crazy. A paradox.

S: Was Ramana the teacher under which you attained your complete realization then?

R: Not exactly. He was the one that opened my eyes to who I was and made me understand where I was coming from. But I had already had the realization before I came to him. (S: Then how would he open your eyes if you already had the realization?) I used to believe something was wrong, for I felt that I was omniscient, omnipresent And I tried to get rid of that feeling. Then I went to Ramana. He explained it to me and he told me about his experience when he was a boy. When he was a boy, he did all this tapas. He meditated by himself for years, kept silent, and had all kinds of things happening to his body, various modifications. So he told me I didn't have to do that, being from the West, the modification itself was the Western thinking. So I didn't have to go through anything else.

S: Robert, during the day I feel a sense of anxiety or self-judgment and I surrender it in my mind to you. What will you do with it?

R: Never mind what I do with it. You just surrender it! And it will be taken care of. To give you a better explanation - actually the Self only exists. When you surrender to me, all of yourself, it evaporates, because it never existed to begin with. So I do absolutely nothing with it because it's a nonentity. It has no power, it has no beginning, it has no end, it's nothing.

But you believe it's something. When you give it up to me, then the grace flows more freely to you because you have surrendered all of your self to the Self and the Self takes the place of your self. The deeper the surrender, the more the experience of the Self.

S: Sounds like a good exchange. A win-win exchange, no losers.

R: There are no losers. You can't lose with the stuff I use!

S: Last week you mentioned that the fastest way for any of us to become self-realized was to be of service to you. And I was thinking about that during the week and because it was the first time you gave us something specific. And I would like you to address how we can be of service.

R: I never used the word "you", if you recall. I said to be of service to your Self. Your Self and my Self are the same Self. There's no difference. Because for some reason I am able to see this more clearly, when you give up your ego, give up your mind to me, to the Self, you receive greater freedom. You begin to experience great joy, great peace. So when you actually become of service, you are of service to your Self. Can you follow that?

S: Yes.

S: I hate to bring up scripture again, but Jesus said, "Whatever you have done to the least of my brothers you have done unto me."

R: This is very true. Can you explain that? (S: Well, there shouldn't be drawn any difference between any of my brothers, brothers meaning all persons, whatever their circumstances, whether they be Mother Theresa or Charles Manson.) This is very true. There is only one Self and we're all that. So whatever you do to anybody else, you're doing to yourself. To go further into this, if you see me as a human being, if you see me as a body, you're making a big mistake. I see you as the Self, as consciousness. There is only consciousness. When you abide in consciousness, you become free.

So when you are of service to consciousness there is a greater amount of grace that flows. It opens your heart. It pulls you upward. It pulls the mind into the heart center, when you become totally free, liberated. Some of you are a little confused. When someone brings me an apple, they are really giving the apple to themselves. Since the Self is more prominent through this body, then the measure with which you give the apple returns to you tenfold. Is that clear to everyone?

S: Not exactly. (R: O.K. What isn't clear?)

S: This ten-fold thing on the apple. You're saying that it essentially depends on their inner attitude what the overall experience is for them?

R: It's like digging for diamonds. The deeper you dig, sometimes the more diamonds you get. When you serve the Sage, it's like digging for diamonds. You become part of the sage's vibrations, which is called grace. Therefore you find your needs and your desires fulfilled by themselves. Whatever is supposed to happen to you, which points you toward divinity, is accelerated.

S: So when you say desires, those are spiritual desires.

R: Spiritual desires, yes. This is why many times when certain people are in close proximity to me and hang out with me a lot, things appear to become relatively worse, for some people because all this stuff, all the karma which has been accumulated for centuries is being accelerated, being pulled to the surface and hitting you all at once. And as you hold on without reacting, everything is being burnt out. Then all of a sudden you become empty. And you find peace and liberation.

S: Robert, this non-reaction you're talking about - the thing you mentioned with Dana going to the hospital, someone is taken ill, the natural reaction is to want to become well. In fact I read something Ramona himself had said that health is the natural state of beingness to begin with. So it would seem that it is a natural reaction to want to react to illness with the desire to be well. Can you just expound on that?

R: Yes. The desire to be well presupposes that there's somebody who has to be well. But in reality, no one ever became sick. So there's no one to make well. If sickness were a reality, then you would spend your time trying to make someone or yourself well. Since a sickness is itself an illusion, trying to make someone well is also an illusion. And the only real way you can help them is by being your Self. By seeing the truth. And the truth is, all is well and everything is unfolding as it should.

Dana knows this. She's going through some horrendous experiences. But I talked to her on the phone today and she was laughing, and she's happier than I've ever heard her in a long time. She told me all this doesn't exist anyway, so who cares? She has a real good attitude about it. What appears to be real is false. Do not judge by appearances. We are not here to make sick people well. We have to realize no one was ever sick and no one needs to be well. They're both impostors. We have to rise above that thinking. And the easiest way to do that, of course, is to enquire, 'To whom does it come?' Then you begin to see it is the I-thought who believes somebody is sick and somebody has to be made well. So you get rid of the I-thought. The whole universe is attached to the I-thought. When the I-thought is transmuted, the whole universe seems to stop functioning for you. There is no longer a universe. Things like sickness and wellness no longer exist. In the meantime, you do the best you can.

S: The reaction part is knowing all this, at least on an intellectual level, you would still take the steps to attain what would seem to be a state of wellness, would you not?

R: You will automatically take care of yourself. Your body will always take care of itself. What appears to be your body knows what to do to take care of itself. But you shouldn't spend your clay thinking about your body, and thinking whether it's sick or well and trying to make it healthier all clay long. Be spontaneous. Do whatever has to be done and forget it.

As an example of that, what I am talking about, people give me all kinds of herb's, vitamins, green stuff, purple stuff, everything. So in the morning without even thinking, I throw it all in the blender with some apple juice. I mix it up and I drink it and I forget all about it. I do not think, 'this is going to make me sick or well.' It's just something to do.

S: Robert, what is there before the "I Am" consciousness?

R: The I-am consciousness is simply to cause you to understand that God is all there is, and there's nothing else. The I-am is a process or procedure to come to that conclusion. But reality is Nothing. There is absolutely nothing. When you are the Self you are nothing. The I-am consciousness comes from delusion. And you're doing the I-am consciousness to get back to your real Self, to who you always were. In reality there is no I-am consciousness. It never existed. Just like there's no Self, there is no absolute awareness, there is no realization. Those are only words to get you back to nothing. (S: There's no 'nothing' too, then?) There's no nothing too, then, it's only a word. What we call the absolute reality is something that can never, never be spoken or described. It's indescribable. There are no words for the true reality. So in order to convey the message we say that the true reality is consciousness, pure awareness, sat-chit-ananda, Nirvana. But those are all words. And in the final analysis all the words have to go and all the thoughts have to go. So nothing is the answer.

S: Sri Bhagvan said, "words of the great-grandsons are Truth."

R: Oh, yes. That's a good analogy. Words of the great-grandsons is the Truth.

S: Robert, Mom and Dad were right then, when they said, "you're going to amount to nothing." (R: We always talk about this. I became a 'good-for-nothing.')

But you're not even that. (R: What am I? That's the answer. Silence. Henry's the only one who gave the right answer. Silence is the answer.)

S: My cat has been trying to tell me that for a long time.

R: How did the cat tell you? (S: Just by not answering. I keep asking him to tell me his secrets. The answer is nothing.) He doesn't even say, 'meow'? You can probably learn a lot from your cat.

S: Workers comp lawyers don't talk either.

S: Couldn't you substitute the word 'everything' for 'nothing'?

R: Not really, because when you say, everything, it implies things. It implies some thing. There is no everything when you're nothing. When you're nothing you're no thing. But when you say everything! you start thinking about the world. (S: It puts you right back in maya.) Yes. So you want to be nothing.

S: Did you say there's no other?

R: There are no others, no. If there were others, there would be something.

S: Could we say, and think, just in terms of words, instead of nothing, no other?

R: If that helps you, by all means say it. You can say anything you like.

S: It's a nothingness that has nothing to do with nothingness.

R: Yes. As soon as you begin to think, you spoil everything. Do not try to figure it out. You can't. It's like trying to figure out what came first, the seed or the tree. The only way you can make progress is by self-inquiry, surrender, service to the Self, and silence.

S: What is service to the Self?

R: It is giving up your ego, giving up your mind, giving it all to the Sage.

Do we have prashad? Remember, the whole teaching is in the prashad!

(tape ends) [TOC]

THE WORLD IS YOUR MOVIE

1st September, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, Om. Good afternoon. Greetings and salutations. I welcome you with all my heart. It is good to be with you once again.

If you abide in the first principle, that everything is an emanation of the mind and everything is preordained in your life, you would have no problems. Where can there be a problem when you realize that everything is preordained, predestined, and everything that is predestined in your life is projected through your mind. In other words, the world that you are seeing, observing, is simply your movie. You show yourself a movie whenever you stare at the world. And all the things that you see, is your flick. It belongs to you, no one else, everything.

Nothing just happens. Everything has already happened. And you appear to be going through a movie, where things appear to be happening, but you're really the projectionist, and you are projecting your fairy tale. The idea is to become free, to become liberated. But how can you become free and liberated, when the world affects you, when you're always scheming and planning and criticizing, becoming angry, reacting? How can you become free?

You become deeply involved in the situations of life as if they were going to last forever. You realize by now that the only thing permanent in life is change. No thing ever stays the same. So why identify with the external world?

The wise person leaves the external world alone. They have very little to do with the external world. They have trained themselves that when they behold a situation, there's no reaction, no identification. You become no-hurttable. You cannot be hurt any longer by words, by deeds, by whatever. Wherever you find yourself, you put yourself there. No one is responsible for what happens to you. The appearance is that people seem to be responsible, for you always seem to be involved with people. Yet it's all planned.

It's as if you were an actor and you are rehearsing for a play. Then you play the part. You do not really get angry at your co-actors, for you know that it's a play, they're all playing a part. Life is like that. It's an act, act one. How you come out of act one determines if you go back into act two, or you become free of the whole thing. Act two is when you become reborn and go through further experiences. You're continuing the game. You have not learned to turn within, to dive deep within yourself and become free. You become attached to person, place or thing. And again you grow older, and it's time for act three. All of the time you are responsible for your actions.

If you would only leave it alone, if you can only understand no one can really hurt you, no one can really do anything to you. The appearance may be that they can, but you should always hold in the deep recesses of your mind that it's only a play, an act. If you go through the play without reacting, you do not have to take on an acting job again. You become free. But if you insist on reacting, it makes no difference what the situation is. You are reacting when you have preconceived ideas, when you believe something has to be done a certain way, when you believe people want to hurt you, things are wrong somewhere. When you're always scheming and planning and you're not spontaneous, that is acting. And of course, whenever you react there will be a further reaction from the other side. It never ends. It keeps on going. This is collective and individual.

No thing is as it appears, or it wouldn't change. The whole universe is a mirage on the screen of life. Everything is a mirage, including your body, your thoughts, your feelings. They're all a lie. And they do not really exist.

When I go so far as to say that nothing really exists, I don't blame you for sort of becoming a little irritated with me, for I know that some of you have gone through life, and you've been hurt. Certain things have transpired in your life, so how can I sit here and say that no thing exists? Try to remember that I'm not speaking from a book I read, or what somebody else told me. This has been my direct experience. There is no world. There never was a world. And there never will be a world. All of the psychotherapy you go through, all of the karma you go through, all of the perverse situations in life you go through, they do not exist. They never have existed and they never will exist. Yet the mirage is so strong that you're sitting here believing you are the body.

No matter how many times I tell you, you are not the body, you are not the mind, you are not the doer, you always identify with yourself as the body. You can tell you're doing that because you're always thinking about your self. When you're taking a walk, what do you think about? Yourself. True? Whatever you're doing, you're thinking about yourself. You may get lost sometimes when you're watching TV, going to a movie, participating in a sport, but that doesn't last. When the movie is over, when the sport is over, when what you've really got involved in is over, you're back to thinking about yourself.

As long as you think about yourself as the body, you have to suffer. You have to go through experiences in life. That's what this world is all about, for the deluded person. Experience after experience after experience. There's no end to it, until the day comes when you get good and tired of the whole thing. This is why some people really have to have the rug pulled from under them before they come around to this way of thinking. For as long as they are leading a mediocre life, they don't have that many bad things happening in their life, they seem to be satisfied, and they keep searching for better humanhood, not realizing that for every backward there's a forward. For every up there is a down.

You have to experience all kinds of things when you identify with the body-mind phenomenon. Therefore you should do the best you can to transcend that kind of thinking. And you do that by catching your thoughts. Catch yourself thinking about yourself, about your problems, about your family, about your needs, about something being wrong somewhere, about your doubts, your suspicions, your apprehensions. You have to realize that it doesn't matter what you're going through, physically, mentally, economically. Those things are all incidental.

For instance, the body may be wasting away, getting older, dying from cancer. That doesn't make any difference. There's no difference between a person who has become emaciated, dying of cancer, and Arnold Schwarzenegger. They're both impostors. The problems begin when you take it to be seriously. When you want to be someone else, or you want a different kind of situation in your life, that's when the problem really begins.

If you can only learn to abide in whatever situation you're in. What I mean by abide in every situation you're in, I'm referring to not reacting, not feeling sorry with yourself, or comparing yourself with someone else, but simply laughing at yourself. Allowing to come what may. Not fighting, not trying to get the best of someone else.

I know what I'm saying, to some of you, appears sort of stupid, for you say, "If I don't stick up for my rights, people will step all over me. That will never happen. For it is when you stick up for your rights and you appear to win that you really have a problem. For you have to go through similar situations over and over again until you stop and leave things alone and simply not react.

I am not referring to holding it in. If you hold in your fears, your problems or whatever, you will blow up one day, and all sort of things will happen. I'm referring to transcending your life, going into a different dimension, seeing things in the fourth dimension, rather than in the state of waking, sleeping and dreaming. Abiding in your real Self. You abide in your real Self when you become quiet, when thoughts stop, when people around you may be in chaos and confusion, they may be shooting at each other, wars may be going on, but you are still, you are quiet, you are not disturbed. You cannot make out you're like that when you're not. You cannot pretend that you are still and calm and peaceful, when you really have a lot of anger in you, and you're always sticking up for your rights, and you believe that people are trying to hurt you.

You therefore have to work on yourself. Your body appears to be the factory, the laboratory, for you to experiment. There's only one way to go, and that's inwardly. Do not attempt to do anything in the world to become evolved. The world cannot do anything for you. It's only within your own Self.

Thursday night I mentioned that most people cannot practice self-inquiry because they've not come to terms with themselves, meaning they've not as yet removed the anger, the doubts, the bad temper, the feelings. Those things have not as yet been removed in order for you to go further. If you are really attached to this world, and you are when you have a bad temper, when you have to react all the time, when you think something is wrong, that's being attached to the world. It's going to be very difficult for you to practice self-inquiry, for your ego is so strong, it will always pull you back to the situation in life that you're going through, your job, that you may hate, you're always thinking about that, always upsets you, family problems, bodily dysfunctions, lack or limitation, or an overabundance of things. When you own too many things, your mind is always thinking about the things you own, whether you're going to lose them, whether you have to pay taxes on them, so it's just as bad as thinking about problems. As long as you're thinking at all you're making a grave mistake. The mind has to become quiescent. It makes no difference what the situation is.

So Thursday I mentioned you've got to put your house in order, before you can really get into self-inquiry. And I mentioned two things that a couple of people have reacted to me about. Ramakrishna used to talk about these things as women and gold. Throughout Rama Krishnas' writings he says that women and gold are the two things that keep you from becoming enlightened. People think he didn't like women. But he actually was referring to lust and greed.

So some of you who called me, believed I said that you're not supposed to be sexual in your life, and you're not supposed to own anything. This is a mistake. There is nothing wrong with being sexual as long as you are in control of yourself. You've got to control your own body. If you're lustful, your body controls you. Some of us believe to be sexually active we have to be lustful. This is not true.

I can only use myself as an example. When I had my illuminating experience when I was fourteen years old, the I-thought was completely destroyed. When there is no I, you would say, then there is no one to be sexual. And the appearance would be you become asexual. This again is a mistake. The body is going to appear to go through many experiences. I got married, I have two daughters, but yet the I-thought was not there.

So again, you may say, "But Robert, if you became self-realized, you would have no interest in sex or anything else." This is a fallacy that only the ajnani would ask and feel. The body will always be active. It will always appear to be doing things. Whatever you have to do as a body will be done, but you do not think about it. Nothing is planned as far as the enlightened person goes. The Sage plans nothing because the Sage is not the body nor the mind. Yet the Sages body may appear to go through certain maneuvers, maybe work at a job. The body may appear to go through all kinds of things, but the Sage has absolutely nothing to do with it.

This again is confusing. It appears that there are two people. It appears as if there is a Sage and there's a body that does all kinds of things. But that's why I said it's an appearance. Just as Ramakrishna and Ramana Maharshi and others appeared to be dying a horrible death and wasting away. I want to inform you that no such thing happened. None of these things are happening. That's why you should never judge because you're judging from the viewpoint of the ajnani. In other words you're seeing things with your ajnani eyes, and you're thinking how things are supposed to be.

Now as far as greed is concerned, it's the same thing. I do not mean when I say you should work on yourself to remove greed, I'm not referring you should sell your possessions and get rid of everything you own, and own nothing. On the contrary, if you like a nice car, a nice home, antiques, there is absolutely nothing wrong with enjoying those things as a body, as long as you're not attached to them. In other words, possess what you want, but never be possessed by your possessions. You have absolutely nothing to do with it. The real you is free from the whole thing.

As I'm trying to explain this, I'm talking about both worlds, the world of the body and the transcendental world. There is really one world. There is only ultimate oneness. But for the sake of trying to explain these things, I refer to the fact that you appear to have a body, but you are not the body. You are absolute reality. That is your state right now. Do not worship your body. See yourself for what you really are.

If you're that far enmeshed in this world, again self-inquiry will be difficult for you to do. That's when you sing bhajans and you have mantras, you chant, you practice pranayama. You do all these things to make your body pure enough so that you can practice self-inquiry.

There is a story about the Buddha and the courtesan. One day the Buddha and his disciples who were walking through the forest and they came to a town. In this town lived a beautiful courtesan, who was a high class prostitute. She had a beautiful home and she was a lovely creature to behold. She had heard about the Buddha, how handsome he was, how strong of body, and she said to herself "I must have this person. This will be my ultimate conquest. So she sent her handmaidens out to fetch the Buddha. "Bring him to me," she said. They approached the Buddha and they said, "Master, our mistress wants to see you. Please come."

When Buddha's disciples looked at the girls they realized who they were. They were all prostitutes. And they began to chase them away. They said "How dare you approach our Master like this. What kind of person do you think he is?" And the Buddha said "No, do not say anything harshly. I will go." The disciples were amazed. They didn't understand where he was coming from at all. But they knew enough to trust him, because he was self-realized and they were not. He told them, "Wait here," and he followed the handmaidens to this beautiful home, a mansion, a castle.

He approached the courtesan, and she was dressed in her finest clothes to entice him. She said, "Stay with me and I will give you love beyond your wildest dreams." He smiled at her and he said, "Not now." She continued and said, "I will give you riches you never had in your life. You will be treated like a king. Just stay with me." Again he said, "Not now." She continued by saying, "I love you with all my heart. I will give myself totally to you. Just stay with me." And he answered, "I love you also, but not now." This went on for hours. She finally realized there was no use. And he bid her farewell and went back to his disciples. They walked through the town and disappeared into the jungle.

Thirty years passed and the Buddha and his disciples again came to that same town. All of a sudden Buddha stopped and started to think, and told his disciples, "Wait here for me. I have to go see my beloved." He walked to the part of the town where this great mansion had been, and he found a pile of rubble. Everything was torn down. Everything was a mess. He inquired where the courtesan was, and someone pointed to the ground. And there she was lying in the ground in rags, with leprosy all over her body, wasting away.

He went over to her, kneeled down and said, "Now I have returned for you, and I love you as you once loved me." He kissed her on the forehead. She was immediately healed. She understood. Her consciousness had risen. She followed the Buddha back to the forest with the disciples and became one of the loving disciples of Buddha.

This story tells you that no thing is the way it appears. When you attach yourself to someone or something, and you believe that's the thing that you have to have all of your life, you will always be disappointed. The safest thing you can do is to turn within. You should get rid of all of the undesirable traits you've got. Enough of them. Awaken from your sleep. Begin to inquire, "To whom do all these feelings come? Who is going through karma, reincarnation, mental anguish? Who is going through all of this? I am? It is the I that is the culprit, that has kept me in delusion all of my life. Now I'm going to trace that I, find out from whence it comes and become free." Do it.

(silence)

Feel free to ask any questions.

SB: Robert if realization is all fullness and all bliss and all proficiency, why would the Jnani want to get married and have a family?

R: The Jnani has nothing to do with it. This is why I say it's sort of difficult to understand. The body does this. (S: But if there is no mind, how would the body do it? If the mind is gone who would do it?) The appearance is there. It's like when Ramana Maharshi was dying, who was dying? A human being appeared to be dying but he said you're making a mistake. There is nobody here dying. In the same way a Jnani appears as a body to some people and the body appears to be doing certain things, getting married, having children, having a job, becoming a president... (SB: But if there is no karma what would impel the body to want to do those things?) The body is not doing that. It appears to be doing that. This is the reason I always say, "It is only an appearance." (SB: So are there still karma's operative in the Jnani?) There is no karma, there is nothing, there is no body.

SH: What determines the appearance then?

R: Nothing determines the appearance because nothing is going on. There is a complete blank. (SH: Well what determines that nothing that is going on goes on?) Nothing determines what goes on because nothing is going on, there is no determiner. (SH: You just wiped it all out.) (laughs)

SB: Yeah but why would the Jnani get married rather than just sit in one place in a cave? What impetus, what motion is causing this to happen?

R: Why would the Jnani sit in one place in a cave? (SB: Well some of them have.) The same reason. There is no difference to the Jnani whether he is sitting in a cave or gets married. The difference that you see is in your mind. (SB: Doesn't he prefer to get married rather than sit in a cave?) There is no preference whatsoever. (SB: Then why does he do it?) He doesn't. (students laugh) He "appears" to do it. You are seeing the appearance, that's your mind. Remember I told you the first principle in the beginning? Everything is an emanation of your mind. The appearance appears that way but the reality is quite different. In the reality there is nothing going on. It's like a mirage. You see the water and it's not there. It's like hypnosis. You're seeing the Jnani with a body doing something but noone is doing anything.

(break in tape)

(A student must have asked a question about nothing is reality.)

You can't say nothing is reality because that implies that reality is a thing. There is only nothing, it is. Nothing comes after that.

SM: It's a dream Robert? It's a dream? (R: It's a dream? Of course.)

SU: Then who creates an answer? (R: No one.) You said everything is preordained.

R: Everything is preordained as long as you believe you are the body but when you get to the point when you realize you are not the body there is no pre-ordainer, there is no karma, there is no reincarnation, there is no God. All these things simply exist because you believe you are the body. That's why you have to realize that it is your personal I that believes all these things. When you destroy the personal I everything else is destroyed. Everything is attached to the personal I.

SH: And that's based on the identification of the body.

R: Yes. So when the identification of the I stops, there is no body, there is no mind, there is no world, there is no universe, there is noone looking to become self-realized, there is no liberation, there is nothing.

SB: But that nothing is happiness, right? I mean, bliss and fullness. Sat-chit-ananda right? (R: That what you call nothingness is beyond happiness and bliss. There are no words in the finite mind to describe it. You can't even imagine the bliss.)

SH: But for there to be anything there has to be someone to experience it? (R: Yes.) And what you're speaking of there's no experienter?

R: There is no experienter so how can you experience anything?

SB: But then you just become the bliss?

R: You do not become anything, because there has to be someone to become. (S: Umm.) And the bliss is something that you're describing. So that cannot be the ultimate reality. That is why I always say the ultimate reality is silence. Total quietness. That's nothing.

SU: In the silence it's like being enveloped by something, bliss, I mean I use the word bliss that's wrong but there is something...

R: When you're enveloped in the silence by something, that is not the true silence. (SU: So the true silence is beyond that feeling? It's beyond that feeling, there is no feeling whatsoever. See there has to be someone to have a feeling. As long as someone is feeling something that is not it.)

SU: Umm? I've never experienced it I can't say but why would I choose something that isn't wonderful or blissful or... I mean I haven't had the experience obviously that, because in the silence I've had a blissful feeling. The presence of something.

R: The presence of something, the blissful feeling is only a part of it. But all that becomes transcended. All that disappears. The true silence, what you're referring to is a billion trillion times greater than the bliss you're talking about. It is something so incomprehensible that if it came to you your whole body would be destroyed. The body will not be able to handle it. That's why it only comes when you've had the realization that you are not the body because then there will be no body that will be destroyed. It never existed so how can it be destroyed. But if you're feeling a point before the bliss with the nothingness then your body can actually be destroyed by that great feeling.

SH: Why would the body be destroyed? It would just be the identification of the body that would be destroyed?

R: The body appears to be destroyed. It's an appearance. (SH: Umm? It's not actually destroyed?) No, because it never existed. (SH: (laughs) Here we are back to ground zero.) See this is sort of difficult to understand, to comprehend but I can assure you that if you dive deep within yourself and you follow the I-thought to it's source you will have happiness that you never dreamed existed and you will have bliss that no word or feeling can ever describe. You will be in your true nature.

SH: But there is still a you there?

R: No. I'm just using that word. (SH: You're using it...?) To make you see what happens. (SH: Yeah. But you must've disappeared?) You never is available. You is gone, there is no you. But when I'm referring the experience to you that is the only way you can do it by using certain words. (SH: Well then there is no bliss, there is no anything?) There is no bliss as you know it. (SH: There is nobody to know it?) There is nobody to know it. (SH: So there is no knowing?) There is no knowing. There is just it. (SH: Why talk about it then?) (laughs)

SE: Why ask him? (laughter)

R: Why are you talking? I'm just answering your question.

SU: It's not like an out of body experience? (R: No, on the contrary.)

SH: It's no experience at all. (laughs)

R: Out of body experience is kindergarten. (SU: Okay, uh-um.)

SE: Some teachers talk about the absolute as being experience without conceptualization which differentiates into an I and to trees and so forth, but what you're saying goes far beyond that, you're saying experience itself doesn't exist, is that correct?

R: That's correct. There is no experience. (SE: So you don't belong to the Douglas Harding group of Jnanis.) Douglas Harding has his own message. There has to be an experienter to experience anything. When the experienter has been transcended there is no one to have any kind of experience. And that's total silence.

SH: There is no experiencing Self whatever. (R: No. It's all gone.) Umm.

SB: But yet you say it's a great happiness.

R: I'm trying to explain it because many people believe that it's a void. It's not a void it's beyond that. There are no words to describe it. (SB: Could you say that it's happiness itself without anyone to be happy?) No, happiness is nothing compared to the experience.

SX: Robert if you gave up your body tomorrow and you hear all the time on TV or radio, young people, children even going through the tunnel. And going through the tunnel in a near death experience or whether they've been in an accident or whatever or in the operating room it seems to be a break in the agreement about what happens about going through this very very blissful state. When they reach that near death or going over to the other side. So back to you, if you left your body tomorrow where would you be?

R: Where I am right now. (SL: Nowhere?) (SE: Everywhere?) (laughs)

SX: Now without this body and you passed on after having only drowned to a different energy would you still be aware that we pions are all down here sitting around waiting for you to show up?

R: I have not passed on anywhere. (SX: No, I know.) I know I will not be doing that because I would have to be an individual to see all you pions. There would have to be a seer and individual entity but I am you, I have become you. The energy is your energy because there is only one energy. (SX: You just become that, you just become another energy?) There is no other energy. I was never an energy to begin with. The Self always remains the Self. There is no where to go and there is nothing to become.

SX: So all these people who believe in some after life are going to be disillusioned?

R: The people who believe in an after life will experience an after life but you are causing the experience yourself. If you are controlled by your mind when you leave your body your mind creates an astral world, a causal world and you'll have experiences there but you are doing this to yourself you have caused this. It all comes out of your mind. When you are free and liberated there is noone left to cause anything and there is nothing to become. You're already that and you remain that, forever.

SX: So in a sense if you are living in a hell, to expand this a little bit, or sort of Dantes Inferno and you leave the body at that stage you might likely to talk... if I just use this as an illustration to try to clarify it to myself or anyone here - say the Bible speaks of purgatory and hell, and if you're a good kid you go to heaven. So are you saying in a sense, whatever state that we are living here that when we leave this mortal flesh we sort of become that. Whether it's peaceful or in a bad state?

R: You continue. You take a short vacation. You go through the tunnel. You see your relatives, people you hate, people you love then you take a rest for about 400 earth years... (laughter) (SX: Are you pulling my leg Robert?) No this is the story, this is the way the story goes and then you're pulled back into some body, somewhere, in some time and you go through the processes all over again. It is only when you know who you are... (SX: That you don't go through that?) That you don't have to go through that because there is noone left to go through that.

SM: Robert could you say it's like emulsified oneness?

R: A multiplied oneness? (SM: No, emulsified oneness?) You can say that if you want. (SM: Well it's everywhere so it has to be emulsified.) (laughter) See the Jnani the Sage is already omnipresent, all-pervading therefore there is no room for the Sage to go anywhere. There is no space and there is no time because the Sage is space and time. There is no place where the Sage is not. Therefore the Sage is already everything that exists. So where would the Sage go when the body appears to be dropped. There is no place to go because the Sage takes up all the space there is at the present moment.

SE: So everything we know or experience has nothing to do with the absolute? (R: True.) Nothing. (R: Absolutely nothing.) Every question that I would ask would have to be wrong. (R: Right.) (students laugh)

SH: Now you can give up. (laughs)

SG: Robert in a Jnanis point of view you mentioned earlier something about, we might forget ourselves... we might stop thinking about ourselves a little bit while we're watching a movie or something. Is losing yourself in the TV lets say from the point of view of - is that more helpful from the point of view of lessening the identification with the personal I than sitting around and thinking about yourself in perhaps a sort of a relatively unconscious way?

R: It's not really helpful but it doesn't benefit you at all either. (SG: Do you mean you got to have a negative benefit through that...?) You can have a negative or positive benefit. (SG: Like sitting and thinking about yourself can have a negative benefit from that point of view?) Sitting around thinking about yourself only pulls you deeper into the delusion. When you watch TV or see a movie it keeps you from having a nervous breakdown. (laughter)

SG: Is there any difference between watching a movie from this point of view of identification with the personal I. You're watching a movie and you're losing yourself in the movie and lets say losing yourself in Mozart or losing yourself in a mathematical problem?

R: Of course when you're listening to Mozart or you're doing something beautiful, again it's taking a break from thinking, thinking, thinking about yourself, the world or the problem. (SG: So it's still just basically a neutral from the point of view of...?) It's neutral. It's similar to going into nirvikalpa samadhi. When you are in nirvikalpa samadhi you're no longer your body. You're involved consciousness or experiencing consciousness, only when you're in nirvikalpa samadhi. But when you come out of it you're back to where you were before. (SG: Well you're not saying that nirvikalpa samadhi is the same as losing yourself in a TV movie as far as being in identification with the personal I aren't you?) The only difference is one, it gives you a taste of reality. And the other it gives you a taste of being one with the program. (students laugh) (SG: Can you say what can happen in the future to these two people where on maybe doing one and one the other?) The person who practices nirvikalpa samadhi, if he goes deeper and he or she does not believe that is the solution or that's the ultimate will go further and become totally enlightened. But the one who practices watching TV becomes a part of the soap opera and begins to think and feel like that. That is their reality for now . They believe life is like a TV program, of the movie.

SG: And so how is that any different from a person who just sits there and thinks about himself and kind of spins out his own TV program?

R: When you think about yourself all of the time you appear to becoming more dull. Your mind becomes dull. You become an idiot, by thinking about yourself all the time and the problems and then you have trouble going further in your spiritual course or spiritual practice. So thinking about yourself just dulls the mind. It doesn't do anything for you. But thinking about the I and following the I to its source, does a lot for you.

So you can watch TV, identify with the TV. Practice nirvikalpa samadhi and identify with that or sit around and think of your problems and your personal feelings, identify with that, the choice is always yours.

SG: I'm still not sure, not all those choices are immediately available to me but three choices that are, thinking about myself and let's say losing myself sometimes in a TV movie?

R: It's better to lose yourself in a TV movie because you take a break from yourself.

SX: I think he's trying to say is if we go out and do something positive rather than just be self-absorbed all day in all of our miseries and our own soap opera's, is it not more beneficial to go out and be a part of the world doing something constructive?

R: This is very true. When you can help others that is one of highest human experiences that you can do. It's very beneficial for you because it develops humility and develops a semblance of peace within yourself so you can go further in your spiritual practice. You're right. You should get involved in helping the homeless or being of service wherever we can be. When we're not working on ourselves. Doing what you said is much better than watching TV.

SB: Robert when we forget ourselves - In the beginning of the meeting you said the ego is self-involvement, is self-concerned and if we do help others and we're transcending that self-involvement and we're forgetting ourselves so thereby transcending the ego to some extent by helping others.

R: Yes again it causes humility and compassion and when you have humility and compassion that is a very high human state. So when you practice self-inquiry you will be able to get further. But when your ego is too big and you don't give a damn for anybody else then it will be very difficult to practice self-inquiry. (SB: Self-abandonment is like self-ignorance, divine ignorance?) Give yourself away, get rid of yourself. Do not sit at home thinking about yourself too much or about your problems. If you're in that state get involved, help others, do something good for someone else. All those things help.

SX: I want to ask you a question as Bob was asking a question. In many Oriental practices they're always trying to infer that being a celibate is much quicker to being in a household. And what you were saying to Bob is that once you reach a certain realization within yourself it really doesn't matter whether you are single, living in a cave or whether you're married being out in the world because you are in control of the situation? Why then are so many Eastern philosophies almost telling us how dreadful it is for a man to have a relationship with a woman or whatever or to mix a very negative kind of energy? When you think that it takes an awful lot more energy to be married to the same dear old lady for fifty years and love her dearly than it is to go out and escape from the world.

R: That comes from the old school. The thinking used to be and still is with many groups, yoga groups that having a relationship is detrimental to spiritual growth because you're too much involved in the relationship. This to an extent is true. When you're involved in a relationship with someone you've got to keep that person happy and always please them and so it takes you away from your spiritual work.

But as you say when you have reached a semblance of enlightenment at that time it does not matter any longer because you know that you are not the body. Therefore what the body does is incidental, it doesn't make any difference. It only makes a difference in the beginning. When you're really working on yourself, a relationship will interfere in the work you're doing because again you have to give to the relationship. You can't have a relationship and be by yourself. Some people can I guess.

But once you have come out of the basic premise that I am the body and you have touched reality it doesn't matter what you do.

Would you like to read the Jnani Mary?

SM: Sure. (Mary reads the confessions of a Jnani, refer to beginning of this book)

(After reading)

R: Always remember that you are not the body, you are not the mind and you are not the doer. Your true nature is absolute reality, pure awareness, consciousness, ultimate oneness, sat-chit-ananda, Brahman, you are that, peace.

We have some announcements.

(Tape ends with the beginning of announcements)

[TOC]

Transcript 91

THE THREE GUNA'S

5th September, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om. Good evening. (Students: Good evening Robert.) I welcome you with all my heart. It's good being with you again. It's getting dark earlier.

There are certain things that you should always remember, and that is right identification. You should always be aware that your true nature is consciousness. You are pure unadulterated consciousness. Do not look at yourself as a body. There maybe many reasons that you feel as if you were a body. You may have pain, stress, emotional conflicts, whatever but you must learn to drop that kind of thinking no matter what appears to be going on in your life and realize that you are consciousness, absolute reality.

In other words you must identify with your source. If you identify with your source eventually you become the source. And I'm not speaking of apple sauce. (laughter) If you keep dwelling on your body or your problems and what appears to be real but is not, you simply cause those situations to increase in size and the delusion becomes reality to you. Therefore what seems to appear collectively or individually always remember to remember that you are not the body mind phenomena.

Everything is consciousness. There is only consciousness. In order for consciousness to have knowledge of itself there has to be a form or a body so that consciousness can express itself. Therefore a universal body comes into existence, which is called, "I-am." Within this universal body is the entire creation. For when "I-am" is realized creation ensues.

That's why a Jnani can exclaim, "All this is the Self and I am that! All this implies, the entire universe is within the body of the Sage. When the "I am" wishes to know itself again an individual body comes forth called the personal Self or the I-thought. Then the "I-am" forgets about it's divine origin, it's omnipresence and believes it is the personal self. Then the mortal dream begins. The entire universe becomes externalized and instead of you being omnipresent you believe that you are individual and that the world is outside of you. This is called the mortal dream. You then begin to exclaim, "I am happy, I am sad, I am rich, I am poor, I am this, I am that!" And you create all of these delusions. That keeps you in bondage.

As you appear to go through incarnation after incarnation this way, there comes a time that you begin to ponder to contemplate, to cogitate, you begin to wonder where you came from. And the wise person realizes that the answer is within. The wise person begins to understand that the world which appears to be is a world of constant change. Therefore one cannot find reality in the external world.

So through meditation, through divine remembrance one begins to go backwards, one begins to reverse the entire situation. This is done by beginning to negate the entire universe. You have to get rid of the illusion and you do this by negation. You negate the sky, the moon, the stars, the trees, the earth, you negate God, you negate everything. Then you negate your body and your mind.

After practicing this for many incarnations perhaps, you transcend the body and the mind and become "I am," once again. You become the universal body. We're all of creation, everything, everything comes out of your mind, everything is within yourself and you understand that you are like a camera, a moving picture camera. The pictures that are projected as creation is nothing more than emanations of your mind. Everything you understand is a superimposition on yourself. Your body included, your mind included is a superimposition on the Self. When you have reached that point you can be called a Jnani or a Sage.

So how do we get to that point?

There are three types of people who are ready to practice Advaita Vedanta, or atma-vichara or self-realization. The three types of people are the seekers, disciples and the devotees. We have discussed this before but this is a little different. The three types of people are equivalent to the three Guna's. Tamas, Rajahs and Satvic.

Tamas means dullness, inertia and this refers to the seeker.

Rajahs is action and this refers to the disciple.

Satvic means purity and this refers to the devotee.

Now when I say a seeker is dull and that's the tamas quality, this is from the standpoint of Advaita Vedanta. But a seeker is a very advanced soul compared to the billions of people on this earth who are wandering around in total delusion and they have not as yet become seekers. So a seeker is really an advanced stage. Yet a seeker has a tremendous ego. They run around from teacher to teacher, read tons of books, always looking to find something for themselves. Their concern is only me, me and mine. I want to become enlightened, what can I get in this class, what's in it for me.

Their attention is on the personal self. They go to one teacher, they hear about another teacher they go to that teacher, they hear about somebody else they go there, but at least they're seeking. They don't really go anywhere. They can go through thousands of incarnations. Thousands upon thousands of incarnations as a seeker always looking to themselves. Involved only with themselves. They cannot keep the mind off themselves. They find fault. They always find something wrong with the class. They compare one class to the next class. One teacher to the next teacher, trying to pull out all of the information they can get from the teacher and couldn't care less about anything else. Yet if the seeker becomes sincere they evolve to the point where they become a disciple.

A disciple begins to settle down and this is the rajahs quality, action. They begin to act upon what they see. They have an infinity for one teacher and they go to that teacher more than anybody else. They act upon what the teacher says but they're still external. They read certain books pertaining to the teachers direction but they're still not true to the teacher, they're still interested in themselves but they stay mostly with one teacher. Then if someone real good comes along and they hear the word they go to listen to this other person yet they always come back to the one teacher.

They're still concerned of themselves. They also become sometimes trouble makers, they gossip a lot, they're craving excitement. So when things are smooth in the class they look for a way to make a little problem through gossip but they really mean well. If they keep on being sincere they will evolve into a devotee.

Now the devotee has come a long way. The devotee no longer thinks about themselves, they have forgotten about themselves. They don't even care about becoming self-realized. They have no desire to become liberated. They have no desires whatsoever. They act spontaneously and take one day at a time. They surrender completely to the Sage. They have no life of their own. They think of the Sage day and night. There is no room in their minds for anything negative.

A devotee never judges. A devotee understands that the Sage is coming from a different consciousness from theirs. So what the Sage does they may not understand too well but they don't care. The devotees are the people who maintain and sustain the Sage. They look at the Sage as themselves. What they do for themselves they do for the Sage. The devotees are the life blood of the Sage and it's the devotees that become liberated.

In every movement of a high nature. Ramana Maharshi, Rama Krishna, Shankara, many others too numerous to mention, it is only the devotees who become liberated because they don't care about it. Their personal I is gone. They have surrendered the personal I to the Sage. There is noone left to quarrel. There is noone left to think something is wrong. There is noone left to judge.

Why do I share this with you? Because it's time that most of you understood this truth and remember it. What are you really here for? You're here to realize that you are not the body or mind. That you're absolute reality, that you are pure awareness.

How can you realize this if you have other things in your mind? If you're thinking about the world and worldly conditions. The world has always been here and the things that the world is going through, it has gone through again and again and again in previous ages.

Everyone's excited about Russia becoming a capitalistic society as if this really matters in the long run. Things like this have happened thousands of years ago. There have been civilizations on this earth for billions of years that have surpassed where we are now. They've all been wiped out.

A person is a fool who becomes involved in the world.

Think of these things, what do you really want? What are you really looking for? What is your true motivation?

You and I both know there are many seekers and disciples who have simply come here to improve their humanhood. When their humanhood is improved that is all they care about and they're gone. But this is a mystical teaching. This is a teaching of utter delight and harmony. The delight and harmony is your real nature. You are not the phenomenal mind that keeps thinking about these things. Thinking about becoming enlightened will not do it. But surrendering the mind that thinks about becoming enlightened will do it.

There has to be a total surrender of your ego, of your mind, of your body and of your life. The surrender must be to your Self, the real Self. The Self is all-pervading and omnipresent. There is only one Self and you are that. Therefore when I speak of surrendering or focussing on the Sage the way devotees do, I'm not speaking of the Sage as a person. Most disciples and seekers always think I'm talking about a person.

The Sage is not a personality. The Sage is omnipresence, absolute reality. The Sage is your true nature. The real Self is the Sage. There is only one Sage, there is not this Sage and that Sage. That's why when most seekers and disciples talk about various Sages I don't say anything but I smile. They're speaking of various Sages as if they are individuals but the word Sage means transcendence, all-pervading therefore there is one Sage only.

If you are still seeing the Sage as a human being you will have problems because you will judge the human being according to your standards. You will create the human being in your image. And if the human being Sage does not fulfill your expectations you will be very disappointed and even upset. Whereas if you surrender and let go and stop quarreling and finding fault and believing something is wrong, you will become a devotee and all will go well with you.

The body has absolutely nothing to do with the Sage. Appearances have absolutely nothing to do with the Sage. When I keep using the name Sage I'm speaking of yourself. In other words your I-thought your personal self has absolutely nothing to do with your reality. There is no personal self in reality. There is no doer in reality. There is no one to judge anything in reality. Reality means silence. No thoughts, no evaluation, no trying to understand, there is only a total surrender.

There is no thought or worry about the body. What work it should do. Where it should live. How it should sustain and maintain itself. This has all been worked out for you. When you first imagined that you were a body, even the imagination of the body, the imagination that you are a body has all been preconceived. In other words even the delusion is in your side.

What I'm trying to tell you is you have absolutely nothing to worry about. Nothing to be concerned about. Nothing to react to. Nothing to try to change. Keep yourself still. You will find that your body will do whatever it came here to do. It knows what to do. Your job is to remember that you are not the body. You are not the mind that thinks, thinks and thinks. You begin to observe your mind thinking. You begin to become the witness to your thoughts. You become the witness to all of your external affairs because you are remembering that all of your external affairs are merely thoughts projected by your mind. When you stop reacting the projection stops and you return to your bliss state. You have to learn to leave the world alone.

I was talking to a seventy year old man in the park today and he was telling me how he was concerned about the world condition. He's worried about what's going on in Russia. He's worried about the country. I asked him, "How many more years do you think you've got left on this earth? What are you doing with your time?" And he said, "I'm trying to improve the world." And I explained to him that he first has to understand who he is and then see if he wants to improve the world, he didn't know what I was talking about. So he walked away from me thinking I was very strange. Of course he was right. (Students laugh)

The average person you know doesn't want anything to do with me. I always seem to say the wrong thing to the average person.

You have to vehemently make up your mind what you're going to do with the remaining years you've got left. If you happen to leave your body tomorrow you're simply going to continue from where you left off. So if you were a complainer, a troublemaker, finding fault, you will find yourself in a position where you do the same things and it will never end for you. Therefore I say to you, "Forget about everything." Begin to go backwards into your source. Negate everything. Do not allow any condition to make you feel as if something is wrong somewhere.

Now who has to do these things? The person who believes they are the body. If you can only awaken to the fact that there is no body, there is no universe, there is no God, there is no you, there is no liberation and there is no illusion, you would be home free. But you want to continue playing the game. Why do you want to do this?

Everything I shared with you about consciousness and creation is a lie. It's only a story to make you keep quiet. So people are always asking me about creation. How did it get here? Why is it here? So we talk about consciousness and how it created everything out of itself. But what is consciousness? Where did it come from? It came from nowhere for it never existed. How can you possibly understand what consciousness is with your finite thinking?

That's why a devotee doesn't try to figure these things out. They just give it up. Let go of it. There are no meditation games we have to play. There are no procedures and processes we have to go through. There is no incarnation, there is no karma. There is just nothing.

(tape break)

There is no Fred turning over the tape. (Students laugh)

It doesn't exist. We think all these things exist and become a slave to them.

Think how free you would feel if you weren't bothered by tape recorders, pencils, by pens, by paper, by thinking of what I'm talking about, just think how free you'd be. Wake up! Awaken now! That is all you have to do.

When you're sleeping at night and when you're in deep sleep, when you have a nightmare or you have a beautiful dream, things are still happening in the beautiful dream as in the nightmare. The only remedy is to awaken. The only remedy for having a dream, bad or a good dream, is to awaken!

If in your dream you meet a yogi and the yogi tells you, "I'm going to teach you a new method of meditation," and you start practicing the meditation method and the years go by, then you meet a Tibetan Lama who is going to teach you Tibetan Buddhism and you start practicing that and the years go by, then you meet a Zen teacher who teaches you the concepts of Zen, gives you a koan and you sit for hours staring at the blank wall, the years go by.

Were all those things really necessary? All you had to do was to wake up and you wouldn't have to go through all those hours and years and eons of meditation techniques, various procedures, all you had to do was wake up. You simply had to awaken, that's all you had to do. But those teachers never told you that. They told you about their procedures and how to hold your breath for twenty minutes and practicing all the siddhas, so you can achieve powers, or you can bury yourself alive for three weeks and still be alive after.

You fall in the trap. You practice all of these things when all you had to do was wake up. You have all kinds of dreams. You're dreaming your reincarnated and you have a good family then a hurricane comes and kills you and your family and then you're reincarnated again and this time you're a Tibetan monk and you die of old age and you're reincarnated as a street peddler, you go through all kinds of experiencers. It's all a dream.

So one day you meet a Sage and you ask the Sage, "Sir what is the fastest thing I have to do to become self-realized?" and the Sage says, "Wake up! That's it!" So you wake up from your dream and you find yourself in this dream. It's the same thing! This is a dream! And I'm telling you to wake up! Those who understand will awaken now.

(long silence)

SF: (tape starts abruptly with end of students question) ...I've had some observations about spiritual matters and one of them it says that through the veda's and the sutra's and they reach a point where this life is a living dream. But then it goes on to say, why do I think I am the dreamer and not the dreamed? Comment on that proposition? (R: In truth...) Sir?

R: In truth you are neither the dreamer or the dreamt, you are neither one. (SF: Yeah.) You are beyond the dreamer and beyond the dream.

SF: And I've got a tape of Krishnamurti in which he says, "Do not accept what the speaker is saying. The speaker has no authority whatsoever. He is not a teacher, he is not a guru. For if he is a teacher you are the follower and if you are the follower you destroy yourself and you destroy the teacher."

R: This is very true, I agree with that. This is why I say, "The Sage is not a person." (SF: Thank you.) The devotee is actually an extension of the Sage. But for your own benefit Fred you always quote these beautiful things and they're beautiful but what about yourself. What do you know yourself. How far have you gone on the path?

SF: I've been thinking about scripture, there is nothing the matter with scripture itself it's the way it's interpreted and even then it's interpreted by the mind and the mind itself is a myth.

R: This is true but what about Fred? Where is Fred coming from? Do you see what I mean? (SF: Yes sir.) The time comes when you have to stand naked before God. That means all the beautiful scripture that you memorized, the beautiful cliches, all of the books, the remembrances of what you read have to be given up and you have to be completely empty. It is only when you've emptied yourself entirely that your true nature is revealed. But as long as you're filled with beautiful cliches, saying of scriptures, memorizations of book passages and those are very good, yet you can only go so far with them. They come from the mind and the mind is what's keeping you back from becoming totally free. So the mind has to be completely empty. You have to become a nothing. Then you'll become something. (SF: Sri Bhagvan said, "Submit to me and I will straighten out the mind.") This is true but that is what Sri Bhagvan said, but what do you say? (laughter)

SF: Okay. (SH: You give up?) Got me right back where I started. (laughter)

R: These people say beautiful things and they were beautiful people but as far as we're concerned they could have all been liars. We don't know. Perhaps Jesus was the biggest fraud that ever lived. Perhaps Buddha was a liar. Find out for yourself. See if you can come to the same conclusion as they did by becoming your real Self. (SF: Becoming my own authority.) Becoming your Self. Not your own authority as a person but by transcending the personal I and becoming the Self, by just awakening to your Self. Or else I'll see you here fifty thousand incarnations from now. (laughter) And you'll still be caught in the scriptures. (SF: I've said I'll forget them but I haven't been able to.) (laughter) I know Fred how it feels to give up all the stuff you've been hanging onto all of these years. For so many years these passages of scripture have been your security blanket and I can see how hard it is to give them up because what will you have then? You will appear to have nothing but nothing is consciousness. Nothing is your real Self. Do not fear giving up something. You come into... (SF: It's in the mind. In other words, unconsciousness before it becomes conscious again. But that is a mind thought too.) It's all a mind thought. (SF: All psychological.) Because it is easy to say that consciousness is this before it becomes conscious but what do we really know about consciousness? Why does consciousness become anything? Does consciousness really exist? We have no idea. Find out.

SH: No idea would be valid if you had it?

R: Right. (SH: Why bother?) Don't bother. (SH: I won't.) Good. (students laugh) Henry you're hopeless. (laughs) (SH: I know.) You are a good for nothing. (SH: That's my true beauty.) Yes it is. (SH: Glad you recognize it.) You are a real good for nothing. (SH: Right on. The most beautiful thing you ever said. (laughter) You see me clearly.) Yes Henry I know you're good for nothing. (SH: Right on.)

R: Feel free to ask any question you like.

(long silence)

R: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace.

Do we have any announcements?

SM: There are some transcriptions on the table, a bit more coming in on sunday.

R: There are some transcripts on the table for you...

(tape ends) [TOC]

INVOKING THE NAME OF GOD

8th September, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. (Students: Good afternoon Robert) With all these instruments attached to me I better say something good. (laughter) It's good to be with you again. I love everyone of you with all my heart and with all my being, noone is excluded. No matter what you do I'll always love you.

I receive many phone calls as you know. People talk to me about whether or not one needs a teacher in order to awaken. I always say it's very difficult to awaken fully without the presence of a realized Master. And they always throw Krishnamurti in my face. Krishnamurti hated gurus and so forth and so on. So, this morning I brought a little book here, "At The Feet Of The Master." How many of you have read it? He wrote this when he was about 16 years old and he talks about his Master. So Ed would you like to read the Foreword?

(Ed reads)

"These are not my words they are the words of a Master who taught me. Without him I could have done nothing but through his help I have set my feet upon the path. You also desire to enter into the same path. So the words which he spoke to me will be of help to you if you obey them. It is not enough to say that they are true and beautiful. A man who wishes to succeed must do exactly what is said. To look at food and say that it is good will not satisfy a starving man. He must put forth his hand and eat. So hear the Masters words are not enough you must do what he says. Attending to every word, taking every hint. If a hint is not taken, if a word is missed it is lost forever. For he does not speak twice."

R: Continue. Read every page that is underlined, just the underlined part.

SJ: Who wrote this?

R: Krishnamurti.

(Ed continues to read)

"There are greater things than these, things which are real and lasting. When you have once seen these you desire for those others no more. God is wisdom as well as love and the more wisdom you have the more you can manifest of him."

"When you become a pupil of the Master you may always try the truth of your own thought by laying it besides his. What would the Master think about this? What would the Master say or do under these circumstances?"

Ed: (Stops reading and turns to Robert.) I think I have to read the whole paragraph not just the underlined things in order to make any sense.

Robert: Read that paragraph.

(Ed continues to read)

"When you become a pupil of a Master you may try the truth of your thought by laying it besides his. For the pupil is one with the Master and he needs only to put back his thought into the Masters thought to see it once whether it agrees. If it does not it is wrong and he changes it instantly. For the Masters thought is perfect because he knows all. Those who are not quite accepted by him cannot quite do this. But they may greatly help themselves by stopping often to think, "What would the Master think about this? What would the Master say or do under these circumstances? You must never do or say or think when you cannot imagine the Master as doing or saying or thinking."

"Be true in action never pretend to be other than you are. For all pretense is a hindrance to the pure light of truth. Which should shine through you as the sunlight shines through clear glass."

"You must guard to against small desires which are common in daily life. Never wish to shine or to appear clever. Have no desire to speak. It is well to speak little. Better still to say nothing unless you are quite sure that what you wish to say is true, kind and helpful."

"It is well to keep use even now to thinking carefully before speaking. From when you reach the initiation you must watch every word less you should tell what must not be told. Much common talk is unnecessary and foolish. When it is gossip it is wicked. So be accustomed to listen rather than to talk. Do not offer opinions unless directly asked for them. One statement of a qualification gives them thus, to know, to dare, to will and to be silent and the last of the four is the hardest of them all."

"The calm mind means also courage. So that you may face without fear the trials and difficulties of the path. It means also steadiness so that you may make light of troubles which come in everyones life and avoid the incessant worry over the little things which many people spend most of their time."

"The Master teaches that it does not matter in the least what happens to a man from the outside. Sorrows, trouble, sickness, losses, all, it must be as nothing to him and must not be allowed to affect the countenance of his mind. They are the result of past actions and when they come you must bare them cheerfully remembering that all evil is transitory and that your duty is to remain always joyous and serene. Use your thought power everyday for good purposes. Be a force from the direction of evolution. Think each day of someone whom you know to be in sorrow or suffering or in need of help and pour your loving thought upon him. Hold back your mind from pride for pride only comes from ignorance. The man who does not know, thinks that he is great, that he has done this or that great thing. The wise man knows only knows God is great. That all good work is done by God alone."

"For many people the most difficult thing in the world to learn is to mind their own business, but that is exactly what you must do. Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord and not unto men. Think how you would do a piece of work if you knew the Master was coming once to look at it. For your will must be like tempered steel if you tread the path."

"Of all of these qualifications love is the most important for if it's strong enough in a man it forces him to acquire all the rest and all the rest without it would be never sufficient."

R: Thank you Ed. So Krishnamurti wrote this when he was 16 years old.

No comment.

Again, I talk to you to many of you by phone. Some people write me letters in regard to the procedure of atma-vichara, self-inquiry. Many people make the same erroneous point in their teaching in their meditation. They make a mistake! The mistake they make in atma-vichara, self-inquiry is this: They meditate on the I-thought.

To meditate on the I-thought is like meditating on your body. It improves the ego. It makes the ego stronger. And as you realize you're trying to kill the ego, not trying to make it stronger. What you're supposed to do is to follow the I-thought to the source. Follow it, not meditate on it.

Self-inquiry has nothing to do with meditation. When you meditate you meditate on the source. Which is God, the Self, consciousness. You may spend many hours meditating on the source, this is all good but never meditate on the I-thought. The I-thought is a process that you follow from the brain back to the heart and the source is the spiritual heart which is the Self, consciousness.

There is always a tendency when you are following the I-thought to keep thinking of the I-thought. Remember you do not do this. The I-thought has to be destroyed. The I-thought, the personal self, the ego, the mind are all synonymous. They really do not exist.

Therefore when you meditate on them you're meditating on something that does not exist and you're increasing the maya. This is why you should never think of your problems or meditate on your troubles if you have any. For you are increasing them. You're making them stronger and stronger as you think about them. You want to think only of the source. Only on God.

How do you think on God? You have to invoke God's name. And what is God's name? Who can tell me?

Students: "I-am. "

R: I-am. I-am is correct. I-am is the first name of God. So when you're told to think of God, you think of I-am. This is very important, for this is your life. What you do determines what you become. Where your thoughts are that is where your heart is. Understand this, feel it.

There are many people who still believe that self-inquiry is very difficult to do and some say it's even boring. But what kind of people are these? These are the people who are really attached to the world. The troubles, the problems of the world have a very strong hold on these people. These are the people who gossip about others. Always trying to find fault. Who believe they've been hurt. When you believe all of these things, it is very difficult to practice self-inquiry, you won't like it, you will not care about it.

That's why it is written that self-inquiry is only for mature souls, meaning it's the end of the search and it is only for those people who have practiced meditation techniques or who have practiced sadhana in previous lives and are now finished with that. Now they can practice self-inquiry and go home.

Unfortunately most people are not like that. Most people are enmeshed in the world. The things of this world are very important to them. The good and the bad both. This is why we have to talk about maya so often to make you understand that the things you believe in this world are a lie no matter what they are. No matter how they look.

The wise person begins to reason this out. The first principle they think about is that everything is karmic. Everything in the relative world is karmic. Everything in this maya, in this grand illusion is karmic.

If everything is karmic, how can you blame person, place or thing for your problems? You're contradicting the teaching. And if you do not believe in the teaching you should not be here. You should be in a place that teaches you what you want to hear. But in the relative world everything is karmic, that's number one.

If everything is karmic and you have a death in the family or you get divorced or you win a million dollars or you have cancer or you have a robust strong body it is all karmic. You have absolutely nothing to do with this. Therefore what are you quarreling about? What are you upset over?

If you were walking across the street and a car passes a red light and hits you down the wise person understands this is karmic. It was karmic for the person to pass the red light and hit you down. Therefore you don't accuse the person, or hate the person or condemn the person. Of course that is what all the people do. But look at the condition the world's in. You forgive the person immediately, the person that ran you down, you forgive him.

What was it Ghandi said, the last words when he lie dying? He said, "Thank you my son." To the guy who shot him. He was thankful, because Ghandi realized that nothing can come from nothing. There is not the slightest thing that can happen to you that is not karmic. When you understand this you're at peace. You're not disturbed by your circumstances or what people do or don't do or the precarious condition the world's in. You realize the world is in collective karma. This is a world of karma.

The second understanding is, you realize that it's all preordained. Before you took on your body you knew every experience that you are going to go through until you drop your body. Just to understand this brings you peace. If a train runs you over and you have no legs left, it's preordained. Something is balancing itself out. There is no resentment, there is no hatred, there is no getting even. This is what I mean when I always say, "All is well and everything is unfolding as it should." There are no mistakes anywhere. There is absolutely nothing wrong.

The third realization you have is to know what to do. In the world of maya when anything happens to you, you do not think of the situation, you think of God. Anything, whether it's good or bad. Do not believe we're trying to improve our humanhood. You cannot improve your humanhood because it's all been worked out. Therefore when something wonderful happens to you do not become overly elated. You've deserved this, you've earned this, it's all been preordained this is karmic.

But, if you just leave it alone and rejoice in the good and weep for the bad you will continue along the path of good and bad and you will be like a leaf blowing in the wind. What you want to do is release yourself from the hold of karma and preordination. You want to transcend maya, get rid of the whole bowl of wax. Before you can practice self-inquiry the best thing you can do is think of God.

As an example; If someone does something to make you angry, instead of reacting like you always do, start chanting "I-am," to yourself with your respiration. Remember to do this. You are invoking the name of God. And if you do this everything will be worked out. Not worked out like you want it to perhaps but everything will be worked out, I can assure you of this. Everything will work itself out.

Your job is to invoke the name of God. Not to react to the situation. If you react to the situation the situation will become amplified totally out of proportion. Your feelings and your emotions will get worse as time goes by and you will have a lot of work to do to get back on the path. It makes no difference what the situation is. It makes no difference how things appear. It makes no difference what the world tells you. This is between you and God.

If you call to God, God will call back to you.

Here's an example of what I'm talking about. Approximately a year and a half ago a fellow by the name of Larry Josephson came here when we first started having meetings at Henry's house. He came about three or four times.

He called me and told me on the phone, "Robert I love being with you but I don't understand what you're talking about when you tell me everything is consciousness and the world doesn't exist, it's an illusion, it's a dream. The Self is all there is, and to practice self-inquiry. I want to do these things but I don't want to fool myself. When I do these things I know it's all intellectual but deep down I have hurt feelings."

I asked, "What is hurting you so much?" He said, "Basically what's happening, I was an accountant at MacDonal Douglas and I got laid off. I was with them for twelve years. Now I'm three months behind on my mortgage, my car payment hasn't been paid. I have two small children, a wife that is very upset because my wife never worked. And every time I want to practice self-inquiry, every time I want to be the witness all these things come up. I'm feeling my problems very deeply. So I don't think I can come back to the meetings even though I like to stay with you and see you. But I'm not ready for those teachings."

So I asked him, "Do you want a way out?" He said, "Yes." "Do you have faith in me? That's the first requisite. The reason I ask you this is because I have to give you the stuff you have to do and if you have no faith in me it will not work and you will not do it." So he paused and he said, "I have a lot of faith in you Robert but not in the teaching." I said, "Forget about the teaching for a while. How much faith do you have in me 60%, 70% a 100%?" So he said, "About 80%." "Can you make it 100%?" He laughed and he said, "I'll sure try."

"Here is what I want you to do and I want you to do it under all circumstances. Every time your feelings are hurt, whenever you think about your termination from Mac-Donald Douglas, whenever you think about not being able to pay the mortgage or the car or how your wife and children seem to be hurting because of your layoff. Think of God." And I explained to him how to do the "I-am meditation," with the respiration.

I told him, "As soon as you feel those feelings coming before they take over your body completely start chanting "I-am" to yourself. Under all circumstances whatever is happening instead of allowing those feelings, those emotions to take over, say, "I-am." You'll forget, but as you keep practicing you will remember to remember. Formally sit in meditation an hour or so in the morning where you will not be disturbed and practice "I-am" with your respiration. Before you go to sleep formally sit in meditation and practice "I am" with the respiration. During the day, whatever you do whatever happens immediately catch yourself and say, "I am." Will you do it?" He said, "I'll give it a good shot." I said, "That's not good enough. You have to vehemently make up your mind to really do it." He said, "Okay I promise I will." And that was the end of the conversation.

I hadn't heard from him in a month. One day the phone rings and I pick it up and it's him, I had forgotten all about him to tell you the truth. So he said, "This is Larry," I said, "Who is Larry?" "The guy with the problems." I said, "I remember, oh yes you were doing I-am, what happened?" He paused and he said, "Things got worse." "What do you mean?" "Well to begin with my wife and children left me. They couldn't take it any longer because they saw I wasn't going out looking for gainful employment. They heard me chanting I-am, they got disgusted and left." So I said, "How do you feel?" He said, "Okay." I said, "Will you continue this if I ask you? Remember in the beginning I said no matter what happens continue the procedure at all costs? Will you continue this?" He said, "Yes I will."

Three months passed, I received a long distance phone call from Trinidad in the West Indies and it's Larry, after he reminds who he is. He laughs and he tells, "I've got a story to tell you, you won't believe," I told him, "I'll believe anything tell me." So he said, "The last time I talked to you when I hung up the phone being in the house by myself before they were going to repossess it, I had nothing else to do so I started practicing I-am all day. And I couldn't sleep at night so I practiced I-am all night. The next morning I felt a peace that I hadn't felt in years. I just didn't care anymore and that's not me! All the things that transpired in my life didn't seem to matter any longer. I didn't even seem to care that my wife and kids left and I was surprised with it myself but it was a feeling I never had. I decided to go out and eat breakfast. After I ate breakfast I took a walk. I must've walked about two miles. When I passed the Catholic church and I heard the beautiful chimes ringing. A feeling of joy welled up inside of me. I went into the church. The organist was practicing beautiful music. I sat down, closed my eyes and proceeded to practice I-am. I went into some kind of deep trance but I was awakened by somebody weeping. I opened my eyes and a couple of aisles down from me there was a man on his knees with his hands folded weeping. I didn't even think about it I just walked over to him, sat down next to him and said, "Can I help you? Is there anything I can do?" He related to me that his father was in construction was killed when a tractor fell on him and he had just come from the funeral. I started to talk to him about predestination and how God loves him and there is a valid reason for this. We had a conversation for about a half hour. He then invited me to lunch. We went out to a restaurant and we ate and we got friendlier and friendlier. And of course one word led to another, he said, "What do you do for a living?" And I explained to him what I used to do for a living, I was an accountant. He smiled at me and said that he was the director of operations for a Kaiser Bauxite company where they mined the aluminum in Trinidad and his chief accountant retired this week, do I want the job?"

He said, "I looked at him and my eyes opened and I said, "I've never been a chief accountant how do you know if I'm qualified? You don't even know me?" And he said, "I know enough. Can you leave tomorrow I'm going back?" And here I am."

So we both had a good laugh about this, oh he also told me, "I met a girlfriend who is about fifteen younger than I am, but I'm madly in love. I feel like I did when I was twenty years old." We said goodbye and I haven't heard from him since.

Now that story lets you understand what will happen to your life if you stick to the truth. There are so many people who are wimps. As soon as something happens to them, they get a headache, something happens financially, they feel threatened at their job and they start saying, "Meditation doesn't work, self-inquiry is no good, nothing works for me." And they return to the world of relativity with it's ups and downs.

Now let's talk about you. Where are you on the spiritual path? Be honest with yourself. When you get together with your friends what do you chat about? Other people? You gossip about others? You talk about your troubles. You talk about how you've been wronged. How your wife left you for another person. How your husband divorced you. How your boss hates you. How this is wrong and how that's wrong. Do you realize what you're doing if you're doing this? You're exacerbating the condition. Things will become worse and worse. You're using the power of thoughts to increase the condition that you want to get rid of. Always realize that everything is karmic and everything is preordained. You have absolutely nothing to worry about and nothing to concern yourself about. When you can become calm mentally and your thoughts have subsided a little bit then you can go to the higher teachings. Then you can understand what I mean when I say, "The world is but a dream. It's maya." Then you can understand what I mean when I say, "All is well.

No matter how things look. All is well and everything is unfolding as it should." Then you can understand what I mean when I say, "All this is the Self and I am That." There is only consciousness, absolute reality, pure awareness and you are That!

Your mind is calm you can accept this. When your mind is disturbed, full of your own thoughts, thinking about problems. When I say, "All is well," you feel funny. When I say you are consciousness, you are not your body, you are not the doer, you are not your mind, you think I'm crazy or you don't believe me or you feel hurt because you are enmeshed in your so-called belief of problems. And even those of you who are experiencing the good life so-to-speak, you say to yourself, "I don't have to be consciousness, I don't have to be the Self, I'm having fun."

(break in tape)

...the world has nothing for you. You will function. God knows what it is you have to do. It has nothing to do with you. If you begin to act spontaneously, if you begin to live in the present and take it a day at a time you will be amazed at how this mysterious power called God will maintain and sustain you and give you untold happiness. Even in the relative world. But never outline what this happiness is supposed to be. Do not believe or think that it has to be this way or that way or it has to be this thing or that thing or you have to live in this state or that state and live with this person or that person. Forget about those things. What we call God will take care of you when you think about God. When you think about I-am. Do it! Find out for yourself and see what happens.

SU: Robert...?

R: Just a minute, just a minute. We're at the end of the tape Mary.

(pause)

Okay now we can ask questions if you like.

SU: Robert I was going to ask when you said to turn everything over to I-am. So where does the guru come in?

R: The guru is the Self. The guru is the I-am expressing. The Self and the guru and the I-am are all-pervading. So when you're turning within yourself and you are chanting I-am and turning your so called problems over to I-am, you're turning them over to the guru, to God and to the Self. They're all one because it's all-pervading.

SK: Robert, this is my first time here and two things occur to me, when I hear you say the words "I-am," all it does is like make me think of I as a separate ego because the language is not inspiring at all to me, it's just like words are dropping back on me as a special self-centered thing so it's not the kind of words that make me think in any special way. (R: Umm.) The second thing that occurs to me is that I can relate pretty much to what you're saying about the karmic thing. Except for the aspect on the relative level you seem to apply such a total passivity. For instance like if someone is addicted to cigarettes to kind of like there is nothing to really think about or we're kind of like we have to have food in order to survive even karmically we have to have nutritious food so there's decisions to be made to be getting those kinds of things. Those are only the two things that arose in me as you were speaking.

R: Thank you. You're coming from the standpoint of the ajnani. Which means the standpoint of spiritual ignorance. Which is no insult. You're speaking of the relative world. When you begin to turn within, the I-am becomes stronger and stronger for you. You begin to realize that I-am is your Self. The more you practice I-am in the silence without thinking about it the stronger you will become and will reveal itself to you.

Now as far as you're concerned you have been brought up to believe that you have to make all the decisions or else they will not be done. This is the maya, this is the ego that makes you think this and it's very strong in most people. But from personal experience I can tell you that you are not the ego. You are not the person that needs to make a decision or needs to do anything like that at all. There is a purpose why your body is here on this earth. If you get yourself out of the way it will fulfill it's purpose. It will know when and how for you to stop smoking, it will know how to make decisions.

I know it sounds unusual for you because you're here for the first time and you're hearing these things for the first time. It seems that there are two of you but no there's one. You have to transcend the thoughts, the mind and the body. You have to become still. You have to stop your thoughts. Then something else takes over that will be able to take better care for you or of you than you could ever do for yourself.

Your mind will be on I-am and yet your body will know what to do, in order to maintain and sustain it. Just like in the story I told you. The man Larry surrendered everything to I am. He became peaceful and calm. Then something happened, he didn't plan it. He was at a point where he didn't care. When he didn't care he let go. You've heard the statement, "Let go and let God?" That's what happened.

SK: Although his final words you said for him felt like this young guy getting with this young woman. It sounded to me like he still was very, kind of like stuck in a egoic sense you know, boy I'm getting now a lot of fulfillment, wonderful.

R: You cannot judge him. This is his destiny. Who are we to say if he is right or wrong? We have to leave him alone. So what he has done has brought him to that point. Who knows where he goes from thereon. It's not for us to judge. We have preconceived ideas. We're dogmatic in our views. We have been brought up to believe that things have to be a certain way. But in truth things do not have to be any kind of way. We have to leave people alone. It is not for us to say what is good or what is bad for somebody else. We should work vehemently on ourselves to become free and liberated. Then you will see if you'll make that same kind of statement. If that will bother you or not. So therefore go within yourself. Practice within yourself. Rise higher to a higher state of consciousness.

SK: When you use the word respiration does that mean you're supposed to be focussed on breathing in some way as we think of I-am?

R: You say, "I" when you inhale and "am" when you exhale. But as you practice this your views will change. You will see.

SL: Robert, earlier you were saying that...when you first started speaking you were saying that when people were meditating or when they were just chanting they were getting stuck on the I and you said as a result of that instead of concentrating on God or whatever they were going the opposite way and making their ego larger. What would one say in order to do that?

R: Oh I said... (SL: ...or how not to do that?) ...that you were meditating on the I-thought. In other words you're practicing atma-vichara, self-inquiry you're asking yourself, "Who am I? What is the source of the I?" So what you're doing is you're meditating on the I-thought and you keep thinking about the I-thought. You're not supposed to think of the I-thought or meditate on the I-thought. You're supposed to follow the I-thought. You are supposed to watch it returning to it's source and then meditate on the source.

SL: So when we kind of like get stuck in a thought, for instance if we're saying, "Who is feeling aggravated," or "Who is feeling this," you say, "I-am" and then when you get stuck on that then you kind of like try to abide in the silence and then you said give it up to God by saying, "I-am?"

R: When you say, "I-am," you have to ask yourself, "Who am I?" or "What is the source of the I?" and then you keep silent. And then you can question again, "Who am I?" (SL: So in other words not just say, "Who am I? Who am I?") Not in repetition. Not like a mantra, it's not a mantra. You get down to, you say, "To whom do these things come? They come to me. I feel this depression." Then you say, "Who am I?" and you keep still. You say, "Who am I?" again and you keep still. You allow it to happen naturally. And you will notice that the space between asking "Who am I?" becomes larger and larger. It's that space that is the I-am. (SL: For a week just do this instead of to say, "I-am?") Yes that's for meditation. (SL: Yeah but it seems like there is less room for error there.) Whatever suits you. (laughter) You do whatever you have to do but by all means you do something. (SL: I know because I was thinking I didn't want to accidentally build the ego, you know.) You only do that when you ask, "To whom does this come? To me. I feel this." And if you keep thinking about I feel this and you meditate on the I that feels this, that is the I-thought. That's a mistake. (SL: So when you say, "To whom....") You follow it and get rid of it and you say, "I-am. Who am I?"

SL: Otherwise you can do, as you suggested when you say when...like the example you gave us, that story if we're agitated and we use the respiration and say, "I-am." (R: Yes.) "I-am" to target the pattern?

R: To yourself. Even if someone is looking at you and screaming at you. As you watch the person screaming put a smile on your face, do not react and chant "I-am" to yourself. (SL: Thank you.)

SU: Robert I don't understand how you follow the I back to the heart. What process is that?

R: The process is going through, "Who am I?" You ask, "To whom does this come? It comes to me. I feel this." As you're saying I feel this you follow the I back to the heart. And then you say, "Who am I? Who am I?"

SL: So when you follow it back to the heart you just think, "Who is feeling this?" and then you think of the heart?

R: No, first you say, "To whom does this come? It comes to me. I feel this. Who is the I that feels this?" And as you're saying this you imagine the I going back from the brain to the heart centre. (SL: Focussing on it?) But then you think and you meditate on the source which is the heart.

SM: There is a bee in from the door. (SK: Insects.)

R: What's a little bee amongst friends, he won't eat much. (laughter)

SB: Robert when you ask "Who am I?" and you release your hold on the attention and the thoughts. You automatically go back to the heart without imagining anything?

R: Yes. But for those who have to imagine it that's okay. (SB: And if you're doing the "I-am meditation," and the mind slows down and stops is it okay to leave off the words?) When the mind slows down and stops it will do so of it's own accord and you won't have anything to say about it. (SB: So you don't have to keep repeating "I-am?") No. It will take care of itself when you start the procedure.

SE: Isn't the primary object of practicing "Who am I?" to invert consciousness so that you break off contact with the external world and focus on the witness or try to find the witness? And thereby end the attachments with the external?

R: True. When you focus on the I, that I is consciousness. Consciousness knows itself and you will come to realize that you are not a body or a mind or a doer. That will all happen of it's own accord. As you continue to practice those feelings that you are not a body or a mind or the doer becomes stronger and stronger and stronger. Until you no longer have to ask any question and you no longer have to say, "Who am I?" or get involved with witnessing or anything else. The witnessing comes without the practicing of "Who am I?" You can merely watch your thoughts, watch your actions, watch what you're going through, then you're witnessing. But when you get down to "Who am I?" that is beyond witnessing. That transcends witnessing because the I has returned to it's source beyond the witness, beyond the question. It has become pure awareness and you have become the source. (SE: Witnessing occurs then at the level of phenomena?) Yes. (SE: And what you're talking about is beyond the level of phenomena? Before the phenomena or transcending phenomena.) Yes. (SE: And witnessing doesn't exist because there is nothing to witness?) Yes, there is no one to witness and there is nothing to witness. There is no object and there is no subject.

SB: So witnessing is still on the level of the attention which still is the mind? (R: Yes.) The mind witnessing everything but when you do the self-inquiry and fall back into consciousness then you're transcending the attention and the mind and all?

R: Witnessing is the same as beingness. You are and you're aware of it so you're the witness. But you have to go beyond that where there is nothing and become absolutely free. (SE: And the way to do that is to stay in the "I-am." Just rest there?) Rest in "I-am," or just wake up.

SY: Robert when you first went over to study with your teacher, to study with Ramana...

R: I didn't really go to study with him. (SY: But you were with him for three years?) I went there to confirm my craziness. (SY: What did he teach you, what did you do? How did your days go?) Of course I wasn't with him all day. The days went beautifully.

SD: Did you meditate or did you...?

R: I used to go into the ashram and sit on the floor with everybody else. He came to visit me in my quarters twice the first time I went there. After that I just sat in the hall with everybody else.

SY: So is there anything that... I guess you've said it all right now, huh?

R: What else do you want? (SY: I don't know?) (laughter) You have to get to the point in your mind where there are no thoughts, there are no questions, there are no feelings, there is just the Self.

SL: Robert is 'om' the name of God the same as I-am?

R: No I-am is higher. Om is the first primal sound that created the universe, so om is a part of maya. (SL: So we don't want to meditate with 'om' then?) If you like to meditate with om go ahead. (SL: Well if it isn't beneficial...?) What 'om' does for you, it makes you concentrate deeper. It makes you one pointed. It makes your mind quiet. So that you can practice self-inquiry. 'Om' is a part of the yoga system. But this is beyond yoga, it's beyond om.

SB: Robert if we're doing a lot of the self-inquiry and we're hearing a lot of the sounds, the om coming up should we just leave it alone?

R: Realize it's from the mind. All phenomena comes from the mind. And ask yourself, "To whom does this come?" Whatever comes up during meditation is from the mind. So the procedure is always the same. Whether you see brilliant lights, geometrical figures, Saints Sages, sounds, light currents, whatever you see, whatever you hear all comes out of the mind. You therefore have to question, "To whom does this come?" And follow the I-thought that is experiencing these things.

It is the I-thought that is experiencing all of these occult things. When the I-thought goes back into the chest area to the spiritual heart everything vanishes. Your body, sounds, lights, the world, the universe, God, there is no longer any liberation, there is nobody who needs any liberation, there is no longer any desire for liberation, nobody was ever not liberated and all is well.

SB: Robert, Ramana said that all would disappear, I think there was a question, will the world still appear. He said the world will not appear, when you are resting in consciousness. I never understood that because in sahaja samadhi you can still see the world?

R: Seeing the world and the world appearing is two different things. You see the world but not as the world. (SB: No.) You see the world as consciousness. The example is the chalkboard and the forms on the chalkboard. You draw many forms on the chalkboard, man, woman, objects. They are drawn on the chalkboard. Then you can erase them and draw more forms. The chalkboard is the Self, the forms are the world. So the world and it's forms are superimposed on the Self. The Self knows itself as the Self and there is nothing else. Yet all the forms appear as a superimposition. So the Jnani is able to see the forms as the Self. The ajnani sees the forms as forms and does not see the Self.

SJ: That's pretty selfish. (R: (laughs) Well why allow it to happen?)

SX: Just a stupid question Robert? (R: No it's not.) Is there a need to have so many people in the world, like over five billion people. Maybe there is a need for the exponential growth of consciousness Robert?

R: Since the world is an illusion and since everything is preordained and predestined and everything is karmic then the world appears as it does. There are times when there are many people in the world. When there is too many people there is a war and people are wiped out then there is less people. There are calamity's, catastrophe's, cataclysms, nature takes care of itself. When you see too many people that is your point of view. What you are really saying is God does not know his business because you think there are too many people. But everything is unfolding as it should and everything is right just the way it is. Subsequently your job is to find out who you are and to know the truth about yourself. Then you will see everything in a different point of view.

SX: I was reading about teachers who said there are so many souls so there has to be so many people so that these people can all go through different experiences? (R: Why?) That's what I'm asking.

R: When you have a dream you may dream that you get married and you have 25 children and then you ask yourself the question and your husband, "Why do we have so many children? This is ridiculous." But then you wake up it was only a dream. So it is with what happens in the world. Everything appears a certain way but none of it exists. Therefore with whom will you identify? With the relative world and it's phenomena or with the Self?

If you identify with the world and it's phenomena then you have a big problem and you will always try to fix things. To make things better, to improve the world. Since the beginning of creation if there ever was a creation people have been trying to improve the world. Look at the world today is there any improvement? There have been peace-nicks, war mongers, all kinds of people in this world since the beginning of time. And their ego's are so big they think they're going to make changes.

The war mongers believe if they control the world they will make the world a better world by doing things their way. The peace-nicks believe that they can bring peace to the whole world and everybody will live happily ever after. Nothing like this will ever happen. The world goes up and down for millions of years. It gets to a point where there is a semblance of peace and everything appears to be peaceful and then it goes down again to the dark ages, man's inhumanity to man and there are dastardly acts taking place. Then things get better again and it goes on and on adinfinuqm. there is no end. So take your mind off the world and put your mind on the Self.

(A bee flies into the satsang)

The bee will not disturb you if you do not disturb it.

SI: Robert I have a couple of questions about this lad who said, "I am" and ended up in a good job and a sixteen year old woman. (students laugh)

R: So you want to know how to do it? (laughter) (SI: Yeah, exactly how did he hold his mouth?) (laughter continues) The second question is, according to your experience was this person predestined to end up in Trinidad in that situation?) Of course. (SI: Was he predestined to say, "I am" for a day?) Yes. (SI: So, where does that leave much room for aspiration and effort?) We remember the only freedom we've got is to not react to the situation and to turn within. That's the only freedom we have. (SI: That doesn't include saying I-am though, I-am is a grosser thing than that?) I-am is a grosser thing than that. Just do not react to anything that's your freedom. When you do not react to anything I-am will come by itself. And turn within and don't worry about anything else. Then everything will take care of itself. Never be too analytical about these things. Make it simple for yourself. Do not look into the intimate details because if you do you're using your mind a lot and we're trying to get rid of the mind. We wish to destroy the mind not to make it stronger by thinking about all the details.

SE: I think Larry's in jail for tax evasion now he hasn't practiced "I am." (laughter)

R: Could be?

(laughter as tape ends)

[TOC]

SILENCE, THE SPIRITUAL CENTER

12th September, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace, peace. Good evening. (Students: Good evening.) I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to be with you again.

You have absolutely nothing to worry about. No matter how things may appear, all is well. There never was anything wrong, and there's absolutely nothing wrong now. You can only feel this when you understand your true nature, when you feel that you're not the body-mind phenomena, you are not the doer. You are the imperishable Brahman, absolute reality, consciousness. This is your true nature. You cannot be both. You have to come into your own and realize your divinity, that you are pure intelligence, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda, ultimate oneness, or you believe you're a human being.

If you investigate, you will see that you cannot possibly be a human being. Human being is just a name given to an entity, for we don't know what else to call it. You're always changing, changing, changing. You're not the same person you were ten, twenty years ago. When you go to sleep and you're in deep sleep, you forget about yourself. When you dream you forget about yourself. When you're awake, like you are now, you forget about your dreams and your deep sleep.

Therefore I ask you, what is your true state? Are you the person who dreams? Are you the person who is in deep sleep? Are you the person who exists right now? Who are you? What are you?

You can only find out by investigation. You begin to see that your personal self is only a thought, an idea, a bad dream. You are not the person who is born, goes through the vicissitudes of life, dies, and that's it. When I tell you, "You were never born," it sounds ludicrous. When I tell you, "You can never die," it sounds even worse. Yet if you investigate and you trace it back, where did the first born come from? Who gave it birth? You can go into the story of creation. That will appease some people, but the thinking person knows it's a story.

In a dream there is no story of creation. You begin to dream just where you are. It just appears. The dream comes out of you, becomes externalized. There's a sky, there are stars, there are people. All sorts of things are happening. You go through experiences in your dream. You are happy, you're sad, you're mad. But yet when you wake up, the dream is gone.

This life is called the mortal dream. You have to catch yourself when you take life too serious, and compare it with a dream. When you take your dream serious, and you become violently upset over something, and I try to explain to you, you're dreaming, you will never believe me, because the dream world is very powerful at that time.

The doctor has diagnosed cancer, you've got two months to live. But I tell you, "You're dreaming." Do not put your energy on that. Rather turn within. See your reality. Understand that this is a dream. Well you chase me away. You do not want to accept that, because no one else believes it. Yet you wake up in the morning, and it was just a dream.

Think about the problems, the wonderful experiences, everything you've been through since you were born. It appears so real, doesn't it? And even now you are a product of all your samskaras, all of your preconceived ideas, your concepts, and how you were brought up and trained. This is your life. You do not know any other life but this. Yet every person seems to come from a different upbringing. Every person has their own beliefs, their own ideas, what's right, what's wrong, what is good, what is bad.

That's how wars start. That's how man's inhumanity to man begins. When you believe I'm right and you're wrong. When you begin to see things that are not right and you want to correct them. No one has ever told us, instead of doing that, dive within yourself and see perfection. See the atman. See unlimited bliss. Begin to dwell on the reality, and soon your world will become reality.

When you go to a movie, there's a beginning, a middle, and an end. What is left? The screen. The movie was shown on the screen and all sorts of things transpired in the movie. People were killed, people got married, people had children, the world was bombed, yet the screen never changes. The screen remains the same. There's a story on the screen about a person who was born, he's sexually abused by his parents, he goes through all kinds of horrifying experiences, he becomes a man, becomes a serial killer. All this is going on, on the screen.

Then again you see a prince. A baby is born a prince. He grows up into beautiful circumstances, has everything in life, doesn't seem to have a problem. This is too going on, on the screen. But there's an end, and all the images are gone. The screen remains, untarnished, unblemished, the same as it was yesterday, and the week before, and the year before.

My friends, your true nature is like the screen. You are not the image that appears to go through different trials and tribulations, or appears to be enjoying life to the utmost. They're both impostors. You are like the screen. There never really was an image. The image appeared for a time. It appeared. It appeared due to the fact that if you try to grab the image on the screen, what would you grab? The screen. That's why it is an appearance.

It is hard to believe that your life, what appears right now, is unreal, simply because you have identified with it strongly. This is what is called maya, the grand illusion. You have strongly identified with your appearance of life, and you are reacting accordingly. Every time you react you are accruing karma. Accruing karma simply means the image is continuing again and again, the ego becoming stronger and stronger. And even when you leave this body, it continues into another body. There's no end.

You go through many cycles, some good, some bad. You have all kinds of experiences. But until you realize that you are not the experiencer and there's no experience, you will go through the cycles of karma again, again, again, ad infinitum, no end. It is only when you get tired of playing the game called maya, playing a part called leela, that you decide to find the answer to your existence. You have to go through the game over and over again, and finally begin to search.

You become a seeker. You begin to read spiritual philosophy. You may find a teacher and you're on the path. Depending on what you do, this determines where you go from there. When you come to a meeting like this, when you attend a satsang like this, you can rest assured that you have done spiritual work in a previous life. You deserve to be here to understand the reality, to understand how to transcend the mind, the ego, the personal self.

As you begin to practice self-inquiry, witnessing, the I am meditation, things begin to happen. You're searching for self-realization, whereas all this time, self-realization has been exactly where you are. You have always been that, yet you believe you've got to search, you've got to read books, deep philosophies, when all you had to do was to wake up. All you had to do was awaken, just as when you awaken in the morning from your dream, you awaken. It's the same thing now. You simply have to awaken.

Yet what is keeping you from awakening? Your attitudes. You are attached to your emotions and you are seeing things in your life that either appear wrong or appear either appear right. As long as you have a concept of right or wrong, you can never transcend your body and become free.

Some people ask, "But things are right and wrong in this world. I have to take a stand." My question to those people are always the same. "To whom is there right and wrong? Who feels right and who feels wrong?" Only the ego. In reality there's no right and there's no wrong. There are just experiences of a dream unfolding. Yet the dream doesn't exist. It never did. The world, as it appears right now, does not exist. It never did. The way you believe you are, does not exist. It never did.

There is only one and you are that. There never were others. There's only the one. Yet most of you cannot feel this. You're so identified with maya that the world of appearances cause you to feel emotional. You therefore have to work on yourself. You have to do something to yourself, to help you become free. If you leave yourself alone, and you do nothing, you'll go through life, after life, after life, on various planets. You'll have various bodies, female, male, maybe other bodies. It will never end for you.

Therefore you begin to question your existence. That is the first step. You question your existence. You question your existence by inquiring, "Who am I? Where did I come from? What is my real nature?"

You start this early in the morning, as soon as you open your eyes. Instead of being cognizant of the world, you leave the world alone for a few minutes. You question yourself, you ask yourself, "Who is awake?" and the answer comes, "I am. I am awake."

Then you realize, "I also slept, I slept well, I had a good dream," and you start to wonder about this. This same I that is now awake, is the same I that had a good dream, and the same I that slept well. "Who is this I? What is it's source?"

There is a spiritual center on the right side of your chest. You may call this the God center or consciousness. It is on the right side of your chest. You begin to trace the I-thought back to that center from whence it came. Once the I goes back into the center, you become liberated.

Therefore the whole idea of spiritual practice, in Advaita Vedanta, is to follow the I-thought back to the source and become free. When the I appears to leave the spiritual center it goes into the brain, and you become cognizant of I am, I am the body, I think. Then you create a world and a universe out of your mind, and the world appears to you as reality. This all happens in a split second. That's why you're not aware of it.

In other words, while you were sleeping the I rested in the spiritual center. As soon as you awaken, in a split second, the I goes into the brain, you become cognizant of a body, and then a world, and then a universe, and the mortal dream begins. So, you have to vehemently make up your mind that you really want to awaken. That's the first prerequisite.

How do you know if you really want to awaken? You are sick and tired of the world. You're a person who is no longer trying to change bad for good, for you realize they're both impostors. You understand that the good lasts for so long, then there is bad. The bad lasts for so long, then there is good. You get old, you leave your body, and the game continues. You have to be disgusted with this first, I kid you not. As long as you believe you're enjoying the world and enjoying your life as a human being, you cannot awaken.

It's like being in a dream and you're having a wonderful dream. You just don't want to wake up. But all things in the dream must come to an end and change. If you realize that the only thing permanent in life is change, then you will treat the good things in your life the same way as the bad things in your life. You will not become emotional over them, and you will not be attached to them. That's the only time you can go further. As long as you still want to play the game of maya, and act out your part, there's no sense in practicing self-inquiry, for your attachment will keep you back from reality. But for the person who has gone through many lives and is ready to give it all up, that person can practice self-inquiry.

A question arises. "When I become self-realized, do I have to go live in a cave, or in the forest, or become a hermit?" On the contrary, there are Jnanis in every field of endeavor. Yet who asked that question? The ajnani. This is one of the things you should not concern yourself over. Everything will always work itself out.

Many of you call me on the telephone and tell me you're afraid of awakening. You think you'll be different, your family will leave you or you'll leave your family, you'll lose your job. This is all ignorance. None of that will happen. The only thing that will happen is you'll be awake, and you'll see the world as a superimposition on the Self. That's all. You will have exceedingly happy moments in your life when you're in delusion, but the happy moments go. When you're awake, you stay in unlimited bliss. You become unlimited bliss. There are no longer any mood swings. You're always the same. Joy, bliss, happiness, they're all rolled into one, and they are you.

So the sincere student does not worry about the results, or what might happen. They're ready to go for it. When something in their heart opens and they're ready to go for it 100%, they are led to the right teacher, who can show them the way, and they follow the instructions of the teacher. That comes first in their life. Those are the beings who awaken into bliss.

You begin to practice when you get up in the morning. You realize it takes a split second for the I-thought to go back into the brain, so you keep inquiring, "What is the source of the I?" and you keep silent. You can imagine in your mind, if you want to, the I-thought going back from the brain into your heart. You begin to cogitate. You begin to focus on your spiritual heart. How do you do that? Through silence. You ask, "Who am I?" and you keep still. You see how still you can become before thoughts begin to annoy you. When the thoughts come, you inquire, "To whom do they come? They come to me. I think them." There's I again. It's always the same I. You therefore follow the I back to the spiritual center which is silence.

As you keep on practicing day after day, as you keep on doing your homework, the day will come when something happens. Many people give up too easy. Never look for results. This is why, even before you get to self-inquiry, another thing you have to develop is humility. Total humility. You forget about what people say, what people do. You observe the world, but do you not react to it, and you begin to practice every day. You begin to understand that the I-thought doesn't exist. It never did.

This is why you do not concentrate on the I-thought. You concentrate on the source, which is the Self, God, consciousness. If this becomes difficult for you, you practice surrender. That's where the humility comes in. You surrender your body, your mind, your ego, your affairs to God, or to the Self, or to your heart. You no longer need or want anything. You give it all up to God.

I know some of you are wondering, "How will I function? What will happen to me?" I can assure you, if you truly surrender, you will always be taken care of. You will always be guided and directed to where you have to be, to do those things that are necessary for you to do at this time. You become spontaneous. You learn to live in the eternal now. You always bring your mind back, your thoughts back, to the present. You remember to catch your thoughts when you start thinking.

Your thoughts will always think about the past, and worry about the future. This is the nature of your mind. Yet you keep remembering to bring it all back to the now. You stay centered in the now. You surrender everything, and you keep inquiring, "Who am I? How did this body arise?" The body, the I-thought, the mind, the ego, are all the same.

Soon you will awaken and you will understand that there is only the Self. There never was anything else.

Your real nature is like a universal screen. On that universal screen planets are being born, universes come and go. The earth is only a small dot on the screen. You are that screen. You are nothing else. You are Parabrahman, all-pervading. You are self-contained consciousness, absolute reality, emptiness, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda, I am that I am. That is your real nature.

Therefore make up your mind. Whom shall I follow? Shall I follow my ego, my emotions and what appears to be real, or shall I begin to ignore those things and dive into my Self, becoming free? The choice is yours.

SJ: Robert, is there some little room at some point, can one dive into and embrace of what's so-called out there and then begin to realize? (R: Embracing what?) Embracing...you said there was either one or the other, right? (R: Umm.) Embracing your emotions or diving into yourself? At some point isn't there some kind of - where there are some paths involved which transcend an emotion by using it or diving into it, that is poignant to us or spiritual.

R: Well all of the paths, and really of the practices are a hindrance. They appear to be working for you sometimes. But all they are doing is keeping you on the path. The secret is to wake up and stop thinking you're on a path. In the beginning stages you can say, "I'm on the path." But as you advance, "What path?" There is no path, there is only the Self. (SJ: In that vein you are embracing the Self really, when you embrace anything so called outside of yourself?) Well you're not really embracing the Self, you become the Self. That's your nature. That's what you really are. Everything else is false.

SJ: What I'm getting at is - if it is appropriate for me at any given time to embrace the Self outside. You know it's like diving into yourself inward but you're diving outward into the Self? (R: How do you do that?) I don't know, I don't know, maybe it was just a feeling from me about that.

R: If you're diving outward you're diving into illusion because anything outside of yourself is a projection of the mind. Therefore anything that you entertain outside of yourself is a total illusion. It doesn't bring you nearer. The only way to do it is to realize that you are an emanation of your mind as a body. Your body, the universe, everything in it emanates out of your own mind. So you want to get rid of your mind and the illusion will become transmuted. So you investigate what the mind is. You dive deep into the heart and you become free.

SJ: Yeah, I guess I'm talking about something that wasn't used as a practice or anything but that was just have been practiced? (SK: But Jay guru worship is like, you know, if you worship a guru and he's outside of you, so in what you're saying about, if you dive into love or becoming one with your guru and that's an outer practice.) Yeah that is what I'm trying to...

R: Well worshipping your guru is a waste of time. Worshipping the Self as the guru is where it's at. The true sat-guru is really your Self, you're not separate. If you're seeing a guru separate from your Self that's further delusion and you could be sucked back into bondage very fast.

SJ: But you also can transcend that situation you're going through? (R: By what?) There seems to be an element that you can transcend whatever one is believing about it and realize the truth just through that. Though it doesn't occur as much...I mean just as much as it can suck you in it can also lead you to realization.

R: There is only one way to become realized and that is to understand that the world is a movie, the universe is maya, only the Self exists and awaken to the Self by diving deep within. (pause) I understand what you mean, but those paths and those ways are difficult. It takes you years and years when all you have to do is to dive within yourself.

SJ: Yeah I'm sorry I mentioned something that wasn't in and of itself, and I agree with you totally, one should always go within, but once in a while also there seems to be some things that occur in one and some other things along with it that lead one to self-realization.

R: The changes appear to be there, but you and I both know that there are people who are on spiritual paths and have been on spiritual paths for 50 million incarnations and they never get off it because they are worshipping something external to themselves.

SR: What I hear you saying Robert and Jay, and my understanding and I may not be understanding it correctly is, I hear Jay suggesting that another way less direct is to allow oneself to become absorbed in something external, maybe an activity, maybe a person but in an egoless fashion. And that egoless fashion I was interpreting as the key to slipping back to the state where you were wanting or suggesting that we go and then I hear you saying that, yes that could work but it's a very long route and chances are that it'd take a lot longer than the more direct route that you're suggesting. Am I understanding or...?

R: Yes. If you are egoless you are the Self and there is no path, there are no others, there is no God, there is no universe, there is no realization, there is no liberation, there is no bondage. Therefore if you are the Self, you are the Self and that's it. But if you are trying to find the Self outside of yourself that's a bad dream. For there is no Self outside of your Self. (SH: That's an impossible undertaking.) Of course. Only the Self is the Self, there is nothing outside. No thing exists outside the Self. Therefore when you start fooling around with yoga's and mysticism and occult sciences you are perpetuating illusion and you get stuck. You have to give it all up, surrender everything and become free.

Most people still feel they have to change bad for good. Remember they're all human attributes. We're not trying to change bad for good. We just want to awaken out of good and out of bad and become the imperishable Self which we already are. Therefore there is nothing in the external world that can do it for you. I know some of you are thinking, "Well how about you Robert? You're doing this for us, you're helping us?" What is really happening is I-am your Self. The one Self is operating and it appears to be going all through us. There is only the one, there are no others.

SQ: Could you tell us about...I heard that you said that you had an enlightening experience when you were fourteen? Did you feel your mind going into your heart? What was your experience? How did you get along with your parents? Your friends? What was their reaction? How did you...?

R: Well we've been over that before. It's all in the lessons. I'd rather not get into that right now. (SQ: Alright.) By listening to my experiences you do not become free, you become excited. (students laugh) Rather do the work and make something happen to yourself.

SF: Last week Robert I asked you if it were not so that everything in duality is short of the goal and you also said that nothing in duality is of any importance. (R: Correct.) Thank you.

SP: Robert I've often had a concept of the nature of objects and the disillusion of objects including my own ego or idea. I think of the stars and how in their own time the stars will break up and dissolve and that there is nothing in this universe that will hasten or slow down that process that there is some kind of mechanism, and I understand that this is a concept and that I have but it seems to me that in terms of my desire to be free and watching impediments, you might like the forgetfulness or whatever, it could be the attachment to the world or the illusion that I identify with my body, with my mind. I have this sense that in a way that I have nothing to do to speed up that process of letting go, is that correct?

R: That's a very high state. When you realize that there is really nothing you have to do. That everything unfolds by itself. Everything takes care of itself. It's a paradox. First you have to believe you have to practice spiritual disciplines and after practicing spiritual disciplines you come to the conclusion there is really nothing you have to do. When your time is ready, you will become who you are supposed to be. But to get to that point you have to practice spiritual disciplines first, so it appears. (laughter) To find out that you don't have to practice anything. If you center yourself and you live in the eternal now, acting spontaneously, everything comes faster. Therefore the main thing you have to do is to keep yourself from thinking. Stop your thoughts at all costs. Slow down your mind.

SP: I'm not clear though, the slowing down the mind, again this is kind of a general impression that I have of many people who practice different spiritual practices is to slow down their minds, even that though does not necessarily bring you to freedom. There are many people who seem to have, again it's impossible for me to know, but who have quiet minds who aren't free and maybe the process is a longer one or one that is out of..

R: They appear as if they're not free. Yet if you really slow down your mind you have to become free because it is your thoughts that keep you bound. A person may appear to slow down their mind externally but internally all kinds of things are going on. That's why you can never judge another person. Work on yourself, become free and then you'll see.

SH: Who slows the mind down. Who is to slow it down?

R: Your mind slows down when you stop thinking. It slows itself down. (SH: Who is this you, you continue to refer to?) You is noone. Noone exists as you. (SH: If you as ego is going to slow the mind down, this won't work.) It will not work as long as you believe you are ego slowing the mind down. (SH: But who slows it?) Nobody. (SH: Nobody?) But it appears as if it slows down. (SH: What brings that about?) Illusion. (SH: I mean to slow it?) It's illusion, it's all illusion. It appears as if your mind slows down. (SH: Then in rapidity of the mind is equally an illusion?) Of course. (SH: Yeah.) You also appear to awaken, when you've been awake all the time. (SH: (laughs) Okay.)

SG: So the idea to hasten or slowing down the process that's just a concept of time. So if the minds not working there is no time to worry about whether things are slowing down or speeding up?

R: Nothing slows down, nothing speeds up. (SG: It's just a concept of time so time is the mind.) When talking to you sometimes we use those contradictory terms. But there is absolutely nothing to slow down or nothing to speed up. You are already free.

SG: What is all this stuff about the right side, the right side of the chest, that seems...?

R: Again that doesn't exist but you have to do something. (SG: Why?) (students laugh) Wake up! You have to wake up, but because you won't wake up then we have to talk and you hear me babbling all day. Simply because you will not wake up. When you wake up none of this exists. It has never existed and it will never will exist. But by talking to each other something may give inside of you, sometimes, and it may be an awakening process. So when I'm sharing this information I'm sharing nothing.

SH: When you say that none of this exists or never existed that is totally intrusive. That everything perceptible, thinkable or cognizable. (R: Correct.) That would have to be otherwise you'd be a liar. (laughter) Who would be? No body of course. (laughs) That famous character.

SL: Robert is the process of the awakening happen in lieu of glimpses in ones life or does it have to be in one fell swoop?

R: The true awakening comes at once. Prior to that you appear to have glimpses. But the glimpses are not the true awakening. (SL: Because I didn't stay awake? I had a couple of glimpses in my life but I didn't stay there, I wish I could of.) They were not total glimpses. (SL: Right.) The total glimpse is now and forever and there is no going back.

SG: So glimpses are another part of the dream? (R: Yes.) The dream that you're enlightened? (R: Yes.)

SH: They're clearer part of the dream, they're less dense but they're nonetheless dreams.

R: Umm, it's all a dream.

SF: It could be a glimpse of the type that it's not a dream? (R: Say that again?) A glimpse of the reality would indicate reality is not a dream?

R: A glimpse of reality makes you want to go further, but it's all part of the maya. When one is awakened there is no past, there is no future, there is nothing. (SF: There is no going back to maya?) There is no going back at all.

SH: There is no going? In any direction.

R: There is no coming, there is no going. There never was a coming or a going. There is noone to go anywhere.

SG: What sort of Self is... you can't conceptualize it, but it seems like you used to learn a God is and always was and this is sort of like the Self never was and never will be. (R: You can say that yes.) The Self is the absence of everything? (R: Yes.) It's sort of a void?

R: That's a good way to put it. Yet it's not a void, it's beyond description. (SG: So it's the absence of everything including any description of it.) Exactly.

SJ: The absence of anything that you can conceive of? (R: It's absence of the void too.)

SH: That's just another concept? (R: Yes. That is why words are so inadequate.)

SV: Robert I saw a program last week it was on the mind and it had to do with this man who was this brilliant conductor. And developed a virus which affected the memory part of his brain, the attention part. And they said this man, the term they used was he lived in the eternal presence. Because he had maybe two minutes worth of memory. So every two minutes it was as if he was constantly or continually awakening. And from his level of perception it was a nightmare because he couldn't carry on a normal life. But he was in a constant state of awakening and in fact he committed himself to as if he was coming out of a coma. And he put down in his diary, "I am now awake. I am now alive." And he would put down the time but it was like every two minutes. And this was his life. And from that standpoint the eternal value was a nightmare.

R: This is a flaw of the mind. It has to do with a mental concept. It's part of the mind it's not a real awakening. A real awakening would be bliss and joy. It would be entirely different. It's obviously blunted his brain, that was not functioning right.

SV: Right but it was interesting because part of the practice is to live in the now. (R: Umm.) And that means to forgive the past and not to focus on future. But carried to it's ultimate state at this level this is what this man actually was doing. He had no memory of the past and he could not even think about the future. And all he could do was focus in this time in the moment. It was just interesting to be shown this but as you said from a mental level, at this level of life it becomes a nightmare because he still used the mind as an avenue of awareness and the body as a means of communication.

R: A real awakening is you're cognizant of the world. You can make decisions, you live a normal life but you realize what the world is. You always realize you're like the screen. And everything in this world, this universe is a superimposition on yourself. So you're able to function and you're able to do things and go through life. That's the true awakening. But what you're referring to is a mental flaw.

SV: My mistake, I didn't mean it was a true awakening. (R: Yes.) I was just using it as an example of the eternal mind. (SG: It sounded like he was anticipating at the end of two minutes he went back into the state of mental oblivion...?) He wasn't anticipating anything he was constant awakening two minutes before he felt he was in a coma. He couldn't remember feeling anything, he couldn't remember hearing anything. He couldn't remember carrying out a conversation so in effect every two minutes was an awakening for him, joyous and being awakened and he would have joy at seeing somebody that was in front of him and he would think this was the first time he was seeing this person and he was happy to be out of the coma. But he wasn't able to carry out a normal life of course.

SU: Robert when a person becomes fully awakened they're totally not attached to anything in this world, right? They're just not attached to anything or they don't have any attachment. Would that pose problems for those around one, family. How does one deal with that?

R: There is really no problem. For a true awakening is an embodiment of love and compassion and you're able to function as I mentioned before but you're only aware of the reality that everything is maya. Everything is an illusion, it doesn't really exist and you can see it. So you're able to function with your family with a greater love and a greater understanding and a greater peace.

SG: Robert what is the point of all of this? (R: All of what?) (students laugh)
(long silence)

R: Yes Toku. (As Robert addresses dog.)

SH: (Henry the dogs owner says) He snuck up behind you. (laughs)

SZ: When one is dreaming things happen of their own accord. One cannot rearrange the dream, one cannot do anything? Things happen also in the usual awakened state. Things happen of their own accord. In the dreaming no matter what you try to rearrange or do things will happen on their own? Same thing in the awakened state. In our state we try to do whatever for instance like doing self-inquiry is doing something inside of the dream. (R: Umm.) To what effect, nothing is going to be arranged to that, the awakening will happen on it's own?

R: Umm. The awakening will happen on it's own is true but part of the dream is practicing self-inquiry to hasten the process. That's also part of the dream.

SZ: Because that is not considered in the usual dream. There is no way, is there some impulse that makes you awake when you're dreaming?

R: There are many people who have a dream that they're practicing spiritual practices in their dream and they awaken and they also wake up and they're here.

SZ: No what I mean is in the usual regular dreaming state of the ajnani, for instance the awakening will happen when it's time for the awakening to happen, (R: Umm.) ...because they could be in whatever circumstances in the dream and try as they may they will still follow the illusion. (R: Umm.) I think the same happens in this awakened state... (R: Yes.) ...you want to wake up, no matter how much you want to awaken from the illusion even trying self-inquiry, trying meditation, trying spiritual practices. You won't take to nothing because this is just part of the dream even the effort? (R: Of course, it's all part of the dream.) What I mean to say is that awakening is part of karma? It will happen whenever it has to happen. Regardless of the efforts one does in the awakened state in the ajnani position.

R: The only freedom we've got from karma is not react to conditions. To dive deep within and wake up. That's the freedom we've got.

SZ: But if we do that with the hope of waking up it still means that you're doing something of purpose and so you are more entrenched into the dream of the awakened state.

R: But you were meant to do that. That's a part of it. (SZ: Oh.) You were meant to do that and awaken. This is what you were meant to do. Do you follow? (SZ: Yes, I understand.)

SL: So we do have to go through part of the process which is part of our karma, which would lead us to the awakening in this life?

R: Not necessarily. Everyone is different. We can just awaken by doing no thing at all but it seems that when we turn within and we practice self-inquiry we've come a long way and we're ready to awaken. That's why we learn to practice self-inquiry. There are millions of people on this earth who try to practice self-inquiry and couldn't do it even if they tried. They're not there yet. They're not ready to awaken. It seems that when you're ready to awaken you're led to a teacher who tells you what to do which is all part of the dream. But it's a hastening part and you awaken. (SL: Is that what is meant by the hastening process because you're drawn by karma to a teacher?) Yes. That's how it appears. (SL: Um-hm.)

SG: So there is no freewill?

R: The only free will we've got is not to react to any condition and to turn within.

SZ: That's what I was thinking Robert is that actually it's karmic that you find the interest in self-inquiry or the interest in a practice like that which would guide you or lead you to be awake. (R: Yes. That's karmic.)

SJ: And what makes the karma is there effort from a previous time... (R: Yes.) ...towards the goal. So if you make an effort and you're on that level then that is the way you can do it?

R: That's why I mentioned before people who are in a class like this, a satsang like this have earned it. If you pull the average person from the street into satsang they will go completely mad. They couldn't stand to hear this. It would be like a fire eating them up.

SJ: You know there is something I was thinking tonight - if you're dreaming a regular dream you have no control over it, you don't know what next is going to happen to you, but if you study with someone and you learn how to awaken in the dream, what they call lucid dreaming then you can wake up within the dream and change the dream. So you're awake within the dream and so you can wake up to this world. Sort of like self-inquiry is like that situation where you use it when you're trained in it to awaken from this dream and then you're free and you can do anything you want or whatever it is.

R: You're partially right. But in a dream you cannot awaken. (SJ: But you have that freedom, when you attain that goal or whatever you have freedom to do anything that you want to do?) When you're dreaming... (SJ: It's a sort of awakening from that little dream there. It's just a simile they can't talk for each other.) They're separate states. (SJ: Oh yeah.) The dream world has nothing to do with this world.

SG: But it seems like the process is scaled I mean it seems to be very similar, some similar forms like when children learn about dreams that is the first step for they don't know what dreams are when you ask them. And then the next step they begin to think that you see their dreams. And so when you walk in the room they're amazed that you can't see their dreams. And then as they develop they start to realize that they're just mental events. (R: Umm.) It seems like the self similar forms of this state of consciousness. So that's why the metaphor seems to work so well.

R: You can say that. We should stop... (SJ: Met-aphorizing huh?) ...thinking about dreams because dreams hold us back. A lot of value is out on dreams these days. Dreams are really totally meaningless. Just like this world is meaningless. There is no substance to this world. The world is an illusion, it's a lie. So is the dream.

By paying attention to your dream you're giving substance to nothing. Something that does not exist and it pulls you deeper into maya. What you should do is to realize that your dream state is a lie and what you call the waking state is a lie. Transcend them both and become free. Make it simple for yourself. Do not become entangled in words or in dreams or in concepts. Simply realize you have to wake up and you have to do whatever you have to do to wake up.

(silence)

We've got some prashad to share - figs.

SJ: There is a little stem that you can just take off, like this.

(tape break)

R: You are not the body nor the mind nor the ego but that you are consciousness itself, all-pervading, absolute reality, sat-chit-ananda, parabrahman. That is your true nature. God bless you, I love you, peace.

Until we meet again...

I was going to say, till we meet again may you drop dead soon. (Students roar with laughter) But some of you may take it the wrong way. (More laughter)

SH: Just wish us liberation the nicest thing you can think.

SJ: Oh I have one announcement to make, because of the situation with parking it seems appropriate to try to car pool a little bit more especially that there might be some complaints that might be from the neighbors. So whenever people can to car pool then we'll have less cars.

SM: I also have an announcement too please. We have more of the transcriptions. They're coming a little bit faster now. I have two different transcriptions, one is "I am consciousness" and I have three...

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 94

THE COSMIC JOKE

15th September, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It is good being here with you again. Welcome. It's always a pleasure to be with you.

The world is a cosmic joke. Would you agree with that?

SE: A sick joke.

R: Not sick, cosmic.

SL: A joke means funny.

R: Sickness is the way the mind perceives it.

SL: But you see it as amusing when you say joke.

R: It's a cosmic joke. Why is it a cosmic joke? Because our real nature is moksha, liberation, freedom, unalloyed happiness, bliss, yet we imagine that we are bound. We imagine we are the personal self, bound, by our environment, by karma, and limited. So what do we do? We frantically search for ways to become self-realized. We practice various yoga techniques. We look for teachers. We read books. We play with our kundalinis. (Students laugh) We do all sorts of weird things to become free. But we are already free, and there's really nothing we have to do but become still. That's the cosmic joke. We are liberated beings and we're running around trying to free ourselves.

Here's a simple illustration, a person comes here to this satsang, sits with me and because my talks are usually boring, he goes to sleep. He dreams. He dreams he's a wanderer. He takes a plane to Tibet, studies with the llamas. Then goes to India and goes through many austerities, fasting, performs many sadhanas. Then flies to Japan, goes into a Zen monastery for a few years. Then goes for a vacation on a Caribbean Island. Meets a lady and gets married. Has three children. Children grow up. Get married. He has grandchildren. He gets old. Wonders what he has accomplished. Ready to drop the body. Then he wakes up and he is right here at satsang. He hadn't gone anywhere. He hadn't done anything. He never searched for enlightenment. He never got married. He never had children. He never got old. He never died. He awakened. And he is right here where he's always been.

This is true of us. We are right where we are supposed to be, free and happy. But some illusion called the personal self, the I-thought, tells us quite a different story. It tells us that we're starving, things are bad, we can't find gainful employment. It shows us all kinds of pictures in our mind, and we fall into deeper delusion. This is called maya, the grand illusion, the cosmic joke.

There's nothing we have to search for. There is really no sadhana we have to practice, meditation, mantras, the worship of gods, rituals to deities. This is not the real us. These are simply concepts. We are following somebody else's thoughts by believing if we do this sincerely, we will awaken and become free. But we're already awakened and we're already free.

Yet it is paradoxical due to the fact that when we went to grammar school, we learned the multiplication table, and that was sort of the substratum for higher mathematics. Without a multiplication table we would never have gone on to higher mathematics. So again, for some people these things are necessary, ritual worship, surrender to God, mantras, chanting. These things are sometimes important to some of us. Yet, they do not liberate you. Liberation comes by itself, but if we have not practiced the ritualistic worship, the mantras, the chanting and the other things, we will become aggressive, arrogant, cynical, whereas we have to develop humility and compassion.

Someone asks, "You mean when we see the homeless, suffering, man's inhumanity to man, we're to do nothing?" The answer of course is, although you know that this is a dream, you are the dreamer. As long as you feel there is suffering, there are homeless, then it is your duty to be of service. In other words, you are part of the dream, that's what you believe. How can you tell if your part of the dream? When these things appear real to you and you feel them. If you feel them you have to do social work and help to alleviate the suffering.

When you help someone else you're really helping yourself because there's only one. There is one Self. When you do social work you help the sick, the homeless, whom are you helping? No one else but yourself, so as long as you believe the world is real, and you feel the world, you feel your body, and your mind, your thoughts as being real, and you believe that you are the doer, it is therefore your duty to be of service.

Science tells us that every so-called human being emits a certain frequency, a certain vibration of different colors. Occultists call this an aura. And all of the auras emitted by individuals are basically the same. Some are more satvic, some are more rajastic, some are more tamas, some are more pure than others, but they're basically the same. Therefore, when you help the homeless you are merging your vibratory force with theirs, and you are lifting yourselves up together to a higher frequency. This is because there's only one Self.

Now, the frequency vibration of the Sage is a hundred million times stronger than the human vibration. This frequency is called divine grace. Now can you see why it says in all of the highest scriptures that to be of service to the Sage is the highest sadhana you can perform? For when you are of service to the Sage you're mingling your aura with the sage's aura. And, since the sage's so-called form that emits an aura is a million times stronger than the human beings, the Sages vibrations, which is called divine grace, lifts up the human being to a high frequency and releases them from karmic influences and sets them free.

As long as you believe you are a human being you have to perform a service to each other, to everybody. When you awaken you will be yourself and you will be service. You will be compassion. You will be wisdom. You will be an embodiment of humility.

How do you see life? What do you see everyday in your life? What do you feel? Do you get so caught up in the world that you forget who you are, and you feel the world closing in on you? Are you trying to achieve goodness for yourself, trying to accumulate possessions, to become powerful, you can have name and fame in this world? What a waste of energy, what a waste of time. All of your name and fame, your possessions must go sooner or later. Your body must go, your belief system must go, everything must be let go. Whether you like it or not, it will happen.

Therefore, what do you do with your time? Most of you worry about something. You look at the world situation. You look at your situation. You wonder what's going to happen tomorrow. Why not let go of all that and work on transcending the personal self which is merely an I-thought? This should be your main goal. Never mind what's happened up to now. You may be the happiest human being on the earth. You may be the most miserable human being on earth. They're two sides of the same coin. As long as you are a human being it is not reality. The only thing that happens to a human being, their life keeps changing, changing, changing, consistently. There is always change going on, because this world, this universe, is not steady. It is not a solid.

No thing is solid in this universe. It is all vibrations, and the deeper you go into the vibrations, the quieter it becomes, until there's total nothingness. The total nothingness is that substratum called consciousness, of which most of us know nothing about, for we cannot explain it, we cannot demonstrate it, we cannot know it, as long as our mind focuses on the I-thought and the personal self.

Therefore, Sages have admonished that we awaken, that we simply awaken. Yet most intelligent people cannot accept that. They believe in their senses. So the Sage has to invent a method, a way of awakening, and this is called sadhana, your spiritual practices. You learn to sit and meditate on an object. It makes you one-pointed. It causes you to concentrate. Your given a mantra. These are only games, yet some people have to do these things.

The way to total freedom is association and service to the Sage. Why kid ourselves? This is the way we wake up. The Sage is really yourself. All-pervading. The first thing you should do is to surrender completely and fully to the Self. Let go of everything, your whole belief system, all of those concepts that you've had inside of you for so long, your analytical mind, all of your thoughts. They've all got to go if you want to become free. You cannot hold onto anything. You have to empty yourself out entirely.

I'm not saying that physically you have to give away everything you own, or leave your family or quit your job. I'm saying you have to do this mentally. It begins in your mind. As you do your work, as you work with your family, as you perform social work with the homeless, you do not feel that I am the doer or I am superior to them. I've got something and they do not so I am helping them. You've realized that you're surrendering to God.

Everything is God, or karma. God is karma. You're giving up your karma as you let go of everything mentally. It is only then that you will shine. For you have always shone, you have always been consciousness, but you got so caught up in the world that you have forgotten who you are. Remember who you are. Remember. Who were you before you were born? If you sit still the answer will come to you. Before you were born, I-am. You have always been I-am. All of your births, all of your deceases, everything that prevails cannot eliminate the I-am. You are I-am.

When you sit in the silence it will come to you. You will see how the body came to be, and how the body goes, and a new body comes to be, and a new body goes. But you are alive. The real you persists. Nothing can ever destroy it. Water cannot drown it. Fire cannot burn it. Whatever happens to the body in this world cannot eliminate the I am. It has nothing to do with your age, or whether you're well or sick, or rich or poor. It is the Self. It has always been and it will always be. It is you.

You never were a human being. You just have forgotten your real nature and you're living the mortal dream. I ask you to awaken. I ask you to awaken now. Feel yourself awakening. Feel your body melting, dissolving. Yet no real change is taking place, for there's nothing to change. You see, there's no real body that has to be transformed. We're not speaking of transformation. You're not transforming your body into a body of light, or into consciousness, or into absolute reality. What appears to be your body is the Self, pure awareness.

This appears to be your body. And the body you look at in the mirror does not even exist. If your body really existed you would have a very hard time with it, to get rid of it. Your body, like the world, the universe, what we call God, has no real existence by itself. It is the Self which permeates the universe. Everything is the Self. That is why everything is sacred. That's what Moses meant when he said, "The ground upon which I stand is holy ground." There is no thing that has any life by itself.

Now can you see why, in your illusory state, you should be kind to animals, to the vegetable kingdom, to the mineral kingdom, to the human kingdom, why you must reconcile yourself with those kingdoms? Because they're all God, and what you do to the world of appearances you're doing to yourself.

Wake up! Give up all your foolish habits. There's absolutely nothing to fear and nothing to fight. There's absolutely nothing to overcome, nothing to rectify. There's absolutely nothing to achieve, nothing to want, to desire. How can you desire anything when you are the universe?

What I appear to be sharing with you may sound like it is far away someplace, but it's not. You are that. You are that. You are that infinite consciousness which knows no other. You are free. Enjoy your freedom.

You must think of yourself from now on as being unlimited beauty and joy, all-pervading, self-contained. Nothing can ever harm you. The universe is not set up in its illusory form to harm anyone or to bring dastardly conditions upon any situation. What you behold in this world is an appearance, an optical illusion, a dream.

You can accept when you go to sleep, you dream. You can accept the fact that you may dream that you're going to a satsang like this, and you are sitting there listening, absorbing. Then you wake up and there's no one but you. In the same way, you awaken now to your total reality. This has been another dream.

You have to question everything. Do not accept anything without questioning it. Ask, "Who's feeling this? To whom does it come?" Realize that you are not the I-thought. You are not the ego, nor the mind, nor are you the doer. Therefore, "Who am I?" and then whatever else comes to you, deny that also. If something tells you, "I-am consciousness," that has to be denied because I can never be consciousness. Negate everything that comes to you when you practice self-inquiry. Negate absolute reality, God, everything must be gotten rid of, all concepts. They're just words.

When you awaken to your Self there will be no words that you speak. You will just become being, absolute being. Not being this or being that, just being, your true Self. Yet, in the meantime, as you are experiencing this mortal dream, deny all the experiences that come to you.

No thing has ever happened in your life that was not necessary for your growth and your unfoldment. If you believe that someone hurt you, or someone did something to you long ago, or your parents abused you, whatever may have happened in your life, you needed those experiences. I know it sounds strange, but you needed to go through those experiences to be here now. If it weren't for the experiences you have had in your life, you'd be bowling this afternoon, or crying over something, or arguing with someone. Therefore, every experience that you have had in your life has led you here. It's all good. There are no mistakes.

A day should not go by when you do not question, "To whom does this come?" You have to remember to remember. You start in the morning and you go through the day remembering, "Not this, not this." The good experiences, the bad experiences, the in-between experiences, the boredom, everything that is going on in your life, you observe it, you inquire, "To whom has this come?" you watch, you become the witness. You never react. You understand that the power which maintains and sustains the illusory universe will take care of the illusion. Your job is to let go and let God.

Whenever I speak the word of God, I am referring to karma. God is the same as karma. Everything takes care of itself. You are in your right place going through those experiences that are necessary. Some of them may appear hard. Whatever appears hard surrender that. Give it up. Whatever appears to hurt you, do not think about it, or cry about it. Surrender it. Give it up. Whatever appears from anywhere, and these are also for good experiences, do not believe you are a body experiencing good experiences. You will always be disappointed.

Allow the so-called body to do what it came here to do. It knows what to do. But in your mind always feel that you are not the body or the experience, and question, "To whom does it come?" This is your job. This is all you have to do if you want to practice sadhana.

Of course, when I say to you, "Wake up now," some of you may wake up, some of you may not. You will know when you wake up. You will be in an effortless, thought free state. The thoughts will no longer come to you. You will feel bliss. You will be the universe. So awaken now and forget everything else.

Feel free to ask any questions.

SE: Robert, many teachers, after they've had their enlightened experience, say they do not sleep. Their consciousness remains the same whether the body is sleeping or not sleeping, or the body doesn't sleep. What happens to consciousness? With most of us there is an alternation of waking consciousness, deep sleep, dream consciousness, drinking consciousness, whatever, many different kinds of consciousnesses. But apparently, to the enlightened person, there is only one steady consciousness, the I-am or whatever you want to call it. What's going on there? Have you any explanation?

R: You're talking about personal consciousness. There is only one consciousness and that consciousness is all-pervading. It is always that. There is never any other consciousness, there's nothing that can interfere with it. It is always just plain consciousness. When you're sleeping, when you're awake, when you're playing, that is the dream. That is the delusion. That is like the water in the mirage, the snake in the rope. It's an optical illusion that you're sleeping, that you're awake, that you're playing, that you're going through different experiences. Consciousness just is. You cannot say that true consciousness is sleeping or doing anything else. True consciousness is absolute reality. It is all-pervading. It is. Everything else is an illusion. (SE: So waking, sleeping, dreaming come to the consciousness or are appearances on consciousness?) Waking, sleeping, dreaming do not come to consciousness. It is all an optical illusion. It doesn't exist. Nothing comes to consciousness. Consciousness just is. But the way you think of consciousness, you're thinking of it in a human form. That it's a thing, that it's something that happens to you. Nothing happens to you. No thing transpires. There's no one who sleeps, there's no one who dreams, there's no one who plays, that's all illusion. When you become consciousness you just become being, and that is something you cannot understand as a human being.

But I understand that I have to go to the bathroom.

(tape break)

SE: If a bee stings you what is your consciousness want to do?

R: I don't have a personal consciousness so I will not do anything. If the bee stings me, it stings me. (pause) There's a bee swimming in my apple juice. (laughter)

(commotion about the bee)

R: So what else is going on?

SB: So Robert, this one state that underlies everything, it's not the same as deep sleep, where it's merged in like an unconsciousness, and it is not the same as waking, like we are now, where we are awake, but we are not awake to consciousness, we are awake to the personal I. It's different from both.

R: It's neither this nor that. It's not sleeping. It's not awaking. It's beyond everything. It's something that we cannot comprehend. It has nothing to do with the world. Try to remember that the world doesn't exist as it appears.

SH: Does it exist at all? (R: No.) It doesn't exist as it appears, but it could exist in a way that it doesn't appear. (R: It doesn't exist the way it appears, and it doesn't exist the way it doesn't appear.) Maybe, maybe, you took care of that one.

R: It's hard to see that, I admit. Here we see a bunch of us sitting, talking, we see trees, we see bees, we see apple juice, we see Ed. But I tell you it's not real. There is really nothing going on.

SJ: The whole thing is that you can't see it the way you see it unless you see it, until seeing that it's all... (R: There is no seer to see.) Yeah.

SB: Is it like a big soup pot? From your point of view there is no center? There is no center at all?

R: There is no center, there is no circumference, there is no soup pot, there is no soup. (SE: How do you expect any of us to believe you?) I don't. (SE: Okay let's go.) Good riddance. (laughter)

R: What's that Jay? (SJ: If people believe what you say it'll prevent them from experiencing it.) True. It's not a question of belief because what believes? Your mind. It is your mind that says, "I believe something," or "I don't believe that." If there's no mind, what is there to believe? There's no belief system. There's no entity who believes anything. There's plain nothing.

SG: It seems to me it's the opposite that I think mostly everybody believes you but noone understands it. I mean I wonder what we believe, we believe what we don't understand?

R: You cannot believe what you don't understand. You really don't believe it deeply. If you believed it somehow there would be something in you that clicks.

SL: We trust. (R: In God we trust.) (laughter)

SJ: We trust in something but we don't know what it is. And when you know what it is then you believe what he's saying because it matches your experience.

SG: I think if you didn't believe this you wouldn't trek up here every week. (R: I've got nothing else to do.) Then we wouldn't believe it.

SJ: But what do we believe, we don't know what we believe? It's just something an ideal...

R: Tell me what you believe.

SL: We trust that it's all right.

SG: Well we believe that you're not lying to us. (R: Why?) I don't know... (laughter)

SH: Yeah anything he says is a lie. (R: Exactly. Words are all lies.)

SJ: But you are leading us to a place that is not a lie. So it's worthy... (R: How do you know? How can you tell?) I don't know. (laughs)

R: The only solution is to dive deep within yourself and see the reality. That is the only solution. There's no reality in words, there's no reality in the senses. Reality is consciousness. Consciousness is the atman. The atman is Brahman. Brahman is the Self. And that just is. It is nothing you can ever expect to know with your senses.

But as you become sincere, as you begin to give up the world, and the worldly things in your mind, something will awaken within you, and you will know. You will begin to feel total happiness, unalloyed happiness, a happiness you never felt before in your life. It is beyond human happiness. They call that bliss. And from that moment on the world will never be able to hurt you again, for the world has become your servant, no longer your Master.

So dive deep, deep within your Self and find the answers you're looking for. What have you got to say to that?

SB: Who dives? (R: Who died?) Who dives?

R: Who do you think dives? Whomever you think dives, that is the one who dives. As long as you believe you are the body then you are able to dive, because there's somebody to dive. When there's no longer a body, there's no one to dive.

SH: Can consciousness dive within itself?

R: Consciousness cannot do anything but be itself. (SH: Diving is being itself?) Like diving in a swimming pool? (SH: No that's too gross.) (laughter)

S: Diving into ether.

S: Dive in the ether, yeah. Nothing diving in nothing. (laughs)

SB: So really Robert, if we understand what you are saying, if a person understands there is nothing to do at all. You don't even have to dive. You just come to rest in what is.

R: Or if you wake up, that's it. We cannot comprehend the thing like consciousness that does nothing, yet is everything. It's beyond our comprehension. The finite mind can never know this. That's why we say consciousness just is. It is not this and it is not that. Consciousness does not have to dive because consciousness already is. It is the ego that dives.

SY: Why did consciousness manifest? (R: It never did.) More on that please?

R: Consciousness is what we call absolute reality. It just is. It never does anything because there's nothing to do. The only way you can comprehend this a little bit is by thinking of something that takes up all space and time. There is no room for anything. It is itself. There's no teeny weeny space for anything to happen. That's it. There's nothing else. Therefore it cannot do anything because there's no space for it to do anything. It fills up all space itself. Everything else that you see is a mirage, an optical illusion. It is like hypnosis. When you are hypnotized you can be made to do many things. Yet when you wake up you don't remember those things. They don't exist. Do not allow the world to fool you with it's good and bad. Go beyond the world to the twilight zone. (laughter)

(long silence)

Would you like to read the Jnani Mary?

SM: Yes Robert. (Mary reads the confessions of a Jnani, refer to beginning of book)

R: Thank you Mary. Do you want to sing a song Kerema?

SQ: Oh sure, I'd love to. Another one I'd like to share with you all. I'm never sure of a title, stick something there, "Road to nowhere"

(Kerema sings)

Out of the darkness, into the light. Struggling to break free.

From these chains that bind me to my misery,

Looking for something I cannot find,

With such a busy mind. Why can't I just let go now.

Leave the world behind,

Well I'm on the road to nowhere it's a place on noones map

And when I get there, I'm never coming back.

Out of my mind and into my heart, as simple as it seems

I must rediscover what this really means

Over and over watching the scenes, images on a screen

When the movies over, we're stuck with what remains,

Well I'm on the road to nowhere it's a place on noones map

And when I get there, I'm never coming back.

R: Thank you Kerema.

SH: Me too. Bravo, bravo. (Everyone applauds Kerema)

R: Any announcements.

(Announcements about parking outside of Henry's house during satsang and car pooling)

R: Always remember who you are. You are absolute reality, pure awareness, Para-brahman, sat-chit-ananda, nirvana, emptiness, ultimate reality. You are not the body, or the mind, or the doer, God bless you, peace, om shanti, until we meet again.

You are free to roam the world.

(students laugh as tape ends) [TOC]

GET THE PERSONAL SELF OUT OF THE WAY!

19th September, 1991

Robert: Om shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace.

Good evening. It is good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

For those of you who are here relatively short time, new people. I do not give lectures. If you are waiting to be given a lecture you will be disappointed. I do not do sermons or give spiritual talks. This is satsang. Satsang virtually means to be with the Self, not with Robert. Robert is just a name and a form. The Self is all-pervading. Therefore when you are with the Self at satsang, you are the Self, you are consciousness. There is only one Self and you are that.

The words I speak are just incidental. It's the silence and the space in between the words that is important. If you understand the silence correctly you will awaken to the Self. What you have always been. Which is your true nature. Happiness and peace are your real nature. This is the Self.

Everything we do is really a search for the Self, for reality. The thief who robs a bank is actually searching for happiness, for the Self and doesn't know it. Even the murderer believes he or she is doing the murder for the sake of happiness. They believe this will make things better for them. It will give them more freedom. Wars, man's inhumanity to man is really a search for freedom, for happiness.

The mistake that is made is those people do not realize that all they had to do was to turn within. They're trying to find happiness externally. This can never be done for we live in a world of duality. Nothing is permanent. No thing is ever the same. It is like the search for the golden fleece. You will never find it externally to yourself. The answers you're looking for, the happiness you're looking for, the peace you're looking for are all within you. You are that.

You therefore learn not to react to conditions, not to allow the world to cause you any type of reaction. For you realize the world changes from time to time. It is never the same. How can it bring permanent happiness? You have all the answers, there is nothing missing. Everything that you feel is your imagination. Everything that you perceive is your imagination.

The biggest mistake is that you imagine that you are a body. Therefore if you imagine that you are a body there must be other bodies also. You perceive thousands of bodies, millions of bodies everywhere. Simply because you believe you are a body. You then believe you are a mind and you think. And you bring the world into creation. You bring the universe into creation. But you are none of those things, you are pure intelligence. You are not what you believe you are. There are no problems. There is absolutely nothing wrong anywhere. What are you seeing? The world is your creation.

Have you ever noticed when you get up in the morning the first thing you think about is the personal self. As soon as you awaken you believe you are the personal self. Therefore everything begins to rotate around your personal self. You believe you have to think about what you're going to wear to work, where you're going to go for lunch, what your co-workers are going to say to you.

What if I were to tell you that if you took your mind off your personal self an all-pervading power would take its place and lead you in the right direction. Thus bringing harmony and happiness and joy into your life that is beyond your imagination, yes. All you have to do is to get the personal self out of the way. The personal self is the ego, the mind. All you have to do is get them out of the way and everything will be beautiful in your life.

This is hard to imagine I agree. For you have been brought up to believe that unless you take care of your situation, unless you look after your life and think about your life, bad things will happen to you. So you always have to be aware. You always have to be competing with the next person. You always have to keep up with the Jones'. Watch the news on television. See what's going on in the world and you relate to those things.

But how many of you can give all that up and give up personal self and look at the universe as one gigantic whole (whole). Not diversity, not multiples, but one and keep your mind stayed on the one. Do you think your affairs will be ruined? Do you think you'll get in trouble at work because you are not thinking of your work? Do you think all types of dastardly things will happen to you? On the contrary.

It has been revealed to Sages since time immemorial that if a person can take their mind off their personality, off the self then what you call God takes over and your life becomes a life of bliss.

I know this sounds far fetched and you think it takes a lot of spiritual work to get to a place like this but it doesn't. You have to have the desire to go further with your life then where you are now. But you have to be able to become disgusted with the world as it is. Not because of man's inhumanity to man but totally disgusted with a world of change. You have to be tired of the world.

Whatever you put first in your mind this is what you become. When you become tired to the world and the world no longer has any feelings for you and you no longer have feelings for the world something happens within. You begin to go deep within. It happens by itself. Again how does it happen? You have disgust for worldly pleasures and for worldly situations that transpire in the world.

This is why a teaching like this is not for everyone. For some of you are only here to improve your humanhood. You do not realize that your humanhood is a product of duality. It can never go in one direction steadily. This is the reason why psychology, psychiatry have failed miserably. For the answer is not to find your human self or to lift yourself above problems or to learn solutions for your problems, that only lasts a short while. What you really have to do is transcend and transmute the very core of your being. You have to become something else. That something else is absolute reality, pure awareness, consciousness.

You do not really become that, you begin to understand that you have to let go of all of your concepts, all of your preconceived ideas, all of the samskaras, all of the karma, all of the samsaras, all those things have to go. How do you get rid of them? By coming to the realization that they never existed to begin with. That's right. They never existed. By coming to the realization that your body is an optical illusion. The world, the universe has no substance.

If you came to this conclusion, how would a problem affect you? It would be virtually impossible to be affected by a problem because the problem is part of the worldly condition. And if the worldly condition were transmuted where would be the problem? The problem only arises because you believe the world is real.

When the world becomes nothing to you and the world becomes nothing to you only when you no longer react to person, place, or thing, do you then become free. And the freedom is your joy, your bliss, your happiness and your harmony. You know how far you've gotten on the spiritual path by what you feel all day long.

Just think about today, what did you think about? Where were your feelings? Did you allow yourself to become depressed? Did you feel that the world had something to offer you and you become radiantly happy because of something the world appears to have offered you?

Those are the things you have to transcend. Those very beliefs. That the world can neither hurt you or do something good for you. Those are the beliefs that have to go. And as far as all of your feelings that something is wrong, that somebody hurt me, somebody used me, somebody did something to me, forget all that.

First of all you realize that it's all karmic. How can anything come to you of it's own accord? Nothing just comes. For if you find that you had $100 000 in the bank and the bank folds, how do you react to that? Do you cry? Do you stamp your feet? Do you jump up and down? Do you commit suicide? You simply realize that everything is karmic. There is nothing that comes from nothing.

When you've gotten that far and you've found peace, things no longer disturb you. You can then go further and realize that there is no karma. It never existed. It only existed for me at the time when I was frightened and I had no idea where things come from.

At that stage in your life karma is real. So you pray to God for relief. God comes to you in the form of a Sage or maybe a tree or a mountain or a book and makes you understand that the world is created by karma and the way you react to karma determines what is going to happen to you from there on end.

After so many years perhaps you go further and you realize karma never existed, my body never existed, the universe doesn't exist, God doesn't exist. Only the Self exists. And of course if it exists it cannot be the Self. So you begin to ponder that also.

The day will come when you will simply wake up and become free. You can tell if that is happening to you if you're becoming steady. If your moods do not change. When you begin to feel the same all day long. You just feel happy, blissful, peaceful and it doesn't change. There is no situation that you observe that can cause any change to come to you.

The doctor may predict you have cancer and you've got a month to live there is no reaction. For you realize, who dies? You win a million dollars in the lottery, there is no reaction, for you realize, "For whom has this come?" A car runs you over and they have to amputate your legs it doesn't change your reaction. For you understand the body is not you. Then you know you're making progress. You have not become self-realized yet but you're way up there.

When you awaken you will know beyond a shadow of a doubt that you never had a body to begin with. There is no body that got hit by a car, there is no body that had cancer, there is no body that won $100 000 000, there is just no body. Therefore you don't have to go out and save all your money and wonder what is going to happen to it. You do not have to save anything for a rainy day. For it never rains in a realized person. You do not have to take any precautions. You are simply in bliss.

Yet for all appearance sake, there appears to be a power, a mysterious power that always takes care of you in the right way. I know you're saying to yourself, "How can this power be taking care of me if my legs have been amputated? If I've been diagnosed as having cancer?" In your present state it's like the story of Sadie and Irving during the depression.

One day Irving comes home and says, "Sadie, this is black friday we've lost everything. We're bankrupt. All the banks have folded, the stocks have folded, there is nothing left. Let's put our heads in this gas stove and kill ourselves. Let's jump out the window. We have nothing left to live for." So Sadie said to Irving, "Shh Irving, take it easy, don't worry. Everything is okay." Irving said, "How can you say everything is okay Sadie can't you see what I'm telling you? It's black friday we're ruined. We don't have a penny to our name. Come let's kill ourselves right now."

So Sadie says, "Have something to eat. Have some chicken soup." Irving says, "How can you talk about chicken soup? Can't you understand what I'm telling you? Kaput we're ruined. Everything has been wiped out." So Sadie says, "No Irving I'll tell you a secret. For forty years every time we made love I put away a dollar. And today we've got $4600 saved. Irving's eyes opened wide and he says, "And to think I didn't give you all my business." (students laugh) And that is the way people think. But that's not the way life is, the real life.

You have got to make up your mind that the world really has nothing to offer you. You see, you have to take a chance. You have to take a chance to love what you call God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your being. To love God as yourself. And feel deep in the marrow of your bones, that all is well and everything is unfolding as it should.

When you start the ball rolling, the mysterious power that I've been talking about comes to your aid and protects you and watches over you, makes you understand that all is well. When you awaken others may see a car hit you and your legs being amputated but you know that nothing has happened to you. And again this seems very paradoxical and I know some of you cannot really comprehend this.

You cannot comprehend when a car goes over your legs and crushes them and they have to be amputated, that nothing has happened. Sounds impossible, sounds ludicrous, it does! But I can assure you it's the truth. How can a body that never existed be destroyed? If the body were real then the experiences of the body would be real also and we would have to look for a remedy. But since the body is not real to begin with there is no remedy we have to look for. We just have to come to that conclusion, in our heart.

One of the ways you do this again is through self-inquiry. If it's difficult for you to just awaken, through plain knowledge, through Jnana then you practice self-inquiry. Those of you who can. If self-inquiry seems difficult then you must surrender your body.

I find the easiest thing to do is self-inquiry. I know all of you who are here tonight can practice this if you really want to. This is really a practice of negation. You are negating everything in the universe. Starting with yourself and everything that seems to appear in your mind, you inquire, "To whom has this come?" That's all.

You have negated the whole universe and you negate all the thoughts by inquiring, "To whom does this come? Who is feeling this?" Say you're depressed, instead of staying depressed or taking some valium or trying to do something else that you learnt to do, like for instance, they say if you feel depressed if you do physical exercise it will get rid of it, those things are only temporary solutions. When you inquire, "To whom does this come?" You're seeking a permanent solution.

It comes to you then it comes to me, "I feel depressed!" You ponder the I. It is I that feels depressed and not you. You say this to yourself. You observe the I, you follow the I, you trace the I, the I goes back into the Self. The Self is the ultimate originator of everything. When you trace the I back to the Self, the substratum, you will realize that the I never existed to begin with. Therefore your depression and everything else that is bothering you also does not really exist.

You do not work on your problems so called, you work on the I because it is the I that feels all the problems. It is the I that believes all the problems. It is the I that has all of these preconceived ideas all these concepts. It is the I that experiences karma, samskaras, it's all in the I. You therefore have to trace the I back to the heart centre, which is the Self and be free. You have to do it.

Of course as I said, if you will just awaken now. The reason that most of you will not awaken is because you are steeped deeply in your beliefs. Your belief system is very strong. You feel things too deeply. You remember something that happened to you twenty years ago and you're still feeling it. You feel the reality of this world very deeply. Therefore you will not awaken. Awakening comes easy to a person who can simply let go of the world.

SF: Can it not be said that realization consists of getting rid of the idea that we're not realized?

R: Yes, negating everything, the same thing. Get rid of all of your concepts, your ideas, your beliefs. Become totally empty.

SF: Another thing I guess that has impressed me is, any of these stories about Sri Ramana Maharshi, the one where some fellow was dying at the ashram, the others wanted him to go see this fellow and he wasn't inclined to do so and they thought that was very strange and finally he spoke almost to himself, he said, "They would be pleased if I went to see this dying man." And he did go to see him. But he as the real Self knew that nothing was happening. But he went to see this fellow to please the other people and I guess that fellow who was dying. Can you comment on that?

R: Well of course. The form of Ramana Maharshi had to take certain action for the sake of the devotees. Therefore many times he did something for their sake because it pleased himself. He really understood that nothing was ever happening. No action was being taken. That all is well. But for the sake of the devotees he would sometimes take a little action just to please them. But again he had no mind, no ego and there was no one home to do anything. He was total emptiness. So to answer your question, "What do you think? Where are you coming from?" It always goes back to you doesn't it?

SF: Well my idea was the same as what you explained but of course it's still intellectual.

R: Get rid of your intellect. You never had it to begin with. Do not believe in it. We shouldn't put ourselves down. When you put yourself down that is blasphemy. You should never believe and think, "I am not ready. It's too hard for me. I'm only intellectual." That is what blasphemy means. If you have to think anything like this do not think at all. But rather keep understanding that I is not the body, I is not the world, I is not the universe. I is really consciousness, absolute reality. I am That.

SF: Last week there was some discussion about the heart and the heart center and the idea that in the body it's on the right side of the chest and it seems like most of us realize the center of our being is the heart and we write songs about it, like, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

R: We're talking about the wrong heart. (SF: Well it's said that it's on the right side of the chest.) Yes but the San Francisco heart is the other one. (SF: Well he left his whole being there or My Heart Belongs To Daddy or Yours Is My Heart Alone...) (laughter) Can you sing it for us? (laughter)

SH: Sing it Fred. (laughter)

SF: One of the Masters said it's two digits to the right of the centre line. (R: Umm.) I think maybe Sri Bhagvan. (R: Yes.) And something really fascinating it says it in the bible it says, "the heart of the wise man is on the right but the fools is on the left." And it's possible for an individual it seems to show himself that this is the case, because if I close my eyes and say, "Who me?

and point to myself, in my case it would invariably be, of course I'm thinking about it for an awful long time but I'll point to the right side of my chest or either onto my head which some individuals might think is the most important part of the body-mind. Can you comment on that?

R: Yes. This is all in the books. The reason for that is people want to know where the Self resides in the body. So this was made up so people could follow the I-thought to the particular heart centre on the right side of the chest. (SF: Assuming that the body is real?) Yes. But I say to you that there is no body and there is no heart. But again there are some people who become totally confused. Where does God live in us? Where does consciousness begin in us? So we say, "It's on the right side of the chest." And you follow the I back to the spiritual heart centre on the right side of your chest.

SR: Robert I kind of went through a shock or a de-ja-vou feeling tonight because I realized that I've heard the same set of ideas four or five months ago from you. And four or five months ago when I heard you say, "Just focus in on the Self and forget about your body and the situation you're in and the problems you're facing or you're trying to figure out and just focus on the Self," I got turned on and I said, "Yeah I'm going to try that." And now I hear the same set of ideas months later and I realize, what happened? I must've forgot as soon as I walked out the door.

R: (laughs) That's usually the case. That's why I have to keep coming back here every Sunday.

SR: I was really turned on because I remember I asked you about it, "What a challenge I kept saying," you said, "Yeah!" Just keep thinking of the Self and face everything in life and just keep thinking of the Self? And boy I was turned on and the interest in the group was strong. I don't know if the rest of them remembered but it's like... I hate to tell you but it's like I'm hearing the same lecture and nothing happened in between.

R: That's common. That's no surprise. That is why you have to vigilantly work on yourself, vigorously. (SR: It amazes me that I could be so excited and turned on and make like a dedication here and then completely forget it.) It's par for the course, don't worry. You're not alone.

SJ: Maybe anybody could raise their hands if they experienced that? (SR: Anybody else experience that?) One other person.

R: Jay wants to take count. (SR: But that's shocking.)

R: You would be surprised. How many people I meet originally for the first time and after one meeting they send me letters and telephone me and send me postcards, and tell me in person, "Robert, I throw myself at your feet. I am your mother, I am your father, I am your sister, I am your wife, I am yours do what you want with me." I usually say, "Okay tell me the same thing in six months." At that time they're usually gone. They've found another teacher or they've gone somewhere out of town and like George says they forget everything.

This is usually a slow process. It requires dedication. It requires a gradual unfolding without looking for objects, without seeking, time or space, without wondering how long it's going to take. If you can have that attitude and just be at satsang that would be enough. You wouldn't have to do any practice. But because life hits you squarely in the head and you lose your way again, you have to keep practicing sadhana over and over again. Simply because you've allowed yourself to react to life's conditions.

But like I say if you forget about time, if you don't think anymore, I want to be enlightened, you simply come to satsang. Something will happen, you will feel it over time. All of your samskaras will begin to drop away. Your karma will be burnt up. You will come to high conclusions by yourself. And you will be there. So take it easy. There is no rush. It took you a life time to be where you are now, maybe twenty lifetimes, maybe a hundred lifetimes, maybe a thousand lifetimes to be what you are today. Therefore sometimes getting rid of all your stuff does not come overnight.

Stop fighting. Stop being angry at yourself and stop reacting, all is well.

SL: Robert you were saying before that when we practice self-inquiry we should think of it as going down to our heart? (R: Umm.) If the heart doesn't exist - well, what is the purpose of that, is it just to help focus?

R: It helps focus, it helps concentration. It makes you one pointed and it gives you something to go for. (SL: To go for you were saying?) Something you go after. Whereas if I didn't tell you that everything would appear too abstract. So as you go into your heart you feel yourself awakening, becoming free and you feel happiness and you feel bliss. (SL: That source is equated to the one pointedness?) Yes.

SG: Robert, the heart is like a metaphor for the bliss and love that one begins to feel?

R: Yes. The heart is a metaphor for the Self. (SG: And it slowly becomes a home?) It slowly becomes you. You are the Self. There is no body, there is no heart. It's like someone coming over to me and says, "Robert I have to take a rest I'm very tired." If I tell you the Self never gets tired it will not help you. Because you are tired and you're feeling tired. You have not experienced the Self. So by my saying the Self is all peace and bliss and it's impossible to be tired. Instead of telling you this I say, "There a bed, go take a rest." And you're grateful that I showed you the bed and you lie down and take a nice snooze.

And so it is with the spiritual heart. Where does the I go when I trace it? If I tell you at this stage of your development that it goes nowhere because it never existed you will look at me funny. For that kind of doesn't help you at your present state. So I tell you there is a spiritual heart on the right side of your chest. That heart is God, consciousness the Self. And if you follow the I to the spiritual heart the I will eventually disappear and you will become the Self. That you can understand.

Now can you see why all these stories are invented? So the average person can do something tangible. I can sit here and tell you again. There is no heart, there is no Self, there is no I, there is no body, there is no God, there is no enlightenment, and you look at me, what do I do now? (laughter) So I tell you all these stories.

SU: Then why do I have to practice?

R: Because you do not believe that you are the Self and you will not awaken.

SH: Is it a belief? Do you believe you are the Self? (R: No.) Must be a direct knowing? (R: That you are the Self?) Yeah. (R: Direct knowing, yes.) It's not a belief. (R: Direct awareness.)

SF: If we believe we are going to become something it brings in the element of time and time itself does not exist

R: Yes. Time does not exist. Space does not exist. But as long as you feel that you are still the body then they do exist for you. Again it's like you having a dream and I'm trying to awaken you but you will not awaken. You're having too much fun. You don't want to awaken, I'm shaking you and shaking you and punching you, but you refuse to wake up. This is the same thing. The reason we believe we die is because the Self is trying to punch us again and again to wake us up but we won't wake up. So he finally gives us the final punch and we appear to die. (laughter) Then we come back and do it all over again or we appear to. Simply because we refuse to awaken.

SL: Robert you said at one point that to awaken we're sort of predestined to awaken?

R: Yes, I also said that everyone is hell bound for heaven whether they like it or not. It's the same thing. We will awaken! Everyone here will awaken eventually!

SR: Robert where is the sense of sensing an inner light or a vibrational body, a subtle vibrational body. Where is that in the relationship to being in the I?

R: That is the I. That I sees the light. Remember the song "I see the light, hallelujah?" (laughter) I see the light, I hear the sounds. (SR: And the subtle vibrational body?) The subtle vibrational body is also I. Nada, I all the same.

SG: So the lights are on and nobody's home, is that so?

R: When the lights are on somebody's home. When the lights are off nobody's home.

SJ: So that is all still the personal I?

R: It's all externalized mind or personal I. It's all in the I. Anytime you have an experience, isn't I having the experience? No matter how high the experience maybe you come and tell me, "Robert I am having an experience." So I say get rid of I and you won't have one. (laughter) You don't want to have an experience, that's not the goal. The goal is to become a good for nothing.

SF: Any experience is in duality. (R: Any experience, yes.)

SR: It's more of a knowingness or a sensing or a feeling?

R: It's pure awareness. knowingness, Jnana.

SG: And that's not an experience?

R: No, it's way beyond experience. That makes sense because to have an experience there has to be an experiencer. Somebody has to have an experience but if there is nobody how can there be an experience? Even the stories you hear about in the school of Jnana that claims in order for a Jnani to be real at the time of death the body dissolves and turns into a rainbow. There is a school of Jnana that believes this. But think for a moment, if there was never a body to begin with, how can it turn into a rainbow?

ST: Where would such stories as that originate?

R: From the mind. (ST: From the mind?) Certain teachers.

ST: In historical context there is some point where a teacher taught such a... (R: Yes.) Was there significance to that teacher teaching that concept at that point? Like you're using concepts with us to help us. Would that teacher use that concept to help?

R: Perhaps, but you would have to ask the teacher. I cannot speak for the teacher. I can only relate my own experiences. There is no body to begin with. So the body cannot turn into rainbows, or colors, or oranges or apples or anything else.

(silence)

ST: Robert is the knowingness it's not grounded in any of the physical, it's totally free of that? (R: Totally free.) Totally free. So this waking dream takes on the waking dream nature instead of being real it really becomes - you know it as unreal?

R: Just like the water in the mirage. The water appears to be real but upon investigation you will find out that it never existed. And so it is with the world. The world appears to be real but if you inquire and investigate you will find that it never existed.

SR: So a person is talking to me Robert and they're expecting an answer, my proper attitude would be to see all is what?

R: You do not fake it. You see what you see. You can't imagine you don't see anybody when you're talking to somebody. (laughter) That's foolishness. (SR: Do I have sense of knowing this that this is a cosmic sound I'm hearing? And when I open my mouth some cosmic answer will come out?) (laughter) On the contrary. (SR: On the contrary?) You do not act out anything. You're not going to imagine that you're something you're not. You have to be truthful to yourself. But you have to work on yourself until you get to that place where you really feel and know and understand and you become aware that the whole universe is consciousness. And person, place and thing are simply a superimposition on the screen of life.

SR: But if a person asked a question and I answered them with the thought that they are an individual person I'm only hardening my wrong attitude that they are an individual person. I'm only hardening this perception. So wouldn't I be better off in just signing them off. (laughter) Then I don't harden that misperception.

R: Tell me how many friends you have George.. (SR: What is more important enlightenment or having friends?) Enlightenment of course but the thing is, you do not want to make a fool of yourself. (SR: For a God it's worth it? For enlightenment it's worth it?) You want to understand where you're coming from and be truthful to yourself and act accordingly. (SR: But then I'll be stuck in duality?) No you won't because you're working on yourself. (SR: Which self?) Your own self. (SR: The personal self?) Sure you're working to get rid of it.

SR: I don't see how I'm getting rid of it if I'm talking to the person as if he's an individual self and I'm perceiving myself as an individual self I don't see how I'm...?

R: Because you're putting it on you're faking it. (SR: No, no I'm not faking it.) If you're not faking it, it will be a different story completely. Then you would see yourself and everybody else. There would only be one Self. (SR: Yeah that 's more what I need to hear Robert.)

SG: It seems like it's a sudden reversal at what seems real now turns out to be unreal and what seems unreal turns out to be real. There is a sort of absolute reversal. Is there like a critical mass working on the self, you go along, you go along then all of a sudden this reversal occurs?

R: I don't like the term critical mass. (SR: Do you like the hunky punky better?) Yes. As you begin to do sadhana... (tape break)

SG: Robert why are people unwilling to do sadhana and yet they keep coming week after week?

R: Because the pull of samskara. The pull of past karmic patterns is very strong and it makes you worldly, but yet you've been touched by something, in a previous life so-to-speak. You have done sadhana you're compelled to come here at this time. But still something is pulling at you, the world, the universe, it makes you very strong so you're unable to do sadhana. But as you come here week after week, month after month, year after year, you begin to melt. Just like a snowman out in the snow and the sun comes. Day after day, day after day, the snowman begins to melt, melt till there is nothing left. So it is as you keep coming here, your personal self begins to melt. Until you're gone completely and you come home.

ST: Robert, so life is, and it manifests all these individuals, all these creatures over and over. All these creatures keep shaping up and disappearing. Is it like a symbol factory, is it like it all appears in consciousness like is there a meaning behind the symbology. A cosmologic...

R: There is no meaning whatsoever. (ST: No meaning.) No meaning whatsoever. You should ask yourself, "To whom does it come to? Who sees it this way?" And you will come to the conclusion that it doesn't exist, it never existed, your body doesn't exist and the question doesn't exist.

We have prashad that one of our good friends brought. Delicious cookies all sizes and shapes. Pass it this way and you pass it that way. Eat.

R: Do we have some announcements. (SM: Yes, I do.) Listen carefully to these announcements.

(Transcripts handed out for xeroxing also students told to bring transcripts back)

SM: Robert there's just two words that mean the world to me and it's silence and being. Silence and Being. When you say those two words I just go off into nothingness. They are just beautiful and it's so peaceful. It's wonderful, that's all I can say. (R: Yes.)

(tape ends) [TOC]

SELF INQUIRY PRECURSOR: A DISGUST FOR THE WORLD

22nd September, 1991

Robert: ...shanti, shanti, shanti, om. Good afternoon. (Students: Good afternoon Robert.) Welcome. I welcome you with all my heart it's good to be with you.

Last week whether it was Thursday or Sunday I mentioned that the precursor to self-inquiry is having a profound disgust with the world. Some of you didn't like that. I received a few phone calls telling me, "But Robert I love the world. How can I have a disgust for the world." Therefore I will elaborate on this today.

When I say to have a disgust for the world, I am speaking of discrimination. Seeing right from wrong, what is reality and what is transient. The whole world is changeful it has no consistency. Because you enjoy the trees and the flowers and the moon and the sun, doesn't mean you're going to be happy all the time. In every life a little rain must fall, as they say. You are not the world. If you use proper discrimination you will see that the world by itself is an absolute nothing. It doesn't even exist. You're holding on to a shadow, to an appearance. And if you believe in the appearance you will always be disappointed. You have to be disappointed because everything must change.

It all begins in your mind. I am not saying that you should give up anything. That you should run away from your family or your state, your job and live in a cave and growl at the world. I am referring to seeing in your mind that the world is an emanation of your mind. You have created the world in your own image. You see the world a certain way and you react to it without ever understanding that you have created this world yourself. Yet you are not the world. Your real nature is ultimate happiness. Absolute reality. Pure wisdom. Sat-chit-ananda. This is what you are. You have never been the body-mind phenomena. Even though it appears strong and many of you fear the world very deeply. Somewhere in the deep recesses of your mind you should be aware that you are not the world. You are not your body. If you get rid of the body idea the world will go with it. Leave the world alone.

To have a disgust for the world means that you have been in this world a while. You've tasted it, you've experienced it. You sort of understand what it is and now you're going to leave it alone. It no longer has the power to frighten you. It no longer has the power to hurt you. For you are not hurtable. You no longer have to quarrel with anyone or stick up for your rights or win an argument. Those things no longer matter to you. It is only then that you can practice self-inquiry properly. This is why many of you tell me it is difficult to practice self-inquiry. You try it for a while and you get disgusted. This is because you are attached to the world and the world has a bigger hold on you than your practice.

You are not to think that the world can offer you anything important and rejoice. You should always rejoice because you are the Self, the imperishable Self. That is worth rejoicing.

But anything else in this world will always disappoint you. This comes from your experiences. You have a good job, you've worked for many years. You've purchased a home for yourself, you've got a family, children, things happen. You may lose your job. Your child can get killed. All sorts of things happen in this world. Therefore the one who has faith in the world is a fool. It doesn't mean again you have to give it up. You are in the world but not of the world. You can do what you've always done, work, have a family, buy a house but they are not your Masters. They have no hold on you.

If you lose your job you're just as happy as when you had it. If something happens with your family, this doesn't change you. You are still absolute reality. If your house burns down you do not look at your house as God. You understand, you know the truth and you stick to the truth. When these things what I'm speaking about are fulfilled in you, in other words when you have dispassion and you use discrimination you develop a tremendous power within yourself. You transcend the body, you begin to expand becoming all-pervading and you feel that the whole universe emanates from your mind. Then you can be called a Jnani you're totally free.

How does a Jnani think?

There was once a president of a bank who really enjoyed his job. He got married and he had three lovely children. He went fishing with them, he went hiking with them. He really loved his family. There was a tornado that came into his town and his three children were destroyed, killed in the tornado. Everyone was violently upset. But the bank manager who was a Jnani simply watched and observed. He went to the funeral of his three children and watched and observed. When the funeral was over his relatives besieged him and they said, "You no good bastard you didn't even shed a tear for your children. You didn't seem to care what was going on. Can you explain yourself. So he replied, "Last night I had a dream and in the dream I was a king of a great country. I got married to a beautiful wife. I have three sons. We went hunting together and I loved them dearly. Then there was a war. My three sons went into the army and they got killed. Then I woke up. So for whom shall I mourn? My three sons that got killed in my dream or my three children who got killed yesterday?"

Both pictures are a dream. This waking dream appears a little longer. That is the only difference. I'm not saying that you don't care about what happens. You have a tremendous love and a tremendous compassion but you have Jnana, wisdom. Infinite wisdom. You have transcended the world and the world can no longer hurt you. You understand that everything is for a time, just like a dream. In the dream you go through lifetime after lifetime, you're dreaming you're incarnating over and over again, you're different people and that is actually happening in the dream. It's real. It's a dream reality. But when you wake up you've never gone anywhere and nothing has ever happened. And so it is with your life today. You appear to be running around, doing things, going to work, going to a movie, moving from state to state perhaps. You go through all kinds of experiences since you were a kid. But the truth is you've never gone anywhere and nothing has ever happened. You couldn't go anywhere because you are all-pervading. You are the universe there is nowhere to go. There is no room for you and anything else. You are ultimate happiness.

This doesn't mean that from this moment on you should have an attitude that, "I don't care. I don't care what happens. It doesn't matter to me." This is not what I'm referring to. I'm referring to the fact that through self-inquiry, little by little you will transcend the world and the world will be a dream to you. Yet you will be the epitome of compassion, of love, of peace and joy.

Some people say they love their life and they'd like to live forever as their body. Think about that. Can you imagine brushing your teeth and flossing three times a day for a thousand years. Having to take a shower, eat. Always going along with what is happening in the world for a thousands of years. You will beg to die.

This is why, kindly nature allows you to live so long in your body when you do not awaken as reality. You have so many years and then you're given another chance to have a new body. And again you have the opportunity to find your Self, to use discrimination, to be able to separate the wheat from the chaff and again you don't make it and you take on another body and go through more experiences.

If you begin to let go of the world, I won't use the term "become disgusted with it." If you begin to let go of the world something will immediately start to happen to you. Immediately you will to grow spiritually. Something will take it's place. To the extent that you let go of the world with all it's problems, with all it's beauty, with all it's joys and sorrows, to the extent you can let go of that, to that extent will you be filled up with spirit. If you let go 20% you will be filled 20%, if you let go 40% you will be filled 40%. The void will always become filled. The space you leave when you let go will become filled with God, consciousness, nirvana, call it anything you like. You will begin to feel a peace and a joy that you've never felt before. To that extent that you can let go.

The only way that you can begin to do this is through practice. You begin to negate everything. You no longer are attached to person, place or thing. But you're going through the motions as if you are. You do not feel the pressure of this world. You are not perplexed by the vicissitudes of what goes on everyday in your life. You become happy, totally happy in yourself. You feel an overwhelming joy, a bliss within yourself. You begin to realize that it's not the body that feels this, the body does not exist. It is the Self, expressing as the Self. Do not be concerned with what is going on in this world. There is a power and a presence that takes care of this world in the right way. You have come to this earth for one purpose, that is to wake up. And all the experiences you appear to be going through are for your awakening.

This is why I say to you so often, "Do not judge by experiences." Do not determine where you are in consciousness by the experiences you're going through in your life. For it is the mind that wants to judge and as you know by now the mind is not your friend. The mind will do anything to stay alive and control you. This is where you use discrimination. You realize the mind cannot fool you any longer. It has no power over you. It cannot cause you to weep when you see something wrong, to laugh hysterically when you see something right, you become even minded. You are able to walk through this world without a blemish. Things will happen but to whom do they happen? Not to the pure Self but to the imagination, to the belief system. To the one who believes they are the body-mind things happen. The stronger your mind is the greater the reaction over the things that happen in your life. As you keep practicing these things self-inquiry will come by itself.

When you begin to see a situation in this world whether it's with you or the world itself, you watch something on television the question will arise by itself, "Who is experiencing this? To whom does it come?" And you will smile for you will realize that the experience that you see on television, on the news, the experience that you're going through is a lie. You are not that and something within you will tell you, "I am experiencing this. I observe this and feel it." You therefore follow the I-thread, you follow the I-thought to the source. The source is always consciousness. When the I-thought goes back into consciousness, it never existed to begin with, but it becomes clear to you. When the I-thought does not go back into consciousness then the world and it's manifestations appear real. Your problems appear real. When you watch the news you feel what's going on, for it appears real to you. For the I-thought is active, the I-thought is working. Making you feel the reality of the world and yourself.

Therefore you have to become vigilant and really grab hold of that I-thought by following back to the centre of the spiritual heart. And dive deep into your heart. Where there is absolute freedom, absolute bliss and absolute joy. Do not be fooled any longer. Do not believe what your eyes show you. What your ears make you hear. What your senses want you to believe. Go beyond that. It may take some effort, it may take some time. Yet you must do whatever you must do to free yourself from the pull of the world.

If you are ready you will know what to do. If you are ready you will know what to do. if you are busy, busy, busy with other things then the world will grab you and make you believe this and make you believe that, put you through all kinds of experiences where you will cry and scream and get violently upset. At other times you will be happy and you will think everything is going your way. It will alternate. You will be like a yo-yo going up and down. You have within yourself the equipment necessary to transmute yourself. It comes as standard equipment at birth. It's within you. You're using it the wrong way. You're using it to externalize the world. Where what you really want to do is to dive within yourself and internalize the world, by pulling the whole universe back within yourself where it came from. You reverse the procedure. You pull back everything within yourself. It came out of yourself, it has to go back in yourself. That is salvation. When everything, the whole universe, everything in it is sucked back into yourself, into consciousness. And another name for the whole universe, everything there is, is I. Because the I is alive and active you experience the whole universe as it is. When the I goes back into the heart centre the whole universe is sucked in with it. This is why when you go to sleep and you're falling into deep sleep there is a profound peace that comes over you, a profound joy. Try to catch yourself and see. This is happening because the I is going back into the heart centre. And when you are in deep sleep the I is in the heart centre and only consciousness exists.

Now if only you were able to wake up with the I still being in the heart centre you would be emancipated, totally free. But what happens to you is because of delusion and maya, when you awaken the I-thought comes out of the centre and goes back into your brain. You become cognizant of the body and of the world and of the universe.

The secret is to be aware of what I'm saying and not to allow the I to go back out. But to keep the I always in the heart centre. You do this by investigation, by inquiring, "Who am I? What is the source of the I?" As you keep inquiring you will go with the I deeper and deeper until the time comes when it no longer comes out.

The choice is yours. What are you doing with your life everyday? Where are your thoughts? What do you allow yourself to feel everyday? Are you happy because you've got a great job and you're making a lot of money? Or because you've got a great family? Or you own property? These things are all temporary. I'm not saying you shouldn't do this. But you have to put first things first. Find out how you arrived on this earth. How you happened to have a body. How you go through different experiences. Investigate, find out what you really are. Do not take my word for it but spend time going deep within yourself. Try to leave the world alone. Do not concern yourself with what is going on in this world. Some of you think it's selfish, yet if you do not know yourself how can you concern yourself with the world? It is the blind leading the blind. After you have awakened then see if you want to do anything with this world. If you want to make this world a better place in which to live. But until then save yourself.

As the Buddha said, when you're in a burning building you do not stop to admire the pictures on the wall. You get out of that building as fast as you can. I say to you, "Do not stop to admire the world with all of its trivialities, with all its so called beauty and nonsense. Save yourself. Become free. Noone can do it but you.

(silence)

You're free to ask any questions you like.

SC: Robert, how about surrendering? (R: How about it?) Well that seems difficult to do.

R: To whom? (SC: What?) To whom does it appear difficult? That is what you have to inquire within yourself. (SC: Yeah.) To whom does it appear difficult to surrender? What in me makes it difficult? (SC: The mind wants to be in control all the time.) What is the mind?

Where does it come from? Who gave it birth? (SC: Just thoughts. It just comes by itself.) So, "To whom does it come by itself? (SC: It comes to me.) That's it! Now investigate me. Who is this me that has the problem? Where did the me come from? (SC: I don't know?) Inquire, ask yourself, there is something in you that knows. Don't say that I don't know because what you're really saying is, "I" doesn't know. Who is the "I" that doesn't know?

SC: There is no answer to that?

R: Find out where the no answer comes from. (SC: The same place as the question came from.) Where is that? (SC: What?) Where is that? (SC: Can't put it in words.) There are no words. If there are no words there is no problem. (SC: What's that got to do with surrendering?) When you do all that I told you to do you automatically surrender. (SC: Oh?) Because there is nothing left that wants to be active. (SC: Umm.) It's all been gone backwards into consciousness and you have surrendered completely.

SC: Like I have difficulty sleeping at nights. And I realize it's just an idea, so the idea seems to take over?

R: Try to investigate and realize it is "I" that has difficulty sleeping at night. Not you, "I." And again you inquire, "What is the source of this I?" If you really do this, the "I"... (tape break) ... it's never you, it's always "I." We keep making this mistake by trying to relieve our troubles, by trying to find solutions for problems. That's the hard way. The easy way is to get rid of "I." By remembering that the whole universe, the problems, everything is attached to "I." As you allow yourself to follow the I-thought to the source all the things that seem to disturb you will disappear.

SU: Robert, I realize that following the "I" to the source means that it goes from the brain to the heart. But I don't know the process of following the "I."

R: You do not have to become too technical. All you have to do is imagine in your imagination the "I" going into the heart centre and you do this by inquiring, "Who am I?" That's the whole process. You're inquiring what is the source of the "I." That's the only process there is. "What is the source of I," is following the I to the source. It's the same thing. And as you keep questioning yourself, the space in between the question will become larger and larger. You will begin to find solace, peace in that space and pretty soon you will say, "Who am I?" and you will sort of become omnipotent, all-pervading for a while. You will feel tremendous joy that wells up in your heart. Then you will come out of it and you will say again, "What is the source of the I?" or "Who am I?" and again there will be a larger, longer space between the times you say these words. It's in that space that you want to remain. In that space between questioning is nirvana, consciousness, your true Self. In that silence.

Yet whenever you come back out of it, and thoughts come to your mind you have to continue the procedure. "To whom do these thoughts come? I feel them. Who am I?" Every time you say, "Who am I?" You're using your imagination to follow the I back to the source. The reason you have a problem with it of course is due to what we were talking about this afternoon. Your mind is very adamant, very strong. Your ego is very big and it grabs a hold of you, making you feel and believe that this world and your body are real. You therefore have to keep practicing, "Who feels the world to be real? Who feels upset? Who feels depressed? Who feels problems? Who feels the body? Why I do." And you go right back to asking, "What is the source of the I?"

(short silence)

Do not look at time. As most of you know by now, time and space do not really exist. They only exist for the "I," for the ego, for the mind. Therefore do not bother to think, "How long is this going to take before I become free?" Learn to become centered. Live in the moment. Take it a step at a time. Be spontaneous. And keep your mind from thinking past your nose.

(short silence)

As I talk to you I hear so many of you sighing as if you're carrying a big burden on your shoulders. There is nothing wrong. All is well with you. Believe me when I tell you this. It's like when you go for a train ride. You go into your compartment and you tell the conductor to wake you up when you get to your station and you have absolutely nothing to do with it. It's the same with your life. Your life is totally measured. It's going through the experiences that you have to go through. Yet you have absolutely nothing to do with it. For you are not your body. So why fight? Leave it alone. The less you think the faster you will wake up. Would you like to read the Jnani Mary? (SM: Yes, um-hm.)

(Mary reads the confessions of a Jnani, refer to beginning of book for text)

R: Thank you Mary. (SM: Thank you Robert.)

R: Anyone else like to say anything?

SM: We have transcriptions that have come in, on the table.

R: We have transcriptions for you. Feel free to take them.

SE: Robert you started your talk by saying you must have disgust for the world, initiating the spiritual quest but there seems to be a difference between having disgust for the world and having an indifference for the world, as a transition that takes place. Can you say something about that?

R: Yes, you begin by realizing the world has nothing to offer you anymore. As you continue on the spiritual quest the world becomes less and less important for you. Until you despise the whole world altogether. For you realize the world is keeping you back from your spiritual sojourn with it's force called maya. Is holding onto you, it has a grip on you and to the extent that you disgust yourself with it and let go of it and stop allowing it to have power over you to that extent does your true reality and the truth of your being come forth. As you work on yourself this really takes place by itself. You can't go out and say, "I'm disgusted with the world," for you're making a mistake when you do that. You have to grow into it. As long as the world is still meaningful to you, you have to investigate thoroughly and realize why the world is totally meaningless. And after a while of doing this practice you will become disgusted with the world.

SH: Isn't disgust a form of negative attachment? (R: Yes exactly, that's what it is.) Then why would you be disgusted because that still would attach you to what you're disgusted with?

R: No you're disgusted with it because you've been practicing spiritual self-inquiry or other methods on yourself. (SH: But then you just let it go and wouldn't be disgusted.) You let it go, that's why I like to use the word discrimination. (SH: I don't agree with the concept of disgust being...) Well disgust is a word. You just get to the point where you realize, "This whole world has been making me what I am today, an idiot." (laughter) "Therefore I'm going to let go of this stupid world. I don't want it anymore, I'm disgusted with it." Sometimes you have to get sort of angry with yourself, and sort of, "To heck with this, I'm tired with this kind of life. I'm disgusted with the whole thing," and then discrimination will make you go deep inside yourself and you will be able to practice as you usually do.

SZ: Robert the last or before the last of the eight or the ten steps of development insight or progressing in insight is transmuted from the Pali into "Disgust of the world." (R: Yes.) It baffled me too in the beginning. At that stage as you say it is to be seen from the state of transcendence. Then one sees the fact as you say, it is disgusting but it doesn't hold you, it doesn't hold one. One has compassion and insight and wisdom at that time. But one sees the world for what it is, it is disgusting. It really is. (R: Thank you, that's very true.) But it is safe. I will never say that to someone who cannot totally understand it. But from the transcendent level it is really is that way. But one will not act upon it. One will see in compassion, in caring, in loving kindness, and tremendously attend to the details of all that disgusting stuff if one has the... (R: Without attachment.) Without attachment? (R: Yes. This is very true.) So then it's not really disgusting, yeah it is, that's true, it is. I find it true. But I cry about it. (R: Yes.) The tears will flow sometimes because the things I'm reading or studying sometimes, just environmental situations.. then I kind of feel that I'm nurturing my despair without being despair. And this feeling of pain because you cannot really help. But yet you still will not give up helping. It's somehow, you feel it as a call for you.

R: This is very true what you're saying. (SZ: Yeah.) It's part of the path of the unfoldment of yourself. (SZ: Right.) You go through a stage where you are disgusted with the whole world.

SZ: Yeah even with my students I do that. As I just had now the tameless one. He tells me to go to the bus station I used an hour and a half to get to down town. (S: You were lucky.) And to deliver him into the station. He came from Germany he didn't know, he wanted to go to Santa Barbara. And then I said, "Well come with me." and then I saw it what I was in. Sure I could see, "I should not do this, I don't need it." One sees the inner voice coming up with all kinds of things and then I seem to perceive, "No, this is your path, this is your Kian, it's disgusting. That is what you are in, it's also your own karma. Such a beautiful obligation without being an obligation.

R: That's a good way to see it. Yes that's true. (SZ: And you perceive it, one is a part of it and one is not a part of it.) Right we go through stages. (SZ: I guess it's strange, it was.) It is strange. Life is really strange.

SE: Life sucks then you die. (students laugh) What that did for me, when I discovered life sucks and then you die, it also made me think there is only one way out. (R: What's that?) Spirituality, finding your Self, self-inquiry, surrender. (R: It's the ultimate knowledge.) Otherwise you come back and life sucks again and you die again.

SH: It's really is the only solution isn't it?

SZ: But that gives meaning to life. That is because one sees the truth, it's disgusting. It's a truth. First know the truth as the Buddha says. Life is to hard, to hard means all kinds of things. Low, disgusting and painful, terrible without having a curse. it's not a curse, it's not a putting down. It's just seeing how it is.

R: Of course. It's not a curse and it's not a blessing. (SZ: No. For ordinary people the world is either a curse or a blessing. And here it is neither but you are somehow very much, if it's necessary to see yourself if possible engaged in it.) Yes. So when somebody tells you, "I'm disgusted with you!" say, "Thank you." (laughter)

SZ: One has to be careful to whom. It's not good for that consciousness to say that. There is certain responsibility I think sometimes. (R: Discrimination.) Discrimination right. And it doesn't help the other consciousness, praising itself for opening up. One who says it's disgusting. When one who says it's disgusting would immediately point and project to one and they will say, "I am disgusting," and snowball.

R: Of course. (SZ: Yeah.) As you practice spiritual sadhana all these things come to you. You will know what to do. (SZ: Right.) Do the practice. (SZ: Very good and tremendous value for that.)

R: Do we have any other announcements?

SZ: Robert one could equally say from that point or level instead of saying "it's disgusting," one could say, "it's wonderful?" (R: Of course.) Yeah.

R: It depends where we're coming from. (SZ: Yeah. Maybe also to whom one says it too? To whom one is communicating. Sometimes to see it positively than this way it's a bit harder to understand. I only bitch in that way to those who understand.) (laughs) If you investigate this within yourself all the information you're looking for will come to you. Everything will be revealed. Everything is within yourself. And there will come a time in your life when you're totally disgusted with the world. (SZ: With what?) Disgusted with the world. Everything will come buy itself. (SZ: It's just, there is a danger in it if the mind isn't kind of awakened to it enough?)... (tape break)

R: Always remember that you are not the body or the mind. That you are pure Brahman, absolute reality, consciousness. You are nirvana, you are sat-chit-ananda. That is your real nature and may your real nature unfold and you awaken now, peace.

Thank you for coming. God bless you I love you all. Have a good week. Don't worry be happy. (laughter)

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 97

FAITH

26th September, 1991

Robert: Good evening. Some of you fell asleep before I started talking. You're supposed to fall asleep when I talk, and not before. (laughter)

There are many of us who are still looking for words. They come here looking for a lecture, a talk. This is what they expect. Words have their importance. If you're a doctor or a lawyer you do a lot of talking. But in true spiritual life most words are fruitless, especially in satsang. Satsang is consciousness, and your true nature is consciousness. Therefore when you come and sit in the lap of consciousness, something begins to happen to you. Your karma, samskaras, become transcended and you become free, just by having the right attitude at satsang.

This means you have to open your heart. You have to have love and compassion. You should never think what you're going to get out of satsang. You should only think what you're going to surrender at satsang. You're going to surrender your body, your mind, you're so-called problems, all the things you think about most of the day. At satsang you give them up. You become an empty receptacle so that consciousness can shine forth.

Why do most people want to become self-realized? They have wild ideas what self-realization is. They believe their life will become easy, they'll never have to work again, they can perform magic rites, have occult powers. As you know, none of this is true. Self-realization, consciousness, is all-pervading absolute reality, pure intelligence. It is a state of knowingness. Not knowing something, but just knowing. End. Not even knowing itself. Just knowing, being. It is a state of bliss, happiness. This is your true nature, total happiness.

You have always been total happiness. There never was a time when you were not total happiness. Yet somehow you got mixed up with maya, illusion, and you came to believe that you're a mortal being, separate from everyone else, having to go through experiences to become enlightened. That's really funny. You left your true nature, got pulled into maya, and now you're trying to get out of it.

The truth is, there's no maya. There's nothing to get out of. You are already that, and all is well. We begin to feel that there's a living presence within us. As we work on that feeling, that living presence turns out to be us. It turns out that we are not the body, or the mind or the doer. We are that living presence. There's no name for it. It is beyond words and thoughts. But it is there, shining in all its glory. You feel the freedom, the love, the joy of it.

When you get to that state, the world can no longer hurt you. The world has no longer any effect on you. It cannot show you anything, in order for you to react. You just no longer react to anything. You have become that.

Yet most westerners want to become that living presence without giving up their old beliefs, their conceptual thinking, all this stuff that made them human. They simply want to add self-realization to the top of everything. This is why most westerners never awaken in this life, for they refuse to empty themselves. All of their preconceived ideas, their feelings, they have to be worked on.

That's why I passed out those booklets today, "At the Feet of the Master." Krishnamurti wrote that when he was sixteen years old. It explains to you what you must do. We hit upon this a little last week when we were talking about discrimination and dispassion.

There is something else that is very important for you to understand in order to become self-realized, and that is faith. You have to have faith in something that you yet do not understand. Faith is a powerful tool you use to climb the ladder to self-realization. You have to have faith in yourself, faith in the teaching, faith in the teacher, faith that something wonderful is about to happen to you.

Yet I meet so many people that are so dogmatic, opinionated in their views. They have doubts, suspicions, all kinds of negative symptoms going through them, and they want to become self-realized. It is true you can go a long way with all of your bad habits. But I say to you, you can never awaken fully until you give them up, and faith helps you to give them up.

There's a story about Makunda, one of the Rishis, Sages, of old. For some reason he decided to get married. He wanted to have a child. But no matter how he tried, his wife couldn't conceive. Two years passed, and he said, I'm going to pray to Shiva, one of the Gods.

He prayed to Shiva and he said, "Lord, your will is my will. I don't really know what's good for me, or what I really want. But you know what I want in my heart, and if it's right for me it will happen. If it isn't, it won't. But I have total faith in you that whatever happens is your will and it's good." He prayed like this for many years. Finally Shiva appeared to him and said, "My son, never have I seen such faith. You forgot all about yourself, about your family, and you just wanted me. So I have appeared to you. Your desire will come to pass. You will have a child, but you must make a choice. You may have a child who is a half idiot and will live a long life, or a child with a fine intellect who will live a short life. You have to choose."

Makunda said, "I will choose the latter, the one with the sharp intellect." And Shiva said, "He will live to be sixteen years old and then he will drop his body." Makunda accepted and the time came to have the baby, they did.

And at a very young age the intellect of the child was astounding. He was able to memorize all the Vedas when he was five years old. He was able to speak five languages.

He was an astounding poet, writer. As he grew older his father became sadder and sadder. Finally he asked his father, "Father, what's wrong? Why do you become so sad every time I have a birthday?" And Makunda explained to him the deal he made with Shiva. "You've only to live to be sixteen, and then you must go.

The youth said, "Shiva listened to you. Perhaps he'll listen to me," and he started to pray to Shiva every day. "Lord, I am yours, and do with me what you want. I have no desire. I know only that you brought me here, and when your ready you will take me back. Do with me as you will. Your will, not mine, be done. I am yours." And again he said that prayer every day for a year.

Finally Shiva appeared to him also and said, "My son, you have the faith of your father. When someone prays to me thus, I have no option but to help him. So because of your faith, when you reach the age of sixteen, you will stay at that age forever."

Now the moral of that story is the faith. Remember, Makunda was very advanced spiritually, and yet he had faith in a power and a presence, that he didn't see or feel. He surrendered to that power and that presence. That's what it takes for us to awaken.

This is why people like Ramana Maharshi always said that devotion, faith and self-inquiry are the same thing. You can't just have dry self-inquiry. You have to feel love. You have to feel devotion. You have to put God first. Unless you put God first you're going to just have dry words, and the words will give you a sharp intellect. You will be able to recite all sorts of things, memorize books, hear lectures and remember them, yet you will never really awaken. This is why sometimes Advaita Vedanta can be dangerous to some people. Yet if they really read the books on Advaita Vedanta, they will understand that they have to develop a tremendous faith.

Think of some of the teachers that you know or heard about. Nisargadatta, he always prayed. He realized that he was consciousness. He was self-realized, but at the same time he chanted, he prayed, he had devotion. It sounds like a contradiction. For you may say, "If someone is self-realized and knows himself or herself to be all there is, to whom do they pray?" Try to remember that all spiritual life is a contradiction. It's a contradiction because words cannot explain it. Even when you are the Self, you can pray to the Self, which is you.

Ramana Maharshi always had chanting at the ashram, prayers, devotional hymns. These things are very important. Many westerners, who profess to be atheists, come to listen to lectures on Advaita Vedanta, and yet nothing ever happens in their lives. As long as you do not have devotion, faith, love, discrimination, dispassion, it will be very difficult to awaken.

Therefore those of you who become bored with practicing self-inquiry may become very devotional. Surrender everything. Give up your body, your thoughts, all the things that bind you, whatever problems you may believe you have. Surrender them to your favorite deity. You are emptying yourself out as you do this. Do a lot of it. Become humble. Have a tremendous humility. If you can just do that you will become a favorite of God and you'll not have to search any longer. But of course the choice is always yours.

What are you chasing in life? What are you going after? What are the things that interest you? Whatever you put first in your life, that's where your heart is. All of the things that have transpired in your life up to now, forget them. Be aware all of the time that there are no mistakes. There is nothing from the past that can interfere with your life if you become devotional and have faith in God. You'll be automatically protected from anything. And if you have enough faith, you can totally remove all karmic aspects of your life. You can transcend all of karma. You can make life easier for yourself, if you have faith.

There are many people who practice Advaita Vedanta, and some people are here tonight who really do not like to hear these things. They just want to hear me say that you are consciousness. All is well. You are absolute reality. You are really not your body or your mind-phenomena. Yet once they leave this room they turn back into their rotten selves, with all the negatives and all the anger, and all the hurts, and all the suspicions, and all the things that they've had inside of them for years.

Some of these people call me. They say, "Robert, I feel so good when I'm with you in class, but when the world gets a hold of me I revert back to my old self." I always ask them "What practice are you doing?" and they usually answer "I'm trying to practice self-inquiry." So I say, "Do you have devotion? Do you have compassion? Do you have humility? Do you have dispassion?" and they usually say, "I don't care about those things. I just want to become self-realized."

That's real funny, for self-realization means you have given up all of those things we just mentioned. Self-realization means that you have emptied yourself. You no longer have any fear, anxiety. You're not that interested about your body. You love God.

How do you love God? By loving everything in the universe, by reconciling yourself with the whole universe. You start with the mineral kingdom, and you want to see if there's anything in the mineral kingdom that you dislike. When did you kick your car last? Anything in the mineral kingdom, remember everything is God. God is not a person.

Next you go to the vegetable kingdom, and you consider whether there's anything in the vegetable kingdom that you dislike, poison ivy, turnips, anything, for everything in the vegetable kingdom is God, and you have to reconcile yourself with that. It doesn't mean that you have to like turnips or poison ivy, but you're not to dislike it either. You're to be neutral. Poison ivy has a purpose. You may not understand it, but there's a valid reason for everything. Everything has it's place.

Once you've reconciled yourself with the mineral kingdom and the vegetable kingdom, you can go higher to the animal kingdom, and that's a tricky one, for animals are just a notch away from humans. When I speak of the animal kingdom I'm referring to bugs, insects, everything. It becomes very touchy if you're a meat eater. Perhaps you've never seen what the animals go through before they're slaughtered. You have to reconcile yourself with the animal kingdom.

Then you go to the human kingdom, and you consider if you're still carrying old hurts around. Somebody that hurt you and you resent them. You think about these things, and you see that it was all karmic to begin with. No one has ever hurt me. Whatever has happened in my life has been right. And you send thoughts of love and peace to every human being. You forgive everyone. You also forgive yourself for all the things you have done. When you're able to do this you have come up very high, for you have freed yourself from the consequences of karma.

I know some of you say that I keep talking about karma a lot of times. Yet you have to realize that karma is going to exist for you as a reality as long as you believe you are the body, mind and doer. And most of you believe this even if you say you don't. If you want to see what I mean, think back from the moment you got out of bed this morning. What did you react to? What made you feel hurt? What didn't you like? Who offended you? When someone cut in front of you with their car, did you curse at them? This shows you that you still believe you're a body.

We've got to stop using intellect and stop imagining that we are not the body. You are the body-mind as long as you are reacting to life. That's why I say you have to have humility and faith. It becomes hard for you, you pray to God. This is basic. You can pray to God and say, "Lord, I can't stop reacting to situations. Intervene for me. Remove all these things that have been keeping me back from going further on the path. Give me the strength to overcome what I have to overcome." If you pray like this and you have faith, what you call God will always come to your rescue.

I've been with you for quite a while now, with most of you. I am not a teacher that goes around the country lecturing. When you hear of somebody who comes along that you haven't heard of in years, you become enthralled and you say, "I want to go and see that teacher." And the teacher can tell you all the good stuff, because you're not going to see him again until next year. He can tell you, "Don't worry about anything, your absolute reality, you are pure consciousness, you are pure intelligence, total awareness, sat-chit-ananda, Brahman. That's what you are. Goodbye. I'll see you next year." (laughter) And that's great.

But when you're at satsang, with a teacher who sees you all the time, we get right to the nitty gritty. We get into areas where it hurts. For if I tell you all these good things all the time and you keep coming back, you'll start complaining to me that nothing's happening in your life. This is not a belief system. We're not to believe anything. We're to take action and make it happen. And the action is faith and prayer, developing compassion, humility, understanding deep in the recesses of our heart that we are absolute reality, we are consciousness. Yet we still have to do plenty of work to get rid of the concept of the body-mind phenomenon.

Until recently, knowing that you are consciousness and that you are absolute reality was only given to certain students. It was not given to the world, for, as you know, the world abuses these things, as it's doing right now. There are so many books on Advaita Vedanta, so many teachers that are teaching Advaita, it's becoming par for the course. Somebody is always telling me of a new teacher, and people rush to see that teacher.

What you would rather do, is to work on yourself. Forget about teachers and forget about books. But realize where you are coming from. Be honest with yourself. See the stuff that's coming out of you, the stuff you've got to work on to get rid of, and let the chips fall where they may. But be totally honest with yourself.

If you know you've got some bad habits, a lot of anger, resentment, inside of you, you can pray to God to get rid of it. And your prayers will be answered. That's where faith comes in. When you pray to God, have faith that it will be answered. But never pray for things. Always pray that Gods will be done. Gods will is always good will. And at the same time of your prayer, surrender everything. That's when you can surrender your body, and your mind, and your so called karma, and your bad attitudes. Give it all to God. When you do this, something very interesting is going to happen.

I met many people in my travels who are bhakta's, and they told me, "I have such devotion and love for God for so many years. I never read a book on Advaita Vedanta, but all of a sudden I began to ask myself, "Who am I? Who is this I that has all this devotion? Is the I separate from myself?" And I came to the realization that all of this time I've been praying to the one Self, the one reality. But this came to me only because of my devotion, my faith."

Isn't this better than reading books about these things, reading dry knowledge, and then becoming a part of the talking school, where you meet with your friends and you talk, and talk, and talk, and talk, and talk, and talk, and talk about Advaita Vedanta, the Self, consciousness? What a waste of energy, you simply have to make up your mind what you really want. Do you want dry intellectual knowledge, or do you want to awaken to yourself?

If you want to awaken to yourself, you've got to do something about it from where you are right now. And that doesn't mean you have to start affirming, "I am absolute reality." You rather have to start negating all of the stuff that is holding you in it's grips, all of those things like a bad temper, doubts, anger. You have to begin by getting rid of those things and surrendering them to God. Only then will Advaita Vedanta come by itself. But you have to do it.

I realize some of you do not like to hear these things, for you're saying to yourself, "Prayer? I gave that up a long time ago." Yes, but where are you now? What have you gained? Have you become free? You probably have more problems now, also, than you ever had before. And even if you do not have any problems, you are still attached to the world, and you go up and down with the stock market, up and down with the way the world is from day to day. If you hear something good, you're happy. If you hear something sad, you become miserable. You're stuck in maya.

This is what you have to work on. This is what you have to do. You have your work before you. Lets see how many of you can begin to do it.

Please feel free to ask questions.

SL: Robert when you say pray, how do you pray? Like, Thy will be done?

R: That is what happens when you come in late. You missed it, we've talked about it. You simply pray like this, "Lord there is nothing I desire, there is nothing I need, there is nothing I want except your grace. Teach me the way. Love me, lead me. I surrender to you my body, my problems, my mind, my heart, take it they are yours. Thy will not mine, be done." Like that.

SL: You didn't mention karma just then. Is that part of what is predestined? To let it go. To let things happen that is supposed to happen? (R: I can't hear you too well.) Is that what that part of it is, predestiny? Is letting your body be what it's supposed to be doing?

R: Forget about predestiny, simply give everything away to God. (SL: How does that...?) Just surrender yourself completely. Surrender everything. Tell God to take away your predestiny. Give everything away until you become nothing.

SL: So that is another approach to self-inquiry? For you said if we do that then it automatically goes into self-inquiry?

R: When you do that for quite a period of time you will begin to realize, who is doing this? And you will see it is I that is doing this. "Who am I?" Automatically you will go into self-inquiry. Yet again some of you will not have to go into self-inquiry. From total surrender you can awaken. For aren't you giving up everything like in self-inquiry. You are surrendering everything to God, your ideas, your beliefs, everything. And in self-inquiry you also negate everything. You negate the entire universe in self-inquiry. So you see they're both the same. The idea is just to give everything up. To have no will of your own.

(long silence)

Om shanti, shanti, shanti, peace, peace...

(tape ends) [TOC]

THE FIVE STEPS TO SELF REALIZATION

29th September, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. (Students: Good afternoon) It is a pleasure being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

If you are here for the first time you may think we're a little crazy and you're right we're more than a little crazy. Do not pay too much attention to the words. Open your heart and let go of everything. Be happy. You have nothing to fear and nothing to worry about. All is well.

A while back I shared the four principles of Jnana Marga with you. Who can remember them? Anybody?

SY: Everything is a projection of the mind? The first one. (R: Everything is what?) A projection of the mind.

R: Yes. The whole universe is a projection of the mind. Everything you see in this world, everything that happens in your life is a projection of your mind. It has no substance, no value. You are the creation of the universe. What is the second one?

(students guess)

SE: We do not prevail. No beginning no end.

R: Yes. We do not prevail. There is no substance in back of your existence. You didn't come from anything. You were never born. You can never die. You are no thing that you can ever imagine. And your life as it appears does not exist. What's the third one?

SG: There's no ego. Everything doesn't have an ego?

R: Yes. No thing that exists has an ego. There is no ego to back anything up. You have believed all of these years that you have an ego and that you have to get rid of it. There is no ego to be gotten rid of. If there is no ego there is nothing to do. There is nothing to fear and there is nothing to fight. And the fourth one?

(students guess again)

SM: Is it the understanding what realization is not?

R: Yes. The understanding what self-realization is not. You can never understand realization. But you can understand what it is not. Everything that exists is not. When everything is gotten rid of, realization appears by itself. They're in the transcripts.

I'm going to share today and the following weeks coming the five steps to self-realization. Why are there five steps to self-realization because I just made it up. (laughter)

Self-realization is itself what it is. It has nothing to do with steps. Self-realization is. It is no thing that you can ever imagine. You do not have to look for it. You do not have to try to find it. It is someone in the ocean deciding to give a course on how to find the ocean and everybody comes running to listen when they're all in the ocean.

You are realization itself. It is your real nature. The reason I'm sharing these five steps with you is because the five steps are part of the personal self. The ego, the I-thought, the five steps are involved in them. When we work on the five steps in the relative world we become ourselves, awakened and free.

The first step is: Prayer and devotion.

The second step is: Effortless No-Thought State.

The third step is: Division of Light and Sound.

The fourth step is: The Void, and,

The fifth step is: Bliss.

Again realization is not a step. You discover you are that when the steps have been fulfilled. We'll begin with the first. We got into this last Friday...last Thursday. We were talking about these things.

In the beginning when one first starts out on the path and even when one is on the path for quite a while, prayer and meditation or prayer and devotion are very important. Do not believe that you have passed that state. Prayer and devotion go hand in hand. You become devoted to God who is within you and you pray to God within yourself. Yet you do not pray for things. You pray that God's will be done through you, as you and this makes you devoted to the deity to whom you're praying.

You surrender yourself. You give up all of your life and everything you think is important. Including your problems, your hurts. These things are important to you or you wouldn't be carrying them around. You therefore give them up when you begin to pray aright. You no longer have to carry them. You begin to feel and know that this is God's universe and God is appearing as form. Your form, the form of the universe, animals, minerals. Without God there would be no form whatsoever. Everything comes from what we call God. Therefore we react to everything as we would react to God with love and peace and compassion, with humility and with joy. Everything is God in expression. If everything is God and God is the substratum of all existence then everything is perfect. There are no mistakes. The mistakes come from your sense of personal I. When you feel something is wrong it is because you feel that you are a personal self. You have not surrendered to God through prayer and devotion. You must therefore begin to totally surrender, give up everything to God, forget about your troubles, forget about the world, just give it up.

As you begin to do this you gently slip into the number two state. The effortless no thought state. As you surrender everything your mind becomes completely calm. And you effortlessly drop your thinking mechanism. You sort of stop thinking. Your mind becomes sort of a blank. Do not confuse this with the void. It is a beautiful state of no thoughts. Let me also remind you that you usually do not slip into that state so fast. It may take many years, many incarnations just to get through the prayer and devotional state. You have to become really devotional, very prayerful to totally surrender your life so that your mind becomes still, calm, peaceful.

You begin to feel profound peace. A happiness you never felt before. The world no longer has any value. You feel good most of the time. As you continue along this path you gradually slip into the third step. You begin to see lights and the light increases. Whenever you close your eyes and even when you don't close your eyes. The light is like the light of a thousand suns. It appears as if the world is on fire. Many of you have seen this. Also you begin to hear beautiful music of the spheres. You listen and the most beautiful music begins to play. Sometimes you get them both. Those are gifts of grace.

The whole universe is filled with light, it is pure light and beautiful music sounds. Blissful sounds come into your life. If people do not understand this they believe this is it, this is as far as they can go. But it is only the beginning. As you sit in the silence and become absorbed in the light and the sounds you enter the void which is the fourth step. The void unlike the effortless no thought state is a deep joy. A deep love. You are totally free in that state. You look at the world, at the universe, at your fellow man and it becomes void. There is no thing there but a deep love, a deep peace. Deeper than you've ever felt before. You are still aware that you are still experiencing these states. The void is not dark and is not light. It has nothing to do with lightness and darkness. It is something that you have become. Something so wonderful, so grand, there is no description of that feeling. As you continue in this state you fall into the total bliss state.

Bliss is a word again that cannot be described. It makes happiness feel like nothing. It is not of this world. You do not even experience it. You simply enjoy it. When you are in bliss it is then that you lose yourself completely. The personal I, the personal self at that time no longer exists. It has been dissolved forever. It is a state that you cannot return from. It is not something that you feel when you are meditating then you get back to the personal self. There is no personal self. You are finished with your ego, with your personal self and with the I-thought. You have become nothing. You have melted. You have been destroyed. Yet you are alive. You feel that you are alive and you do not know how you live. For so called life that you have been experiencing previously no longer exists for you. You have become the Self and you can laugh. For you realize that you have always been the Self. There never was a time that you were not the Self. You are free, totally free. The world is no longer the world that you once knew. You continue to see the images but the images are like chalk writings on the blackboard. And you are the chalkboard. You're free, totally absolutely free.

Now there are many ways that this happens to you. Most people go through these states very slowly. There are some who go through all of the five states at one time for some unknown reason. They experience all the states simultaneously. It's as if they're jumping thousands of years in their evolution.

How do you go through the states? Through the five steps? By thinking of them. You use your mind, you use your ego to think about the five steps. You watch yourself, you work on yourself. Sometimes you do not have to work at all. They come by themselves.

Now let's talk about you. Where do you think you are as far as the five steps are concerned?

SE: To the question, zero.

R: Do not put yourself down but be honest with yourself. You can tell by the way you react to life. Where your interest is. If you're still fiddling in the world and the world is important to you then you know you're keeping yourself back from experiencing the five steps. You look at your life, you see what interests you. The things in this world that are meaningful to you. The things that seem to make you happy. The things that make you worry, make you miserable. Those are all handicaps. Whenever you give your mind to a problem, to anything in this world you are keeping yourself back from going forward. That's why it is written, "Where your mind is that is where your heart is."

We have learnt, those of us who are here that the world is not what it appears to be. There is no so-called permanent happiness in this world. You may achieve forms of happiness, they do not last. You learn as soon as your mind begins to think, you immediately grab hold of it and change it's course. You slow down your mind by any method you can. You see your mind as your enemy. Your mind is not your friend. You do not train your mind, you untrain your mind.

You untrain your mind by just observing your own thoughts, by watching yourself think, by not reacting to your thoughts, not reacting to what happens in your world. As you do this you begin to dissolve. You find peace. You find peace. You become free. You become love. You no longer talk too much. You no longer try to evaluate the world or your position. You no longer find fault anywhere. You become your own experience. You have expanded. You used to be concerned with yourself as a body, with your health, concerned with your affairs. But now even though you are involved in the world, you are not of the world. The world has no pull on you. The world cannot show you anything. It cannot do anything to you. The world is the same as your body. You are not the body, you are not the world, you are not your mind. You are something completely different. That something different is ineffable.

An example of this is simply when you look out the window. Most of you observe the trees, the hills. When the Jnani looks out the window he sees the space which is the substance of the trees. When the average person looks at the world they see forms, they see things. The Jnani always sees the space. The world itself is resting in space. That space is what is called consciousness. The forms come and go but the space remains. When you think of your body, think of it as space.

The form keeps changing from a baby to a young lady or a young man, to a middle aged lady or a middle aged man, to an old man, to an old lady and soon it's gone but it's space remains. The space never changes. A new body come to play, the old body is gone. The new body takes birth in the space.

The so-called secret is to identify with the space. Your real nature has always been space. When you identify with space rather than with the body you have put an end to yourself as a body, as an ego, as a personal self. Space is all-pervading omnipresent. Awaken to yourself. Wake up!

Many people believe that creative intelligence is consciousness, the Self. People like Mozart, Beethoven, Da Vinci, Plato, Aristotle all use creative intelligence and we look at that as being good. Yet that creative intelligence...

(break in tape)

...The body by itself is inert. It's a piece of dead flesh. That cannot catch a cold. How can a piece of flesh catch a cold. The body by itself can do nothing it is just flesh and bone. It is the creative intelligence that moves the body. The creative intelligence makes the body move like a puppet. Yet most of us believe that if we have creative intelligence that is good. It's only another name for your mind. Even though it seems to create wonderful things. All of the great artists, the great musicians, the great philosophers have used creative intelligence. Yet it hinders you from awakening.

I'm not saying there is anything wrong with being a great musician, a great artist, a great philosopher or whatever you do. But the truth is, it is not the Self. The knot must be broken. When the knot is broken the Self shines forth as itself. And the way you break this knot or one of the ways is through self-inquiry. Just because you are creating something wonderful, say you're Einstein, you're working on the theory of relativity. As far as the human race is concerned we consider Einstein a genius. He used creative intelligence to discover many wonderful things through mathematics. Yet what good does this do the world. It may appear to advance the world a notch but it really builds up the ego. The question Einstein should have asked himself is, "Who discovered relativity? To whom does this come? Where did these ideas come from? Who formulated this theory?" and he would have realized that the mind did all this to expand the knowledge of the human race.

See it's all a joke, the jokes on you. All these great inventions, all these great things that have come into this world. The things that you're proud of, the art, the music, everything, is a big joke. Where does it go? What is the ultimate? It goes nowhere. It goes round and round. New generations come along, they use all this knowledge. Then civilizations are wiped out and everything begins again.

The wise person begins to understand that the Self is the reality and goes beyond everything. Let's go of creative intelligence, begins to go beyond that by inquiring, "Who am I?" By following the I-thought to the source the knot finally becomes broken like a rubber band the body snaps into the Self. And the body appears to be alive as the body. But to the one that this happens to, something wonderful has transpired. That one has become the universe.

Again let's go back to your life. You believe you're a woman, you're a man, you're a boy, you're a girl. You have experiences to go through. You have a life to live. You have a family to raise. A cockroach goes through the same thing. (laughter) And you step on the cockroach and that is the end of it's existence. Perhaps we live a little longer than a cockroach and perhaps nobody steps on us but what are we accomplishing? What are we really looking for? Or what are we searching for? What do we want? It's all nonsense. Everything is nonsense. The whole lecture today was nonsense. I said nothing. Why am I sitting here talking? What has it done for you? What has my talk done for you? It makes you say to yourself, "What is he talking about?" Wake up! Awaken from the mortal dream.

(silence)

Feel free to ask questions.

SR: Robert you mentioned today that when you look at forms and objects you see space. I think I need your help in understanding what you mean by space?

R: If you look at your body under an electronic microscope you would see a tremendous space between your atoms. It is this space that holds your atoms together. (SR: Robert I know all that but that doesn't help me to see the space?) If you want to see the space you must turn within. Go deeper than you've ever gone before. Get rid of your body completely and you'll be space. (SR: So I won't see the atoms in the form but only the space?) You will see the space as you see the images on the blackboard. When you look at the images on the blackboard you see the images. But most people do not realize there is a blackboard behind it. They take it for granted. Yet the enlightened one knows the blackboard as the source of the images and they see through the images at the blackboard itself. Somebody may come and erase the images and draw new images. The Sage can see through the image to the blackboard and sees the blackboard as the source.

Or a better example is a mirror. A child tries to grasp the image in the mirror. All they can grasp is the mirror. But their attention is on the image. So the Sage realizes that the image is a reflection of consciousness and is able to see through that. He sees the images but only as reflections of light. But the space is the reality. The space is not space that you think it is. The confusion lies, for you feel that space is nothing. It's really nothing but it's a nothing that you can never understand. It's a real nothing, an absolute nothing, a total nothing. Therefore you have to dive back within yourself and cause yourself to disappear. Then you will see space because you will be space. You can only see what you are. If you believe you are a body then you see other bodies. When you know that you're not the body, how can you see a body? Therefore find out who you really are and then you'll see what you'll see.

SF: Robert the Jnani is a so-called individual who has reached the bliss stage and up to that stage there is someone experiencing the first four stages and the fifth stage there is no experienter there is just the experience, even the word experience doesn't...?

R: The Jnani doesn't experience any stages at all. There is no fifth stage for a Jnani. There has to be somebody to experience the fifth stage. (SF: The Jnani is beyond the fifth stage?) There is no experiencer. So a Jnani cannot experience the fifth stage or anything beyond the fifth stage. There is no beyond. The beyond doesn't exist because the beyond means something behind something else. And there is no thing that has any value or any truth for the Jnani. Therefore there's no stage that a Jnani is experiencing whatsoever. The fifth stage the fourth stage is only for the ego, for the body. (SF: Even the fifth stage?) Yes, because for a Jnani there is no fifth stage. When the ajnani explains it they talk about a fifth stage. But the Jnani himself has noone left to experience any fifth stage. There has to be an experiencer, there has to be an I. So you can say, "I have experienced the fifth stage." If you say that then you have not. (SF: Yeah, he hasn't and never will.) There is total emptiness.

SF: I'm trying to think out something in my mind to keep me talking about it?

R: You cannot explain it there is nothing to speak. There are no words that can describe it. (SF: I keep trying to put into words things that can't be put into words.) It is beyond words and thoughts. As long as you're able to explain it, it's not that.

SR: Robert, are you able to sense when a person is identified with their God Self?

R: There is only one Self. There is noone to sense anything. The one Self pervades everything and is everything.

SR: So the mental focus of that form that you don't see but which you're looking at doesn't change with the inner focus of that formless form when they switch from being identified with their body to being identified with the inner Self.

R: The Sage already sees the perfection, the end result. There is nothing else.

SH: That's all he sees, nothing else, period?

R: That's all there is. (SH: The rest has vanished for him.) The rest never existed. (SH: Well then it didn't have to vanish.) Exactly. (SH: It wasn't there in the first place.) Exactly. (SH: That's neat. I like that. Very immaculate.) Immaculate conception. (SH: Without anything happening. It's great. (laughs) Hey hey some fun.)

SC: Did Jesus attain the state that we're talking about? (R: You'll have to ask Jesus.)

ST: Robert what is the source of the light and the music that you hear...?

R: The mind. Everything comes from the mind, everything. All the beauty, all the ugliness, all the joys, all the sorrows, everything is of the mind. Kill the mind and you'll be free. (pause) This is the meaning of the saying, "If you see Buddha on the road kill him." Because if you're able to see the Buddha you're seeing yourself, your mind. There is no Buddha, there never was a Buddha. So if you see anything that appears to be like a Buddha, kill him.

SH: Which is the same thing as killing your own mind? (R: Yes.) You can't do that? There is no you to kill your mind?

R: Are you asking me if I'm my mind? (SH: When you say "kill your mind," you're asking an impossibility because there is no you to do it?) But you don't know it. (SH: The hell I don't.) Then kill it and be done for. (SH: Right. Noone will do nothing.) You are nothing why do you want to do something? (SH: I don't.) So be nothing and rest in nothingness. (SH: Thank you. I'll work on it. Just don't complicate it. (laughs) Keep it simple.) Okay.

SE: If you see an ego on the road, kill it?

R: Same thing. The Buddha is an ego. Whatever you see kill it. Kill the source of it.

SH: Sounds pretty blood thirsty. (R: It is.)

SR: Just don't hold onto things.

R: If you can drop it that'd be great. But sometimes you have to use the term, "kill it." To make you understand what you really have to do. You have to whole heartedly with enthusiasm... (SR: Let go.) ...crush it completely.

SH: No compromise, become quiet radical? (R: Very radical.) Yeah totally radical.

R: Completely.

SL: Robert sometimes it sounds sort of paradoxical to me that you try not to be affected by the world or you become unaffected by it in order to become more compassionate towards it or to be more compassionate or it's sort of irreconcilable, do you know what I mean?

R: When you automatically let go of the world compassion by itself comes to you. When you do not react to conditions you become the epitome of compassion.

SL: But if you are affected by things, I am naturally affected by things because I am in the world and I don't feel that my compassion is because I'm not affected in the world but rather because I am affected by what goes on.

R: It's not really a compassion that you're feeling. Your sort of feeling sorry for yourself. (SL: I'm feeling sorry for myself? Why?) Because you're seeing a condition and you're saying, "Thank God it wasn't me." You're looking at a condition, whatever is happening in the world and you're seeing it from your point of view. You feel sorry for the person that is going through something. But you're feeling sorry for yourself. It's yourself that is doing it, your mind. Whereas pure compassion let's go of the condition. Does not carry the condition as sad. Sadness is not a little compassion. (SL: Non-judgmental.) When you feel sorry for somebody or situation that is not real compassion. Compassion is a great love. A great feeling of joy. A feeling that all is well. (SL: So you're saying that it has practically a different definition than what I am saying compassion is...) It's a way that you realize that this person is going through the experience that is necessary for his or her unfoldment and freedom. You understand that so you have a great compassion, a great love, a great peace for that situation. But most people look at compassion as something that they are thinking about themselves. They have all kinds of feelings and emotions in themselves. And when they see something going on, they cry, they become upset. They think that is compassion, that is not compassion. That's a feeling of feeling sorry for yourself.

SH: Then compassion can only occur when the ego is in abeyance? When it's out of the picture? (R: Yes, yes.) True compassion.

R: True compassion. In the meanwhile we should do the best we can to help others and not think about it, just help. Do the best we can. Try to stay happy, do not allow the things of this world to get you down. Be cheerful. Just see the world as a changing thing. The world is always changing it's never the same. Try to keep your mind from going outward, pull it back in.

SC: Every experience is of the ego? (R: What?) Every experience is of the ego? (R: Every experience?) Yes. (R: Yes. Every experience comes from the mind. The mind is the ego. Kill the mind. Kill the ego. Kill yourself.) (laughter)

SH: Hallelujah!

R: And be finished with everything. Maybe if you changed your name Nate that would help. (student laugh) That's the reason for this because in your old self you think you are a body and you think you identify with all the problems of the world. So when somebody calls you by your name Nate, immediately everything takes place in your subconscious and all the old stuff that you were before becomes very real to you. You associate all that with Nate.

SC: Umm. Well I want to say something, I did change my name once, really. (R: To what?) I think it was Isaiah legally of course I changed it back to Nathan but when it was changed to Isaiah it was very confusing because somebody call me Nate or Nathan and I probably answered or I wouldn't answer and it was really very interesting. (laughter) Really, like Robert just said it was a strange sensation.

R: So what did you do? (SC: Umm?) What did you do?

SC: Well someone said that I should leave my name alone and that was a God name that was given to me from the old testament so I changed my name back to Nate and for a long time they had on my check DBA also known as Isaiah. I might mention this at the expense of everybody laughing at me but Nate means gift of God in the old testament.

R: But you do not identify Nathan with that. (SC: I want to but...) You identify Nathan with problems and... (SC: Yes, yes, I'm aware of that. I can tell you that I read, "I am That" many times and I went to a friends house recently and I read "I am that," and I understood it. Am I understanding it or is the mind understanding it I mean I could clearly know what Nisargadatta was saying...) Do you understand it intellectually? Or have you had a living experience of the truth? (SC: No it was deeper than intellectually, I know that. I was amazed when I read it, I just read different parts of it because I didn't have much time but I could track really perfectly and the past meant nothing to me.)

R: How did you react to the world after that and to your personal problems? (SC: About the same.) So what good does it... (SC: But seriously there is a shift in fact the last time I talked to you about that with the group but I do feel something shifting inside of me. Not that I'm asking for anything I'm just saying.) Well when something is shifting inside of you, how do you feel about your body and about the world?

SC: I still feel in it, I can't lie about anything like that but I feel something inside of me. People that have known me for years have seen some change in me not that I'm asking for it. At the same time there is a fear there. I don't know why?

R: The fear is part of the old pattern. (SC: Oh.) Everything will go in its time. (SC: You mean that things will change and not the way of being in control, it could be that?) Well you realize within yourself that you don't want to be in control of anything. There is no control. (SC: There is the clash back and forth listening to what you're saying and the mind coming in and actually try to push out what you say, actually putting a blank up.) Do not fight it, let it be. Observe it, watch it become the witness to it. Let it go right by you.

SC: Well when nothing seems to happen that is when discouragement comes in.

R: What do you want to happen? (SC: I want to be free of this pain that I have in my body and my soul so-to-speak, really.) Do not have a desire like that. Do not want to be free of your pain. (SC: Really?) Do not look for freedom from your pain. Do you know why? Because when you look for freedom from pain you believe the pain has substance and it's reality, now you've got to get rid of it. But in truth and in reality there never was a pain. There is no pain. You have to ask yourself, "To whom does the pain come?" Your Self can never have pain. (SC: Of course I feel pain, I'm aware of the I feeling the pain...) You feel the pain and you think you have to get rid of it. Try going the other way. (SC: Hmm?) Try not to get rid of anything anymore. There is nothing you have to get rid of because it never existed to begin with. It has no substance... (SC: I hear what you're saying Robert.) Even if you feel it. Look at it.

SC: The idea is wanting to believe what you're saying and I want to.

R: Remember again when I mentioned, "Your body in itself is inert?" (SC: Yeah.) It's a piece of dead flesh. Where would the pain come from? If you're unconscious you cannot feel pain. If your body is dead you cannot feel anything. So the body by itself has no feeling. The creative intelligence feels. (SC: So why would the creative intelligence put pain in me and other people. I'm not speaking only for myself because a lot of people are suffering.) That's what you see. That is why in the highest teaching it tells you, see the truth about yourself first and then see who is suffering. In other words, find yourself, wake up yourself then you can see who is suffering. But if you are not awakened and you believe you are a body and a mind then you are going to see all kinds of suffering. (SC: Thank you.) But you're making progress that's good.

SC: Yeah. I am. I don't mean the I-am. (SH: Why not. Progress is happening.) Something is happening. (SH: To noone.)

R: You're doing alright Nate.

(tape ends) [TOC]

SADHANA, SATSANG AND TRANSCRIPTS

3rd October, 1991

Robert: Om, namah Shivaya, peace. Good evening. (Students: Good evening.) It's good being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. It's always a pleasure to see all of you.

So smile, be happy. There's absolutely nothing to be upset about. Unless you have a semblance of truth within yourself, you'll never know how you're going to react to a particular situation that comes your way. Sometimes life hits us squarely in the face. And unless you were prepared before by knowing truth and living truth, some of you may not be able to handle it, and you'll become completely bamboozled.

This is the reason why you have to work on yourself everyday, you have to do some sort of sadhana. Otherwise you start reacting to the world. The world becomes real to you. People are just other human beings to you. You forget that there are no others and that you are the one, and that one is pure intelligence, divine harmony, sat-chit-ananda, parabrahman. You forget that you are that one, not as a body, but as all-pervading omnipresence.

In other words, you will forget that wherever you look, you see your Self. I'm not speaking of yourself with a small "s". Wherever you look you see the Self, for you are that. You must never forget this. You are not just a frail human being, being manipulated like a puppet. You are of divine origin. You are the universe.

Everything is perfect just the way it is. If it doesn't appear that way to you, it's not because it's not perfect. It is because you have your ideas since childhood of what right and wrong, good and bad is. Therefore some particular situations make you feel very upset. Some particular situations make you feel happy. They're both impostors. Your real nature is bliss. That bliss is omnipresent. If you see your Self as bliss, you will see everything in the universe as bliss, from the mineral kingdom to the human kingdom. You will no longer look on them as kingdoms. You will see the one bliss shining through all. Wake up! Understand who you really are. You are not limited to a body. You are not the body that appears. You are that which you have always been, sat-chit-ananda.

Many of you are making tremendous progress on this path. I am very happy for you. Some of the phone calls I receive, over fifty percent of the people here tonight, are making tremendous progress, and that's really wonderful. I'm really proud of you. You're making progress because you are beginning to realize that the only way to go is within. There is nothing without that interests you too much. The kingdom is within. The answers you're looking for is within. You have an inner Self which will never leave you nor forsake you. Your job is merely to trust it. To abide in it. That inner Self is your real Self. It is what you are.

It seems confusing some times when I say this, for it appears that I'm saying that you have two selves, your inner Self and your outer self. The truth is you only have an inner Self. Your body as it appears does not even exist. The world as it appears does not even exist. What I call the inner Self is absolute reality, pure awareness. That's what you are. Many of you are finally beginning to understand this. The conversations I have with you in person or on the phone makes me see that all is well. There's hope for you yet. And that is because, again, you are following certain principles that I always share with you. You're beginning to get it.

Three of those principles most of you are following, satsang, sadhana, and the transcripts. We'll go into these things.

Satsang is not like a meeting or a lecture, as most of you know. It's not coming here waiting for me to speak, and speak words of eloquence, high truths. This is good to hear, but that's not it. Always remember that you're not coming to a lecture. You're not coming to a sermon. You are not coming to a talk. You're coming to abide in the Self. Do not get Robert mixed up with the Self. Robert appears as another form to you, but the Self that shines forth in satsang is God, God in you. Satsang is God. Not my God or your God, but just God, ultimate oneness, nirvana.

Just by understanding this part so far, what I've discussed with you, will relieve you of all mental frustrations and conditioning. Satsang is very important. And those of you who are making progress, as I discussed, are always dying to come to satsang. You're literally dying. You're giving up your old body. That's what I mean when I say you're dying to come to satsang. Take that literally.

I only see you about four or five times a week, or five hours a week I should say, not five times a week, four or five hours a week. Therefore the time that you get in satsang should be very important to you, for it is here that the old samskaras begin to fall away. As we sit in the silence, as the words flow by, every gesture, every movement, everything you see, everything you do, everything you hear, is satsang. That's the first requisite, to be at satsang. And do not forget that satsang is not a sermon. It is not a talk. There is still some of you that when we sit in the silence, when we begin, say to yourself, "When is he going to talk?" You're used to listening to lectures. You've been brought up believing that a lecture is going to do something for you. A lecture is only empty words. And you know as well as I do, the many lectures you've gone to, when you leave after the lecture, in ten minutes you've forgotten just about everything. We're not talking about lectures.

Satsang gives you the incentive to practice sadhana, which is the second principle I'm referring to. Self-inquiry is the ideal sadhana for most of you who are here. Nevertheless, if self-inquiry is too difficult for you, you should do some other sadhana. Whether you do japa mantra, or pranayamas, or vipassana meditation, watching the breath, the idea is to spend your day doing some sort of sadhana.

That's why I'm saying I'm proud of most of you, for the conversation I've had with you, this is what you're doing. Some of you are spending twenty-four hours a day practicing self-inquiry. I don't mean you're sitting at home by yourself. I mean you are practicing it wherever you go and whatever you do. You start when you wake up in the morning. You begin by looking for that gap between waking and sleeping. There is a gap as you are aware by now. We've discussed it many times before. As soon as you awaken, before you get involved in the world and before you say "I," there is a gap, which is the fourth dimension of life. That gap is your reality. It's what you really are. You begin by trying to expand that gap, before the world gets a hold of you.

That is also the time when the mind has rested in the spiritual heart center all night while you slept, and at the second of awakening, it begins to rush into your brain, so you may become aware of your body and the world. You have to learn to catch yourself before that happens. And the way you catch yourself is to become aware that it's happening. If every morning, as soon as you begin to awaken, you become aware of that gap, that place in between waking and sleeping, the silence, and you abide in it, you will begin to expand.

But even if you don't grab hold of it in time, become aware that the I existed during sleep, during the dream state, and during the waking state. And you abide in the I-thought by inquiring, "Where did the I come from?" This is the way you should wake up, and you carry it through the day.

If somehow you cannot do this, as you awaken become the witness to you're awakening. Observe yourself awakening. Observe everything you're doing, every movement you make, become aware, watch, as if there was another person watching. It will bring you to the same place. Become aware, the witness to you sitting up, and getting out of bed, and washing your face or taking a shower, getting dressed.

In other words, don't believe that you are doing this by yourself. Do not just think of yourself, with a small "s" as I. Your mind will immediately begin to tell you the different things about the day. "I'm going to be hot, so I'd better wear some cool clothes. What shall I eat for breakfast?" Do not get caught up in that lifestyle, but become aware what your body is doing. Become aware of your feelings, your needs, what's going on. If you wake up like this, you're going to carry it all through the day, and your day will really be exciting. You'll have a wonderful day.

If that's difficult for you, do the "I-am" meditation with your respiration. While you're getting dressed, while you're getting ready to go to work. Instead of watching TV, instead of listening to the radio, instead of thinking about problems, watch your breath. As you inhale you say, "I." As you exhale you say, "am." Wake up that way.

What I'm trying to tell you is, do not be like most people in the world, when you wake up and you begin to think of your body, and the world, and so forth, but get up and begin to understand that you are not the body, you are not the thinking mind. Yet you exist. You existed during sleep, you existed during dream, and you exist during waking state. "Who exists?" Ask yourself. "I exist. Therefore who am I?"

If you're going to awaken in this incarnation, you have to vehemently do these things to yourself and not accept yourself the way you are. Again these people I've been talking to are doing just that. This is why they tell me, "I notice the world doesn't frighten me any longer. I don't seem to care any more what happens in the world, because I'm beginning to see that all is well." You're telling me all these things.

Some of you have even told me, "I'm happier than I've ever been in my life, for no reason. Nothing is happening in this world to make me that happy, but I'm feeling joy, I'm feeling a peace, a profound peace I've never felt before. I am feeling this way, even if an atomic bomb was to explode and fall on my head, I won't mind. For I'm beginning to realize there is no death and there is no birth." You're telling me, "I do not realize this intellectually any longer, it is no longer a theory with me. I can't explain it Robert, but I'm feeling wonderful."

This shows me that you've been practicing something. You're doing something right, and it's so simple. You're either doing something or you're doing nothing. You're either working on your freedom or you're accepting your bondage. This is the freedom you've got. This is the free choice you've got, to accept your freedom, or to accept your bondage. This is where karma and predestination does not interfere with you. You have the freedom to make a choice, to go deep within, as most of you are doing, or just be part of this world, which is always changing, changing, changing.

The third principle that I was referring to are the transcripts. I know many of you have read thousands of books. You've read so many books you've become a living encyclopedia. You know all the standard answers, yet you are not happy. There is something missing. This is why I have allowed the transcripts to come into being. When I first started teaching I didn't want any transcripts, any tapes, nothing at all. But then I realized that most of you are really sincere. I therefore allowed the transcripts to be printed. Again, because you only see me four or five hours a week. (I was going to say, four or five hours a day. But we only see each other four or five hours a week.) The transcripts take my place. They're an extension of what we're doing. There is power in them, and most of you who are advancing on the path are using the transcripts in the right way.

The way you should read these transcripts is preferably before you go to sleep at night. If you have time during the day, you should read them during the day also. Yet you should not read them as you read a book. You read a book, you finish, you go on to the next book. You should really stick to one transcript for at least a week, if not more. You read it through, and then you begin all over again. You go from paragraph to paragraph. You do not read it fast or speed read it. You take each paragraph and you ponder on the paragraph. You put the transcript down and you cogitate, ponder the paragraph, assimilate it, digest it, make it a part of you're being and then go to the next paragraph. If you're doing this correctly, you will not have the time to read thousands of books. I'm not saying you shouldn't read other books, but if you really want to make headway fast, follow one direction. Go one way. You may find many contradictions when you read so many books, and you'll become confused and even disgusted.

To give you an example. The book by Lakshimani Swami, "No mind, I am the That," (It should be "No mind I am the Self," edited PL) many of you have read this and you're so excited over that book that I read it also. I usually don't read books. But I realize the contradictions, and for a person trying to awaken, the contradictions can hurt. It can set you back, for you do not understand. I'll explain one of the contradictions. Lakshimani Swami claims that the only way you can become enlightened is through a living guru. And if the guru passes away you should find another guru, because that guru is no longer any good to you. It's got to be a living form.

To an extent this is true. Yet if you've read Ramana's books, Ramana Maharshi tells you, it is better to have a mental guru when your guru passes away. They asked him, "When you die, when you give up your body Ramana, shall I find another guru?" And he said, "Just think of me. If you think of me, I will be always with you. I will never leave you if you think of me." For after all, the Sage is not the body. So what difference does it make if there is a body or not?

That appears as a contradiction, doesn't it? Yet it's really not. You have to understand where they're coming from. Lakshimani Swami was talking to neophytes when he made that statement, beginners, people who really never practiced. So people who have never practiced or practiced little, are not really devotees. Therefore if the average person found a sat guru, and in a month the sat guru gave up his body and left, they wouldn't really get any benefit from that sat guru because they were not in tune with him for a long time. For them it is better to have a living guru, so that the living guru can teach them. But for the devotees, they need not a living guru. The guru that they've been with will take care of all their needs, for the guru can never leave you. After all the guru and your Self are one, there's no difference. So you see there appears to be a contradiction, but there's not a contradiction. It depends who he was talking to.

So when you read the books, it becomes confusing for you. I try to explain all these things in the transcripts. If you stick to the transcripts you'll be safe, and you will make headway. Those three things I outlined for you are very important, sadhana, satsang, and the transcripts. It's easy. Remember those three things. Try to be at satsang all the time, work on your sadhana and self-inquiry, or whatever you have to do, and keep reading the transcripts. If you do these three things you will not have time for anything else. You will fill up your day with spiritual activity.

I'm not talking about sitting at home and practicing all day long in formal meditation. I'm speaking of during you're working hours, whatever you do. Whether you wash dishes or whether your president of a bank, whether you're a lawyer, a doctor, an Indian chief, it makes no difference what you are. Just remember to remember to keep practicing all day long.

So again, let's say you get up in the morning, you catch yourself in the gap between waking and sleeping. If you have time, read a paragraph from the transcript, and hold on to it. Take it with you to work. As you're putting on your shoes, as you're eating your breakfast, as you're driving your car to work, remember to remember your sadhana. Or remember the paragraph that you read in your transcript. See, you're doing something even though you can't keep up with, let's say, self-inquiry. You remember a paragraph in the transcript. And you keep doing this all during the day. You take that truth with you wherever you go, to work, to the movies, while you're watching TV.

Do not believe that if you're watching TV or watching a movie you cannot meditate or practice self-inquiry. You will be amazed that as you're watching the movie you can keep inquiring, "To whom does this come? Who am I?" Or you can become aware that you are like the screen in the movie. You cannot see the screen, you see the images on the screen. Yet the images are not real. If you try to grab them, you grab the screen. Just contemplating this helps. And then you realize that you are like the screen, that is your real nature, and all the images in the universe are superimposed upon you, just as the images of the movie are superimposed on the screen.

Remember these things. Yes, you people I've been talking to during the week, on the telephone or in person, have told me you're doing these things, and you're becoming happier and happier. The world no longer has a pull on you. The world can no longer show you anything that frightens you or makes you upset. As you practice, the reasons why become apparent. You begin to understand that your body is simply karmic in nature, for as long as you believe you have a body, it's going through it's karma. Everything is preordained. Therefore you'll go through experience after experience after experience as a body. That's how it appears.

But in the process of waking up, and the realization that it's all karmic, and that it's not really you, you begin to laugh, for you now understand that you can never die or be hurt. You were never born. You're not going through any experiences at all. You are the Self, free from all this. Even though you're going through experiences as a body, you become more aware everyday that you are free from body-consciousness, free from experiences in the world. You have total faith and trust in something which you're just beginning to feel. You're just beginning to feel that bliss-consciousness. You're just beginning to feel, slightly at first, that joy, that total freedom, and you know something is happening.

As you experience these things, you will begin to leave the world alone. You will stop becoming entangled in the world. Again you will find your duties will become less and less. You're growing. You're unfolding. Things like anger begin to subside entirely. Depression, all those bad feelings that you used to have, they begin to disappear. And many times you will find that certain things in your life that have caused you pain and discomfort, just disappear. You're not looking for them to disappear. You're no longer looking for anything. You're not even looking for self-realization. Yet you're growing and you're making progress.

Therefore it does my heart good when you tell me these things about your progress, that's why I'm here. Feel free to call me and ask me any question you want, and tell me the progress you're making. I'm always ready to help you.

But to the few of you that are still the same, and you haven't seen any improvement, ask yourself, Why? What do you do all day long? If you're honest with yourself, you'll probably see that you get involved with the world's conditions, the world's situations, and by doing this, aren't you saying the world is real? Therefore you have to begin to let go of the world, to begin to understand in the beginning that there is a power and a presence within you, that will always take care of you, and watch over you. To the extent that you trust it, this is true.

So again you have to make a choice. Am I going to continue day, after day, after day being like a leaf in the wind, allowing nature to unfold me, or am I going to take the bull by the horns and begin to practice, doing something every day, every moment, falling asleep while practicing sadhana, getting up practicing sadhana. It will become second nature to you, and you will be happier than you've ever been in your life.

Feel free to ask questions.

SF: Robert I'd like to ask about a practical way of using self-inquiry, like for instance if I say to myself, "I'm sick." Turn around and I ask myself, "Who feels sick?" Then I say, "I do," then I ask, "who am I?" Somewhere in the background is the real I and the sickness is an appearance in consciousness as is the entity that feels the sickness. Is that correct?

R: When you're practicing self-inquiry forget about the real I. What you're doing is you're going backwards, you're trying to destroy the I ego. And by destroying the I ego what you call the real I will be self evident. The real I is what you really are, that is your real nature. So you don't have to feel that some place there is a real I. For what you're doing is you're making it sound as if there is you and the real I. (SF: Two.) There can never be you and the real I. There is only the real I, but because you don't really understand this fully the practice the self-inquiry has been given to you to get rid of the false I.

So you inquire to yourself, "To whom does this sickness come? It comes to me. I feel it." That's the I ego. Therefore you inquire, "From where did the I come from?" or "Who am I?" it's the same thing. "Where did this I come from that feels sick?" You never answer that question. You simply keep inquiring again and again. You wait a couple of seconds and you ask again, "To whom does the I come?" If you answer the question and if you say to yourself, "I'm the real I," you're fooling yourself because it is your mind playing with you. So forget about the real I. As you get rid of the false I the real I will shine by itself. So simply keep inquiring, "To whom comes this sickness? To me. I feel it. I feel sick. Who is the I that feels sick?" Do not analyze it. Do not try to figure it out. Simply ask the question and leave no room for analyzation. "I feel sick. Who is the I that feels sick? Where did the I come from? Who am I? Who am I? Who is the I that feels sick? What is it's source? What is the source of that I?" As you keep inquiring this way, one day something will happen without you forcing it or without you thinking about it. The I will return to it's source in the spiritual heart and the spiritual heart is absolute consciousness, para-brahman. Which will mean to you that the I-thought, the ego I, never existed at all. Only God, Brahman, consciousness exists. But do not say these things. It will come by itself of it's own accord. When that realization comes you will never wonder about sickness again. You will never have a thought like that again.

So remember, you inquire, "To whom does the sickness come? To me? I feel it. What is the source of the I?" You do not analyze it. You keep asking again and again and while you're asking, "Who am I?" again and again other thoughts may come into your mind. You do the same procedure. You inquire, "To whom do they come? I am feeling these thoughts." For instance as you're inquiring this way, thoughts may come to you and they'll say, "Fred you're wasting your time, you could be doing something constructive. Instead of sitting here like a lump of clay inquiring about "Who am I?" When those thoughts come do not be angry with yourself simply inquire, "To whom do these thoughts come? Who feels them? I do. Who am I? What is the source of the I?" And you keep doing it over and over and over again. Like I say the day will come when the I will abide in the source and you will home free. (SF: If I try to analyze the process that is just getting back into the mind?) Of course. (SF: Which isn't going to do me any good?) Of course, because it is the mind that wants to analyze and we're trying to kill the mind.

SR: Robert, tonight I had for the first time a glimpse of being the screen and my question is, if the small self is created by karma and if all the things that are seen out there, all the trees and other people I guess are more aspects of karma, if everything is the screen, if the whole world is the Self or the screen, where does this karma come from?

R: Where does what come from? (SR: Karma?) Karma comes from nowhere. (SR: Then how can there be a body or the seeming seeing of other forms if all is the Self?) This is called Maya! Welcome to the world of maya. (SR: How can there be maya if all is the Self?) There cannot be maya. But because you believe it's not the Self there is maya for you. (SR: How can one believe there's not the Self?) Due to the fact that you've been brainwashed since you were a little boy to believe that the world appears real. This is part of you're training. (SR: I guess it's like that there was an original person that believed...) No. (SR: And then it was like original sin?) No. This is why I always give the example of the sky is blue. You look at the sky and you tell me how beautiful it looks as blue. If you go up to the sky and investigate you will find that there is no color in the sky. There is no blue, there is only black darkness. (SR: I see.) There is no sky. (SR: So there is no karma, it's just an optical illusion?) It's an optical illusion correct. Like the water in the mirage. (SR: Alright, we've heard that.) The water seems real and you say to yourself, "How can I see this beautiful water when it doesn't exist?" Yet you appear to see it. But if you try to grab it you'll grab sand. And so it is with the world and the universe and everything else. It appears as if it's real. This is maya the grand illusion playing games with you. Your job is to transcend it through self-inquiry.

SR: Okay, I'll work on that. Robert I have another question which is going to be a very controversial one but I noticed it's stronger on my chest today so I'm going to say it. It's been on my mind for a while. I was kind of surprised that you were encouraging people to telephone you and ask questions and so forth. Because there is a part of me that - maybe I'm wrong on this - but there is a part of me that believes that trying to come to you and ask questions secretly so nobody else can hear is only increasing my ego. That is my fear of ridicule or sense of embarrassment, possibly that someone is going to know something about me. But to me seeking you out privately is just increasing the ego?

R: Not really, if you were seeking an ordinary person that would be true to an extent. But since I'm here as you, to be you, as the Self. Then what you're really seeking is the Self. Therefore when you're talking to me you're talking to the Self. The one Self. And my mission what I appear to be doing with the body is to be of service to humanity. That is all I do. I do nothing else. Therefore while I'm here as a body you should take every opportunity to make contact with me because in making contact things begin to happen. The reason you're saying this is because you believe you're talking to Robert. You're talking to a form, to a body and to a mind. But that's not true. When I am in relationship with you and when you sit with me, there is no body, there is no mind, there is no world. And you're able to comprehend this in a faster pace.

So I am really yourself. It's like going within yourself when you talk to me. There is only one Self and that is I-am. Therefore asking me questions is of benefit. It is not like you are calling a psychologist or a psychiatrist, or a lawyer, or a human being. You're talking to yourself. Of course when too many people call me I change my phone number. (students laugh) So it's all very paradoxical.

ST: Robert, I talk to you all the time.

R: You do? Good! (ST: Yeah, and I never call you on the phone.) Umm. That's good. Keep it up. (ST: Yeah it doesn't seem to be a problem. And I always felt that it was going along fine. And there wasn't a particular need to pick up the phone.) Yes, that is very good that is even better. (ST: Okay.) If there is the Self, the Self is not limited to one place. The Self is omnipresence. Whenever you think of the Self, never believe that you're a body as the Self and you're limited. Just by thinking of the Self, of consciousness, of absolute reality that is all-pervading. It is omnipresence itself. So certainly you can do what you say. You can be anywhere and I'm always there. One who is doing this very well and is into it is Dana. As you know she is ill and she is always talking to me, not in person, not on the phone but just like you're doing. She always claims I'm with her and the answers come. And when she is in pain she thinks of me and surrenders her pain to me. And she feels better, she feels at peace. She's improving. So you can do this.

Another thing that I'll share with you that I've shared with a few people already is during the hours from six to nine and from twelve in the evening to three in the morning I sit in the silence. If you would like to join me be free to do so. From six to nine in the morning and from twelve to three in the evening I usually sit still. That is a wonderful time to come into communion. Feel free to do this if you want.

SK: Robert I know your familiar with the teachings of Joel Goldsmith. What do you see are the main differences with Joel's teachings and your teachings?

R: There is no real difference. I usually do not get into that. I never talk about other teachers, what they teach compared to what I teach. If a teacher is a Sage, an enlightened being they're all the same there is no difference.

SG: Robert, I have found that self-inquiry is a wonderful tool, brought me a lot of peace however for those around sometimes it appears they don't understand it and the more I withdraw the more I go into silence. and the more do I speak and my wife who is around, they do not understand and they expect a certain way of responding emotionally and I find that sometimes a little difficult in relationships to practice self-inquiry, practice being alone in the silence.

R: Well, you have to do the best you can. Sometimes you have to get up a few hours earlier before the family gets up. If you have to get up at four o'clock in the morning to practice then that is what you have to do. You have to find the time. Karmically your situation is the way it is because that is what you have to go through as a body. That is the appearance but it makes no difference where you are, with whom you're with, whether you're with twenty-five people or a hundred people or by yourself. If you really want to find the truth. If you really want to unfold and that comes first in your life something within you will tell you what to do to make it happen. Do not think that anybody is a burden to you or someone is in your way keeping you back from your unfoldment. This is not so. Something that seems to keep you back from practicing is really a blessing in disguise. For it makes you stronger. And it makes you want more than ever before to find the time to be in the silence, to be free.

Whereas usually if a person does not have a hindrance or a little friction they become lazy and they don't follow the truth as hard. We need friction in our lives to push forward. Therefore look at your situation as a blessing and try to find the time. Go within all you can and you will be shown what to do. Sleep is not that important. When your wife goes to sleep, your kids are sleeping, get up at three o'clock, four o'clock, practice then. There is always a way.

SF: Sir we've had a lots of discussions about scripture and I know lots of scripture.

R: I know you do Fred. (SF: What I'm going to say is there is nothing intrinsically wrong with scripture it's how it's interpreted. And my interpretation of scripture isn't going to be the same as Billy Grahams and I think I'm right about that. I mean I don't have to worry about the fact that I know a lot of scripture.) There is nothing wrong with scripture but there has to come a time when you have to put the scripture aside and dive deep within yourself and become your own scripture. (SF: But scripture is words.) Scripture is wonderful words. But the words are just like saying, "I am God." And as we just discussed that is your ego playing games with you. It is your mind telling you that you are not the body and that your God. Whereas you don't have to state that you are God because that is your real nature, that is what you really are. It's like saying, "I am a man, I am a man." It's evident that you are a man. Therefore there is something within you that is evident that you are God. You are consciousness. Yet it's difficult to go about it that way. So great Sages and great Masters have taught us to "dive deep within," and leave the scriptures alone. Jesus himself said, "The kingdom of God is within you." He said, "Look here, look there, look everywhere, you'll never find the kingdom," because it's already within you. He never told people to study the scriptures. He quoted from the old testament but he never told people to go home and study scriptures. He told them to dive deep within themselves. Find the kingdom. It is your Fathers good pleasure to give you the kingdom. He always spoke about the kingdom which is consciousness, God. So by memorizing the scripture you become a walking bible and that is good as far as it goes. But it's better to dive deep within yourself and inquire, "Who am I?"

SF: I learned something last night that I hadn't known. Someone gave me a tape by mister Ganesh the editor of the Mountain path. (R: Oh yes.) And grand nephew of Maharshi. (R: Yes.) And I hadn't known it but when he went to stay with his uncle after his father died, Maharshi of course. He went to the American mission school and this was before he had any conscious interest in spiritual matters. He stood first in his class in bible studies, and when he wrote that note to his brother about going, he said, "I am going in search of my father." And he used that term which really interested me. Plus when he got to Tiruvannamalai, when he went to the temple, he went into the sanatorium, I guess there was nobody there to stop him and he embraced the lingam and said, "Father I have come according to your bidding." So many have think of him as a pure, well he was of course a pure Advaitan but there was a tremendous element of devotion all through his life.

R: Yes you're right. I was speaking of those things one Sunday I think. Nisargadatta, Ramana Maharshi and all the Advaitan's they had tremendous devotion. They were bhakti's also, so you're right about that, that's very true. (SF: Thank you. I was interested in about he being first in his class in bible studies when he just a young fellow.)

SH: You would be. (laughs) Well you're interested in his being first in his bible study. (SF: Yeah it's pretty fascinating.) I couldn't care less.

R: Well Ganesh has become a great philosopher. (SH: Has he? A philosopher.) Umm. (SH: What does that mean?) It means he philosophizes. (SH: Oh that's a handicap isn't it?) There is nothing else to say. (long pause) So many people used to come to Ramana Maharshi. Many of them from Panditcheri, from the Shri Arbinda ashram and they would try to debate with Ramana. They would tell him Shri Arbinda says this, the mother says this, somebody else says this and you say this Ramana, who is right. Ramana wouldn't answer. He'd keep still. Each person has to come to terms with themselves. You have to know what you want and you have to go after it. For when you compare teachers or you compare teachings and to compare what everybody said you can never know who you are. For you are too busy working in the external world and trying to find out who is good, who is bad, who is right, who is wrong. The real teacher is within yourself. Dive deep within yourself and ask yourself whom shall I follow and you will receive an answer. So please do no ask me, "Was Krishnamurti enlightened, was Jesus self-realized? Was this one this way, was that one that way?" Your job is to find out who you are and to work on yourself and then you will know about everybody else.

(silence)

SH: (Talks about his dog) He digs you Robert. (Robert laughs)

SL: Speaking of self-inquiry, in answer to a question earlier. You said when we state, "To whom does this come? It comes to me." And you said that the real I would know the difference between the other I. Is it just as effective to say, "To whom does this come?" Is it effective to say... or if you're saying, "Who feels this" and you say, "my mind feels this," or "my body feels this," is that just as effective? I think I seem to feel a dilemma that Fred came to - or will the real I know the difference and so I start deviating and say, "My mind feels this," or "my body feels this," instead of I feel this. So saying, "My mind feels this," or "my body feels that," is that effective in itself?

R: The real I doesn't know anything, it just is. Don't concern yourself about the real I. The mind, the body and the I-thought are the same thing. You can say the mind or the thoughts or the ego. But yet the I is more effective when you use the term I because you're always referring to yourself as I. You never say my mind thinks this. In the normal course of conversation you say, "I think this. I believe this. I thought of this." That is why it is better to deal with the I itself, then with the mind or the ego. Realizing at the same time that the ego, the mind, the world, the universe, karma everything is attached to that I. Therefore when you transcend the I you will transcend everything else. So it's best to work with the I-thought. Only because you refer to the I all day long. You say, "I feel sick. I have a headache." You never say, "My mind has a headache." You never say, "My mind feels sick. My ego feels depressed." You always talk about I.

SL: More recently I notice myself saying, "My head has a headache." It's like I'm breaking things down differently now. "My stomach is hungry," instead of, "I am hungry." Then I started deviating, "Who has a headache?" head has a headache. Who is hungry? My stomach is hungry," instead of I am hungry...

R: It seems to me it makes it a little harder because you're referring to your I and your ego and your stomach and your eyes and your nose. Everything is attached to the I.

SL: So that's why I say things like, "Well how do we feel today?" (laughter) Are we having a good time? (laughs) I guess I'm never alone. (laughter)

SJ: Robert plus if you do it that way it doesn't have the chance to go to the source anyway and dissolve in the source?

R: It can go to it's source because the ego, the thoughts, the I, it's all the same. (SJ: But it doesn't have a leeway to follow anything to the source it's just...) The I is better. Use the I it's a better method only because you always talk about the I all day long. You're always referring to I the false I. You're always thinking of the false I. So therefore you work with the false I, you get rid of it by inquiring, "From where did it come?" (SL: Thank you.)

(tape ends) [TOC]

SHOULD I TAKE THE WORLD SERIOUSLY?

6th October, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, peace. Good afternoon. It is good being with you again. Welcome. I welcome you with all my heart.

Ask yourself the question, "Why am I here? What purpose do you have? What goals do you have? What do you think you are?" If you know you're a good for nothing then you're right. If you think you're something or somebody then you have to see the truth and realize that your good for nothing. You did not come to this earth to become some body. You came to this earth to discover that you are nobody, no-body. You have no body. The body that appears real to you is a delusion. It appears real just as a dream appears real until you wake up.

The question often arises, "Should I take the world seriously?" The answer is yes and no. There is no standard answer. As long as you believe you are a body, a mind, an entity, then the world becomes very real to you. But when you investigate, when you intelligently begin to search within yourself, you begin to realize that the world is very changeable, it is never the same, things often change. As a matter of fact the only thing permanent in life is change.

How could something be real that is changeable? You say a tree is real. If the tree were real it would remain the same forever, but it started from a seed. You would say the seed is real. How long is the seed real? Until it begins to break apart and the tree begins to grow. Then the seed is no longer real. When the tree is small you say that's a real tree, yet when you come back twenty years from now it's a gigantic tree. It's altogether different. It's growing apples or peaches or whatever. It's no longer the same little tree that seemed incompetent, and wasn't able to grow anything. So you say that now the tree is real because it's bearing apples. You come back in another twenty years, the tree is dried out. It cannot bear apples.

This is true of everything, including your body. You came from a seed, the seed turned into a baby, the baby turned into a teenager, and now you're your own ugly self. What are you? Are you a baby? Are you a teenager? Are you an adult? Are you an ugly self? Are you handsome? All these conceptions are erroneous. You are none of these things, and the reason you appear to suffer and have so called problems in this world is because you take life too seriously. You have your own dogmatic opinions of what should be right and wrong, what's good, what's bad. How things ought to be. If anyone interferes with your belief system you become mad, you become angry, you fly off the handle. (That's an expression, fly off the handle. How can you fly off the handle?)

SH: No problem at all. (laughter) (R: All these cliches, these sayings...)

SJ: How do you not fly off the handle? (laughter)

R: But anyway, even if you don't fly off the handle. (laughter) There is something wrong somewhere, because nothing is ever the same. Things make you angry. Things make you react. You believe your life is supposed to be orderly. If there is no order in the universe how can your life be orderly? Your part of the universe.

You begin to understand it makes no difference what is happening in this universe. The universe expresses all sorts of things, earthquakes, calamities of all types, volcanic eruptions, droughts. Everything happens to this world. Yet the world is spinning in space, revolving at a fantastic speed. The whole universe is movement. Nothing stands still. How can anything be real?

If it isn't real, why would you react to it? Why do things bother you, annoy you? Because you believe that things, the world, the universe, is real. The only way to stop that belief or to put an end to it, is to investigate yourself. You start with yourself. You cannot start with anything external to you, for you don't know anything about it. But you know that you exist. There's no doubt about that. You exist. Therefore you begin to question, "Who is it who exists? What exists? Is it a body that exists?" The body will not be around a hundred years from now. But I can think about these things. The body in itself cannot think. It is an inert substance. What thinks? Who thinks? You begin to question yourself.

The only reality you will ever find is the reality of your Self, not the reality of the world, not the reality of the universe. It has no reality. As you begin to study, investigate, intelligently look at your own existence, you begin to see the world as an illusion. It's an appearance. And as you unfold on the path of knowledge, you no longer take this world seriously.

This doesn't mean that you walk around not caring about anything, not being concerned, not giving a helpful hand to someone. You do not become sarcastic, or belligerent or cynical. You realize the world changes constantly. Therefore it cannot possibly be real. So how can you take the world seriously? Yet you also realize that if you can't get rid of "I am the body" idea, or "I am the doer" idea, you have to sort of become a little serious in the world. It's a paradox. You are not to take the world seriously, yet if you can't get away from the body idea as being real, then you also have to see the world as real and take it seriously.

You were brought up to take everything seriously, to have goals, ambitions. Where do these things lead you? Look at the precarious condition the world is in today. Man's inhumanity to man is everywhere prevalent. Wars, these dastardly conditions have been going on since the beginning of time. Yet what do you have to do with these things? You didn't come here to straighten out the world. You didn't come here to make peace. You didn't come here to teach people anything or to show anybody anything. You are here in order to wake up, to awaken, to awaken from the mortal dream. That's all you're here for. You're not here for any other reason.

How about your life? What life? What life do you believe you have? You really have no life. You appear to have a life. Water also appears in the mirage, but you're just as alive as the water in the mirage. In other words you are an optical illusion. You're not who you think you are. You're not what you think you are. You aren't anything. Whatever you can think about, you're not that.

Yet you can think. You have the capacity to think, and it is your thinking that will take you out of the great lie of existence, for you begin to examine your mind. You begin to understand that your mind is nothing but a bundle of thoughts, just thoughts, always thinking, always thinking, always thinking about something. There's hardly a time when you do not think. And it's always about yourself and in relationship to something else. From morning till night you're concerned with I, me, I, me. But you are not I and you are not me. Therefore why should you be concerned?

You always believe you have to look about your interests, take care of your problems, your world or you imagine all kinds of things will happen. There's some of you have been employed for so many years, and you always worried about being unemployed. You believe that's the worst thing in the world that can happen to you. That is probably the best thing that could ever happen to you, for it makes you move into a new venture, into new experiences.

The truth is you can never suffer. There is nothing in this universe that can make you suffer. If you're suffering it's your mind that is telling you things about someone, or about something, or about some place, or about some condition and this is why you suffer. You have allowed yourself to think. You're believing your thoughts. Your thoughts control you thoroughly, completely, absolutely. Your thoughts are your worst enemy. You learn therefore to grab a hold of your thoughts, by practicing self-inquiry, or by observing your thoughts, becoming the witness to your thoughts, watching yourself think. As you continue practicing sadhana, you're headed towards illumination.

Yet the funny thing about this is that you are already there, and there's nothing you have to do. You always believe you have to do something. You were brought up to believe that if you do nothing you're a lazy bum. Yet you are nothing. Nothingness is your true nature. You are what you're supposed to be. Everything is predetermined as far as your body is concerned, and you're going through those experiences that are necessary for your fulfillment and your unfoldment.

As you become wise, and you begin to understand, you no longer react to your conditioning. Fear begins to melt. There's no longer anything to fight. You do not have to win any points. There's really no one you have to overcome. There's no situation you have to heal. You merely have to be your Self. Be your Self.

How do you become yourself? By understanding that there's one Self and you are that. There is only the one Self. People call it by all kinds of names, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda, absolute reality. It's called by all kinds of names, God. It makes no difference what you call it.

You have to be it. You have to be that Self that has always been and will always be. You have to lift yourself up to that place where there is no world, no universe, no body, no mind.

It really makes no difference what sadhana you practice, whether you practice Zen, or Taoism, or mystical Christianity, or Kabbalah. What you practice makes no difference. But what are you doing with the practice? Are you really diving deep within yourself and finding your own reality? Or are you still reading many books, going to many lectures, becoming totally confused?

Leave the world alone. Do not try to correct the world. When I say correct the world, I mean correct people, places or things. Everything has a tendency to balance itself. There are certain laws in this universe that take care of itself. There's a power and a presence that knows the way, and you are told to surrender to this power, to this presence. Complete surrender. Not my will, but thine. This is the highest teaching of any system. When you give up your ego, totally surrender, and allow the powers that be to direct you, and guide you, and take care of you and unfold as you. Everything will work out.

I recall at Ramana ashram, there was an Indian who was sort of a disciple of Ramana. And he used to come every once in a while, not study, for many, many years, yet nothing happened in his life. So as the years passed by he would begin to bad mouth Ramana to others. Try to tell others, "Ramana is not real. He's just an old man. He doesn't know what he is doing." He would convince some people of this. When Ramana heard about this, of course he didn't care one way or the other. But the point is the situation took care of itself. He didn't show up for a while. Then the news came that a train hit him, and his body was gone for this incarnation.

The point I'm trying to make is, everything works itself out. Everything takes care of itself in due time. You have nothing to fear and you have nothing to fight. You have to learn to have faith in the powers that be. Those powers are within yourself. You are they. They are not external to you. As most of you know by now, the only thing that's external to you is your mind. Your mind has created your world, the world that you believe in. The things that you see in this world, the things that you feel, your frustrations, your happiness, your joys, your miseries, whatever you think is real for you, you have created yourself. Otherwise where would it come from?

The world just is. It isn't good or bad. It just is. It is you who make it good or bad. It is you who have opinions of how things should be, how they should look. The world itself has no opinions. It just appears as it is. But you give it life. It is you who see all these dastardly things going on. It is you who see these things going on in your life, somebody trying to hurt you, someone's trying to take something from you, as if you can lose something. What is rightfully yours will always be yours. What is not rightfully yours, no matter how you try to hold on to it, it will leave you somehow.

The beginning of wisdom is to understand that the things that appear to be in action, to make this happen, are simply a creation of your mind. So, "To whom will you be angry? To whom will you vent your emotions?" Whatever you say, whatever you do, however you react, you're doing it all to yourself. There's only one Self. There are not two selves or three selves. There's one. And everything that comes out of your mouth, out of your thoughts, out of your actions, are only to yourself. If you are hurting inside, it is only because you feel that the world isn't turning the way you want it to turn, things are not going the way you think they should go. You've got to grow up, some of you, and let things be. You have to learn to leave people alone, to leave the world alone. If there is anything you want to change that you don't like, look within yourself. The person, the thing, that seems to hurt you is only a vehicle of your own karma. No one is responsible for anything that ever happens to you.

When you understand these basic things, it is only then that you can begin to work on yourself and practice things like atma-vichara, self-inquiry. But as long as you're still hurtable and you're still reacting to conditions, you have to sort of reconcile yourself with the whole universe. Find peace by turning within. Makes no difference what happens. Do not think of what's happening or what may happen. Turn within yourself. See the reality of your own being. Understand your true nature. Begin to drop the whole world from your mind by realizing, "This is not the truth. The tree is not the reality. The sky is not the reality. My body is not the reality. My mind is not the reality." Negate everything. Negate the whole universe.

What's left over is you, the Self, pure intelligence, ultimate oneness, absolute reality, consciousness. Parabrahman is your real nature. Happiness is your real Self, not just temporary happiness but permanent happiness. It is your real Self. Everybody is searching for happiness, and the reason they do the things that they do, hurting one another, stealing, causing problems, is because at that stage of their existence they believe that's how they become happy. They're really searching for eternal happiness.

But that's like the man who sits under a shade tree and feels comfortable. Then he decides to go into the sun, and the sun burns him, and he screams and he cries and he gets upset, "Why is this happening to me?" Then he goes back under the shade and he feels comfortable again. Then he goes back into the sun and burns and becomes violent and miserable. He keeps going back and forth, back and forth. Only a fool would do this. Why not stay in the shade and remain there and don't go out?

That's how it is with us. Just the way we are now this minute is perfect. Just the way you feel right now, you feel peaceful, you feel calm, you're happy. But then you go out into the sun. This means you go out into your workplace, you go out into the world, you begin to externalize your life, and you get burnt. You become miserable. Then again you run inside your house where you're alone and you feel peaceful. You feel at home. Instead of staying put you keep going back out again, involving yourself with all the vicissitudes of life. And when you react to these things you exacerbate the condition. Then you wonder why you suffer so.

Why didn't you sit still? Literally, you do not have to sit still physically. I'm talking about in your mind. Everything begins in your mind. You make your mind still. When your mind is still your body can go anywhere, but you will be in the shade all the time. You can do anything, you can snore, you can cry, you can laugh, but this is an external appearance. When the mind has become quiescent there is always peace. Find that peace. It's yours. Never react to a situation before you can look for the peace in your mind, and then see if you're going to react.

There is a story of an old Samurai warrior whose Master had been killed. He began to search for the killer of his Master. He searched high and low. Finally one day he found out who it was, and he cornered him, drew out his big sword and was about to chop his head off, when the villain spit in the Samurais face. The Samurai moved his head back, sheathed his sword, and started to walk away. The villain started to shout, "Hey Samurai, how come you didn't kill me? You had me cornered." And the Samurai looked back and he said, "I got angry." They never fight in anger. The Samurais were taught to fight for the good of humanity, but they never had anger. When you're angry nothing ever works out.

Now look at your life personally. Only you know what's going on in your head. You can fool some of the people some of the time, as the saying goes. You can even fool yourself. You put on an act and you try to fool people, yet you're only fooling yourself. You're fooling yourself because the powers that be have taken care of everything, and everything is working out the way it's supposed to. So you find that you're suffering all the time, for you're trying to fool yourself. You're trying to hide all of your bad feelings, the fears that cause you to do all these things you do.

But as you begin to work on yourself, you begin to practice self-inquiry, you inquire of yourself, "To whom do these feelings come? Who has these feelings? Who feels betrayed all the time? Who is so sensitive that it always hurts, and feels all these little things always going on in their mind? Who feels like this? I do." You work on the I.

After a while you realize that the I has been giving you all this trouble. Your belief, as an individual, that you are separate and apart has been giving you all this trouble. So you reverse your life by following the I-thought to the source.

The source of course is God, nirvana, absolute reality, consciousness. You merge into the source and you begin to laugh, for all this time nothing has been happening. All of these experiences you've gone through, the adventures you had, it was a joke. It never existed. You never existed at all. And you awaken and become free to conclude, the only work you have in this world is to become liberated. Yet you're already liberated. You therefore have to see this. Awaken, by not reacting to the world, by diving deep within, seeing the truth and becoming the truth. It's up to you. (tape ends) [TOC]

***Note: The Question and Answer section is the same as talk 900823. Refer to question and answer section of 900823.

THE JNANI DOES NOT COME IN PEACE!

10th October, 1991

Robert: Good evening.

The Jnani does not come in peace. Most people believe that when they approach a spiritual Master, the spiritual Master is going to bring peace, harmony, happiness, abundance, joy, love into their lives. As a matter of fact most people come to spirituality because they want to improve their humanhood. They are not satisfied with their lives. There is something missing. They therefore approach spirituality with the idea that things will be become better in their humanhood. This is a grave mistake.

A Satguru, a Sage, a Jnani comes to upset your life. To pull you out of your samskaras. To resolve your karma, to make you free. But in order to do that, he does not add on.

(There is a pause as dogs howl in the neighborhood in unison)

R: We have a chorus. (students laugh)

SH: They are just reiterating what you're saying. They agree with you.

R: That's nice. The wolfman.

Anyway. A Spiritual Master does not come to please you. A true spiritual Master is not lovey-dovey and brings you kindness and good cheer. If a spiritual Master does this he or she is not a true spiritual Master. The truth is you are already filled with all kinds of nonsense, ideas, concepts, foolishness, stuff from previous lives, this has to be pulled out of you. So the Sage through certain methods, certain disciplines causes certain things to happen in your lives in order to become free.

This is the reason why only mature people really attract a true Sage. If an immature person attracts a true Sage they will not be able to stand the fire. It will be too hot. For things will begin to burn up in their lives. Which means in English, that things will appear to become progressively worse. People come to a Sage for health problems and their health becomes increasingly worse. As a matter of fact some people even die. People come to a Sage to increase their financial bank account and they go bankrupt.

The whole idea is your approach to a Sage has to be unconditional. You cannot have preconceived ideas of what the outcome is going to be and what's going to happen to your life. Yet you may be assured of this, as time passes all your so called stuff will be burnt up and you will become free, if you can hold on. So the Sage does not come in peace. If you're looking for peace you came to the wrong place.

Your true nature is already peaceful, you are peace, how can you look for peace? How can you want abundance when you are that. How can you want health when there never was any sickness.

This is difficult to comprehend in the beginning stages. For we're always thinking, thinking, thinking, analyzing how things ought to be. That's another mistake we make. If we want a Sage in our life we have to totally surrender and trust the Self. Which is the Sage, which is consciousness.

We have to surrender our desires, our bad feelings, our good feelings, our interpretation of how things ought to be, conceptual thinking, we have to give up entirely. This is why a teaching such as this is not for all people, especially in the west. For their ego's are so big and become ruffled so easily.

What's the difference what is happening in your life? Whether it's going this way or that way, that way or this way, up or down, down or up, east or west, south or north, going to heaven or going to hell, what is the difference? Why are you so concerned about the future or about your family and about your job and about everything else. If you would only give up those thoughts. By give up I mean surrender. Let go of your everyday thinking and begin to have faith in the powers within you, then you will see how things will turn out. When I say to you how things will turn out I'm not referring to time or space. If you were to give up your body right now, it would be the most wonderful thing you could ever do, as far as you're concerned. For then you will experience the freedom that you're looking for.

That sounds strange, in reality you have no body to give up and nothing is happening, there is no movement. There is no movement in time and space and there is no time and space for there to be any movement. You're doing no thing. No thing is being done. Yet you will experience total freedom and total liberation.

I know some of you do not know what I'm talking about. I don't know what I'm talking about myself. It sounds good though. (laughter) I can never understand what anybody is ever worried about. What do you think can possibly happen to you. What are you afraid of? How many times I explain to you that the substratum of existence is infinite love. Absolute reality, pure awareness. That's you! Yet you will not accept this.

You concern yourself with the news on television. The stock market reports. What's happening in Europe. If you were around five hundred years ago the same things were happening. Just different names. The world is total ridiculous. The world is a joke, a cosmic joke and the joke is on you. Simply because you will not wake up. You're always thinking, thinking, thinking, trying to change bad for good. Hoping you're going to have a good week this week. Hoping that you'll not be in pain.

This is exactly what I'm referring to. What difference does it make? It doesn't make any difference. You are a child of the universe. And if you will surrender all of those things, give them up. By give them up I mean, you are no longer concerned over them. If you have terminal cancer, that's okay. If you have abundant health, that's okay. If you have millions of dollars, that's okay. If you have zero dollars, that's okay.

When you begin to be equal. When you become balanced and there is no more differences to you then you will feel something happening. For as long as long as there is the slightest difference then the scale becomes unbalanced and you feel these differences in your life.

So you are the cause of your misery and the cause of everything that happens in your life. Simply because there is no one else but you. There appears to be others. There appears to be a world. There appears to be accidents. There appears to be man's inhumanity to man. And these appearances are very strong. Yet are they really happening and to whom are they happening to?

For some strange reason a thing called an ego appears to have come into existence. And it is the ego going through all of these experiences, not you, but the ego. If only you would separate yourself from your ego and observe and watch the ego going through all these experiences, crying, laughing, having pain, having health, worrying, fretting. Just observe the ego doing all these things.

To the extent you can observe this. To that extent will the ego become weakened. The ego does not like to observe itself. It wants to be Master and have total control. And as you begin to watch without reacting, just watch. No feelings about anything. The ego begins to dissipate. And as soon as the ego dissipates there is unalloyed happiness.

You didn't look for the happiness, like looking for the holy grail. You did not have to go far away to lands overseas to find this happiness. You did not have to do certain prayers or yogic kundalini exercises to find this happiness. You merely stood back and allowed the ego to burn itself out. That is how you become free.

All the things you're trying to do to become free by improving your humanhood is like pouring oil into the fire. It increases the ego. When will we learn. We go through so many experiences. We repeat things again and again and again. We appear to drop the body and take on a new one. Go through so many lives. Searching, fighting trying to improve our station in life. When are we going to learn this is not the way?

We do not have to try to improve anything. We're trying to go in reverse. To remove the notion that something has to be improved. You see the difference? We have to remove the idea that there is something wrong somewhere or something right somewhere. Not try to learn something new to add on to what we already have. That just increases the size of the ego.

It's like climbing a mountain and carrying ten back packs. We become so tired we sweat, we can hardly walk. Therefore the wise person takes off the back packs one by one and lightens his load. Only a fool would continue walking with ten back packs up the mountain. That's how it is with us. We appear to be carrying the world. With all the worries, all the nonsense, the fears, the frustrations. Everything seems to be carried on our backs. Instead of trying to remove them we go about learning new things. New systems of yoga, new teachers, new techniques and we add it on to the old techniques.

In other words we never got rid of the old ones before we could add on the new ones. So it's like putting on eleven back packs, twelve back packs and thirteen back packs. And climbing that hill we can hardly walk. But we're too stupid to take off the back pack. So it is with what we do in life.

We go after this and we go after that and we search for new doctors and new indian chiefs. New gurus, new teachers, new advice, new meaning. We're always adding more information, more information. We read new books and we say, "Wow I never knew this before. This book is interesting." We add that on to everything else we learnt and we become more intellectual. And we become an intellectual jackass.

We remember all kinds of words and knowledge, ideas, quotations. And we keep adding on and adding on and adding on. We've been going in the wrong direction. We want to take off, take off, take off not add on. We want to unlearn just about everything we've learnt since we were children. We want to become empty not so we can acquire new knowledge.

Emptiness is the knowledge. Emptiness is another name for wisdom, for Jnana. Try to remember the more you remove the burden from yourself the greater will be the harmony and peace and happiness in your life. Due to the fact that this harmony and peace and happiness are your very nature. It is not something you have to find somewhere, try to remember this. You do not have to search or look or find any body to give you these things. You are that! Only you've been hiding it.

It's as if you have a candle and you put layers of cloth around the candle and you keep piling up the layers and layers and layers and the fire is burning within. You have forgotten about the fire within and you're searching for light. As you remove the layers of cloth the light becomes more meaningful. Until one day you remove the last layer and the light has always been there. The light has never gone anywhere. You are the light. That is why it is written, "Ye are the light of the world." Fred likes that. (laughter)

SF: It's scripture.

R: Yeah. Ye are the light of the world, this is true. But you will not acknowledge it. You will acknowledge the layers of cloth. The problems the inconsistencies. The things that appear erroneous. That you are always ready to acknowledge. You are ready to stick up for your rights. To fight for your beliefs. Yet these are the things that have to go. All of these things have to go. You have to become virtually empty. Totally empty.

There is nothing that can hurt you. As I explained before unless certain things happen in your life that seem to hurt you - I use the word seem because the hurt is only an appearance - you can never grow. This is why when a true Sage comes into your life he or she pushes your buttons. To see what you're all about. To see what will happen. If you really have true grit and can hold on or if you're still weak and drop away.

Think of the things that are going on in your life right now, good or bad. There are still people who tell me, "Robert I don't think I need this teaching because I've got everything I want." How can we misunderstand a teaching like this. If the world is an illusion if it doesn't really exist then having everything you want is a double illusion. The idea is not to want anything. It sounds paradoxical. Everything has already been given. You are well cared for.

Take an orange tree. An orange tree is laden with oranges and yet if you do not pick them they will rot. New oranges will not be able to grow. The more oranges you pick the greater the orange crop for next year. The oranges want to be picked so that new oranges can always grow.

So it is with our lives. When you hold on to things you stagnate. We were meant to loose everything to let go not to hold onto things. This is why God told Moses when he was walking in the desert for forty years, "Everyday you shall receive new manna from heaven but do not save it, share it with everyone and leave the rest. A new manna shall be provided for you daily."

The ones that didn't listen and they put manna away for the next day all kinds of terrible things happened to those people. They quarreled amongst themselves, they fought each other for the manna, they claimed there would not be enough tomorrow and they died at the wayside. But those who had faith in God's words and didn't concern themselves about the morrow were well supplied and they made it to the land of milk and honey. I think that is how the story goes? Where was the land of milk and honey? You don't know Fred?

SF: The desert?

R: Sounds good.

Well this is something like us. We go about things in the wrong way. The entire banking system of the world is simply a plot for certain people to become rich. The whole world is nonsense and as long as we abide in the world we're going to suffer. By abiding in the world I mean, mentally.

Again this does not mean that I'm telling you to give up your job and live in a cave and leave your family. I'm referring to go on with your work and do whatever you have to do but to mentally let go of attachment to person place and thing.

Everything begins in your mind. Again I tell you so many times do not concern yourself with how your work is going to be done or whether or not it will be done. The same power that grows the grass, that causes the sun to shine just right, so that life is maintained and sustained. That power will maintain and sustain you. If you trust it and have faith in it.

And one day you will recognize and learn that you are that power! And that the maintainer and sustainer comes out of you. You have been giving life to all the world. It is because of you that the universe exists. It's your fault, you did it. Look what you've done. A fine mess you've made. So what are you going to do about it.

It's as if you exhaled and created the universe and inhaled and annihilated the universe. That's a good picture to have of God. They say a breath of God takes two hundred and forty thousand years. So when God exhales the universe comes into existence and lasts approximately two hundred and forty thousand years. And then God inhales and everything is dissolved for another two hundred and forty thousand years. Then God exhales again and the world is created again. That's a stupid story. (students laugh)

SH: It sure is, yeah. (students laugh)

R: But whatever the story is it's a story and it's a lie. Why can't I just tell you nothing exists.

No thing is the way it appears. You start with yourself. This is the reason if you can get rid of your body and realize one day that you are not the body or the mind the whole universe will disappear for you. So do not try to get rid of certain things in your life for they will just be replaced with new things.

If you try to get rid of your husband or your wife and then a new one comes along that is worse than the last one. This goes on and on. Do not try to get rid of anything externally. But work on removing the lie that you are a body-mind. That's all you've got to do. It's been made too easy for us. It simply boils down to the I-thought. The I-thought is the culprit. All of these things that I've been talking about are all attached to the I-thought.

Great Sages have therefore told us if we can only learn to remove the I-thought you'll have a different picture of everything. Everything will disappear in this world. For everything is only in the I-thought and as far as I'm concerned the easiest way to do this is to inquire from where the I-thought comes. Can anything be more easier? Just to find out where the I-thought came from will remove all of your problems you ever had. Will set you free. It's all you have to do. Spend your spare time asking yourself where the I-thought came from. Can anything be more simpler? "Where did the I-thought come from?" There is no answer to that question because the answer will only build up your ego. That is why there is no answer.

You therefore follow the I-thought to it's source and a place has been designated where you should follow the I-thought to and that is the spiritual heart. The spiritual heart is consciousness, absolute reality, God, nirvana, sat-chit-ananda, Brahman. As the I-thought is dissolved in the spiritual heart you become your Self, simple. All you've got to do right now is to do it, and you will be free.

Feel free to ask questions or make silly statements or do anything you like.

SF: Sir last Thursday you told us about someone who was stating that it was essential for a person to have a guru in human form and... (R: For most people.) My impression from what you said is this is not necessarily. So my thought is that it's an individual who believes in his heart that he has come within the orbit of a Satguru that his head is already in the tigers mouth and should he... should that guru give up his body for that individual to think he can go out and find another Satguru or another tiger is kind of a forlorn hope?

R: What I was referring to last week is that for beginners who have recently started the path. And they have been in the presence of a Satguru and the Satguru decides to leave his body at that time, it is a good idea for them to find another one. For they're just starting out and they are not strong enough to carry on by themselves.

But for the devotee, for the disciple who's been with a Sage for quite a while, the Sage can never separate himself from them. For the Sage is the same whether he is in a body or whether he is without a body. The difference is in your eyes, you see the Sage leaving his body, what you call death. But there is no such thing in the eyes of the Sage. There is no birth and there is no death. There is no coming and there is no going.

There is only the one and the one is consciousness and consciousness is self-contained. There is no where to go. The devotee knows this and the devotee is always enmeshed in the consciousness of the Sage. The Sage can never leave such a one. For there is a divine connection.

But the beginner who doesn't understand this, the searcher, should find a new guru. For their ego is still so strong, so they need a teacher to hold them down so they can learn. Is that what you mean? (SF: Yes sir.)

SK: (the beginning of the question has been cut as student continues) ...can be more satvic. Is that the same as improving ones commitment?

R: Remember the term satvic, tamas, rajas belong in the realms of yoga. They're like everything else we talk about they do not really exist. They exist in the early stages of a persons sadhana. When a person is first starting out in yoga practices they're told about being a satvic as compared to tamas and rajas and you work on that. But that is for the neophyte. When you are in direct contact with a Satguru all that becomes redundant, it's no longer necessary. Only giving up of your ego, giving up of yourself, surrender of yourself and practicing self-inquiry or whatever the Sage tells you to do, that is the only thing of importance.

SF: One story about Sri Bhagvan that I've always wondered about and it's back to you what you have to say about it. This lady came to him one morning and she said, I had a dream last night in which I was approached by a very dignified beautiful lady whom I recognized at once as poverty. Poverty is Shiva's counsels. (R: Not poverty, Parvati.) It's P-a-r-v-a-t-i isn't it? (R: You said, "Poverty.") Well it's my pronunciation is wrong. P a r v a t i is it not? (R: Parvati.) Parvati. But anyway she came up to this woman and said, "My son is not taking his coffee..." (R: Coffee?) Coffee. "...please prepare a pot and take it to him." and she said, "Here you are swami, your mothers orders." And his reaction was, "Why does she do this to me interfering in my life and frustrating my austerities?" And then he said, "she did it when I lived on the hill also." And his reaction is so human it's always so fascinating.

R: Oh I see what you mean. You have to remember that people like Ramana responds to certain people in certain ways. When a person comes to him and asks a question he will respond at their level of understanding. So he was talking in human terms to the disciples who were around him at that time so they may comprehend what the story means. "Why did you bring your coffee to me and interrupt my austerities. He wanted people to know, the people that he was talking to, that even a Sage wants to be in the silence by himself many times and not have interruptions.

In other words that story was necessary at the time. Do not take these stories literally. This is why all the questions and answers in all of the books, Nisargadatta books, Ramana Maharshi books and other books, you will notice that many times the same questions are asked and there is a different answer given. The answer is given in accordance to the maturity of the student. So the answer will always be different.

It's just like I have lunch with many of you and I act very human. For that is what you want me to do. You don't want me to be weird. (laughter) And just sit there and stare at you and say nothing. You'll say to yourself, "That is the last time I'm taking him to lunch." (students laugh) So if I see you doing something I do the same thing. If you drink a beer I'll drink a beer too. All is well. (laughter)

SF: Everything in duality is of no great importance? (R: Duality doesn't even exist.) Or what we think is duality. (R: Then you have to do the best you can.)

(silence)

R: Has anyone seen any good movies lately? (SI: Rambling rose.) Rambling rose? That's a movie. Who is in that? (SI: Robert Duval can't think of the other names.)

(silence)

R: Well we're going to try something new on Sunday. Instead of my talking there will be that wooden bowl over here and pieces of paper. When you come in write down a question that you'd like answered. You can remain anonymous so you can say anything you like. And then rather than my making a talk I'll simply read the question and we'll talk about the answer. What do you think of that? Any nays?

SH: It might be okay. (R: It might work.) We can always experiment.

R: There are certain things some people are embarrassed to ask or they think they are silly to ask the question. Whereas you write it down without signing your name and you won't know who wrote it.

SK: Can the people who want to sign their name sign them?

R: Sure. You can even sign somebody else's name. (students laugh)

SH: Oh now you're complicating it. I'm going to use Mary's name. (SM: Don't you dare.) Mary you're popular. Pure innocence coming up with all the questions. (SM: Robert help me please.)

SV: Robert... (R: Umm.) if a person doesn't have a lot of things in their lives they're trying to work on like working on like poor health or abundance or whatever. (R: Umm.) Does that mean being with a Sage life is going to fall apart? (laughter) (R: Say that again something is going to fall...) If a person doesn't come to a Sage with things they want to improve in their life, does that mean when they go to a Sage that everything is going to fall apart?

R: On the contrary, what will happen is the things that are holding you back from your ultimate realization will begin to come out of you and break down and become transcended. So who knows what is liable to happen, but it's all for the good.

SV: In what way do the things which hold you back, in what way do they surface?

R: They surface as the change of conditions in your life. They surface in many ways. There is something that you have to do in order to get rid of something that is hindering you. Let's say for instance you're in love with a house. And the house is your God. You worship that house. You show off that house to everybody that you see. You've had a house for many years and you've fixed it and you've worked on it. And that is the only thing keeping you back from your realization. All of a sudden you meet somebody like myself and your house burns down. (laughter) So that's good!

SK: That's an old good cow trick over and over again. (R: A good cow trick?) Krishna? (R: Tell the story.) You tell the story well. I hope your cow drops dead. (R: Oh right that story, right. Oh I see, yeah.) What's the story? (R: I forgot.) (students laugh)

(SF asks again about spelling and pronunciation of Shivas counsel)

SK: Robert, one of my experiences a very, very good friend of mine last week - in the last fourteen months there has been seven funerals I have been to and one of them was my mother, very close people. And coming here after all this time-I don't know exactly what I'm trying to say so - as much as I see that this does not really matter, it doesn't exist in a sense I can see that but at the same time I see that and I feel like I'm really not afraid of it, the fear of death doesn't seem to bother me. But I am so attached to stuff. I give things that same power. I really see how important the world is, still. Even though I know it's going to be gone very shortly but the pull or the power that I give it - a lot of things have dissipated in my life - but it is still there?

R: Well sure this is true of most of us. That is why we have to diligently work on ourselves and keep asking the question, "Who feels this? To whom do these feelings come?" It is the I-thought that is attached to your things. When you realize the I-thought is responsible for your feeling like this, you do not try to dis-attach yourself from the feelings but you rather work on annihilating the I-thought. You keep working on the I-thought. When the I-thought becomes weak then no longer will you feel that way by anything in this world. So again do not try to change your attitude outside externally but rather work internally by removing the I-thought then you will see what happens.

SK: So the emotion I have with these attachments that will...subside?

R: ...subside. The emotion is the I-thought. It's all attached to the I-thought. Who feels emotional? I do. Who is the I that feels emotional? Where did it come from? Who gave it birth? How did it appear? What is it's source? Find the source and you will be free.

SK: So like you said before, I have created... (R: Of course, with your mind.) ...all of it? I've created it, all of it? Well that is the part, I mean I see that as a fact, as a truth. And at the same time I can't help it if I created it all and I'm still creating more.

R: Of course. Inquire, "Who sees this? Who is creating all of this? I am." It always goes back to the I-thought. Follow the I-thought to it's source - (and I'm not talking about apple source) - get back to the source and you'll be free. Always go back to the source, to your Self. (SK: When you say source I don't know what you mean.) (students laugh) The source is God. Good God. Source is the deity of your choice.

SF: You said the deity of your choice, would that be one of the great Masters? (R: Yes of course.) Jesus or Krishna or whatever? (R: Jesus, Krishna, Moses, Shiva whoever you like.)

SH: Try Robert, Richard. These others are sort of worn. (R: Try me Fred.) You know there is a sort of warm over years.

SF: Don't go that way? (SH: Yeah, he's fresh. Hot off the girdle. There is a girdle right up on the Bodhi mantle piece.) (students laugh) Why do I need that for?

SK: Robert you know these lake shrine SRM. (R: I know.) They use them all and got them all. (R: That is good for them what about you?) I don't necessarily need them. (R: You better become your own lake shrine.)

SF: I've heard that all Masters are one and they never contradict one another.

R: True. (SF: It sounds as though they do but in actuality they're the same.) They say they do but when nobody's looking they get together and have a big fist fight. (SF: Oh I don't know about that.)

SG: They contradict themselves how can they not contradict each other?

SF: It sounds as though they do. Like Krishna said, "All paths lead to me." and Jesus said, "Only through me or through the Father," sounds contradictory but it's not as I see it. (SK: Bad translation.) Say again? (SF: Just bad translation.)

SX: What does Fred say? (SF: It's time for me to shut up. I got nothing to sell.)

R: You're doing good Fred. (SF: Pardon?) You're doing great. (SF: Thank you.)

(silence)

SR: I had an experience today Robert that was in line with what you were saying when you were talking about how your energy can break down our facades. I had an experience today where I could tell vaguely very unclearly, I could tell I was being asked by the universe to give up a massive amount of ego pride all in one fell swoop with an attitudinal change. And even though I could sense that that was what was happening I couldn't do it. I went into some kind of a bind. My transmission locked. I couldn't feel, I became numb, I couldn't, I chose not to fight it and yet I couldn't give into it. I wasn't ready to do that at all. It all hit me in a space of about an hour. And I had this massive amount coming at me and asking me to change. I just watched myself blocking, even though my head saw somewhat dimly, my viscera couldn't handle it.

And so hearing your talk tonight was so beautiful because that's what happened and I was dimly aware of, if I could give up this massive attitudinal change, give up this ego, this huge chunk - I guess at the time I couldn't see what would happen, my mind was too dulled and numb. I can see now sitting in this atmosphere that I was being given a chance to clear it out. Clear out a huge amount. If I could do it with a clear mind and with love. I suspected that at the time if I did give up, I might be doing it with anger and resentment and I figure that's no good, might as well not let go if I'm going to do it with resentment and anger. If you disagree let me know. So I wasn't ready...

R: I disagree with everything. You're too analytical. Just shove it out of the way. (SR: Well it's your energy that helping me see it?) I know, just say goodbye to all that stuff. It's no longer part of you. When you get involved too analytically, in a condition by giving it all kinds of names, you're actually improving the condition. (SR: Making the ego stronger?) Making the ego stronger. Do not look for new psychological jargon to call the ego by what's happening to you. Make it very simple like a child. "Who is feeling all this stuff? I am. Who am I? What is the source of the I? That's it, that is all you've got to do. You do not have to go through any other experience. (SR: And just let go of the I-thought.) Follow the I-thought to the source.

SR: Well I noticed here while I was putting myself back in that place in time this morning and letting go of the I-thought, it was beautiful. It opened up and the unknown clarity came.

R: Whenever you feel anything during the day, do the same thing. Ask, "To whom does this come? I feel it. Who is the I? Where did the I come from? What is its source?" And you will be rid of everything, you will be free.

Keep it very simple. The ego loves to elaborate, to stretch things out. To make a big thing out of it. Stop it before it gets bigger. Do not go on with your thinking. Stop your mind from thinking.

Even when you're thinking about higher things. If your mind is going through all kinds of higher experiences, put a stop to it. For the mind is merely playing games with you. The mind is increasing its capacity. With new words, with new concepts, with new attitudes. We want to empty the mind, to clear the mind and finally to annihilate the mind. So if you're thinking of good thoughts or bad thoughts, get rid of everything and have no thoughts.

(silence)

Always remember that you are not the body or mind. That you are absolute reality, that you are parabrahman, pure awareness, consciousness, sat-chit-ananda. That is your real nature. God bless you, peace, om shanti.

(tape ends) [TOC]

AWAKEN!

13th October, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, Om, peace. Good afternoon. It's good to be with you again. It's good seeing you, being with you, listening to you, listening to all your problems. Before we get into the questions, I'll make some opening remarks.

There's only one way to become liberated, and that is to awaken, just to awaken, just wake up, just as you do in the morning when you wake up from sleep. You were in a dream world and you woke up. In the same way you awaken to your Self. The way to do this is to be at satsang, to surrender to the Self. When you surrender to the Self you're surrendering to life. You're no longer thinking "This has to work out this way. This has to work out that way. This has to be improved. I've got to read this book. I've got to go see this teacher." True surrender is allowing your heart, your spiritual heart, to take over and you have nothing to do and nothing to say.

All of the practices are incidental. Sadhana is important to make you come to the realization that you have to wake up. That's all sadhana is for. It's for no other reason. Sadhana, spiritual practices, do not wake you up by themselves. They have no awakening powers. But they put your mind to rest. When your mind is at rest you awaken.

Why do you want to be liberated? Of course you're already liberated. That's your real nature. The one who wishes to become liberated, to awaken, looks at this world. They've been through many vicissitudes, they've been through many problems, through many rituals, they've had good times and bad times, and they've come to the conclusion that there is something else more beautiful and grand than they can ever imagine.

In other words they realize that the finite mind can never, never bring them to that place. There is nothing in this world or any other world or in any other state, that can bring them eternal happiness and eternal joy, bliss consciousness. The only way to get there is to awaken. They become interested in awakening.

When you become interested in awakening you do not run around adding things to yourself. It is ludicrous to me to see people adding more book knowledge, learning things like the Kabbalah, the ancient scriptures, the Vedas. Every time a new book comes out they read it, searching for different teachers, looking for the answers outside themselves. There is no thing outside yourself that can give this to you. Therefore these people have wisdom, they've got Jnana and they begin to see that awakening is the only way to get there. The world has fooled them long enough. They therefore begin to let go, not to add.

If they love a tree and they love roses they begin to see that's an attachment that's holding them back from total realization, from awakening. The tree and the rose are an emanation of your mind. You have created it. The source is yourself. This is a new revelation to most people. The beauty out there does not come by itself and you behold it. That's the way it appears. But in truth, in reality, the beauty you behold is your own beauty, your own joy, your own love. You are that. And the manifestation of the tree, or the rose, or the mountain, or the ocean, the sky. What if you were able to pull those feelings that you have toward these things deep within yourself, and become that. You will then discover the truth that you have always been that.

There is nothing outside that is not within you. This is something that should be remembered all of the time. You should always be aware of this. There is nothing out there that is not within here. If you understand this totally where do you have to go? Whom do you have to see? What do you have to read? What is there to do? You can simply sit and be the universe and bask in glory and total love, total joy.

Think of all the things you're doing to try to get enlightened. The worst thing you can do is to speak too many words. Words lead to other words, and they lead to other words, and you become a talking encyclopedia. The process is simply to let go, to get rid of the talking, talking, talking. To get rid of the wanting, the desires, to believe that something is out there that can do something to you.

This is why satsang is so important. When you come here you put your mind to rest for a while. As you begin to feel the power of satsang your mind becomes pulled. The mind is pulled in, to the spiritual heart center. Deeper and deeper it goes. As you empty yourself, as you no longer desire anything, you begin to live spontaneously. You live in the moment. That moment is filled with bliss, filled with absolute reality. There's nothing to say. There's nothing to do. And yet you will find the body doing whatever it came to this earth to do. It's a beautiful way to live.

You are not the doer. You are not doing a thing, mentally. Your mind is quiescent, calm like a motionless lake. And yet your body is doing whatever it's supposed to do. If you're supposed to be a bank manager you become one, but yet your mind is not active. If you're supposed to be a garbage collector you become that, there's no difference, it's all the same. Your mind is not working but the Self is. And just like the tree, it does not think, "Will I grow new leaves next year?" or if it's an apple tree, "Will I bloom apples, will I grow apples next year or will I die? The wind is strong. Looks like a hurricane coming, I'd better prepare myself." The apple tree does not think like this. It cannot. By it's very nature it produces apples every year.

Your nature is to be in glory, in bliss. Your nature is to be totally enlightened. Your nature is consciousness. Your nature is to cause the I of yourself to disappear, to annihilate the mind and the ego and become totally free and liberated. Remember the important points. You have to let go, not add on.

It is true when you find a new environment, when you see a new teacher, when you read a new book, the novelty is very strong, it's great, because everything is new, and human beings love change. Change is the ego. It is the ego that pushes you around the world and wants you to do this and do that, and see this, and change jobs, and go change teachers, and change clothes, and change, change. The ego does all these things for you. When you remember this you will remember who your Master is. The more active you become mentally, the greater the ego, the greater the mind. And the mind is your Master, the mind is your God, for you're following your mind. If you learn to control your mind you will have less desires, less needs and less wants. And you will find eternal bliss, eternal peace, eternal happiness.

No one can really interfere in your life. It is your life. You came to this earth specifically to transcend the body and become eternally free. Consequently see what you're doing with your life, how you act every day, the things that disturb you, the things that annoy you, the things that frighten you, the things that you love, the things that you want, the things that you enjoy. They're all impostors. They're all lies.

The truth is that you're eternal sat-chit-ananda, parabrahman, absolute reality, pure intelligence, ultimate oneness, nirvana, emptiness. You are that, stay like that and be happy.

Mary would you pass me the question box. We're starting a new thing today. Rather than I continue talking you all have some question and you have something that is on your mind that you don't like to speak of in public. So when you write it out, you do not have to sign it. Therefore you can say anything you like. You can call me names and do whatever you like.

So here is question number one: It's typed!

Q: (Robert Reads) I have started to pray and it feels as if I am trying to walk with two left feet. One of them turned backward. How can I increase devotion forever? Anonymous Fred. (laugh)

SF: You're not supposed to read the last one. (laughs)

R: If it's on there I read it. So the question is, you can make a book out of the question. (laughter) The questions is how do I really pray and increase devotion?

Do not believe that you have to do this yourself. Feel as if there is somebody within you that knows how to pray. There is a power and a presence that already knows how to pray and is already devoted. You start by thinking of a few words. You realize that what you call God is universal. And as long as you believe that you are an ego or separate or the body then you are finite. Therefore the finite prays to the universal.

What you do is simply say, "Not my will but thine." You can always start a prayer like that. You're saying I don't need anything myself but whatever you know is right for me, I surrender myself to you. There is a being that appears to be apart from you and you call that being God, infinite.

God knows what is right for you and what is good for you and what your needs are. True prayer is again surrendering to this God. As you keep surrendering everyday by saying, "Not my will but thine." That is very powerful. You develop humility, you develop humbleness, you become very humble. You no longer are proud and cynical and arrogant. As you keep saying, "Not my will but thine."

And pretty soon after you do this for a couple of months or so, something happens to you. You begin to feel that this deity that you've been praying to or giving yourself up is none other than yourself. You've been praying to yourself and not the self which is Fred but the Self which is God as you. And then you begin to sit in the silence recognizing that you are not the body or the doer but that you are greater than this, and even if you do not know yet what it is or feel it. You do begin to feel peaceful.

As you continue this for a while you find that Fred begins to disappear or Fred gets smaller and smaller. And the deity you've been praying to which is yourself becomes greater and greater. When this happens to you all words stop. You become aware. Your prayer consists of sitting in the silence. There are no needs there are no desires. You merely spend time sitting in the silence contemplating the Self which is you. You are no longer human at this point. You are no longer a human being. Your prayer has led you towards liberation.

So prayer is very important but not to pray for things but to know God's will. Thy will be done. That's the extent of your prayer. And God's will is always goodwill. You get a job at goodwill. (laughter) You drive their truck. It all turns out beautiful, whether you're working for goodwill whatever you do. But you have learnt that you are not yourself with a small "s." As a human being. And prayer has led you to oneness. Therefore the right kind of prayer is "Thy will be done," that's it. This makes you devotional, this makes you go higher in consciousness and ultimately sets you free.

SF: Excuse me I have a question with that. I have tried using the words, "Thy will be done," and as soon as I say that I feel a hypocrite because it's I you're telling God your will be done?

R: You're not really doing that. When you say, "Thy will be done," you're not telling God his will is going to be done your way. What you are really doing is surrendering yourself to God. Thy will not my will.

Question number two. (Robert reads) When will we again meet three hours every satsang, two to three long sessions of silence?

R: Everything we do is spontaneous. (SM: Okay.) Somebody wants to spend three hours at satsang with two or three long sessions of silence. We usually do this on Thursdays and some of it on Sunday. I really have no idea how long we take but we will start having maybe special meetings on Saturdays where we can spend two or three hours just in silence and do nothing.

Everything that I do is spontaneous and something that does what I do observes the students and does what is necessary for the people who come here. Consequently sometimes we sit for longer periods in silence, sometimes we sit for shorter periods. But the truth of the matter is that everything that takes place in satsang is the silence. Everything is silence.

What are you seeing? You want certain formal ways of doing things, you want two hours of silence, twenty five minutes of talking, a half hour of asking questions. When you come to satsang do not think how things should be or how they want to be or how you think they should be.

Rather put yourself into satsang and let your mind be silent and not think of anything at all and let everything take care of itself. Then you will grow and you will see results. In other words what I'm saying is don't be the type of person that comes to satsang and start thinking, "I hope we have two hours of silence and twenty minutes of talking." Do not think of anything at all and just get involved in the satsang. Try to be open and empty and let your heart listen to what is going on. Everything will take care of itself.

Question number three: (Robert reads) When will we incorporate Ramana Maharshi's name in our chants before Sunday satsang?

R: Oh I see what you mean. When we sing the song "Kindle My Light" we use Muktananda's name because that is the song. We can't change that because that is a Muktananda's song and it's a beautiful song. But it would be a good idea to sing a song that has Ramana's name in it.

SH: Why can't you change it and substitute Ramana's name. There is no copyright on it?

R: I don't know if it's legal or not?

SE: I checked with Indira she knows the person who wrote the song and she said there would be no objection.

R: Okay so lets change the name then. Good we'll do that.

Question number four: (Robert reads) Would you please speak on the subject of the grace of the guru. How does a student come under the influence grace?

R: That's a good question. By surrender and by devotion. Grace flows by itself. When there is absolutely nothing in your mind holding you back. When you come here and you give yourself away you're totally devoted, you have total service, you totally surrender. Then and only then do you pick up the grace that is already flowing. There never was a time when the grace was not flowing. Grace is always here. But you have to make yourself available to it.

And you do so by surrendering yourself to the Self, to the guru, to the consciousness. When you do this you are not surrendering yourself to Robert. Robert does not exist. You are surrendering yourself to omnipresence, to omniscience which is all-pervading. This is hard for a person with a big ego. It's sort of hard for most westerners but that is exactly what you have to do. You have to have trust and faith and those are the people who make the most progress.

But when you come here and you think of yourself as a human being and I am another human being that you came to see, you stop the grace from flowing because you're involved in materialism. You're thinking of two separate human beings. But when you come to see me and you realize that I am none other than your Self, there is only one

Self. And that Self is I-am. And that Self is all-pervading. Then that is a whole new ball game. And then grace automatically flows. You pick it up. You become it.

Grace is another name for the Self. It all has to do with your attitude. This is why I talk so much about seeing so many teachers because all these different teachers have a name. And you are building up your ego when you go and say, "I am going to see this teacher - by name, I'm going to see that teacher tomorrow - by name. I'm going to this teacher - by name." You forget that there is only consciousness and the teacher has no name. But you get lost in the shuffle. When you read so many books by so many authors and you see so many teachers with so many names.

Find the teacher that appeals to you most. Stay with that one. Surrender to that one. Give yourself to that one. Become that one. And you will see yourself what happens. But again I admit that this is most difficult with most westerners. They're not used to something like this. They are mainly used to going to lectures, to churches, to see what this person has to say, what that person has to say. If somebody will speak the magic word and you will become enlightened, which is very funny. The true devotee forgets about enlightenment. They simply keep surrendering and letting go and then grace becomes evident.

Next case: It looks like the same person is writing all these questions.

(Robert reads) Can the guru discern the state of awareness of the student? Can he tell how close to full realization a student is? Can he discern the blocks to realization?

(Robert answers) The answer is yes. This is the reason why many times you tell me that you're predicament became much worse since you've met me, sometimes. This is why all of a sudden certain changes come into your life. Things are moving. All the karma you've had inside of you for many centuries is coming to the surface and being completely wiped out. You therefore experience newness. The newness may not be to your liking in the beginning. But the more faith and the more trust you have in the Self the faster you snap out of it and become totally free.

I'm more aware of you than you can ever imagine. I watch, I do not say much, I allow the unfoldment to come by itself. But what do you do? How do you think? What is your reaction? That's important.

Q: (Robert reads) Does the guru have personal knowledge of the efforts of grace on his students? Is grace an impersonal force, or financial or spiritual? Do physical healings come as a result of grace?

A: (Robert answers) Grace itself is Brahman. It has nothing to do with physical, financial or anything else. Everything unfolds in your life the way it's supposed to. When you surrender. When you let go. Yes the guru does have personal knowledge of what is going on in your life but the guru keeps silent most of the time, and observes and watches. For the understanding is that most of the people are not ready to be told anything else at this time for it will have an adverse effect.

So the Self watches and waits, watches and waits. As you go through many trials and tribulations so-called and experiences in life, the guru waits and sees whether you're going to survive and still come back or whether you will become angry and go somewhere else. The Jnani is aware of these things but just watches and waits.

A good example is the class today. We usually have half of the students or we have half of the students that we usually have. And that is great as far as I'm concerned because that is the way I like it. But the people who are here have come to listen to this particular message. This message that is being spoken today it's most important for those of you who are here so that's why you are here today.

Everything is preordained, there are no accidents. Nothing just transpires by itself. That is why your attitude should always be, "All is well and everything unfolding as it should." Always feel this. You have absolutely nothing to do with it. Do not allow yourself to become ruffled by the world or by situations or by anything else. What we call God loves you and knows how to take care of you. Again your duty is to surrender and allow it to happen.

Q: (Robert reads) Faith, satsangs, self-inquiry, teachings for what purpose, isn't self-realization teachings a matter of faith? Grace? And anything the ego does is pointless, just transient?

A: Yes. Faith is very important. Satsang is very important. Self-inquiry is very important. But to whom? It's important to you because you think you are a body. You will become lost, for you will become another human being. You will become one of the multitudes that is why self-inquiry, satsang all these things we do are very important. But yet you do not become realized because of them. They're very important because it quiets your mind. It makes you one pointed. It causes you to become calm and relaxed and peaceful. And then you're able to go upward. You let go of everything and you become self-realized.

This is the purpose of teachings. A person leaves their home and they go to sit in a cave or they go to a monastery, to a Zen buddhist monastery, a catholic monastery, why? To get away from the world. So they can have time in which to practice certain disciplines, spiritual disciplines. Why do they want to practice the spiritual disciplines? To quieten the mind and to become one pointed. When that happens grace and faith, everything takes care of itself. Therefore do not think that sadhana is not important.

I've explained to you that sadhana can never make you self-realized. But it brings you to the point where you can surrender and totally give up the body. By realizing you are not the doer and you become free.

Q: (Robert reads) In as much as I don't see, feel changes in me, in my life. I feel disorganized. (repeats) In as much, I don't see, feel changes in my life. I feel discontented, disorganized? Whatever that word is?

A: If you don't feel anything happening to you ask yourself, "What am I doing with my life? How much time am I spending practicing sadhana? Practicing self-inquiry?" When you get on a spiritual path never look for results. Do not look for anything. Simply do the work whatever it is you have to do and leave it alone. Do not compare yourself with anyone. Do not look at time. Just do the work. It will take care of itself.

If you think it's taking a long time - you've been practicing for two whole days and nothing has happened, even if you've been practicing for fifty years and you think nothing has happened you're making a mistake. Just by you being here something is happening. If you just came here and never practiced at all something is happening within yourself. You're way ahead of the game. Remember do not look at time.

There are those people in the world which is most of the world that do no practice whatsoever. They just go along with the world. Think how much ahead you are than them. You cannot judge your own self. Practice, be happy do not look for a time. Do not think about becoming self-realized. Develop humility, love and see what happens.

Q: (Robert reads) Is it possible to being in a fairly high state of awareness but due to karmic action one has been thrust back into a lesser state? Or is it because self-inquiry feels so natural and instinctively knows this way is the right way?

A: Every state that you go into is of the mind. The mind can play tricks on you. It can make you feel peaceful sometimes and feel high and feel that you're really up there. And then you'll feel as if you've been thrown away into the world again and left alone.

The truth is you have to get rid of the mind that thinks that way. That is why self-inquiry is about the best sadhana on earth for it goes right to the crux of the matter. It realizes that I is the culprit. The I-thought is responsible for the problems and you inquire, "To whom does the I-thought come." Following it back to the source.

Therefore whatever has happened to you in your life whether you've gone up high and you fell back again, you become aware this is of the mind. Don't look at your state of consciousness. Do not look at the external things because that is the mind. Rather get rid of the mind. Do you see the difference. Work on annihilating the mind. Never mind high or low states or falling out of grace or returning to zero.

It is the mind that confuses you or confounds you and makes you think of these things. By inquiring, "For whom is there a mind?" You one day will realize that there is only consciousness, absolute reality and there is no mind and then you'll be free.

Q: (Robert reads) You say that the realization of the Self is already part of our experience? When we realize Self we will laugh? What part of our present experience is Self? Silence, somethingness, something else?

A: The truth is that your present experience is the Self. The part of you that thinks that you are the body is really the Self. There is only the Self. There is not you and the Self or you becoming the Self. Or anything you have to do to become the Self. The Self is your very nature. You really have no body. The body that appears is an optical illusion. There is no mind. There is no doer. There is no person who has to become realized. You are that.

This is an important point for you to remember. What appears to be your body is the Self. You have always been the Self. The body is like the tree, the sky, the mountain, the wars, man's inhumanity to man. They're all the same but they do not exist. Creation never began. There is no one who created anything. The appearance is that your mind created everything. Again that's an appearance, that is a high state to be in. To be aware that your mind is responsible for creation.

But then again there is no mind. Therefore who is responsible for creation? There is no creation. There never was a creation and there will never be a creation. This is what I mean when I say to wake up. When you wake up to the Self all this becomes very evident to you. It becomes real. That's why I say you laugh at yourself. Because all these years you've been trying to become something and do something and acquire something when you have been that all along. Therefore ask yourself, "To whom do these false thoughts come? To whom does the mind come?" And you will see there is no mind.

Q: (Robert reads) Would you please repeat your suggestions about reading the transcripts before going to bed and arriving in the morning? Is there anything to be gained by being in the company of someone who seeks you out and whom you cannot bare being around? (laughter)

A: Well number one about the transcripts. We see each other about five-six hours a week. The world has you more than I do. The pull of the world appears strong to some people and gets you confounded and causes all kinds of conflicts and nonsense. When you're here you feel wonderful. When you walk out the door and the world has a hold on you begin to think about worldly things. You forget about you are consciousness and you are the Self and you are the only one in existence and there are no others. You begin to think of yourself as a human being and you've got to do this and you've got to do that. You've got to do all sorts of things.

Therefore the transcripts are an extension of the Self. If you read the transcripts correctly you will not have time to read a dozen books a week. For everything you need to know is in the transcripts. Books may say it in different ways. So I suggest that you read one transcript a week. The proper way to do this is when you go to sleep before you retire at night. Go over the entire transcript. Then go from paragraph to paragraph, pondering each paragraph. It's very simple the transcript is. I make sure that they are simple and are not in a way too profound so you can't understand what's happening. You ponder each paragraph, the next day you do the same thing.

If you're able to read part of it in the morning, a paragraph. You ponder that. As you go to work or wherever you go you remember the paragraph that you read. You ask yourself, "What does this mean to me?" You assimilate it, you digest it, you carry it with you during the day. This answers many questions also for many people who say, "I cannot do sadhana. I cannot do self-inquiry. I cannot practice any kind of meditation." Well if you just read a paragraph of the lesson, the transcript and carry it with you during the day, what you read. Then read the same paragraph before you go to sleep. Ponder it, digest it, assimilate it. Go to a new paragraph tomorrow. You should spend a week on each transcript.

Do not be like most people who just read them through and put them down and say, "Where is the next one?" You can read a transcript for five minutes if you desire but it will not do you any good. It will just be a bunch of words. Spend time on it, be quiet.

SJ: Robert what about the parts of the transcripts that tells you to relate to the... (R: To relate to what?) What if you can't relate to any certain paragraph do you just skip that or... (R: Skip that, sure. Go to the next one.)

So the next is there anything to be gained by being in the company of someone who seeks you out and admires you and whom you cannot bare being around.

Well if you cannot bare being around someone why should you be around them? That is simple. The person may admire you. May think great things of you but if you can't be around them, if can't bare being around them by all means do not be around them. Why should you torture yourself. You shouldn't be with people that you can't bare to be around. But then this is a dual question and answer.

Where are you coming from that you can't bare to be around a certain person? Is there something inside of you that has a problem that way? You cannot run away from situations either. You've got to face them and not to react to them and then you transcend them and become free. But just generally if you cannot bare to be around someone why should you be around them, leave and go forth into the night.

Q: (Robert reads) How do you not react to something or someone who upsets you? (SJ: Can you repeat that question?) How do you not react to something or someone who upsets you?

A: Simply by working on yourself doing self-inquiry. By asking yourself, "Who is upset? Who feels this? Who is going through this?" As you inquire this way one or two things will happen.

One: You will get to the stage where you will become powerful enough not to react to the person and you will not have any feelings like that any longer. You will feel free. You will feel totally liberated from that.

Number two: If you practice self-inquiry and sadhana you will find that sooner or later that that person will get out of your life and will not be in your life again.

SH: Guaranteed? (Students laugh)

R: A hundred percent. So one of two things will happen. You will either become so strong mentally that you will not be upset over it, what someone else is doing. You will be able to look at the person and laugh and it will not matter who is around you or who is not around you. You have risen. You have transcended. You have become... you have risen above it, you have risen higher to a higher state of consciousness.

Then again number two the person will get out of your life. The answer is not to look at the world. Not to judge by the standards of the world. But rather to know who you are. To realize the truth about yourself. To lift yourself higher and understand your true nature. You become like this by practicing sadhana, by doing spiritual practices. Especially self-inquiry. Then automatically the changes will come.

But if you do not do this and you're like most people. When they have a problem or they're with a person they don't like, they leave and run to another person. That person will be worse than the first person they were with. They will find many problems.

It's like you have a job you can't get along with your fellow workers and you say, "I'm going to move to Denver and get away from all this." That is the human way to do it. You move to Denver and you get a new job. The novelty is new. New friends, new people. Within six months Denver becomes Los Angeles. You find the same problems with different people.

SJ: When you look close enough those people are really the same. (R: Sure. They are the same people, different faces.) Different languages possibly.

R: Or whatever. That's an escape that you think that you're getting away. You cannot escape your karma. But as you remain calm and peaceful and you work on yourself diligently, you inquire, "To whom does this come? Who is having this problem?" And you realize it's the I-thought that has this problem. You get rid of the I-thought by following it to the source. The source is consciousness, God, reality. You merge into reality. You're no longer the body and you no longer have that problem. You're free.

Boy we have a lot of questions, don't we? What do you think of this method?

SU: I think it's wonderful. (SM: I think it's pretty good Robert.)

R: Rather than my just talking about something. (SJ: Yeah.) We have the questions that you wanted answered.

SH: But people would bring those up anyway, it just wouldn't be written it would be verbalized. (R: Not always because some people are embarrassed to ask a question like that.) Oh. Well that is true.

R: So we had about 12-13 questions. (SE: Thirteen.) Thirteen?

SL: Robert I have a question too. It's not written down, anyway the question is what is better? In the past you've talked about different things that we should say to ourselves before we go to sleep. Should we do the "I-am" thought or should we do the memorizing or memorizing a paragraph or throughout the day we should do the "I am" thought, self-inquiry or is it just a combination of all of them?

R: All of the things I shared for you, with you rather. What you ought to do is to pick out the one that appeals to you mostly. Part of it should always be reading the transcripts because the transcripts somehow set you off on the right path. And then the method you've got to use, whether it's self-inquiry or chanting or becoming the witness that will come to you easier. In other words you will know what to do by reading the paragraph from the transcripts and pondering the paragraph.

SL: But then self-inquiry is more important than saying, "I-am, I-am?"

R: Yes. As far as I am concerned self-inquiry is the easiest method to become realized, to awaken. (SL: So what does the "I-am" do?) I am is your real Self. (SL: When you just keep saying "I-am?") With your breath. It's a form of meditation. When you become tired of self-inquiry after a while. If it becomes boring or you become burnt out. You can go practice the meditation. Inhale and say, "I," exhale and say, "am."

SL: Instead of doing that just all the time almost everything you're doing is just kicking back and...?

R: It depends how you feel. It depends where you are coming from. It depends on what's going on inside yourself. Use the method that is gentle to you. That does not irk you. That feels right for you. There are many ways to practice self-inquiry. Self-inquiry merely means, "inquiring." And you can inquire whatever happens to you. For instance if you want to know what method to use, inquire. Ask yourself. You can ask yourself, "What shall I do to get closer to awakening?" Ask yourself that question.

And all of a sudden like a flash something may come and respond and say, "I-am." Then you can practice the "I-am" meditation. Sometimes nothing comes and you're silent. That means you should rest in the silence and be silent for a while. But go with the flow. Do not force yourself. If you force yourself to do something you'll hate it and you'll say this doesn't work and you'll give it all up. There is so many methods I share with you, you can either practice them all or practice one, the important thing is, is to always be doing something. Never allow the world to get to you. To grab a hold of you and make you worldly.

As I explained before you came, you came late. Whenever you get up in the morning and you behold the trees and the mountains and the sky and people become aware that these things come out of you. You are responsible for this creation. This alone makes you feel good. For you realize that nothing is happening without my knowledge. I am the one. Who am I? Who am I that has caused the creation to be as it is? Is there really a creation? Is there really a mind that has caused the creation to be? Am I that mind? Where did that mind come from? Keep asking, keep inquiring and then keep still. The answers will be forthcoming.

Are there any questions about the questions?

SG: What should we do if someone asks us about...can you say that whatever practice one follows is probably the right practice for them? Because I can't say that when people talk about their ways that self-inquiry is the best because whatever they're following may be best for them? (R: Again what do you get to do with them?) Well if they come and ask me or they talk to me about their practicing something?

R: You can only give them your experience. Where you're at and what you're going to do, what you're doing. See you can explain to them what has helped you. This is as far as you go with people. But do not think too much of people. Go deep within yourself. Dive within yourself. And just by being yourself you will be an asset to others. You see what I mean? (SG: Yeah.) If you try to talk up a storm to people and say, "No this is like this, you should do this. You should be doing it this way, this is the way to do it. I've been doing it for years, I've read many books I know what to do." (laughter) (SG: Yeah.) It's better to keep silent. To become an example... (SG: Yeah.) ...yourself. And the further you go the less you talk. You no longer have to try to make people feel as if you know something important. You're going to help them. You simply be yourself and everything will happen by itself.

SG: That's how I feel because I feel about self-inquiry that it's the practice that I like the most but I don't want to get into a superiority kind of egotistical state about anything that I do. (R: Umm.) Because in the groups that I follow each person thinks that their teacher is the most superior. That their practice is the most superior. (R: Umm.) And I don't want to end up in the same place saying that you're the superior... (R: Umm.) ...and self-inquiry is the superior. (R: Right.) Because I've never liked that about any of the spiritual...

R: You're right about this, you're absolutely true.

SG: And so it's like for me whatever people feel drawn to is right for them... (R: Yes.) ...And I can only share how I personally feel about something and I can't assess - I don't have the omniscience to assess what is better or worse for anybody else except for myself.

R: True, but don't go into long spiels with people about spiritual practice. If you want to talk about self-inquiry, explain it, be succinct... (SG: Um-hm.) ...two or three sentences and say, "go do it!"

SG: But sometimes I like to serve people by advising them about some of the things that you say, but I know that I haven't realized that in my own experience, so I sort of move sometimes just to be silent about it rather than speak it because you say that self-inquiry is superior to yoga in some ways and many people practice yoga. (R: Umm.) In a way I can't say that it is superior because I don't know. See what I mean? (R: I'm sharing this with you.) Right, that's from your experience?

R: Yes. I do not go around and tell people what to practice and what not to practice. (SG: Right.) If someone comes to you and asks you then you can be succinct and give them a couple of answers... (SG: Right.) ...that you've experienced yourself.

SG: But only from what I've experienced and not necessarily... because like in Advaita I notice that people sort of know too much yet far beyond their own experience and they like to talk about levels beyond what they've experienced because they've read and listened... does that make sense what I'm saying? (R: Yes of course.) In my experience I don't as much and I try to share what I know right or wrong...

R: Well don't share too much. The less you say the better off you are. It's like the people who used to come here from Santa Cruz and they used to phone me about three times a day. And then one day they told me that they were all enlightened. (laughter) They are in reality but now I hear they're enlightened with another teacher and it will go on like this being enlightened with different teachers. So that's good. There is nothing wrong with this at all.

"Be a lamp unto thyself," as Buddha said. Leave everybody alone. The more you run around the more confused you get. You and I both know many people who have been running around for twenty, thirty, forty years and they're very confused. They've had so many teachings they don't know what is right and what is wrong. So they get to the point where they believe, "If I only find the right teacher. They'll push the button in my brain and I'll be free." (SG: Well that's what's true for them...) That's very difficult. (SG: ...and there is nothing that can be said.) There is nothing that can be said. (SG: Because maybe that is their way and maybe for them that is their path of realization and I can't compare myself to them.) This is true. (SG: Do you understand what I'm saying?) Of course. (SG: Otherwise we get into a whole posture of I know better than you and...) Yes. (SG: ...let them do what they want to do.) That is what I'm saying leave them alone.

SG: Because who knows if they meet the right person that might be their path and for me it might be different.

R: Anything is possible. (SG: Anything is possible, that's right. Well that's what I say.) Leave everybody alone. (SG: Live and let live and just do your own thing.) And let's party. (SG: Right.) (laughter) Party.

SN: At times you've talked about confusion, being confused and you have said that, that can be good because it's a not knowing. Claiming that I don't know anything. Is confusion good or is confusion more like... is the being lost is that good or is the being lost mean going further from it?

R: In the beginning stages confusion is good. When you're first learning, when you first get on a spiritual path, you studied this and you read that and you go through many teachers and you're trying to find out what is what and you become totally confused. So to an extent that is good at that point in your life. But then you have to realize what do I do now. And something within you should tell you, you've got to become sort of steady. You've got to sort of find the one path and practice that path. Get involved in that particular path. Give it your all in all and see what happens. But to go through the years, year after year after year and still be confused because you're into so many teachings is sort of a waste of time.

SN: Well if you go to one teacher and he always contradicts himself and because of that you're confused is that confusion good for your growth or does that just keep you in ignorance.

R: It depends on the faith that you have in the teacher. If you know the teacher is a self-realized being and is not just an ordinary teacher then everything that comes out of that teachers mouth is important and it's for your benefit. And even if it seems contradictory, it's for your growth and for your well being.

But if the teacher is just a yogi or a ordinary philosopher then you have to look for the Satguru or the teacher that you need and the teacher that you can surrender to. That you can give up all of your material thoughts and all of your hurts and all of your desires and merge with the teacher. Then whatever the teacher says is for your benefit and there is no confusion. And if you feel confusion you should realize that it is the ego that feels this and inquire, "Who is confused?"

SN: The purpose of self-inquiry is to quiet the mind? (R: Yes.) Yet if the mind is active... can the mind be active yet if you're not attached to that activity can it be quiet at the same time as being active because of the non-attachment?

R: No if you're not attached it means your mind is quiet. It's virtually impossible to be attached to something or someone and have a quiet mind. You can't do both.

SN: I'm talking about activity like if you're at work throughout the day, right but of course the purpose of self-inquiry is to quiet the mind. So could the mind be active in what you're doing but if you're not attached to it it's like, "Well I'm doing this but I'm not identifying with it, is that a state of being quiet?"

R: As the mind becomes quiet you will do your work and be very active... (SN: That's what I'm asking.) ...but it has nothing to do with the mind. The mind has been transcended.

SJ: Well what is it then?

R: It is the Self! (SJ: Huh?) There is only the Self! The Self is doing your work. The Self is functioning as the world, as the universe. The appearance is there is a world, there is work but there is only the Self. So when you're doing the work it is not the mind any longer when you're an advanced person that does the work. But it is the Self that is functioning and you have no thought. (SJ: But it takes the form of occasional thoughts?) Does what? (SJ: It takes the form of what might be considered thoughts?) You do things spontaneously. You do your work well. Everything is done. (SJ: Even when you're learning?) Even when you're learning. (SJ: But the process is going I mean you're not spontaneous you've already had a look at the system...?) Even when you're learning. (SJ: Yeah.) The doer has been destroyed. (SJ: Yeah.) But everything gets done by itself.

SN: So quieting the mind has nothing to do with activity or lack of it?

R: No. The mind will be quiet and you will still be able to do your work. But you will be in bliss, you'll be in peace.

SN: I'm talking about the process, not the end I'm saying the process. Can you be active and still be non-attached? (R: Yes.) So the mind is seen to be working... (R: Yes.) ...but you don't identify with it then it's almost like while you're active you could still be doing self-inquiry...

(tape ends) [TOC]

HOW DOES A JNANI LIVE?

17th October, 1991

Robert: ...shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace. No microphones Fred?

SF: No not tonight.

R: I'm usually hooked up with three microphones? So I guess you don't love me anymore? (laughter)

SF: That's right. (laughter)

R: Great. Good evening. (Students: Good evening) It's good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

A question I'm usually asked a lot is this, if I become liberated - and of course you can't become liberated you already are - when I awaken, I realize the mind has to be annihilated, destroyed wiped out when one is awakened. Will I be able to function without a mind?

I have explained this many times but most people cannot understand it so clearly because it is very difficult to understand it with your finite thinking. They also tell me, we watch the Jnani and the Jnani acts just like we do. If a Jnani doesn't have a mind how can he think? How can he plan? How can he make decisions? We'll go into this a little bit.

There are two answers: One is from the absolute sense and one is from the relative sense and it's all non-sense. (students laugh) Who asked the question? The Jnani or the ajnani?

The Jnani knows that there is no mind and there is no action. No action is being taken. No thing is being done. There is absolutely no movement. Yet the appearance is that the Jnani moves and talks and eats and goes to the bathroom and watches TV and goes to a movie and does many so called human things. How can this be?

We appear to live in two universes. One is the universe of movement, of action and two is the universe of God, so-to-speak non-movement, non-duality. Yet they are both one, there are not really two there are one but they appear to be two. There appears to be other people sitting here, I appear to be talking but I realize nothing is going on.

This explains how Sages such as Rama Krishna, Ramana Maharshi and others, Nisargadatta were able to have such acute diseases, cancer and yet they were able to laugh until they dropped their body. In truth there is no cancer. Nobody died, there is no body to drop but in the relative world everything seems to happen.

As long as you are working from your senses you will see, feel, hear, touch and smell the phenomenal universe. You will believe that you are the doer. Whereas when you awaken there is no doer. There is no one left to experience anything. This is quite a paradox but it is the absolute truth. Nothing is happening, no one is doing anything.

As you unfold you begin to become non-attached, non-reactive and you get a glimpse of what this is. You become happy, peaceful for no reason at all. For the sake of the relative world certain examples are given. Such as you shoot an arrow in the air. And even if you become enlightened after you shoot the arrow you cannot stop the arrow from going to its destination. The arrow represents the so-called body. You have become self-realized but the arrow will carry on as long as it is in the air until it reaches its mark.

So it is with the Sage. The Sage knows he is not the doer and there is nothing going on, yet the body appears to be working and doing things. The body is like the arrow moving through the air, when it reaches its destination that is when the body of the Jnani appears to drop and the Jnani no longer functions with a body.

Another example is the potter's wheel. When the potter finishes turning the wheel and the object of his making has been completed. He takes his foot off the pedal or pulls out the electric cord or turns off the switch. Yet the wheel still moves before it stops, without any current, without any pressure.

And so it is with the body of the Jnani. The body goes through prarabdhi karma, completing its karma from past lives. Therefore the body appears to be doing things, moving, acting until the body drops. As far as the Jnani is concerned there is no difference between having a body and not having a body. It's all the same to the Jnani no change has been made. The change is only in the eyes of others. People see the change. But in truth and in reality no change has been made.

When I came in this evening I recall seeing these examples in various books. In our library we have "Day by day with Bhagvan." And I searched for the clue for what I was going to talk about and found it exactly like what I was saying. So let's see what Bhagvan says about this.

Mary would you like to read this?

SM: Sure.

R: Start over here and read up to here. Listen attentively and you'll hear it from another point of view.

(Mary reads)

"In the afternoon I showed Bhagvan the passage in today's Sunday times where doctor T.M.P. Mahadhavan in his radio talk quotes Sri Shankara's reference through his own experience as proof of the existence of the Jivan-Mukta and about the controversy concerning various kinds of Mukti. He read out passages from the Tamil book called "The truth of Advaita." In which all doubt about the state of the Jivan-Mukta are raised and answered. Then he said, "Various illustrations are given in books to enable us to understand how the Jnani can live and act without the mind. Al- though living and acting require the use of the mind, the potters wheel goes on turning round even after the potter has ceased to turn it because the pot is finished. In the same way the electric fan goes on revolving for some minutes after we switch off the current.

The pro-lobbed which created the body will make it go through whatever activities it was meant for. But the Jnani goes through all these activities without the notion that he is the doer of them.

It is hard to understand how this is possible. The illustration generally given is that the Jnani performs actions in some such way as a child that is roused from sleep to eat, eat but does not remember next morning that it ate. It has to be remembered that all these explanations are not for the Jnani. He knows and has no doubt. He knows that he is not the body and is not doing anything. Even though his body may be engaged in some activity. These explanations are for the onlookers who think of the Jnani as one with the body and cannot help identifying him with his body.

There are various controversies or schools of thought as to whether a Jnani can continue to live in his physical body after realization. Some hold that one who dies cannot be a Jnani because his body must vanish into air or some such thing. They put forward all sort of funny notions. If a man must at once leave his body when he realizes the Self I wonder how any knowledge of the Self or the state of realization can come down to other men. And that would mean that all those who have given us the fruits of their self-realization in books cannot be considered Jnanis because they went on living after realization.

And if it is held that a man cannot be considered a Jnani so long as he performs actions in the world, and action is impossible without the mind then not only the great Sages who carried on various kinds of work after attaining Jnana must be considered Jnanis but the God's also and Ishvara himself since he continues looking after the world.

The fact is that any amount of action can be performed and performed quite well by the Jnani without his identifying himself with it in any way or ever imagining that he is the doer. Some power acts through his body and uses his body to get the work done."

R: Thank you Mary. This should clear up that point because so many of you have been worried, "When I become self-realized I'll be worthless. I'll be nothing. I will not be able to function. I'll not be able to perform." So you can see that the performance will not stop. Yet you will realize that it is not you that is performing. You will be totally free and liberated. Happy, peaceful, joyous, blissful and yet the work will go on.

A further question is asked, "Why doesn't a Jnani, if he is the Sage and the most powerful of all do healing work and heal the world?" Now that should be self explanatory after hearing the first part. To do healing work there has to be someone left to say, "I am a healer." If the I has been destroyed who is left to do healing work? And who is there to heal? In the eyes of the Sage there is no sickness and no wellness. There is absolutely nothing to be done. Noone to be healed, noone to be saved. For there has to be a doer to be able to do these things. And for the Sage the doer-ship has been transcended. Remember this.

Many people after they get into this teaching they become fearful after a while. They believe they will lose all their reason. They will lose their mind. That's exactly what is supposed to happen. They're supposed to lose your mind. They've been brought up to believe if you lose your mind you become insane. That's usually associated with losing your mind. Let me be insane.

The mind is what keeps you glued to the world. The mind is what makes you emotional. What causes the stress, the anxiety, the uncertainty, the anger, the reaction all that comes from the mind. Consequently wouldn't it be wonderful if you lost your mind. All of those traits would be totally transcended. You would be one pointed, you would be at peace. All the various thoughts about the world, your body anything external to yourself would totally disappear. There will no longer be a God who punishes you. There will no longer be karma who wants to get even with you. There will no longer be a past. There would be absolute nothingness.

When I use the term nothingness again it frightens some people. For they believe if I'm nothingness I will not function. I will be a vegetable. Again you are talking about your body not about your Self. Let me reiterate. Your body is doing the thing it came to this earth to do. It has absolutely nothing to do with you.

If your body is supposed to have cancer and even die from the cancer what has that to do with you? What have you got to do with this? You are not that one. You are not that person. Just thinking about these things makes you free. What difference does it make what experiences the body is going through when you begin to realize, that is not you. You therefore stop worrying, stop fretting.

Yet some of you are still saying, "Well I don't want the body to suffer. To go through fatal diseases or bankruptcies or divorces or whatever. "Don't you see what you're doing when you think this way? You are still believing you are the body, don't you see?"

Whenever you think this way that you want to save your body and you want good things to happen to your body, you believe you are the body. If you only knew you are not the body you could never be hurt. There will be no one who suffers. The so-called suffering is only an appearance. It is not real. It is only real to the one who identifies with the body and believes that they are the doer. This should be very clear to you. The body goes through it's karma. But for you there is no karma. And there is nothing you have to go through.

You are totally free, you are the absolute reality. You are the pure awareness. You are parabrahman. You are totally emancipated. That is your real nature. And your real nature is what you are now. Some of you believe that your real nature will come when you become enlightened. There is no such thing as becoming enlightened. Your real nature, absolute awareness is now. You are that!

It can never be tomorrow. Since time does not exist since you are the Self of all. Time only exists for the human being, for the body, for the mind. But for yourself there is no time there is no space. For you are that. If you are self-contained reality, all-pervading omnipresent, there is no space, there is no room for time or anything else. For you take up all space, absolutely.

Identify with your real Self. Stop identifying with the things of the body. A good practice to remember is whenever you feel any emotion or whenever you feel anything that has to do with the body immediately remember, "I am not the body! I am not the mind! I am not this ego that appears to want something or desire anything or needs to be a certain way or has to remove something or has to go to a doctor, has to go to a priest, or has certain problems they have to remove and has to go to a psychotherapist." You are not that person.

Try to feel that the person who feels these things is someone else not you. You are total freedom, absolute happiness. nirvana. ultimate oneness. When you think about yourself, think about yourself in those terms. Do not question yourself. Do not analyze yourself. Do not wonder about this. Do not say to yourself, "I hope it becomes so." Live in the moment of eternity. Live only as your Self with a capital "S."

Stop your mind from thinking, catch yourself! If you want to justify something, if you want to analyze something, catch yourself before you get into that. That is a trap that never ends. Once you start thinking about it, once you start analyzing it, it goes on and on and on. (Like that commercial and the battery, it goes on and on and on it never stops. See I watch TV too.)

SG: Yeah, the good parts. (laughter)

R: Remember to remember that's all you really have to do. Of course if practice atma-vichara, self-inquiry that is perfect. That keeps you remembering. The whole secret is in remembering. Remembering that you are not the body-mind phenomena. Whatever your body is going through it's okay. Do not react to it.

Whether you have a cold or whether you have a cancer, whether you are unhappy or happy. Whether you are lonely or whether you are with other people that you don't like. Wherever you are it's okay. Everything is all right. But when you begin to think, that's where the trouble starts.

So the day comes when you begin to realize all of my problems are because I think, my mind. My mind is a conglomeration of thoughts. That's all it is. Thoughts about the past and worries about the future. That is what your mind is. Your mind is not your friend. Your mind is never your friend. And I want to remind you even when you think about the good things of life you forget all these things, that's the power of maya, that's the grand illusion.

Your ego allows the good things that come to you to make you believe that you are the body enjoying the good things. But the enjoyer is the body. Anything external to you is the body-mind. Do not believe I'm speaking only about all of these so called evil things of the world. There is no difference between good and bad.

I know you say, "I would rather experience the good than that bad." There you go you spoil it again. You believe you are the experiencer. Don't you see what you're doing every time you think like this? Whenever you think I've got to experience anything I would rather experience good things than bad things. You spoil the whole thing when you think this way.

You are not the experiencer. There is no experiencer, that's an illusion. And if you keep saying to yourself, "That doesn't matter I still want to experience good rather than bad," you have to remember when you believe you are the experiencer you also live in a world of duality. Don't you see?

For every good there is a bad. For every bad there is a good. For every up there is a down. For every forward there is a backward and so forth and so on. Which means you will experience your good, so-called for a period of time and then the pendulum has to swing the other way. Just like this world. This world seems to head for the golden age but most new ages can't wait to achieve. They believe there is going to be total harmony and total love and peace on this planet forever.

It will never happen. This is not the way the universe works. There will be a time when there is total peace but that will be for a while. Then the pendulum will start swinging back the other way and will go back into the dark ages. This has happened over and over and over again on this planet, millions of times.

That's why there are only a few people in every generation, in every eon of time that become free and liberated. The rest go on with karma, they play the karma game. They keep going and returning, going and returning just like the world, good and bad, bad and good, good and bad, bad and good. Therefore when you become deluded and you think you want to experience good only, that is an illusion. For you are saying to yourself, "Am I not the experiencer? I wish to experience good."

You have to go beyond those things. You do not wish to experience good and you do not wish to experience bad. You just do not wish to experience. There is no one to experience. And yet your body continues as long as it has too. Of course when you get to that stage the feeling of birth and death has left you. You never think of, "Well I guess when I drop my body I'll be free." You never think that, "Well my body is holding me back." or "That my body is going through these things but I'll drop it soon and I'll be free."

If you think this way remember this, you will never be free when that happens because you are believing that you are the experiencer again. That you're going to experience freedom when you drop your body. In other words if you're not experiencing freedom now, you will never experience freedom when you drop your body.

You have to awaken now, not tomorrow, not when you drop your body, not in your next life forget about those things. You want to awaken now! You want to be free now! You want to be liberated now! As you keep thinking about these lines and keep pondering these things always coming to the ultimate truth, "I-am. I am not this and I am not that, I-am. I-am." Do not allow your mind to think further than that. Use whatever methods and means you have to use to stop your mind from analyzing.

Even when you think, "What is the right method for me to use to become free?" That keeps you back that spoils it. Keep your mind empty. The method will come to you by itself. When you believe you've got to practice atma-vichara, self-inquiry and then some of you always tell me, "I force myself to practice this. I always think unless I practice this I'll never get anywhere." And I always laugh. Can't you see what you're doing? You're using your mind to want to practice something that you already are. Your mind is in control of you and you don't know it. Be natural, be spontaneous.

When you get up in the morning something will tell you what to do. If you're truly into this path something will tell you what to do. You don't have to force yourself to meditate or to practice self-inquiry. There are some of you that are doing this already. You tell me, "When I get up before I can even think, something comes to me and tells me I am not the body. I don't even think about it," and that's the way to do it. Do not force yourself. Do not make yourself do things. So that you can become enlightened. What you are really doing is you are pushing yourself away from it.

Be natural. And as far as all of these discussions about truths go it's all a waste of time. It's a waste of time for us to sit down together and have a debate on reality, on truth, on who's right and who's wrong and what method is good and what method is bad. Can't you see now when you do this you are using your mind? And you're making your mind stronger instead of weaker?

The way you annihilate the mind is by not using it. Can't you see that? Not by using it and becoming the captain of the debating team. Not by becoming an eloquent speaker. Not by memorizing passages of scripture or Vedanta or anything else and being able to remember these things. It is only by becoming weaker in the mind and that comes from silence.

This doesn't mean that you'll never speak again. Remember your body is going to do whatever it has to do. Therefore if your work requires you to speak you will say the right words but you will always be spontaneous. You will have the feeling that you are not you are not the speaker, you are not the body, nor the mind but the speaking will go on and the action will go on. You will do whatever you have to do.

Do not try to make yourself popular or believe you know something that somebody else doesn't know. And sometimes even going out of your way to help others is an ego trip. Be yourself and then see what you really do. By being yourself others who come into close proximity to you will be helped tremendously by you're doing absolutely nothing!

I remember there were so many people that came to Ramana Maharshi who fell at his feet and said, "Master you saved my daughters life, she was dying of cancer and I thought of you and she was well the next day." And Ramana used to whisper to his attendant, "What is she talking about? I didn't do anything." But he never told this to the devotee or the person who claimed he healed them. Due to the fact that he didn't want to dis-appoint them.

But he never claimed he did anything. He sat in one place. He hardly ever walked anywhere except to go around the mountain when he was younger. And people from all over the world are writing him letters saying they thought of him in his picture they have of him and they became wealthy or they became healed or something good happened to them, and he would just smile.

Reality does nothing or go out of it's way to do things. Now if you're thinking from your finite mind...

(break in tape)

...time when there is not a war or man's inhumanity to man going on some place. Think of most of the things you do all day. Aren't they egotistical? Aren't they to preserve your body? To make your body better? To make your mind sharper? To stand out among men? To want to be recognized? To want name and fame? Think about that.

Your ego is at work, your mind is tricking you. You're becoming more human than ever and more mental than ever. And people who are like that the first thing that goes wrong with their lives makes them very irritable. They've got a chip on their shoulder and they become angry at people who do not agree with them. Or people that they think are looking at them the wrong way. That's what they think.

They're working from the mind standpoint. Their ego loves this. It loves you to become angry and mad and want to fight. This is the way of the world. But where are you coming from? Do you want to be free or do you want to be bound? The choice is yours. Your free to make that choice. That is the total freedom you have. The choice is to turn within and to see the truth and become totally free or to turn without towards the world and allow the world to grab hold of you and you keep reacting to the world. The choice is yours.

Feel free to ask questions.

SF: You use the phrase to become liberated it's really a matter of that we're under the idea that we're not liberated?

R: Of course, who is there, wants to be liberated? The ego tells you, you have to become liberated. So keep searching for liberation. The ego tells you this because it realizes that the more you search for it the less you'll find it. So it tells you keep searching. (SF: It's not been lost?) Of course. But when the ego tells you this you look at the ego and you laugh and you say to your ego, "Who are you kidding?" And stop thinking right there. Then you're already liberated. But if you have an argument with your ego and you want to punch it in the nose and you get angry and mad at your ego, then your ego wins all the time. Not you but your ego. It becomes greater. It has more power.

The way to destroy the ego is by not becoming involved with it, by not answering it, by not fighting it, by not really trying to destroy it. When you keep still that destroys it by itself. But when you think about it and you say to yourself, "I'm going to destroy the ego." The ego will start giving you ways in which to destroy it. Which will make you work for centuries, trying to destroy the ego. But when you realize that there is no ego to destroy because it never existed to begin with you're already free.

SY: Robert I have a question. If I had an assignment to write a script I would just be very still and it would just flow through me? I wouldn't be using my mind?

R: If you had an assignment to write a script and you've been practicing this for a time. That is exactly what would happen. You would begin writing and you would write your script. But if you think about it, it won't work. Everything has to come spontaneously. And the way you become spontaneous is to make the mind still. Cause the mind to become quiescent. Then automatically you are no longer the doer and your body will function twice as good by itself. Without your help.

SK: Robert all these psychological ideas of self esteem and self worth and self righteousness are they all a part of ego?

R: It's all ego that's for the human being. That's to expand the mind. To turn bad into good. To make you normal like other human beings. (SK: There are already more than that anyway?) Of course. Who wants to be normal? (laughter) (SK: Not me.)

SJ: I'd give anything to be normal. (laughter)

R: People spend billions of dollars for psychiatrists, for psychologists, counsellors and the world is worse off than it's ever been.

SK: You know it seems - I've spent the money on therapy and I feel that I through experiencing the certain ideas and fears that I've had and going through them and looking at them, and talking about them, whatever I do about it - like the terror of that ego sort of disappears. Maybe I just saw that it was false to begin with, that sounds more like it. It wasn't real in the beginning, anyway I thought it was. And then I saw that it wasn't real and then I felt okay which is what you're saying basically?

R: This is true. But you have to be careful because your mind will play games with you. Many times you can practice some kind of psychological jargon. And your ego will go into abeyance. It will become like a dormant seed. You have not destroyed it. You have not annihilated it. It's just taking a rest. And it will pop up some other time when you least expect it.

Unless the mind is totally annihilated you can never be free. Some psychological, psychiatric methods like drugs they give you can cause the mind to become still for a while, it's just an illusion. Again it's like a dormant seed waiting to sprout. Only through waking up by yourself. By realizing what we're talking about tonight and having an immediate awakening or practicing atma-vichara, self-inquiry. These things will permanently destroy the ego or the mind and you will be forever free.

You can tell if it's a real feeling or not. If you're using psychiatric, psychological methods and you feel good but you're still normal. You're seeing the world as you did before when you feel a little better. You still believe you are the body and the mind. Then you know you're not free. You're just feeling good mentally. That will not last, it will expire and then you will revert to your old feelings of depression and whatever. Again the only way to be totally free is to totally annihilate the mind.

SH: And who is to do that?

R: Noone! But it appears as though you use your mind to destroy the mind. (SH: That's not possible.) It doesn't work that way, but that's how it appears.

SJ: Just do it. (SH: Yeah?) Yeah. It's something. (SH: It will, lead the way brother.(laughs))

SF: Noone does it, it just is done.

R: There is noone ever to do anything in reality terms. Noone is doing anything. Noone has ever done anything, noone will ever do anything. But when you're in the relative plain you have to begin somewhere. Therefore you have to awaken from being at satsang and just awaken. Or you practice atma-vichara, or you become the witness, you do it spontaneously. Without thought.

SH: The trouble is, this is always implying that there is a you to do this.

R: That's because we're talking. There is no you to do anything. (SH: Yeah but you always preference everything with a you do this, you do that.) Because we're having a talk. (SH: You're just making it worse.) Of course we're having a talk. (SH: Are you trying to bamboozle us?) Yes. (laughter) It's all bamboozle. (SH: I know.) Of course there is no you to do anything. For the sake of talking I say, "you."

SJ: And for the sake of coming down to relative reality I guess it gives something for those people to work with. Shouldn't be confusing them?

R: Otherwise I would just sit here in the silence. Which some people like and some people don't. (SK: Would it be better to say "it, Let "it" do it?") Well most people won't catch on to that. When you talk about these things you have to use sort of normal words that people use in everyday conversation.

SG: Say it without any pronouns Robert. (R: Who, you, I, it.) None of that stuff.

R: So all is well. There is no you, there is no I, there's no it. (laughter)

SV: Yeah, I'm just glad to be here. (R: Say that again?) I'm just glad to be here.

R: Oh good. I'm glad you're here too.

SF: I've been aware that there is an I that has remained constant throughout my life. I was a relatively unhappy little boy and had all kinds of things happen to me. I became addicted to alcohol. I've been married twice, divorced twice. Three years in the army. All kinds of things have happened but there is one constant. It was I who experienced these things. And it occurred to me that that I that has had all of these things happen is not different in reality from the universal I or the universal consciousness.

R: There is only one I, and you are that. (SF: It's been the same for seventy-five years.) But if you were aware that there is only the I and nothing else exists then you'd be awakened. But you obviously believe that the I is the small I. (SF: That's the one that I'm aware of.) Yeah you're aware of the small I. I am this and I am that. Think of the one I as being the I-am, as being absolute reality. You're all perfect. Excuse me. (Robert leaves the room)

(As Robert leaves room students talk between themselves)

R: Or you thought I turned into a dog? (laughter)

SH: Yeah, he maintained a noble silence. (laughter) Final word. (laughs)

SF: I remember Bhagvan telling somebody, "You thank God for the things that seem to be good but you don't thank him for the things that you consider bad, that is where you go wrong."

R: Umm. That's true.

SJ: Except for the crazy people huh? It would be the opposite?

SV: Robert excuse me, Fred was saying, there was a constant I, in childhood his actual age, isn't that referring to the sense of being? Which is sort of in the background of everyone. (R: Yes.) He has the sense of I of being. (R: The I is always there.) However there is of course a doer who does all these things which is not exactly that sense of being. (R: Umm.) Isn't that a failed relation of the real I or the I am?

R: Yes, you're right. The real I-am is always in the background. Waiting for you to recognize it. Awaiting your recognition so you can become free. But because we believe that we are the doer, we push the real I back and make it go in the background more and more and more. Until the day comes when we understand that we are not the doer. Then the I comes forth and you become the I and you wake up.

But when we were little children we were told to believe in all the things external from us. Little children are always pure. But when we are told to believe in all the worldly things the purity which is the real I takes a back seat and goes in the background. And we keep forgetting it more and more and more. We cover it up. Just like we cover a light bulb with a shade then we put another shade on top of this shade and then another shade on this shade until we can't see the light any longer.

But when we remember who we are we start taking of the shades until we are the light. We are the true light of the world.

SV: Because this sense of I persists. It's like when we wake up and we know we were when we were sleeping. We also know we were all these years passed through in time. (R: Yes.) We know we were. (R: Yes.) And that's the sense of I-am actually?

R: That's the sense of I-am. But because we identify with the world and the doer we don't experience it.

SV: So it's good to sort of entertain this view?

R: Entertain this idea but do not think too much about it. Remember the only way to become free is to stop thinking. If we begin to analyze and we think about too many I's. The little I and the big I and the I when I'm asleep that is the game of the mind. It makes the mind more powerful. But if we become totally silent in the mind and we keep our mind away from external objects then the real I comes into play and we wake up.

SV: What's needed is other relaxation, sort of Robert?

R: Well of course it helps to be relaxed and peaceful... (SV: No, relaxation of the mind, has some relaxation, of all the...) Yes, oh I see what you mean. A letting go of the mind.

Letting go of thoughts. (SV: Just relaxing.) Relaxing the mind by not thinking. When you do not think the mind is relaxed. The less you think the more the mind is relaxed. Until the mind destroys itself. In other words the mind is like a friend that you no longer talk to. When you stop talking to your friend he goes away. (laughter)

SH: What a friend. (laughter)

R: Well if you don't talk to your friend he thinks you're crazy and he goes away. So when you stop talking to your mind and you stop playing mind games the mind will go away.

SR: Robert, today I had a young man about 17 years old come to me. He had the most beautiful open eyes I'd seen for a long time. I had him draw a picture for me. I said, "What is this?" He said, "This was a killer." And he showed me all his weapons and then later on he says, "That's me." And he started complaining. He said, "I'm not free." That is why he's so angry because he was not free. And I said, "Why aren't you free?" And he said, "Because of my color." Should I have told that young man that you're not the body? (R: I don't think he was ready for that.) How could I have moved in that direction?

(dog gets up and runs out of the room barking)

R: That is what you should have done. (laughter) I mean run out of your office. (laughter) Or what you can do in a case like that is basically explain how the mind works and what it really is. You can explain to him that your mind is really a thought and idea. It is not a real entity. And all the things that go on in your mind are therefore false. You are more than the mind. You can tell him.

SR: What if he says, "Wherever I go this color goes with me?"

R: Tell him that's how it appears, that's a human appearance. That is how things appear. Everybody thinks they're different. Some people believe their white, some people believe their black, some people believe their medium, green or yellow or whatever. That is an idea that is a thought. But in reality there is only oneness there is no color limit because there is only one. Therefore if he starts thinking along those lines he will feel more peaceful. And you go as far as you can go with him along those lines.

SV: I think the question comes Robert to about talking like a Jnani when one is not a Jnani and trying to explain in Advaitic terms... (R: Yes.) ...to people who... (R: That's difficult to do. You can't do that.) And is that right to do? It doesn't have any sense I think.

R: If you make it where they can understand it, where you use very, very simple language and make them understand in a very simple way that they are not what appears to be.

SV: Is it okay to talk in our own understanding without really experiencing or being a Jnani? In that sense on those terms?

R: You can talk from your own understanding. It depends who you are talking to. When you realize that you are not the doer then whatever you have to say will be said. It's only when you believe that you are the doer that you have to think to yourself, "How can I explain this, what should I do?" You're saying, "What should "I" do? How can "I" understand this?" Believing that you are the doer. But as soon as you believe that you are not the doer then something will come by itself and do the talking. And the right things will be said. Therefore you do not have to worry about these things. Do not concern yourself how you should talk to someone else. Understand the truth about yourself and then everything will take care of itself.

SG: Robert even if you are unconsciously be removed allowing for the words to come out, still doesn't everything mean all is well, you said exactly the experience, exactly what was supposed to have happened. (R: Yes, of course.) Well I guess just not to worry about it but simply be?

R: Whatever you're doing at the time is right. That's where you're coming from. There are no mistakes. So whatever you say at the time you just say it. That was the right thing to say as far as you're concerned. And if you don't like what you said and you think something is wrong or you're hurting people with your words then you have to turn within and go deep within yourself and see the truth about yourself. Then the words will change. And then you will be able to speak in a different way to people. It always begins and ends with you.

SF: Is the idea, "Are there others?"

R: There are others only to the extent that you believe you are a body. If you believe that you are a body then there are others. (SF: Then there are others.)

(silence)

R: Well we've got prashad some place. (SH: In that bag.) This looks good. If there are no others I will save it for myself. (students laugh) (SH: Take it all Robert. It's all yours. Except for Toku. (The dog.)) Here Mary pass it over. Here Fred, Fred. And we have some delicious figs, open it up and pass it over.

Mary would you like to read the Jnani?

SM: Yes, Robert. Okay this is the Jnani.

(Mary reads the confessions of a Jnani, refer to beginning of book.)

R: Thank you Mary. Do we have any announcements of any kind?

SM: A lot of transcripts are there.

R: We have transcripts for you on the table.

Remember the truth about yourself that you are not the body mind phenomena but that you are absolute reality, all-pervading, sat-chit-ananda, you are the I am that I am. Remember this and be free. I love you, peace. Thank you for coming it's been fun.

(students say thank you)

Enjoy life, go home, go to sleep.

(tape ends) [TOC]

TO HAVE A CUP OF TEA

20th October, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It is good to be with you again and I welcome you with all my heart. Welcome to the land of nothingness, where nothing is real and what is real is nothing.

We will continue to focus on the questions, as we did last week. If you did not write a question feel free to do so and put it in the pot. If you wish to write an answer you can do that also. (laughter) Then I'll think of the question. Write whatever you like but write something so it can take up the time.

The ordinary mind can never know the Self. The Self can never be known by the ordinary mind. Therefore what is the solution? More sadhana? More intense meditation? No. The solution is to have a cup of tea, to relax. The metaphor, "to have a cup of tea" really means to let go. Stop thinking about it. Relax completely. The Self will make itself known to you in it's own time. You really do not have to do anything.

When you practice intense sadhana it will lead you to a quiet mind, but it will never lead you to complete realization, for the ordinary mind can never be realized. There is absolutely nothing you can do with your mind to awaken. It can make you more peaceful. Therefore you have to learn to relax, let go, to become desireless. You need nothing, yet you need everything. You have no wants or needs, yet everything is taken care of. It makes no difference whether you're sick or healthy, rich or poor, sad or happy. These things have nothing to do with realization. You want to forget about your body-mind phenomena. Just observe your body but never react to it. Observe the world but never react to it. Observe your thoughts but never react to them. Allow whatever happens to happen.

The reason you act this way, as if you're crazy, is because everything in the world is transient, changeable. There is no thing in the world that is really meaningful as far as realization is concerned. The world pulls you deeper and deeper into maya. It's sort of a game. The more you become involved in the world, the greater the illusion becomes, and you become a very serious person.

Let the world alone. Trying to overcome the world is a mistake. Not trying to overcome the world is also a mistake. Trying to become realized is a mistake. Not trying to become realized is a mistake. You are to be your Self but do not try to comprehend what the Self is. You are to be free but do not comprehend what freedom is. You are to be happy but do not try to figure out what happiness is. You are to become peaceful but do not try to comprehend peace. You are to be. Not this and not that. Just be. There is nothing to become. There is no thing to achieve. There is no sadhana that is better than any other sadhana. There is absolutely nothing you have to do.

When you catch a hold of what I'm saying your mind becomes perfectly still, and ultimately disappears. But you are already that, so there's nothing to become. There are no teachers, or books or words that can really help you. There is nothing at all in the world or the universe that can help you, because nothing exists. When you seek the help of a teacher, or a tree, or a mountain, or a river, or the sky, or a lake, or mantras, these things cannot possibly help you due to the fact that they do not exist.

So what are you looking for? There is nothing to look for. There is nothing to search for. There is no one who can give you the answer. Some of you are saying "except your Self," but that's erroneous also, because your Self doesn't know the answer. The true Self has no question. Therefore there's no answer.

Everything that's happening to you is happening to you from the mind. As soon as you appreciate the mind does not exist all the happenings will stop and you will become free.

Now it is time for questions. So let's see what our pot has today. Not too many today. I had a whole bunch last week.

Q: (Robert reads) Explain what swarrupa is?

A: Swarrupa means your attitude. Your nature. The nature of yourself. Your attitudinal nature. Swarrupa is the Self, realization, harmony, love. Swarrupa contains all of that. It is your inner most nature, your real Self. Sanscrit words are so difficult some times to interpret. Due to the fact that there is no English word that really means what the sanscrit word means. But I suppose it's closer to your nature, your real nature. Your swarrupa.

Done it.

Q: (Robert reads) What is the deepest fear a person has, Fred. (laughter) That's the answer.

A: The answer is yourself, Fred. You are the deepest fear that you have. If you weren't identified with yourself as Fred there would be no fear would there? The reason we fear anything is because we have no idea who we are. We do not understand that we are the joy, the bliss of ecstasy that we are choiceless wisdom. Absolute reality, sat-chit-ananda. But we do identify with the body which is called Fred in this instance and whenever we think of Fred or the body we identify with the things that are attached to Fred. It maybe a sickness. It maybe some sort of poverty. It maybe some sort of resentment. It maybe many things. So if we get rid of Fred we would not have anymore problems.

SV: I hope nobody takes that literally. (laughter)

R: Fred is our whole problem. (laughter) Whether it's a Fred or a Mary or a James or a John or a Shirley, it's all the same. We think of ourselves as human. We think of ourselves as separate. We think of ourselves as alone. We watch television, we read newspapers. We identify with all the dastardly things going on in this world, is it any wonder we fear?

The solution therefore is not to get rid of the object that we fear of, but to remove the I-thought, that is really the culprit. We say, "I fear. I fear that there is a depression. Times are bad. I fear!" The Self does not fear. Your true nature can never fear. It doesn't know what the word means. Only you can fear as the I-thought. But if the I-thought doesn't exist what is left to fear? Therefore ask yourself, "To whom does the I come? What is the source of the I?"

Once the I-thought is broken, annihilated how can you possibly fear then because fear and the I-thought are synonymous. Always remember that if you try to get rid of the object of your fear, say it's your wife you fear or it's your husband you fear or your job you fear or you fear that you're going to go broke and be in poverty and become a homeless person - that's not so bad. - But even if you remove these fears through effort, they will pop up some where else. Never believe that if you resolve a fear, by removing the fear you'll be free. Something else will take it's place.

As an example, say your husband is giving you a hard time and you fear your husband. He's beating you. Therefore you leave him. You divorce him. You have done something externally but you have not changed the karmic pattern that has caused that. You will be attracted to someone else who usually has the same qualities or you may be attracted to someone else who does not have that quality. But the same quality may come from your employment. It'll come from something else.

There will always be something to fear due to the fact that you have not changed yourself. The solution is always within you. As you lift yourself higher in consciousness whatever befalls you in the physical world can never again make you fear. For you have realized that the physical world is also the I-thought. "I see the world as it appears. I see these dastardly things going on in the world. I want to change them," the I wants to do all these things. It wants to exchange bad for good always.

So the secret of success in this path is the removal of the I-thought to which the whole universe is attached. When the I-thought goes not only does the thing you feared go with it but everything else goes along with it also. So you are free.

We only had two questions today. Last week we had fourteen or fifteen. I think last week the same person wrote all of them. (students laugh)

Is there anything you'd like to ask?

SN: Umm in the heart of awareness if everything is the mind then what is awareness? Is there any difference between the mind and awareness. Can there be awareness without mind?

R: Of course. Pure awareness is another term for the Self. Pure awareness is absolute reality. The mind has nothing to do with pure awareness. (SN: That is unknown, unknowable.) Exactly it's ineffable. Pure awareness just is. (SN: Well then in a relative sense I'm asking.) In a relative sense pure awareness is to be. Just to be. Not to be this or to be that. When you just are you are awareness. (SN: Is that something within our experience though?) Not in a relative experience, no. (SN: So in a relative sense does anything exist and in an absolute sense does anything exist at all?) In a relative sense everything exists because you're using the term relative. As long as you are using that word then everything does exist. In an absolute sense nothing exists because there is nothing absolute. (SN: What about awareness then?) In order to be absolute or be aware - when you use those terms - there has to be a difference between the relative and the absolute. There has to be a relative universe so that you can say that you are absolute reality that you are pure awareness. It is only because of the universe appearing real that we use the terms absolute awareness, reality.

It's just like as a simple illustration the reason we use the word health is because we know what sickness is. If there was no such thing as sickness there would be no word as health. Because who would want to be healthy? Since health was, is and nobody has ever heard of sickness.

In the same way if there was no relative world we wouldn't say that only awareness and the Self is real. We use the term awareness and the Self to differentiate between the relative world. So pure awareness is really ineffable, is being aware that you are the Self.

SN: That doesn't exist, there is no awareness and there is no Self? (R: Exactly.) So in a relative sense, pure awareness is meaningless?

R: Pure awareness is not meaningless because the word meaningless we wouldn't have anything to become or awaken from. When you awaken from the relative world... (SN: The thing that is stumping me is - it sounds like you say there is something but in reality there's nothing.) When you are in reality there will be nothing, so become real.

SN: Say for instance, when you read the "Heart of awareness," it talks about pure awareness and then you try to relate your own experience to that you might even fabricate some - oh yes I had this experience this is pure awareness - but that isn't pure awareness that is just the mind, right?

R: No it's not. Exactly, as long as you can relate to it it's not that. (SN: So everything is the mind in a relative sense?) Everything is the mind. (SN: And then in the absolute sense there is nothing at all?) In the absolute sense there is no awareness, there is no Self, there is no liberation, there is no striving, there is no world. (SN: So there is no awareness without the mind?) As long as you think that there is awareness, yes. For the mind comes up with these words. But in the other hand if we did not discuss them we wouldn't understand anything at all and probably be better off. (laughter)

SE: The point of sadhana is just to know that there is something else beyond the relative and the teachings. Just to say, this isn't all that there is, there is something else. (R: Yes.) And it keeps our mind preoccupied and pointing to that which we cannot know in a relative way.

R: Yes you can say that also. (SE: So we keep kicking ourselves to keep ourselves awake, so-to-speak.) So-to-speak.

SN: So the sadhana is to always to be aware of how you're reacting. First to be aware of how you're reacting to your conditions and try to not react. I mean just be empty, not even try but first be aware of it and then let go.

R: Yes. To observe, to be the witness, to watch and as you observe and you watch and you do not react you appear to go higher...

(break in tape)

...because in the absolute sense there is nothing to cause the fear. There is no thing that can cause the fear really. But because you seem to have it and it comes to you once in a while you have to inquire. To ask, "To whom does this fear come?" And you'll go back to the I-thought. You therefore follow the I-thought to the heart centre and the fear will automatically disappear.

One good thing about self-inquiry, it is the greatest psychotherapy that was ever invented. For you actually do get rid of fears and other problems very easily by inquiring, "To whom do they come?" You begin to see that you do not have the fear. "I" does. "I" becomes fearful not you. You are not the "I", the I-thought I mean. And the more you can see this by practicing the more you'll see the fear diminishes and dissolves. It never began in the first place. It is the I-thought who has this fear. And since the "I" is only a thought, then how can the fear be real because it came from the I. And the "I" doesn't exist.

Therefore keep inquiring, "To whom does this fear come? It comes to me. I feel it. What is the source of the I?" And allow the I to go into the source. The source is absolute awareness.

SF: The same might be true for positive emotions?

R: Positive emotions also. Most of us do nothing about positive emotions because we enjoy them. And yet positive emotions become habitual and they hold on to you just like negative emotions. In other words they make you feel as if the universe is real. And as if your body is real and your mind is real because you're enjoying yourself. You're having a grand time. You just won the lottery. You just met a new person in your life or something humanly wonderful is happening to you. But if you can only see what is going to happen to you ten years from now how long will this last. Everything has to change. Therefore I have to inquire, "To whom do these wonderful feelings come?" And again it's the I that is enjoying itself. When you become the Self and you awaken to the Self there is neither enjoyment nor misery. You do not become a laughing idiot. You just are. You're not this and you're not that. You're not positive and you're not negative.

SD: But there is bliss isn't there? That seems positive?

R: Bliss seems positive but it has absolutely nothing to do with the relative world. It is something totally beyond. In bliss the happiness is not like the happiness in the human world. It is a total being, a "All Is Well" experience. That even someone - when you take a hacksaw and saw your fingers off and your toes and your nose and your ears - that'll be alright. (SD: So are you saying it's peace of mind, so-to-speak?) It's not peace of mind because the mind has been transcended. (SD: But it's peace?) It's not a peace as we know it. It's as Jesus described, the peace which passeth understanding. (SD: Umm.)

SN: Because there is no subject, right? (R: There is no subject and no object.)

SF: That peace is not of the mind. (R: It is not of the mind.) Beyond the mind. Yeah. The source itself.

R: It is the source itself. The absolute reality. Therefore when we speak all of these words absolute reality, bliss, pure awareness, sat-chit-ananda, I am that I am, they're all synonymous. They're all one thing which is ineffable, not of this world and the only way you can really understand this is by becoming. But not becoming this or that.

SN: So if every moment is sadhana then observation and inquiry go together?

R: Yes. They do.

SD: Could you elaborate on that?

R: You observe that you are fearful and then you inquire, "To whom does this fear come?" So you observe and you inquire.

If you could only see yourself for what you really are, you wouldn't even believe it. You are not this body. This limited entity. You are not the mind that keeps talking to you and telling you things all the time. Confusing you, confounding you. Leading you astray doing all these crazy things in your life. Just to be aware that you are not those things will suffice. Just to awaken and immediately realize that I am not the body-mind. I am not the doer. Just doing that alone will result in joy and peace.

SE: Isn't the understanding that everyday life, ordinary life is sadhana. A very high and rare understanding to be so relaxed and you take what comes to you as what is needed. Most of us need a kind of a special practice either reading or meditation or something to make us feel as if we're doing something. But to except ordinary life as sadhana is very hard. To have that faith.

R: Sadhana is a word that has been misused. Sadhana really means in sanscrit, giving up, letting go. In the twentieth century it has a different meaning, to do spiritual practice. But the true translation is, to let go. To let go of everything. Even your spiritual practice. And you let go of spiritual practice by doing spiritual practice. When you do spiritual practice correctly then it's a process of letting go. For you are denying the world. Not verbally, not mentally but through your practice of sadhana. You are beginning to see and realize the reason the trees, the mountains, the fog and the sky and the grass and the reservoir, everything appears is because "I" appear. As long as "I" appear, the whole universe will appear to me.

So the sadhana is not to add on any new practices but simply to remove the I-thought. To remove the vision that you see. You see others. The others appear because you appear. Where do they go when you are asleep? When you are in deep sleep you exist. And yet there are no others, there is no world, there is no universe. Where did you go? Where were you? And yet when you appear to awaken the whole universe appears. When you have a dream the whole universe also appears. This is actually a proof to you to make you realize that you created the universe like you created the dream. You can have a dream that we're in class like this and we are discussing these things. And I keep telling you this is all a dream. And you're throwing questions back at me, "How can this be a dream Robert? I am real. You are real. The trees are real. Everything appears. So how can you tell me it's a dream?" And I keep telling you, "It appears real. It is only an appearance. And then you come over to me and pinch me and you say, "Is that real?" And I say, "Ow." Of course it's real in the dream. It's a dream pinch. The whole thing is a dream and then you awaken and you're in your bed.

And so it is with this world and everything that is going on in this world. It appears so real. You have identified with it you are going through all the experiences. And even when I talk to you like this, when you get up and walk out this door, you'll start thinking about your problems and what you're going to wear tomorrow, what you're going to eat for dinner and what is going on in your life. Not remembering that this is all a dream. When you begin to understand that this is a dream and you inquire, "To whom does this dream come?" You will then awaken.

SF: That would be true of an experience with the psychedelic drugs, would that not be so?

R: What do you mean? (SF: Like LSD or silosagin, pyridine and those things?) So what happens? (SF: It makes you create things that you don't see ordinarily.) Oh right. Yes.

SF: So all kinds of things that aren't ordinarily available to the mind. Apparently we can create things without drugs in the same impression we create things with drugs, with psychedelic drugs.

R: We can have hallucinations. (SF: Yeah. Same thing.) The insane asylum is full of people who have all kinds of hallucinations and who create things.

SN: Since life is subjective itself it's all our own personal hallucination. Like you know one event can happen and different people see it you know, like the blind men and the elephant, we all see something different. So who needs psychedelic drugs.

R: Psychedelic drugs were used in the ancient days by many yogi's. To give them a higher experience so they can tell everybody. There is a higher experience than this present life. But a Sage has never used any drugs at all. There is no reason to.

SF: It wouldn't be necessarily a higher experience but it could be said to be a different experience.

R: It's a different experience and it shows you that there is something else and then you have to come down.

SN: You get the same effect from fasting through loss of sleep which is also... (R: Yes.) Psychedelic drugs are synthesis of the brain and the chemicals that you begin to hallucinate when you fast and you don't have enough sleep. Same experience.

R: The mind has many facets. The mind is very powerful. Even though it doesn't exist. The more you get involved in mind stuff the more you go into illusion and you get lost. The object is to simply annihilate the mind.

SN: So when Ed asked the question about sadhana the real question is, "Who needs to do sadhana?" I, right? So we get back to observation and the inquiry. (R: Umm.) But if you can't do that - but you said the reason why we meditate is to learn we don't have to meditate - until then meditate. But the true question is, "Who is the meditator?"

R: Umm. Find out, who needs to meditate. (SE: Fred.) Fred. (students laugh)

SH: Meditation in a way just keeps the illusory "I" going. (R: Yes.) It feeds it actually.

R: It does. But it also makes you one-pointed. And we have to do these things sometimes to get out of the rut of the relative world. It's better to meditate than think about problems. So when you meditate it takes you away for a while from the everyday world.

SN: How is that different from self-inquiry then?

R: Self-inquiry, you immediately investigate the I. Where the I came from, what the I is. And you follow the I-thread to the source of all existence. (SN: But in meditation...?) In meditation there is an object. (SN: It is "I"?) No people do not meditate on the I they meditate on an object. All meditation needs an object to meditate on, like God. We're meditating on God. Where you're at you can use "I am." You're meditating on "I am" with the breathing. That's a form of meditation.

SN: Well when you do self-inquiry doesn't that also lead to one pointedness the same way that mediation does?

R: It dissolves the I faster, because it makes you go directly to the I. To the ego. (SN: But that also is the one pointedness?) That is one pointedness but it does it faster. It's the fastest method. (SN: But they both lead to the same place, one pointedness?) They both lead to the same place, yes. (SN: That one pointedness is what?) That one pointedness there is one object, which is the Self. Where there is nothing else. Except the one. It leads you to that point but it doesn't pull you into it. It's a high state of mind to be one pointed. Because there is no longer this and there is no longer that.

SN: Is one pointedness the same thing as emptiness?

R: You can say that, yes. Because emptiness is the last state before you become realized. You become totally empty of other things. And one pointedness is also when you become totally one without the other. There is nothing else but the one which is emptiness. So they both lead to the same thing.

SE: I think sadhu om makes the distinction, he says, most people meditate on what he calls second and third person objects, like you or it but self-inquiry is to become one pointed on the subject, the first person. In that way it's the most direct although not necessarily the fastest because some people find it the most difficult way.

R: It's different for all people.

SD: Robert what I don't understand is, when you talk about tracing the source of the I-thought and we know it leads to intellectually whether we've experienced it or not that... (R: No, no we're not tracing the source of the I-thought. We're tracing the I-thought to the source.) Okay better put. I don't understand how something like the spiritual heart could be the origin of something that is mischievous and deceitful as the I-thought?

R: It's not! That's just the point. Once you trace the I-thought to the source you realize that only the source has always existed. And there never has... (SD: There is no I- thought whatsoever.) There is no I-thought, it never existed. (SD: I see.) If the I-thought really existed we'd have a lot of work to do. We'd never get rid of it. But the I-thought doesn't really exist, you're tracing something illusory.

SF: Everything is illusory?

R: Even you. Sure everything is illusory. The whole relative universe is illusory. This is the reason we should not react to person, place or thing. For when we react it tells us where we're coming from. We still believe we're human and we're the doer.

SF: A week ago Thursday, you said that this life was a huge cosmic joke. And it seems to me... (R: Don't take it so seriously.) If anybody wants to prove that, all they got to do is to read the newspaper or watch the television. (R: True.) All that stuff.

SH: Or watch your own mind. (SD: That's right.) Yeah.

R: If you watch the newspaper and you pick up a newspaper forty years ago you'll see the same news. (laughter) Just different people. (SF: Not quite as bad as today.) All the difference it is today is because communication is so here and now. We see everything that is going on on TV that is happening everywhere in this world. It's all condensed. So it appears worse. But all these things have been going on for centuries.

SN: That's probably why I think it's better because everyone knows, everyone is watching. Whereas I think further back in time it was worse.

R: You're right, sure. Because people were able to get away with all kinds of things. (students laugh) But now we see it.

SE: Right we see them getting away with all these things. (more laughter)

SH: Doesn't seem to dampen it at all. (laughs) It doesn't deter it. It's still going high wide and handsome.

R: I always make fun of the things I see on the news, when I watch it. I think of jokes. For instance we were watching the Karma series I said to myself, "Why don't they bring peewee Herman as a witness?" (students laugh)

SE: He's busy testifying for Kennedy. (laughter)

SG: As far as I designed self-inquiry to use conversation sort of creates questions in me. So do you recommend meditation or not? Do you see it as a way of...

R: Well let me ask you, "What do you mean by meditation?"

SG: Okay the form of meditation I use has been a sort of a contemplative meditation. A statement of truth and it is taken into consciousness and ruminates about it for a while until you sort of achieve a sort of inner peace. And then you sit in the silence. That would be for me the kind of meditation that I would refer to. And there is the other kind of meditation which also includes I guess the kind of meditation that you recommend the "I am" meditation which is simply, "I am." So I mean...

R: Those are both good as far as it goes. But the day has to come when you have to ask, "Who is meditating? Who needs to meditate? For what reason?" But until you get to that point it's good to do what you're doing. It makes you peaceful and it takes you higher.

But you will get to the point where you will ask yourself, "Who is meditating? I am? Who is the I that needs to meditate?" And you will begin to realize that meditation is of the mind.

SG: So let me ask you this, so when you sit in silence, you're just in silence would you term that meditation without any other conscious thought you're just in silence?

R: When I sit in silence I sit where I am right now. There is nothing going on. There is no form of meditation going on. There is absolutely nothing going on. There is nothing being achieved. Because what has to be achieved has already been achieved. Therefore, "Who has to sit in silence? Who has to meditate? Who has to do all these things?" (SG: You are that. You already are that. I am that.) Umm-hmm. When I speak of the fact you're probably referring to my telling everybody that I sit in the silence in the morning hours from six to nine and also in the morning from twelve to three. I usually sit down in a chair and all the forms dissolve. Now in that state I'm totally useless to the world because there is nothing there. But when I'm conscious like I am now there is also nothing there except I see the forms as superimpositions on the Self. So really they're both the same.

SF: Where do your words come from? (R: Where does what come from?) Your words? (R: Where do my words come from? Who knows? There's no telling.)

SG: The Dictionary. (R: The Dictionary.)

SF: They come from the source?

R: No I can't say my words come from any source because the source just is. The source is absolute reality, the source is consciousness, the source is God. Does God have to speak words? Does consciousness have to explain things or do anything? The source just is. But then again you can say that everything is the source. So the words are really the source. Just like this glass is the source. The room is the source. It depends on your perspective of looking. How you see things. What you see. There is only the source and nothing else. But for some people they see the radio as an object by itself. Some people hate the shape of the radio. They don't like the color. They have problems with the tone of the radio. But the radio just exists. It's the way you see it.

SF: It varies from one person to another.

R: Of course. If we went out to buy this radio many of us would not like the way it looks. We do not like the color. We do not like the shape. That's how we see the world. The mind sees the world. And the mind has been trained for many incarnations. Everything you do is from the training you have given your mind. Through many incarnations. So by inquiring you begin to see that there is no mind and there is no training and there is no incarnations and you become one and you become free.

SN: So if during inquiry if you become one pointed or empty all you do is remain there. Because you said that meditation can't pull you in. Really nothing can.

R: You remain in that state. (SN: That's it.) And then what will happen eventually, if you are truly in that state the inner guru will pull you all the way in. The Self will pull you in. Then you will disappear and become a good for nothing.

SD: In "No mind I am The Self" they seem to stress the importance of a living guru to do that pulling.

R: Those things are important at a certain stage of your development. It is true that most of the Sages since the universe has seem to begun have had teachers, guru's who have actually pulled them into the Self. It is very rare for a being to unfold by themselves and become totally free. But that's possible too. (SD: Because the inner guru is the guru right, it's all the same.) The guru, the Self are one. There is no difference. A better way to understand this is, the Sage is all-pervading, omnipresent. So in truth there is nothing but the Sage. The Jnani pervades the whole universe. That is how the Jnani or the Sage can pull you in. Because he or she is already within you. They're everywhere, they're everything. In other words there is no personal Sage who does anything. There is only the universal Self that is called the Sage, that is everything. (SD: But we see the Sage personified?) You see what you see.)

SN: You said the Self was everything but the Self is no thing?

R: It is no thing but it appears like everything in the universe. As long as you're looking at the relative point of view. (SN: Right, so I was making the distinction between the absolute and the relative.) That is why when somebody asks me, "Robert does the world really exist?" And I have to answer that question to the understanding of the individual. That's why there is always a different answer. The world exists only because you exist. And as long as you believe that you are the body then there are other bodies and there is the universe and there is the world. So the world does exist. It's folly to tell somebody outside on the street that the world does not exist. (SN: Would it also be folly for us to admit to ourselves that the world doesn't exist?) If you're being hurt by the world it is folly. If the world still affects you and you're feeling the world and you're feel things of the world then if you say the world does not exist then you're contradicting yourself. Because you really feel it does exist by your actions, by your feelings, by what you're doing in the world and the way you're living. So you're fooling yourself if you say the world does not exist.

SN: And that's why we go back to inquiry... (R: Right.) ...because when you're hurt you ask yourself... (R: Exactly, that's the point.) First you observe that and then you know the world exists and then you ask, "Who is hurt?" And that's why every moment is like sadhana?

R: Yes. Or you can inquire, "To whom does the world exist?" Same thing.

SN: That's like begging the question. (R: Begging the question?) Like you said once before you said, "As long as I can exist I can work on myself because I can find out who exists. (R: Yes.) So as long as we feel that we exist we can work on ourselves. Through finding out who exists through inquiry? (R: Of course. That's very true.) So every reaction is like an opportunity, whether it's taken or not? (R: Yes. It's an opportunity for awakening.)

SN: And when you take that opportunity and you investigate it you may or may not find out the emptiness of that? If you react it's not empty and if you don't react it's empty? (R: True.) So that's why I think that Ramana and a lot of teachers didn't encourage setting a specific time to meditate or anything because they're missing the point all together. Like saying, "but now I'm meditating, but now I'm in the world." That's not it at all. It's whenever you react that's it. (R: True.) (SG: It makes sense.) (R: True.) (SJ: Or whenever you observe.)

(silence)

R: Would you like to read the Jnani Ed?

(Ed reads the confessions of a Jnani. Refer to the beginning of this book for text)

R: Do we have any announcements?

SM: I have transcript number 36 to hand out. 10 copies or more to be made. If there's anyone who would like one please let me know. Don't all speak at one time. (laughs)

R: We've got some prashad feel free to enjoy a fig.

Remember your real nature that you are absolute intelligence. You are not...

(tape break)

...that you are pure consciousness, absolute reality. That is your real nature. It's been fun being with you. I love you, peace. Until we meet again.

(tape ends) [TOC]

YOU ARE NO-THING

24th October, 1991

Robert: Good evening, good evening, good evening again.

SH: Once again good evening. (laughs)

R: It's good to see you and be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. When you come in here please leave all your problems outside at the door. You can pick them up on the way out. (laughter) They'll still be waiting for you. Leave all your troubles, your anxieties, your beliefs. Leave them all at the front door. Don't bring them in here.

In truth none of these things really affect you. You merely imagine, in your vain imaginings, that something may be wrong someplace, somewhere, somehow, and it's only the idea that the mind has of something being wrong, that causes it to be wrong, for, as most of you know by now, nothing is either good or bad, but thinking makes it so. Mind causes all the problems, the I-thought. As you begin to work on yourself and you annihilate the mind, the I-thought, the ego, where is there a problem? Where is there a fear? Where is there an anxiety? It doesn't exist.

So, when I make my confession that I am choiceless, effortless, pure awareness, I am the Self, I am not speaking of Robert. I've shared this with you before but how we forget. When you see me as Robert, as a body, I am not choiceless pure awareness. Robert is not the Self. That's why my confession is "I-am choiceless, effortless awareness, I-am the Self." I'm not referring to Robert. I'm referring to I-am. I-am includes you. When I make that confession it is all-pervading. It is omnipresence itself. Everyone of you is I-am. The whole universe is I-am. So whenever I say "I am choiceless, effortless, pure awareness, I am the Self," always remember, I am not referring to Robert. I am referring to your true nature. This is the truth about you.

You are not your problems, or the anxieties, or the fears, and there is no use in trying to remove those things from your life. You're trying in vain since you're fighting an illusion. Rather you should think, "I-am. I-am choiceless, effortless pure awareness." Never think of your body at that time. Never believe that is your body. Your body has absolutely nothing to do with it. Your body, like the world, is an illusion. It just does not exist. But I-am does exist.

Please try to remember, when I use the word "I-am," I am referring to your true Self, your true nature. And just by voicing this truth it clears up the many misinterpretations that you have in your subconscious mind about who you are. It seems that no matter how many times I share this with you, you still believe that Robert is the body, and you're dealing with a body. You still believe that you are your body, and you're dealing with your body. But I tell you in truth that there is no body. There is no mind. There is no universe. There is only consciousness, the Self, and you are that. This takes a load off your mind, doesn't it? (laughter)

When you come to the conclusion that you are nothing don't you feel good? You're empty. There is nothing going on inside and there is nothing going on outside, there's no inside and there's no outside. Some of you still believe the body is a shell. What kind of a shell? Sea shell? Egg shell? (laughter) There is no body. There's nobody home. Why do you want to make believe you've got a body, and then give it all the attributes of catching a cold or a disease or feeling depressed or out of sorts? As you believe you are a body all these other things will attach themselves to you.

A body suffers from birth and death and all the rest of the junk in between. Is that what you are? If that's what you really were what would be the purpose of this? What kind of a God would create a body that becomes decrepit and dies? It doesn't make any sense if you think of it. Why would God, if you believe in God, that God created you, why would he create a being who was born as a baby, goes through all childhood diseases, has to struggle and fight it's way for survival, grows up, competes in the world, fights for existence, for money, for wealth, for health, for power, for position, for name, for fame, and then drops dead? Of what value is this? And raises a family to do the same. It doesn't make any sense to me at all. But yet we're afraid to know the truth for we do not wish to believe that we do not exist. I didn't say you do not exist. I say do not exist as a body. But you do exist as nothing.

Nothing exists. Remember nothing simply means no thing. You are no thing that is known by your mind. Your mind cannot possibly comprehend the no thing. The mind has to believe that you are a body or it wouldn't be the mind. The mind has to believe that there is a universe, a God, a world, a body. That's all the play of your mind or the play of consciousness.

As long as you believe in this, in the play, you have to suffer. There are no two ways about it. There is no one on this earth who believes they are a body that does not suffer, somehow. Do not judge by appearances. As long as you believe there is a world, you are a body, you have to suffer one way or another. You have to suffer either mentally or physically. You go through all kinds of experiences. This is not a world of peace as you know.

You have to understand that you've been playing all these games for many, many incarnations, and you now wish to wake up. Just by reflecting on these things we're sharing with you tonight will awaken you. Just by reflecting on these truths, realizing the truth about yourself. You were never born. No one ever gave you birth. You have always existed but not as a body. There is absolutely nothing to fear. There's absolutely nothing to desire. There's absolutely nothing to do.

It seems strange to me, again, that people think they are the doer, and they are always looking for something to do. They think if they don't find something to do people will call them lazy, and a do nothing. If your real nature is nothing what can nothing possibly do? Nothing. (laughter) Why do you believe you've got to do something? To do something you have to be somebody, but to do nothing you have to be nobody. So what would you rather be, somebody or nobody?

If you're somebody you get involved in the world, in the play, in the maya, and you go through all these experiences as somebody. You may be somebody important or somebody of little value. You may be the President of the United States or a homeless person. But you're still somebody. But if you realize that you're nobody then you can sit in peace and have no desires. You do not have to wonder if you're going to go to work tomorrow, or if you're going to feel good tomorrow, or if you're going to find a job, or get married, or not get married. A nobody never thinks of these things, a somebody does.

When you are a nobody all these things will take care of themselves. They will actually take care of themselves. If you're supposed to be married and have 25 children you will. If you're supposed to have 25 wives and have no children, you will, or husbands, or whatever you want. But it's so beautiful to realize that you are nobody and be able to sit in a chair and the whole universe is under your command. You are no longer a puppet being manipulated by the strings of life. You have realized the phoniness, the nonsense of everything. Everything has become nonsensical and you just rest in peace.

Usually the term "rest in peace" means you're dead. You are dead. You are dead to the body. It's funny how you give the right terms to the wrong situations. You actually do rest in peace and you are dead to the body.

You have no desire to go anywhere, or to do anything, to live any one place. Yet remember also it does not mean that you're going to stay, necessarily, in one place. Whatever has to happen will happen. You may find yourself going to Japan or to Timbuktu, or anywhere, but it has nothing to do with you. You are at peace. You have a quiet mind. It doesn't function. The mind has become the Self. You are free.

But yet to others it appears as if you're acting because you appear normal and go through experiences like everybody else. But you realize the truth. You're doing absolutely nothing. The observer may see you working, chopping wood, drinking wine, building houses, yet you're doing nothing. This sounds strange. It sounds like a contradiction, but it's not really.

When you discover you are the Self, remember the Self is all-pervading. Absolute reality is omnipresence. Therefore everything is taking place within you. All the so-called actions of the universe are taking place within you because you are self-contained consciousness. That's why there's nothing you can really do, as self-contained consciousness, for you occupy every space, every atom, every universe, and you permeate what appears to be creation. There's nowhere for you to go because there's no room. There's nothing else. There's no space. Space is only for the body, the mind. But when you discover that you're pure awareness there is no space. You encompass all in all. This is the reason why there's nowhere to go and there's nothing to do.

It's like you're a gigantic screen that takes up the entire universe, it is the universe, that takes up all of space. Yet forms appear on the screen. The forms appear on the screen and there's a lot of space between them. The forms appear to be going places, doing things, working, being born and dying, but you are that eternal screen, unflinching, immovable, sat-chit-ananda, parabrahman, and the whole play of consciousness is taking place on the screen, all within yourself. There's no place for the screen to go because it already takes up all the space there is. The only movement there is, is in the images on the screen. But the screen itself has no room where to go, what to do. It just is as it is. That's the way it is. Your true nature is absolute reality, the screen.

There's nothing you have to do when you understand that you are omnipresence. There's no room for karma, or for sins, or for anything else.

The game is being played by the beings who are projected on the screen. They're going through karma because they have a lot of space. They can go through all kinds of things if there's space. They're going through different experiences of birth and death, of happy and sad, of healthy and sick, of poverty and riches. The images are going through these things. Then they die and they appear to be born again in different lives, and the game continues for ever.

But you are consciousness, you are the screen, and you remain the same, always. There never was a time when you were different. There never will be a time when you change. Consciousness is consciousness. The Self is the Self. It has no manifestations, no attributes. It just is. That is your true nature.

The question therefore is, "What have you been thinking about yourself? What do you believe you are?" And you can tell by the way you look at yourself, how you address yourself, what you imagine you are. Most people get up in the morning believing they're a body, and right away their mind is filled with their personal problems. They go through the day trying to solve problems, and thinking of ways they can enjoy themselves. There's no end to it. But for the self-realized being there's no one who sleeps, there's no one who wakes, there's no one who does anything and there's no one who does not do anything. There is absolutely nothing going on.

Now can you see the truth about yourself? The more you fear, the more you worry, the more you fret, the more you desire, the more you think you've got to make the world turn the way you want it to turn, the greater the delusion and you're pulled deeper and deeper and deeper into the mire of delusion. It becomes difficult to awaken.

You somehow have to grab the bull by the horns. That's another cliché that I can't stand, grab the bull by the horns. Who'd want to grab a bull by the horns?

SH: Who's the bull? (R: It's all a bunch of bull.) (laughter) There you go.

R: But you have to catch yourself. Can you catch yourself? You've got to do something to yourself. You have to see what you've been doing all these years, how you've been thinking of yourself, what you've been thinking about yourself, what you are.

This is why it is written in all the great spiritual manuals - like auto manuals, they've got spiritual manuals - where it tells you that unless you are mature spiritually you can never really understand this. It looks like a bunch of ludicrous sayings. "I am the Self. I am consciousness. I am pure awareness. I am not the body. I am not the mind." It sounds totally ludicrous to the average person, for the collective unconscious is so strong. The collective unconscious is another name for maya. It appears to be strong and it pulls you in very deeply. The more you identify with it, the greater the pull. And you identify with it when you feel sorry for yourself, when you believe something is wrong with you, when you have wants and needs, when you're human.

You do not want to be human. Simply because a human being goes through all the nonsense of the world. A human being has to experience all of the worldly conditions that all the other human beings experience. Therefore you do not want to be human. You want to be inhuman. You want people to tell you you're not human. When you can see that you're not human, that's when you'll begin to bloom, and you'll realize happiness you never knew before.

Do not read the newspapers, or listen to the TV too much, or go along with all the news that's going on in the world. That's for human beings. Be yourself. You are self-contained. If you have eternal happiness what in this world can give you something better than that? All you really have to do is to realize that you are eternal happiness. You cannot get eternal happiness from anything in the world, or from anyone. Eternal happiness is your true nature. You are that. You do not have to acquire it, or look for it, or find it, or beg for it or pray for it. Eternal happiness is what you really are. But that only comes when you let go of your morbidity, when you let go of all your nonsense, your fears, your foolishness, preconceived ideas, judgments. You have to empty yourself out. When you empty yourself out you become filled with consciousness.

Consciousness is like air, like the air you breathe. When you dig a hole in the ground it's filled with air, with space. When you fill up the hole where did the air or the space go? The space didn't go anywhere. It always existed the way it is. You can either fill it up with dirt or leave the hole as it is, and the same space always remains.

So it is with consciousness. You may appear to be a person taking up space. You may appear to be a body, a being that's roaming around the globe. But your true nature is consciousness. If the body falls away that's like an empty hole. If you appear to have the body, that's like you fill up the hole with dirt. The space or consciousness is still there, but it appears to be occupied by a body or by dirt.

Remember the body is composed of all the elements that are found in the ground. You come from dirt. You're dirty. Take a shower. (laughter) You're nothing but a piece of dirt. That's your true Self, a piece of dirt. As long as you believe you are the body you're a piece of dirt, because all the elements of your body can be found in the earth.

So you have to wake up. Why don't you do that right now? Wake up!

Leave the body alone. It will take care of itself. After all you never asked to have a body. It just appeared. In the same way it appeared, in that same way it will be taken care of. Do not worry about it. And do not think you are the doer and you have to keep doing things every day. You may appear to do things but remember you are not the doer. You are nothing. Can you imagine yourself as nothing, where there's no God, and no universe, and no world, no people, no body, no mind? Sounds scary, doesn't it? But it's not. The reason it sounds scary to you is because you have identified with your body for such a long time. And when I say a long time, I'm speaking of many lifetimes. You are enmeshed in the belief of a body.

You therefore begin to work on yourself. You practice self-inquiry, if you must. You practice various sadhanas, if you must. You do whatever you have to do to get rid of the notion that you are the body. You only do these things if you will not wake up when I tell you to wake up. If you refuse to awaken by still believing you are your pains, and your aches, and your greed, and your thoughts, and everything else that you think you're made out of, that means you refuse to awaken. Something within you wants to keep playing the game.

Therefore you're going in the other direction and practice sadhana, spiritual practices, to weaken the mind, to weaken the thought that I am the body, to weaken the ego by realizing that I, the I you've been calling yourself all these years, is only a thought. It is the I-thought. And the I-thought has to have a source. It cannot appear by itself. You therefore follow the I-thought to its source by inquiring, "To whom does this come?" or "Who am I?" or "What is the source of this I?" You never answer that question. You simply inquire.

As you continue practicing this method the day will come when you will finally go deep deep within, deeper than you've ever gone before, and your body will just disappear. Yet to everyone else in the world they will see you as a body. But you will be totally free and happy. No thoughts, no fears, no preconceived ideas. Everything will be wiped out.

You have to vehemently make up your mind what you're going to do with your life that you've got left in this phase of existence. What are you really going to do with your life for the rest of your days on this earth? Is it worthwhile striving for things, trying to make yourself happy in the material world, when you're beginning to realize that the relative world doesn't even exist?

Go after the things that count. That is, go deep, deep within yourself. Dive deeper than you've ever done before. Make up your mind that this is it. Strive after truth. It will come effortlessly. And sooner than you know it you will awaken and become free. Peace.

Feel free to ask questions.

SF: I had a nice experience Robert. Somebody gave a me tape of a talk by Mr Ganeshwar, the editor of the mountain path and grand nephew of Maharshi he was here this fall. And in it he had a number of fascinating anecdotes where he said that often times Maharshi would say, "There are no Jnanis there is only Jnana, and also there are no realized soul there is only realization." (R: Umm.) These put things in a nutshell.

R: This is true. That's what I was talking about tonight. There is no individual realizer there is just realization, just the Self. The Self is all-pervading. It is not myself or yourself it is the Self, omnipresence. So that's true what you're saying. How has that helped you?

SF: I think I have an intellectual understanding but I haven't gone over into that other state or at least I'm not conscious of it, no doubt the actuality. But it won't be in the mind in any case. No use to fret about it.

R: Right, just be yourself. You're doing well. (SF: Thank you. Did you know Ganeshwar? He seems like a wonderful guy.) Yes I met him a couple of times. He is a very nice chap. (SF: His talk is just enlightening.) Excuse me? (SF: His talk was just enlightening. It was in San Diego.) Yes, yes.

(pause)

R: The cat got your tongue? That is another one of those cliches. (laughter) I always come up with these crazy cliches. The cat's got your tongue.

SF: The expression when somebody dies, "He gives up the ghost," but actually it's the other way round. (laughter)

R: It should be reversed. (SF: Is that not so?) Sure, yes. The ghost gives up the body. (SF: The bible says you don't have to pay a 100% of ...tape break... because that's where it's at?) Is that what it says in the bible? (laughter)

SH: That's your interpretation. That's a new one. (R: What bible have you been reading Fred?) The bible according to Fred.

SF: It's there somewhere. (R: Sounds good anyway. Have you ever seen a holy ghost?) If I saw him it would be a mental concept and therefore unreal.

(silence)

R: No more question hey? What can this mean?

SH: You finally reduced us all to silence. (laughter) (R: Where are all your questions on paper?) Search me. (R: You're saving it for Sunday. Put it in the collection basket.)

SM: Robert I read something years ago in books I had read where it said, you're part of a greater being, which is part of a greater being and that is part of greater being. That doesn't really apply to anything or an analogy?

R: It depends what part you want to be. (laughter) (SM: Yeah.)

SH: It sounds redundant.

R: I suppose they are referring to the fact that everything comes from God. So everything is a part of everything else on the human level.

SM: I read this many years ago and it kind of stuck in my head and I often follow that once in a while. (R: Give your head a jerk.) What? (R: Jerk your head. Off with the head.) Yes, definitely. Well you wanted a question and so I thought I'd throw that in. (laughter)

SF: Several session ago somebody asked you if Christ was an Avatar and you said ask him. And I think you hurt the guys feelings... (R: Wasn't it you?) No it was another guy. (students laugh) No I think I have it straight see. What you meant was that each of us must decide for ourselves whether he is an Avatar or not, not to go on outside authority, even yours? (R: Of course.) I mean I thought I had it right, I mean intellectually anyway.

SV: Robert there is a group that has some prophets and the people call the prophets Avatars. So there is probably about 425 Avatars fooling around there. There is an actual organization like that. (R: You mean they initiate you as an Avatar?) Yeah I used to be in scientology and then it all started and you had to experience it and then you go through the experiences and then you go through the processes and when you're finished you're an Avatar. The only that seems to me is that they have more ego's than before. (laughs)

R: Do you get a certificate. (students laugh)

SV: Probably. (SK: It cost two thousand bucks.(laughter)) Yeah that's about right, yes. It's funny when I read these stories in the magazine they have. Every story is I this, I that, I other. (R: Umm.) Seems to be more I than before.

(silence)

SM: Is it preordained when one awakens Robert? (R: Everything is preordained.)

SD: What was the question, I'm sorry? (SM: I said is it preordained when one awakens?)

R: Yet it appears sometimes as if it's not. We have to appear to make the effort and even making the effort is preordained. We have to go through that kind of a routine.

SD: And so that is when you say that everything is unfolding as it should? (R: Yes.) These routines that we go through are preordained?

R: Yes. Everything was planned before you came into your so-called body. But when you realize that you are not the body it all becomes redundant.

SJ: What do you mean redundant?

R: I mean it's unnecessary. Nobody was ever preordained. Nothing was ever preordained because after all who made that law. Who said that everything was going to be preordained. And the answer to that is God. And God only exists because you believe that you are the body. Therefore when you realize that you are not the body. It all becomes redundant. (SJ: Preordination is only relative?) Yes. (SG: So is reincarnation?) So is reincarnation, yes. It's all because you believe that you are a body. See what you've done to yourself. Why do you want to hurt yourself like that and go through all these things you're going through. Reincarnation, karma, God punishing you. All the things you do to yourself.

SH: Why does that occur at all? (laughter) (SV: You should know better.) (laughter)

R: You know the answer to that. Why does water occur in the mirage? (SH: I don't know?) It doesn't. (SH: It appears to?) It appears to but when you investigate it, it's not there. (SH: Yeah.) So when you investigate yourself you will find that you do not exist as a body. (SH: Okay.) And therefore nothing else exists. So it does not occur. (SH: The whole thing is a non-occurrence.) Exactly. (SH: So that settles that, that doesn't exist.)

SJ: It's not even there to even begin to be an appearance.

SH: Oh well. Summary, wiping out of the universe. (turns to dog) Tofu are you listening to this? He just wags his tail.

SU: Robert where did those sounds come from a little while ago? (R: What sounds?) The single tone twice I heard it earlier and now about five minutes ago. Did anybody hear that sound? Nobody heard it? (SG: Yes, yes.)

R: Ghosts, the holy ghost. (students laugh)

(students are talking amongst themselves)

R: Sounds, lights, visions they're all the same. They all have to do with your body.

Well let's eat. (students laugh) Boy this looks good.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 106

TOTALLY FREE

27th October, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. Welcome. It's good being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

Ask yourself, "Why did I come here today? To get out of the wind? I had nothing better to do? I'm tired of watching TV?" What do you really want? Whatever it is, it's wrong. How can the Self want anything? If you have an inkling of who you are you realize you are all-pervading. You are effortless awareness. How can you desire anything? This is what blasphemy means, when you believe you need something. When you feel there's something wrong, either with yourself or with anybody else. When you feel your life is not going right, that's actually blasphemy, for you are downgrading your reality.

The truth about you is that you are perfect. You are bright and shining right now, just the way you are.

Of course, as soon as you start to think it changes, doesn't it? You think about your mistakes, and about the bills you have to pay, and about life, the way it's treating you, and all sorts of things. Then you can call yourself human and you cannot say, "All is well." But if you are spontaneous, and you live in the eternal now, and you understand there is no other time but now, right now this second, you are perfect. There is absolutely nothing wrong in this moment, is there?

You therefore have to come to the conclusion that this moment is all there is, for this moment becomes the next moment, and the next moment, and the next moment. If you are at peace with yourself in this moment then you will always be at peace. But if you cannot be at peace in this moment then you become worldly, and you fret and worry about your body, your affairs, the world situation and the universe.

You think about the black holes that are going to come and get you, and all the pollution, and all of the rest of the stuff that seems to be going on in this world. If you focus on those things you will always be unhappy. Those things have been going on since the beginning of time, for millions of years, in many civilizations. These same problems have come about, same worries, same fears. Yet there have been individuals who have transmuted and transcended those things and have become free.

Take a look at your life and see which way it's going. You become so enthralled in the world. When something good happens to you, you become happy. When you get your way, you become happy. When it doesn't work that way or you think that something is against you or somebody seems to have wronged you, you become miserable. Is this how a divine person is supposed to live? Of course not.

You are not the condition. You are not the world. You are not the universe. Leave those things alone. Do not concern yourself about person, place, or thing. There is a power within you which will take care of everything, if you will let it, by not worrying, by not fretting, by not concerning yourself. I know it sounds strange, for you have been brought up to think, "Unless I do something, my life will be a shambles. I have to make something out of my life."

The truth is you have no life. You never had a life. There is only consciousness and you are that. What appears to be your life is an optical illusion, a mirage. The things in your life appear to be karmic. That's why you have experiences. But when you find out the game that's being played is erroneous, a joke, it is only a game, you wake up and you stop playing. You become absolutely, totally free.

How many of you are really happy, really happy? About three people, four people. How many of you are not happy? Two honest people. The rest of you are somewhere in the middle.

Now the truth is, what difference does it make whether you're happy or unhappy? What difference does it make what's going on in the world or in your life? Your situation, whether you're healthy or sick, rich or poor, happy or sad, has absolutely nothing to do with spiritual life.

Where did we learn that if we become spiritual people we're supposed to live a good human life and be rich, and healthy, and happy, and have all the things we want? These things have absolutely nothing to do with spiritual life. It is the churches that propagated these things, that told you, "If you believe our way your life will change and you'll be prosperous, you'll walk on cloud nine, all your troubles will be over, you'll never have a bad day in your life again."

You see the world, your body, the universe, being maya, an illusion, all kinds of things happen to people. The idea is to transcend that situation, that condition. Allowing your body to do what it wants. Allowing the world to be the way it is, not fighting, not reacting, not trying to change anything, leaving everything alone. When you can do this something will happen and you will see that your real nature is total happiness. But not the kind of human happiness you're thinking about. It is the peace which passeth all understanding. It is a divine happiness that comes to the person who has surrendered their body, their affairs, their life, to God, to consciousness, to the Self, and they have become the Self, absolute reality.

Now these people, to others, may appear to be living just like all of us, going through various experiences, but I can assure you that these people are totally free. They are not experiencing anything. Yet to you it looks as though they are experiencing things. But they are totally, absolutely free.

The world and spirituality are two different things. The world does not exist as it appears. Your body does not exist the way it appears. The universe is not what you think it is. All is well. There is absolutely nothing wrong with anything. Do not look at situations. Do not accept facts. All facts are subject to change. Do not stick up for your rights. You have no rights. Be compassionate. Have humility. Have mercy on yourself. Never condemn yourself. Never believe you are inferior or superior. Identify with the higher Self and one day you will automatically let go of everything and become that Self.

At that time there will not be a world and reality. There will be just reality by itself and the world will become images to you, superimposed on reality, images that do not exist. Then you will find happiness that can never vanish, happiness that can never disappear.

Begin to see yourself this way. Not as a mortal being. Not as a being struggling through life, and fretting, and worrying, and being upset over conditions, having to make decisions, crying over spilled milk. Here come these cliches again, crying over spilled milk. Has anybody ever cried over spilled milk? Maybe a cat.

Don't fight the world. There's nothing to fight and there's absolutely nothing to fear. Be yourself. Be your real Self. Awaken. It's about time you knew who you are. Awaken, and become free.

We've been reading from the Ashtrunga Ashtravakra Gita, how do you pronounce that?

SE: Ashtravakra. (R: Ashtravakra Gita.) There is a test at the end of the reading.

R: If you do not have a copy of that Gita be sure to buy one. For every student of Advaita Vedanta should read that book. So if Edward would read the first two chapters they're both short, we will listen patiently.

SE: This is the Shambala book by Byrom.

(Ed does the reading.)

R: Well it's that time again. Time for questions and answers. So we're going to begin with the first question. (students laugh) The answer is "All is well and everything is unfolding as it should." (students laugh)

Q: (Robert reads) I feel superior or inferior to another am I not feeling superior or inferior to myself? In as much as the other is my own creation? And exist only in my the jiva's mind?

A: I gave you the answer. Everything emanates out of the mind. Superior, inferior, exterior, interior. It's all the same. It is all a lie. Everything comes from the mind. You have those feelings because you were brought up to believe that that's true. You were brought up to believe that some people are superior to others, some people are inferior to others. But in truth there are no people and there are no feelings.

Therefore know yourself. Realize that all is well. Everything else are mental concepts, beliefs, preconceived ideas. Do not think about those things at all. Inquire within yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come about inferior and superior? To whom do they come? To me. To the I-thought. It is the I-thought that feels this." Realize that you are not the I-thought by following the I-thought to the heart centre. Where it will be totally dissolved in the source. You are the source. The source is absolute consciousness, pure awareness. The source is God and God is all there is. You are not the body or the mind.

Q: (Robert reads) Whatever I do or don't do, the mind is there, yet it is so subtle that there is fear. (Robert repeats to himself) Whatever I do or don't do, the mind is there, it is so subtle that there is fear.

A: For whom is the mind? We go back to that old mind again. The mind game. "For whom is the mind subtle? For whom is there fear?" Again it's for the I. I feel the fear. I feel the mind. I feel these things. Your job is to remove the I-thought totally and completely. Annihilate the I. You can do that by becoming aware. That the I-thought is the culprit and is causing you to feel this way or you can ask yourself, "To whom does the I come? Who am I? What is the source of the I?" And become free.

But do not listen to the mind. Watch, become the witness to your fears. Allow your fears to do what they will. You simply observe those fears. Do not accept the fears as reality and do not accept the fears as unreality. As you just watch and become the witness to the fears they will become weaker and weaker and they will totally vanish. The reason that they totally vanish is because they were never real to begin with. What is not real will disappear when you investigate it thoroughly. And you investigate it by inquiring, "To whom do they come? I fear, Who am I? What is I that fears?" There is no I and there is no fear.

Q: (Robert reads) If a soul becomes fully awakened... - That's the first mistake, a soul can never be fully awakened. If you believe you are a soul then you will remain a soul and maybe become a heel too. (students laugh) There is no soul to awaken. A soul can never awaken.

SE: Can a heel?

R: A heel maybe. (laughter) Awakening is your real nature. You are awakened. But if you believe you are a soul waiting to be awakened you've got a long wait. Forget about the soul. (Robert returns to the question) So if a soul becomes fully awakened and is now off the wheel of reincarnation after they leave the body do they go on to a higher state of realization? Or is there a choice to reincarnate again to help others awaken? Or are they absorbed back into deity and all individual consciousness erased?

A: There are no states of awakening. There are no levels. You are either awakened or not awakened. The levels are in sadhana. In spiritual practice. There are levels in spiritual practice. But there are no levels in awakening. Once you awaken you understand that you've always been awakened. There never was a time when you were not awakened.

Just like once you realize that the water in the mirage does not exist you will never again be fooled by that mirage. For you will always realize that it is nothing, it does not exist. And so it is with this. If you believe you are a soul that has to be awakened then you believe in the water in the mirage. But there is no water and there is no soul. The soul is like the body. It's a subtle body. It is the soul that reincarnates, but that is an illusion. For there is no reincarnation. There is no karma.

It is also true that as long as you believe that you are a body and a mind and you continue this belief if you are a good humanitarian, a good human being the soul reincarnates on a higher planet. Where there is less strife, less problems and less worries. Or you can come back to this earth and reincarnate in a family that is advanced spiritually. Where you can carry on at a young age. but all this is nonsense. The truth is you were never asleep, you were never a soul, you never reincarnated you are absolute nothing. That is your true nature, no thing. You are no thing and you are that right now. Not tomorrow or next week or when you feel better. Right this moment you are absolutely free.

Q: (Robert reads) If everything in the relative world is preordained that must mean there is no freewill. After awakening and being at one with the Self. There is only one Self so there must be only one will, is this correct?

A: The only freewill you have is not to react to person place or thing, to conditions. You have the freewill to watch and observe all the conditions happening before you and around you, but not to react. That is the freewill you have. Everything else doesn't exist. Preordination does not exist. Destiny does not exist. Karma does not exist. But it appears to exist just as the body appears to exist. Just as the mind appears to exist. Just as your fears and your thoughts and you reactions appear to exist.

As long as you're doing these things the appearance becomes stronger and stronger and stronger. Therefore the first step is not reacting to any condition that comes before you. Realizing this condition as a mirage. It's a lie, an optical illusion. Do not accept the condition no matter what it is, as real. And do not try to get rid of it for if you try to get rid of it you believe it's real. Therefore do not work on removing any condition from your life rather work on examining yourself and asking yourself, "Who sees this condition? Who is going through this experience? Who has this belief?" Follow this to the point of realizing that there is no I-thought, there is no body going through anything, there is only the Self, there is only pure awareness and you are that.

Q: (Robert reads) Is it true that a vegetarian diet is more conducive to making progress on the spiritual path?

A: This is a contradiction. Automatically if you're practicing sadhana in the right way you will turn to vegetarianism. You will begin to see that the eating of dead flesh is unnecessary. It will come by itself. You will not be interested in killing cows or chickens or pigs or having them killed for you by the butchers. This makes you are finer human being. It makes you pure to an extent.

There are those people in zen teachings, in various yoga teachings that do eat meat. Like the Tibetan monks or people in Tibet. Where the weather is very very cold. Eskimos they have to eat blubber because the temperature is very low and the weather is very cold so they have to eat this to survive. Yet those people have never experienced the highest truth. They have never become the Self.

There is really no self-realized being that eats meat. I mean a truly self-realized being. There are many spiritual beings who practice high forms of sadhana who eat meat.

But a totally realized being avoids meat. Their meals are very simple. They eat to survive. And the food supply that they need is very little. Unless they're doing something to help someone or to show someone something.

So the answer is again a truly self-realized being avoids meat, they don't even think about it. They do not gravitate to those things. But spiritual aspirants, even those who are high on the path may eat meat. So I suggest you try to stay away from meat if you can.

Q: Boy, this is type written. (Robert reads) This morning while lying in bed feeling the breeze from the ceiling fan I looked inside myself, (really? I wonder what he saw?) and felt inside myself. I found muscle tension a shoulder a leg and so forth. But if I refused to let names and labels arise the objects do not arise, no ceiling fan, no breeze, no shoulder or leg. There was only changing phenomena without form or name. There was only perceiving. But no individual objects for perception. Those were created by names. I also saw that there was not any of this. I was the witness to all this and I was not the perceiving or the perceived. But I didn't know what I was? What is the next step in this analysis?

A: This person has a problem they think they are a leg, muscle, shoulder. You're going to a lot of trouble. When you perceive something do not go too far in that quest. Simply ask, "Who perceives this? Who is the perceiver? Where did the perceiver come from? Who is experiencing this?" Do not carry on a dialog with yourself for too long. Try to understand that no thing exists except the Self. Do not go all the way down the line where you ask, "What is the next step?"

Tell you in truth is only one step. And that one step is to realize that there is no thing but the Self. There is only the Self and that is effortless awareness. Rest on that. Realize that you are effortless awareness, the Self. Forget about your leg and your shoulder and the other parts of your body. Do not bother to break your body apart. Look at your whole body as a phenomena. That your whole body does not exist. It only exists in mind. Change your mind and the body will disappear.

Make it simple. Make it direct. "To whom does the body come? To me. Who am I? What is the source of the I?" And stay in the silence as long as you can. Be silent. Do not go back and think about the parts of your body rather just rest in the silence. Awaken and be free. The whole spiritual quest is one of simplicity, not complicated. You are just to see that you are not the phenomena of the body, of your affairs, of your mind that you are all-pervading consciousness. Just awaken to that.

Q: (Robert reads) Question two. While watching these inner phenomena as mentioned in question one, I saw that without existence there would be nothing. I was aware or conscious of, I saw also without awareness. I could not be sure anything existed. Thus sat and chit are in the centre there is only a conceptual distinction between them. Existence, consciousness are one. But tell me where was the ananda? (The ananda was on vacation.(laughter)) I also saw that the illusory existence, consciousness, distinction was also not me. I existed before sat-chit. I was the chit before the chit that observed sat. (laughter) So-to-speak. (chat before chit, chit before chat. (laughter) Is this true? (Students laugh)

SJ: That's lot of chit chat.

A: What are you doing to yourself? You're driving yourself crazy (laughter) Forget about chit and chat. (laughter) This is very complicated. (laughter) Do not be a complicated person. Truth is simplistic. (Someone yawns aloud.) (laughter)) Truth is simplicity itself. It has nothing to do with intellectual jargon. And all these names, sat-chit-ananda, consciousness, absolute reality, they're all synonymous they're all one. Do not separate everything into different forms. It just makes it more difficult for you.

Say to yourself, "I am none of these things. I am simply awake. I am the absolute reality. Freedom itself." And remain in the silence. Do not look for signs. Do not look for experiences. Do not be so complicated. Become like a child. See everything with awe. Watch everything be alert. Understand it all comes out of your mind.

By working on your mind this way you make the mind stronger not weaker. The mind develops greater powers. The idea in Advaita Vedanta is to totally annihilate the mind. To kill the mind that thinks this way. You do not want to think this way. You do not want to think. You do not want. You do not. You do. You. And nothing. Remain in the nothing.

Q: (Robert reads) Is truth only for few ones? (S: I'm sorry, is truth what?) (Robert repeats) Is truth only for free ones...for few ones? Is truth only for few ones. In other words are there only a few who will become enlightened or know the truth.

A: Again this totally confused. There are not a few ones around. There are not a few around, there are not people and others. There is only one truth. There is only one reality and that is you. There are no chosen people. There is no person who is higher or lesser than somebody else. If anyone appears to be higher spiritually it is because these people have been working on themselves for many incarnations. That is the appearance but the appearance is a lie. For there have never been many incarnations and there really is no work you have to do on yourself.

Just by seeing this you awaken. Just by seeing there is no work I really have to do. There is no God I have to please or appease. There is no one I have to make happy so that I can be free and I can be enlightened. Try to understand that your real nature is freedom. It has always been freedom. It is freedom right now. Do not compare yourself with anybody else.

Apparently that is what you're doing. You're probably reading a lot of books. And you're reading about people who have become liberated. So you think there are only a few people that are chosen to be liberated in this life. That is a lie. For it means that God chooses certain people to bless and others to curse.

The truth is that you are not alive as you appear. The truth is that you are not anything that you can see, hear, touch, smell or feel. You are not the senses, you are not the doer, you are not searching for anything, you are awake right now. You are free right this moment. And there is nothing that can ever interfere in this. Not even your mind, not even yourself.

Just listen to this: There is nothing that can interfere in your freedom. There is no thing that can avoid your awakening. There is nothing that can stop you. For you are already that, be aware of this! You are already free. You are already bright and shining and all is well.

Q: (Robert reads) Beloved Robert, why do you insist in keeping everyone in diapers. (SJ: What?) Why do you insist upon keeping everyone in diapers?

SM: Diapers? (laughs)

SH: Babies rather. (laughs) You know, babies do wear them. (laughs) Well they're complaining that you aren't letting the true spirit free, by keeping us all in diapers. As if that is where you want us to be? The mother that won't let the child grow up. (R: That is an interesting concept.) Well that's what that implies.

R: Yes. Why do you see it that way? Why do you believe something like this. Why do think there is a limit that I can put upon you. You have the choice the free choice to see things as they are. And the way we are is totally perfect. Totally absolute. If you wish to wear diapers feel free to do so. (laughter) You have that choice. I cannot do anything for you like that. You have to see the way you are thinking and the thoughts that come from your mind, in which direction they're going and put a stop to all limitation.

You must see yourself as an unlimited being. Totally unlimited. Unconditioned. There is nothing that can stop you from knowing your true Self. There is no one that can do anything to you due to the fact that only the Self exists. And the Self is self-contained absolute reality. All-pervading omnipresent. When something is omnipresent there is no room for anything else. Therefore there is no room to be kept in diapers. There is no room for diapers. There is no room for your body or your mind or your thoughts. You are already free. So drop the diapers and expose yourself as total awareness. (laughter)

Q: (Robert reads) Robert do Jnanis exist in every country?

A: Who knows? Who cares? (laughter) (SE: Everywhere but Poland.) (laughter)

A: When you are the Self, again the Self is all-pervading. Take someone like Ramana Maharshi. When you see his body you are limiting yourself and you are limiting him. As a body he appeared like anybody else. But as a Jnani he was all-pervading omnipresent. Therefore the true nature of a Jnani is omnipresent, everywhere. There is no place where he or she are not. Therefore you are thinking when you ask a question like this that a Jnani is limited to his body. Not true. The body of a Jnani is a total fiction. It does not exist. The real nature of the Jnani is consciousness and consciousness is everywhere. So then a Jnani is not only in every country but is in the entire universe. The entire universe exists because the Jnani exists.

The Jnani is never a man or a woman walking around as a body. That is an appearance. So again the answer to the question is the Jnani is everywhere. In every country,

In every universe. SF: You said Ramana Maharshi was all-pervading wouldn't it be correct to say he is all-pervading?) Yes.

Q: (Robert reads) First statements cut the binding cords to freedom. Then following statements start dragging and actually blinding. Why what for? Do you know what he's talking about?

SJ: I do. First statements are very cutting, they cut the ties and they're very, just like what was said. Then the statement gets into a dragging effect of the first part and then the statements turn into actually other types of binding statements. Why does that pattern arise in satsang?

R: Well who sees that? (SJ: I do.) Then stop seeing that Jay. That's your idea. It's your concept. (SJ: Things are able to change?) There is nothing to change. Just be yourself. Do not see things. Try not to see at all, just be. When you are being yourself you have no time to see things. And see objects and come to conclusion about that. To see others and have opinions about them. When you are being yourself you are already free. But when you see things with your mind, the mind creates all kinds of things. Creates meanings to words. Creates worlds, universes, people, everything comes from your mind.

Therefore pull all these things back into yourself. Reverse the procedure. Instead of seeing out there see within yourself. Then you will only be able to see the Self and this will not appear as real to you.

SJ: Whether it appears real or not isn't there an objective sense of what's going on? In other words if you look in any newspapers or watch TV, the news they talk about that a lot, you notice whatever you notice. Or if someone who is spiritually realized or not maybe they don't have a vegetarian diet and they eat meat, that's stopping them get here?

R: It depends on the seer. It's what the person in their spiritual development is able to see at this time, it's the way they perceive things how they see it themselves.

SJ: What if a lot of people perceive things as the same or whatever the situation.

R: Well of course people will see those things but this the maya, this is the illusion. This is what we all appear to see. The object is transcending that and realizing that that is just an image on the screen of life. And do not take the seeing seriously. Look at it as something coming and something going but feel the truth about yourself. Know who you are and whatever you see will not have an effect on you. (SJ: Yeah and whether it has an effect on one or not, still that's an observation then, I guess you're left with something that doesn't matter.) The observer sees according to his capacity of seeing. (SJ: But we can all see that there are candles over there?)

SD: But isn't that what you call just collective consciousness like in maya in a way.

R: Yes. Exactly. We're all seeing the same things because we're all coming from the same delusion. There is only one delusion not many delusions. The one delusion means you're seeing the world as separate. When that delusion is transcended then there is only one. And you are that one and there are no others. And there are no things. There is absolutely nothing going on. But the appearances are like shadows they come and they go. Yet you understand that they are not real. And you have nothing to do with them and they do not bind you or affect you. Just like the snake in the rope. Just like the burnt rope. The burnt rope appears as if you can do something with it but when you try to pick it up it turns into ashes.

So for a Jnani the world appears but the Jnani knows it's like a burnt rope. It's all ashes, nothing, images. Like images on the chalkboard. They can be erased and new images appear on the chalkboard but the chalkboard never changes.

SJ: So the words, the words are just for those who can relate to what you're saying then at any given time and that is all. They just worth that or what you call...

R: The words are just words. They are totally meaningless but then again some people can pick up something and see the truth involved and go deeper in their sadhana. But it's the space in between the words that has the power.

SJ: Yeah and that is what I'm saying by that piece of paper, is that usually when you give a talk, or talk on a subject, or talk on a satsang, and in the beginning it's very in incredibly great and then it gets redundant and it drags on, because you're saying...you're repeating the same thing in different words.

R: Because you have to hear it that way. (SJ: Well I don't know? Why do I have to hear it that way.) Put ear plugs in your ear. (SJ: And then it goes on into talking that there is more binding in a sense. So that's what I'm saying that there is a sense of talking in space, silence.) Everybody listens differently. You see only what you have to see and you hear only what you have to hear. (SJ: Well that's what I'm confused on, you know?) Who is confused? (SJ: What-ever confusion may or may not arise when I hear this.)

SH: What you seem to be saying is that you start out grate and then you deteriorate rapidly. I find it redundant and boring. That is what I'm picking up. (laughter) (R: This is true.) Let's get it out in the open, what the hell do we have to lose.

R: Because you refuse to wake up I hit you with this again and again.

SJ: Sometimes you talk about it or someone is telling about their experiences and a lot of the people out there in the audience like they are having some real insight and experience as such that maybe they don't, maybe it's not necessary to... (SE: Bore the shit out of them.) (laughter) ...that's what I'm saying. If that is appropriate maybe if they rose their hand, I mean just something to indicate to you a little bit more. (laughter)

R: All is well. (laugh) It's good for you. It's good for you to go through this experience. It hits you in the ego. (SJ: That's right.) The ego becomes mad and disappears and dies. (SJ: Probably getting mad at them.)

SM: (Tells Robert how many questions are left.) One more.

Q: (Robert reads) First your statements great full of power, shocked... (SH: Who wrote this one I wonder?) ...then over and over again dragging it on. (students laugh) Now stop talking and wait. Now somethings dragging yes, no...every satsang.

A: You're going to hear the same thing again and again until you wake up. (students laugh) You're going to sit here and go through the same thing and listen to the same words... (SJ: The same pattern.) ...until you wake up. (SJ: And then what will happen? And you'll do the same thing.) Then you'll blow up. You'll disappear. (laughter) It is very necessary to repeat certain things in the relative world because there is nothing wrong under the sun. Therefore the things that come out of me may be important to you or may not be important to you. May help you or not help you. It all depends where you're coming from. What you're seeking. What you're after, what you're trying to do. Be yourself. Know yourself. Try not to think too much. All is well. That's it!

SE: Oh yes we're going to have a bhandara after thanksgiving, the Sunday after thanksgiving. I don't know what the date is 27th-28th-29th or something like that, keep that in mind.

SM: We have some more transcripts, this is called "remember to remember," it is really very beautiful and I have 5 copies to handout whoever would like to xerox off.

R: Any questions about the questions?

SN: It seems in the questions is what I perceive it seems to me there is some kind of confusion between questions and the answers because sometimes the questions or the answers are asked from a relative point of view or from an absolute point of view. For instance is there a Jnani in every country can be asked in a relative sense as if the Jnani. Is there one Jnani and then you answered it in an absolute sense. See so there are many possible answers to the one question.

And also in response to the diapers the question Jay was asking, it's elementary but there is no such thing as objective reality. Right? (R: Right.) So therefore all the talk about absolute consciousness or pure awareness is just a fairy tale, basically. (R: All the words are redundant.) Well I mean that is how I'm responding to in keeping us in diapers in a sense some people think when you talk about absolute reality or pure consciousness that there is such a thing as objective reality. You see what I'm saying? (R: Umm.) And we use that in reality, there is no objective reality everything is subjective called the mind. (R: Exactly. Yet we have to talk, we have to communicate.) But I'm saying that there appears to be some sort of confusion because this isn't always kept in mind. We forget that. And then there is confusion, well what are you asking, well are you asking on a relative sense or an absolute sense and that could be really clear.

R: You have to look really deep into the answer that I give. And try to understand what the answer means to you personally. To the one who asked the question. There are some people who ask me a question individually or personally, I can speak to you in a relative sense and there are some people I can speak to in an absolute sense. So I always answer the question differently. But the answer is important and try to understand what it means for you personally. The person who asked the question.

That's why when five people asked the same question there might get five different answers. So the rest of you, simply realize that the answer is particularly to the person who asked that specific question. But again there is only one answer to all the questions and that is all is well. There are no mistakes, there is nothing wrong, everything is perfect just the way it is. Feel good about yourself. See only reality wherever you look. Do not concern yourself too much with sadhana of any kind but rather come to the conclusion yourself that you do not exist as you appear and that you are totally free right now.

SN: When you say the you are free in a sense what that means is that there is no you to be free. That's what freedom is?

R: Yes. It means that you are totally free. That you never existed as you or I, you are freedom.

SN: See I used to have a tendency to think when you said you are free going back into the relative, thinking that there is something called freedom and there is such a thing that experiences that freedom but in actuality freedom lies in the loss of the self. (R: There is only freedom.) Right, there is no one that is free? Even the idea of freedom I mean the way I see it is only emptiness. And that emptiness is freedom. (R: Freedom, emptiness is synonymous. There is only freedom.)

SH: It is confusing when you say you are free because there is no you that's free?

R: Sure but when I talk to you I have to address you somehow. I can't say, "Hey freedom." (students laugh) (SH: It's a linguistic difficulty. Language is structured in terms of dualism and we're speaking in absolutes and it doesn't work.) Therefore when I speak to you like this understand what I'm talking about. When I say, "You are free," it means freedom is your very nature. And there is no you, but you are free. (SH: But that is sure open to misunderstanding.) It depends on the person. There are some people no matter what I say who realize freedom, absolute, harmony, consciousness. They know that's the way I talk about it, that's where they are, it's different, there is nothing else. And there are people that need to be told, "You are free." The thing that you think is you, is really freedom. (SH: Well that is the Self. And the me that you think is me doesn't exist?) That is why you are only freedom. What you believe is you is freedom not you. (SH: Okay, I'll accept it.) (laughs)

SB: I always thought that consciousness was the soul, that the soul itself is pure consciousness. But you don't... (R: No.) What is the soul? Soul is supposed to be beyond the mind but there is this soul...

R: The soul is what supposedly is left over when the body dies. (SB: Yeah.) The soul appears to be an entity but there is no entity because that would imply that there is the Self and there is an entity again trying to be the Self. (SB: Because it's just like on the teachings that talks about the higher planes it's supposed to transcend the mind and then you're pure consciousness.) Yes when you transcend the mind there is no soul there is only consciousness. The soul never existed and there never will be a soul. (SB: So you're saying soul is just a linguistic word meaning freedom, consciousness, God.) No soul doesn't mean that at all. (SB: No?)

SH: It's a Christian thing.

SB: Well it's still an entity that is going to... well if it's an entity that is going to reincarnate then it implies a subtle mind?

R: Look at soul as the same as looking at the body. It's just more subtle. The body doesn't exist, the soul doesn't exist. (SB: So pure consciousness is even beyond any kind of identification, entity.) Pure consciousness is something that is not effable. (SB: It's totality of reality.) It is silence. Total silence. There are no words to describe it. (SB: So it's like in Christian terms, self-abandonment? Or freedom from more or less?) You do not abandon something that never existed. (SB: It appears to be that you're not limited, it appears to be that you're transcending the self and dying to the self.) Why do you want to die to your Self? (SB: Die to the personal self.) Forget about those words, dying. Just know the truth about your Self. That you have absolutely nothing to do with dying, or a person, or a soul.

SH: That's a spiritual null event but it's very strong in the Christian condition. (R: Sure.)

SN: It's no difference from the idea consciousness and the Self because in the absolute sense there is no Self and no consciousness. Same thing as the soul, right?

R: There is no consciousness, there is no Self, there is no liberation, there is no non-liberation, they're just terms, they're just words.

SF: We use different words to try to bring down into the realm of the mind and it can't be thought of in the mind. We use all these words. (R: Exactly.)

SH: When he says it's ineffable, well you just defined ineffability.

SN: Robert in the beginning you said that if we have an inkling of who we are. What do you mean by that because if we have an inkling into who we are, even that is the mind.

R: Of course it's the mind but you've got to start some place. You've got to have an inkling and realize that you never were the body, that you never were the mind, that you are not the universe, you are not the world and you are not an inkling. (students laugh) So you have to have an inkling that you're not an inkling. (students laugh)

All is well!

Ed do you want to read the Jnani?

(tape ends) [TOC]

THE INVISIBLE WORLD
(THE FIVE PREREQUISITES)

31st October, 1991

Robert: Om, shanti, shanti, shanti, om, peace, peace. Good Evening.

SD: Trick or treat. (laughter)

R: Happy Halloween! We only have one witch in here today, in the back, wearing a Jnani tee-shirt. So let's say hello to the witch. (laughter) Hi witch. She's back there. She's wearing a Jnani tee-shirt. (laughter)

It's good to be with you again this wonderful Halloween, beautiful weather, all is well. Right?

Since the beginning of time saintly people have endeavored to bring peace and harmony into this world. The results have never been positive. We've had a Jesus, a Buddha, a Krishna, many others, many Bhodhisatvas, who have come back to bring peace to this world. Yet it has never happened. How come? Why can there not be peace in this world? The greatest of souls have tried to bring this peace here, yet for some strange reason they have all missed the point. This world is not a world of peace. There have been periods when there has been peace for a while. They didn't last long, and there were wars again, man's inhumanity to man, strife, confusion.

These great souls, for some strange reason, did not realize that there is another world interpenetrating this world, the real world, the invisible world, where there is total bliss, total love, infinite peace. This true world is called consciousness, for want of a better term. It is the state of absolute reality, yet it is the invisible world. The same thing exists in each one of us. In each being, in each animal, in each plant, in each mineral, in each vegetable, there is an inner force. There is consciousness, the reality of all substance.

This reality can only be felt by human beings, so-to-speak. The vegetable kingdom, the animal kingdom, the mineral kingdom, cannot understand this invisible world. Only human beings, so-to-speak, are able to transcend their humanity and rise above the so-called relative world, relative universe. Yet there have been very few who actually were able to see this. These very few beings, these very few people, would be considered selfish by most people, for they exclaimed, leave the world alone. Do not concern yourself with the world. The world is an illusion. Dive deep within yourself. Find yourself. If you discover the world within yourself, the invisible world, that is, which is the Self, then you will see what the rest of this world really is.

And there have been beings who were able to do this for some reason or another. They left this world deep within themselves and became the Self. When the Self was discovered it became very clear that the entire world is the Self, the entire universe is the Self, there is only the Self. And the world just does not exist, as it appears.

I have repeated this many times, yet it is very difficult for most people to grasp. The world does not exist. Only the Self exists. It is meaningless to most people and I don't blame them, for they cannot do anything with it, so it seems. There is nothing they can hang on to. If you attend a sort of metaphysical church, and you get into the occult, you are promised a better life. You are promised that you will transcend your problems, you will be healed of whatever ails you, you will become a multimillionaire, your troubles will be over. Yet that has never happened except to the people it's supposed to happen to.

But there have been those few people who somehow felt something within them, that there is a reality that knows absolutely nothing about this world. They cannot explain it but they feel it. And they begin to do the work required in order to transcend and transmute the entire universe, becoming free and liberated. They gave a name to these people, Jnanis, Sages, Masters. These beings, just by being themselves, become an asset to the world and to those who are ready to follow those steps.

I had a glimpse of this when I was thirteen years old. My mother used to take me to the country to buy chicken. She would pick out a live chicken and they would kill it for her. And I had to watch this. I used to turn my head in disgust and I would ask her, "Mom, why is this necessary?" And she'd tell me, "This is the way we do it. This is the right way. We have to eat." I could never understand or reconcile myself with the killing of animals in order to eat.

I didn't really put it into words but when I went to sleep at night I would ponder this. I would say to myself something like this, "If there is a God how can God allow the slaughter of thousands of cattle, millions of pigs, chickens, what have you, so that human beings can be the cemetery to dead flesh?" And sometimes I would stay awake all night thinking of these things. "How can God allow this?"

Little by little, after months of pondering these things, it was revealed to me. I don't remember if it came in a flash or over a period of time, but I realized what we call God is invisible. This God is not a person, place or thing, but is totally invisible and is all-pervading, omnipresent. And if God were "love" how can these dastardly things taking place to animals be happening?

I came to realize that the invisible world of God has absolutely nothing to do with the so called human universe, with the relative universe. I somehow was able to comprehend that the world is an appearance, for it cannot be apart of God since God was all-pervading, omnipresent, and God was love. Therefore this couldn't take place in the kingdom of God. Yet it appeared as if it did take place. It must be an illusion.

I came to the conclusion that the whole world, the whole universe has absolutely nothing to do with the kingdom of God, and what my position was, my job was to discover this truth for myself. For at that time I didn't make the transition into total consciousness. I simply pondered these things, night after night. I was able to reconcile myself with the whole universe.

From that time on I came up with the statement, "All is well, and everything is unfolding as it should." These things didn't bother me too much any longer for I felt intuitively, "This is an illusion. It appears to be happening. This is a world of appearances." And I became contemplative, quiet. I no longer tried to resolve things. I sort of developed a witness consciousness.

This is why today, when I look at this world and I observe the universe, I am not disturbed. People who do not understand this think I am selfish. I don't care. It isn't that. I have total compassion but I know for certain that this entire universe is maya. When I share these things with you, I relate my personal experience. You will hear these things again and again, for this is the way to bombard your consciousness with truth, until you finally give in and let go and surrender. Then you'll be part of the invisible kingdom and you will have eternal happiness.

We can never have real happiness as long as we believe the world is real. It's impossible! Due to the fact everything changes. No thing is ever the same and that is very evident. The whole universe is constantly changing. How can we have faith or believe in something like this, that is never the same? We have to make up our minds. Do we want to find reality or do we want to keep running around the world, becoming enthralled in the beginning, and disappointed in the end?

We begin to see it is the mind that keeps us in bondage. It is the mind that creates the body, the world and the universe. We cannot change other people. We've tried. It doesn't work. We cannot change the world condition. We've tried. It doesn't work. It makes no difference whom we elect president or what happens in the world. The conditions might change but there will never be a harmony and peace in this world.

It is only as we transcend and transmute the mind that we see something else. We actually see something else. We live in a different world. This is the reason I appear strange to some people, to most people, to all the people. I may see an accident, somebody dying. I will render assistance but I will be happy, for I do not see death as it appears. For some reason I look through that into the invisible world where there is joy and laughter, where there is peace and harmony.

What do you see? As you look in this world what do you see? You're seeing the result of your mind. Your mind has been conditioned since you were born. Not only that, but you have a mind that has been through many lives, so it appears. You've had many existences and many worlds as a male, as a female, and you're under the laws of karma.

Now I realize that some of you know that karma doesn't exist, reincarnation doesn't exist. That's easy to say but aren't you going through it? How can you say it doesn't exist when you feel it nearly every day? If you have been totally peaceful today, if you have had total joy today, total bliss today, total harmony today, then you can say there is no karma, and there is no reincarnation, and there is no God, and there is no universe and there is no body.

But you cannot say that when you are moved by the world. You cannot say this when the world becomes meaningful to you. You cannot say this when you forget these things and you become enthralled by the world because things are going your way.

As I have told you many times, if I wrote you a check for $200,000.00 tonight, how many of you would be back here next Sunday? (laughter) I'd probably never see you again.

SK: I'd be back for more money.(students laugh)

R: You're right! True! (students laugh) And also you will find that when you become totally bankrupt, or your wife or your husband leaves you, or your house burns down, you immediately call me on the phone. You come to satsang for you really want to get rid of your troubles, your problems, your physical ailments. That's what you really want.

Can you now see what I mean when I say, "You shouldn't go around saying I am absolute reality, and I am consciousness, and I am free, I am liberated, and that the world doesn't exist, and karma doesn't exist, and reincarnation doesn't exist?" Yet it exists for you because you're going through it. Do not allow your pride to get in the way. This is the ego telling you these things. You have to be totally honest with yourself. You have to see where you're really coming from.

A Jnani has absolutely nothing to do with this world. The world, the universe, becomes totally meaningless to a Sage. It's not a put on. It's not imagining that, "All is well," until some catastrophe hits you, and then you get upset, become violent, feel sorry for yourself, become depressed. You have to see where your at, where you're coming from, what you're really made of. You can never know the truth, that there is no world, there is no universe, there is no God, as long as you believe the body suffers, mentally or physically. Have you suffered mentally or physically today?

If you really want to get on the band wagon, (here goes these cliches again, get on the band wagon) if you really want to become a part of those few people in this world that have transcended the world, you have to do what they did.

The first prerequisite: Shut up. Be quiet. Stop debating. Stop arguing. Stop trying to prove a point. Even if someone knows something that you don't, whether they share it with you or not, makes no difference, for you have to come up with your own truth. There's really no one in this universe that can hand you realization on a silver platter.

Number two: You have to let go. You have to let go so completely that it becomes scary. You have to totally let go mentally. You have to stop depending on person, place or thing for your self-worth. You have to start depending on the infinite invisible, on what you cannot see, taste, touch, or smell or feel.

Number three: You must look at the world but never react to anything. You must watch your feelings and your emotions, observe them, and as they come into contact with you, you must become the witness, realizing that you are not those emotions. You are not your bad temper. You are not the depression. You are nothing that goes on in this world.

Number four: You must develop a tremendous humility, a stupendous humility. This is more important than anything else. If someone tells you something that you don't like to hear you do not become upset. You do not hold it in. You let it go through you and it dissipates, for it has no energy except the energy you give it. You are responsible to yourself. If you fool yourself you're just going to get disgusted in the end and give up all spiritual life, for you'll say you've gotten nowhere, nothing has happened, it doesn't work. It doesn't exist.

I suppose this is the reason I am with you. To tell you, "Yes, there is an invisible realm of perfection beyond this world, interpenetrating this world, that makes this world look like kindergarten." Yet you must be able to see it yourself.

Number five: You have to want it so much that you don't want it. You have to have such a strong desire to be free that all desire stops. When all desire stops there is a quietness, a stillness, that takes place within you. It is only when this stillness, this quietness, comes when you're able to see clearly, not with your physical eyes, but with your spiritual eye, not with your little I, not with the I-thought, but with the I-am. And you will see in all directions. You will see up, you will see down, you will see sideways, you will see backwards. The only thing you will see is total perfection which is another name for pure awareness. You have to take this thing seriously and you're not to be serious about this thing at all. You have to reject everything yet you also have to accept everything. You have to surrender and you have to realize that you are the Self.

There is something inside of you that knows how to do all this. You can help by becoming quiet, by becoming still, by not making a lot of noise, not making a big commotion. Let the world do what it will, yet you become silent and peaceful, compassionate, have humility. Just watch, look, observe, quiet the mind. Be still and know that I am God.

SF: The only thing that didn't feel right was when you said that the great Masters were not aware of the invisible world. Jesus said, "Heaven and earth will pass away but my words will not pass away."... (tape break) ...and Maharshi said, "There's only one consciousness equally distributed everywhere," and then he went on from there.

SD: Yes, I wondered about that too. Did you really mean they didn't realize it or...

R: I was speaking of those Masters, those great beings, that tried to make the world a better place in which to live.

SF: Seems to me that they were trying to get us to see that there is an invisible world.

R: Those who have been trying to tell us to go within, and the change must come from within, are the true teachers. But those who try to improve the world and try to improve the world to make this a better world, have not tasted ultimate reality.

SF: But you wouldn't put Christ and Buddha and Krishna in that category, would you?
(R: No.) Okay

SD: You mentioned an expression, Bhodhisatva. What does that mean?

R: Bhodhisatva. It's a Buddhist tradition that when you become enlightened you do not go away, but you come back to help others become enlightened. (SD: Would that be the same as a Jnani?) Not really. Most of the Bhodhisatvas are beings who try to uplift the race.

SF: Change the world.

R: To make this world a better place in which to live. But when the realization comes that the world never existed to begin with, trying to make the world a better place to live is ridiculous.

SD: You often mention the words transcending and transmuting and I wonder if you could define them both so we'll know the difference.

R: Transmuting is a chemical change that takes place, a total change, a total chemical change that takes place in the body and you become a different person, a different being. When you transcend something you go through it from one experience to the next. And transcendental work is when you go from one step to the next step, to the next step, to the next step. But when something is transmuted there's a complete alchemy, a total change into a totally different being. (SD: And that could happen to a self-realized person?) That happens to a person, yes. When a person realizes the truth as expressed and intelligently looks at reality, effortlessly, entirely, then all of a sudden, like a flash of light, there's a transmutation, and you become totally free. (SD: So transcending is sort of taking an over-view about things?) Transcending is when you go from step to step. You go higher and higher. But transmuting is when you do it all at once. (SD: Oh, thank you.)

SH: What happens chemically in the transmutation process?

R: The brain chemical changes to begin with. The brain cells, they seem to all of a sudden take on a new reality and they become the total servant of the mind. They no longer have their programming. All the programming disappears. The eons of programming, the past, is dead. It becomes totally annihilated, and you become a new person, an expansive person. (SH: And this is purely a chemical change?) It's a chemical change in the beginning.

SD: Is it both chemical and spiritual? It sounds like it.

R: It's the same thing. The brain surrenders to the mind, so-to-speak. The entire programming of the brain gives up to the mind, lets go. All the circuits become dead.

SH: It also affects the body too? (R: It affects the body, Yes.)

SF: I had an experience once with LSD. Somebody said it's all right to be Fred. I never had thought that was so. (R: It's all right to be Fred?) When I had LSD. (R: Oh.) And I knew that was so, and the world was all right, and God was in his heaven, and all was right with the world. But as soon as I came down all the thoughts and conditioning came back into my mind, and that's where I am now. But I did experience it. I knew every-thing's okay. I think that maybe with the LSD the chemical change took place and all those thoughts were put in abeyance for the time being. Want to comment on that?

R: With some people, when they take drugs such as LSD and other drugs, they're able to see and experience what you've experienced. But there are some people who have bad trips and they don't have that experience at all. But of course, as you've just explained, you come down from it and you have to keep taking it again and again, and soon you become immune to it and you have to take three times as much to have the same experience, and then the experience becomes less and less. (SF: Well I had this feeling that probably God didn't want me to fool with the stuff, so I quit it.)

SD: Would it be though, a moment of realization? Not lasting perhaps, but would that be realization for that brief time period?

R: To an extent, not complete realization. That gives you a taste of what realization is. (SD: Because I had a friend who had a similar experience and he said he experienced a complete loss of ego, and even though when he came down he couldn't get it back, neither could he ever quite forget that feeling.) It gives you more a feeling of bliss that takes you way up there, where you know that all is well. But it doesn't take you completely through.

SJ: Robert, when you're talking about the deadening of the... whatever happens to the brain, whatever you were saying that way, is that why if one recalls a memory, a picture of the memory never arises and no sense of reality arises, like just a thought or a reflection of a thought that never really existed. (R: What are you referring to?) Well in the brain like you might come up with a memory that at age seventeen you went to India or whatever happened, and there's no picture with the memory. All the elements that call that a memory aren't there any more. It's just a verbal memory almost. (R: Are you speaking of the Sage?) Yes, after that occurs where the brain function deadens.

R: The brain no longer functions. But then, as you say, there is something there that remembers certain things spontaneously. (SJ: Right, but it's totally hollow. There's no picture of the memory, no reality to the memory.) This is true. Yes, you do not remember like ordinary people. There is something there. Certain things you can remember but there is no difference between those things and the present, or the past or the future. (SJ: They're all hollow?) It's all one. (SJ: And it's all nothing. There's no substantialness to it at all.) Yes. It has no substance.

SD: And that would be transmutation, right?

R: That's transmutation. There are many times when I remember something, yet I don't know if it happened yesterday, or if it happened twenty years ago, or if it happened many life times ago. But sometimes certain things come to me and I wonder where they came from. Everything becomes combined and becomes one.

SH: Do you just ignore them when they arise? When they occur? (R: I just watch them.) Watch them going past? (R: Yes.)

SF: I have something I'd like to check out. One of the beatitudes says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," and I'm wondering if the heart is the center of the being, and if it's pure, there are no contaminants in it, and the contaminants in the heart would be any thought, and if there's no thought, at that point God can be seen, and then we have to go into what that phrase means, which would mean pure consciousness, or atman, or Brahman or whatever other word might be put to the ultimate reality.

R: Actually what it means is when you are pure in heart you become God. You become the absolute reality. (SF: It would be nice. Except it's already so. Is that not correct?) So why don't you believe it? (SF: I try.)

SD: How do we get from intellectual understanding, like he's saying, where we understand it and yet we understand it with the mind, and the mind is what were trying to get rid of.

R: By looking at the words that are spoken with deep intelligence, effortlessly. (SD: And witnessing is that what you're referring to?) Observing, looking, watching or of course, inquiring, "To whom does this come?" Whatever method suits you. But many beings have awakened simply by looking at the situation, observing it, intelligently focusing on it, and awakening can occur.

SV: What do the words "intelligently focusing on it" mean can you explain the meaning?

R: It means when you see "that" alone. When you look at the words, or the phraseology, or the situation, or the reality, and you're able to see it with wisdom. When you see the total picture as something real, something of substance, you are intelligently looking at the situation, and feeling the reality of it, and that causes an awakening to you.

That's when you look at a situation, say you look at Dana, and you really see her. You see through the maya. You do not see the outer layer but you look through everything and you see her as she really is. That's looking at Dana intelligently, effortlessly. You're looking at the spiritual Dana and that causes you to awaken.

SD: I have a hard time relating to this, but would the real Dana be the Self?

R: The real Dana is the Self. (SD: So that's what we would look at?) He sees you as energy. (SD: As energy and as part of the oneness of all things?) As spirit, as reality. (SD: So he would see me as himself.) Something in him has grasped you as the real person, as the real you, which is himself. That's why he awakens, because he becomes what he saw.

SJ: Robert, could I read something. Someone wrote me something that explains this also, somewhat succinctly. (R: Someone wrote you a letter?) Yeah. (R: Go ahead.) I'm going to read a little bit of the long version it's very short anyway but... (Jay reads)

"The past, present and future are projected from the stateless state, the transcendental fourth state, Turiya. You witness these states as on a cinema screen which is not affected by the states. Find out the substratum... (I guess is the most important part right here) ...Find out the substratum of these states. "Who am I" who experiences these states? Find out from where the thought I arises from. Keep quiet, don't move your mind, make no effort. Just in this no second make a leap."

R: That's good. Yes. Thank you.

SJ: It seems the most direct is just to get to that point and, whether you make a leap or not, whatever that really means, it's just to get to that point of total stillness, effortless, and then dive into it, whatever it all is, and that's the direct way. (R: Yes, that's good.)

SH: And at that point the seeing is the being.

R: The seeing becomes the being. Yes. (SH: You see Dana as she truly is.) And then you become that. (SH: And that's what you are.)

SJ: Nothing conceivable to the mind whatsoever, so it's no use even talking too much about it. Just doing that. (R: The mind has absolutely nothing to do with it.)

SD: So the word seeing is really being used the same way you would use the word perceiving. (R: Yes.) Not seeing... (R: Not with your eyes. Perceiving your reality.)

R: It is not as difficult as it sounds. No, actually all those things that were talking about happen instantaneously. It all happens in a second.

SL: So Robert, does that mean that we do have very short periods of enlightenment, when you say it happens within a second?

R: I was speaking of the entire experience of enlightenment. The experience that you never come back from. (SJ: Transmutation.) The whole thing happens in an instant.

SD: In other words one minute were asleep and the next we're awake... (R: You're awake. Just like you woke up, right.) ...and that's it.

SF: Like gun powder. That's what Maharshi said. (SJ: What was it?) It comes like gun powder that's a simile to what Bhagvan used. (SJ: But I mean don't be fooled. That's how it came to him, you know, if it doesn't come like gun powder then don't be confused about that.) He said also, there's dry wood and damp wood.

(silence)

SF: There is apparently one truth that we can learn from psychedelic drugs and that is there are states of consciousness than the one we ordinarily live in day to day. (R: Yes, true.) That's the one thing that we can learn. (R: Umm, right.) The other stuff is no more or less important than our daily experiences in this state of consciousness.

R: Are you still taking LSD? (SF: Sir?) Are you still taking LSD? (SF: No that was twenty five years ago. No I got the idea I wasn't supposed to fool with it. It was 1965 or 1964.)

SD: You remember, you retain that knowledge.

SF: Of course it's just in the mind, better there than not I suppose. (SH: What isn't?)

(silence)

SF: One thing I might say Robert, I come up here with these intellectual concepts. I realize they're of limited value. But to have you corroborate my understanding makes me feel better. Okay?

R: Everything you say Fred is appreciated. (SF: Thank you sir.) We wouldn't know what to do without you. (SF: I do not know how to take that?) (students laugh)

SV: Take it a good way. (SF: Yeah thank you.) You got to use it to take somehow. (laughs)

SD: I think the value of that I get from what you say Fred is that you've studied so much and what you do is corroborate with all the Masters by saying the same thing. Because you bring up different Masters and their teachings which you corroborate with Robert and that to me was the most thrilling moment in my life when I realized that they were all saying the same thing. So that is the value I get from your talking about.

SF: That is what awakened an interest in Eastern philosophy. Do you know a guy named - an Australian who wrote some stuff under the name of Muni sadhu?

R: What's the name? (SF: He wrote under the pen name of muni sadhu? He wrote that...) Oh he was a disciple of Ramana? (SF: Yeah he was a devotee.) I think I know him.

SF: He was an Australian. I don't know his real name but he wrote that in these tradition, they never contradict one another. And I didn't understand it like I do now but it was enough to awaken an interest and that was part of my karma.

R: True, real Sages don't contradict each other. It is the disciples that cause the problems. (laughter) (SF: They argue, I'm right and you're wrong.) My Master is better than your Master. (SF: Sir?) My Master is better than your Master. (laughter)

SF: Sai Baba is different from Oral Roberts. (laughter) (SF: But not too different from Jerry Palmer.) Or Jimmy Swaggert.

R: Or Pee wee Herman. (laughter)

(silence)

R: Would you like to read the Jnani Mary? (SM: Oh yes.)

(Mary reads the the confessions Jnani, refer to beginning of this book.)

R: Thank you Mary. Do we have any announcements?

(Announcements for the return of transcripts after xeroxed and general talking)

R: Next week Henry will give us all foot stools. (SH: I'll be glad o hand them out, if you bring them.) We're going to have a thanksgiving dinner on Sunday after thanksgiving. Starting at 1:30 we'll have music, festivities. Henry will do a soft shoe routine.

SD: And we all bring a main dish right? A vegetarian main dish? (R: Yes.) I'd like to see you do this Henry.

SH: He's just an old joker.

SD: Those are nice soft slippers that you wear.

SH: He doesn't know that I'm only a tap dancer not that soft shoe stuff.

R: We have some prashad.

S: Thank you Gerry.

(tape ends) [TOC]

Transcript 108

BE YOUR SELF!

3rd November, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to be with you again. All is well.

Your time is getting shorter. How many more years do you think you have left in this body?

S: Too many.

R: That's true. You never know when you're going to leave. Could be an hour, could be a day, a week, a month, a year. What are you doing with yourself in the meanwhile? What do you do with yourself every day? What are your concerns, your attachments? Think about those things, for this determines what is going to happen to you. There is absolutely nothing on this earth that has anything to do with your spiritual life. All of your dreams, your earthly dreams, your desires, your needs and your wants are all nonsense. They seem important, but they're total nonsense. You're not going anywhere when you attach yourself to worldly things. You're just spinning around, getting nowhere.

It's difficult for most people to understand, that you can sit in a chair, and something will happen within you which will take care of all your needs, your wants. And everything that's going on in your life, will be taken care of in the right way. You think you have to be the doer. You think, you believe, you have to run around and make things happen. Nothing can be further from the truth than this. There is a power and a presence that will take care of everything for you.

Your job is to relax, to take it easy, to be peaceful. To observe, to watch, to look, never to react. As you begin to go deeper within yourself, whatever you need to know will be revealed to you. Whatever you have to do will be done. Yet what you really are has absolutely nothing to do with these things. Your true nature, Brahman, absolute intelligence, pure wisdom, sat-chit-ananda, is always available. It is always there. You are that.

To see your true Self, and to feel your true Self, and to be your true Self, you simply have to negate everything else in this world. By negate everything in this world, I mean you have to look at a situation and never react to it, and realize this is not you. Good things, bad things, whatever you call good and bad, they're all the same. They are not you. You are not that. You are absolute freedom. You have nothing to do with anything.

The world appears like a dream. It comes and it goes. You know by now that everything is subject to the law of change in this world, in this universe. Everything is going to change whether you like it or not. Why be disappointed? Why be upset? Change is the nature of living, yet what you really are, your real nature, can never change.

Identify with your real Self. Again, how do you do this? By not identifying with the world. When you do not identify with person, place or thing, you are automatically identifying with yourself, and then you become your Self. In other words you become your Self by not being yourself.

You have to awaken, now. And let go of the dream world. Many of you are so concerned with your future. You're so worried about your past. You have all sorts of plans in your mind. You're conditioned to believe this, to believe that. This is what is keeping you back from waking up. You must let go, in it's entirety, of any hold the world has on you. You have to stand naked before God. In the last analyses you have to be your Self without the help of books, teachers, systems, governments, religions. You have to step out of that rut of your conditioning. Become totally unconditioned, as if you were just born. Reading too many books simply adds to the confusion.

As you begin to dive deep within yourself, without the help from books, from teachers, you make mistakes in the beginning. As you learn to dive deeper within yourself, as you learn to go within, those mistakes are good, for they push you forward. Never judge yourself. Never put yourself down. Never believe that this is too hard for you, or you have too much bad karma, or something is holding you back. Nothing can be further from the truth.

The only thing that is holding you back are your thoughts. Get rid of your thoughts and you'll be home free. Quiet your mind. Keep yourself still and leave the world alone. When I say leave the world alone it becomes confusing somewhat. I mean mentally. Keep your mind empty and your body will do things that it came to this earth to do. Your body will not sit still all the time and do nothing. But you can be still in your mind and be thought free. No judgments, no fears, no bewilderment, no apprehensions. Not thinking about tomorrow, forgetting about yesterday, living in the now. Being spontaneous and leaving the world alone.

It's not hard living that way. Put a stop to your thoughts by inquiring "To whom do these thoughts come?" by observation, by being the witness. As you become the witness to your thoughts your thoughts will slow down. It is only when you go along with what your thoughts tell you, by feeling something. In other words, your thoughts may bring some negative condition to you. And so instead of just being the witness and just observing, you react. You react with fear, with anger, with hate, all sorts of emotions. This is what pulls you down. This is what keeps you embedded in maya, in the mortal dream.

Begin to take hold of your thoughts. Grab them. Watch them. Observe them. Inquire from where they came. Again as you do this process your thoughts will subside. This is the way to stop your mind, by not paying attention to it. However it appears difficult to some people. Yet it's not that difficult at all. You just simply remember, every time you think, the thought is nonsense. It makes no difference what it is. You do not get caught up in it. You observe, you watch yourself thinking, like a third party. You're observing, you're watching the thoughts. Then they do not come back as strong anymore. They become weaker and weaker.

But if you're like most people you get caught up in your thoughts. As many of you know, one thought leads to another thought, leads to another thought and another thought, and there is a whole story going on in your mind. And you feel it in your emotions and you take action. That's how the average person lives. But I am saying grab hold of it. Stop it before it mixes into your emotional system. Now it makes no difference what the thought is. The thought can be good or bad. It can be about the past or about the future. It makes no difference what the thought is. You have to put a stop to your thinking. That's the only way you're going to become free and liberated. There is nothing else you can do to become liberated than to stop your thinking.

Liberation of course is your very nature. When you stop your thinking the outer shell melts away and your real nature, which has always been, becomes self-evident. So do not feel the world, feel other people, feel the grass or the mountains. Rather be yourself. For after all, you know by now you are the world. You are the mountains. You are the grass. You are the sky. You are others. It all comes out of your own mind. You give birth to the universe. You create God in your own image. You create angels and you create solar systems, various planes where you go after you die. You create all these things in your own mind. For where else would they come from, except your own thinking?

Vehemently make up your mind that you're going to take complete control of yourself. Start from now. Say to yourself "I will never again allow my mind to rule me. I will never again allow my mind to control me. From this moment on, I am in charge," and make it your business to catch yourself when your mind begins to think. Grab it at the thought, before it starts to mix with your emotions.

There are many ways to do this again. You can grab it by inquiring "To whom does this come? Who's feeling this thought? Who's thinking this thought?" And you say "I am." Then inquire "Where did the I come from? What is the source of the I?" Or you simply observe the thought. Watch the thought. Become perfectly still, and allow the thought to do what it wants. By just observing, the thought will not continue. It will slow down and stop. Before you know it you'll be free. You will awaken. It's that simple. It's up to you to do it.

(end) [TOC]

Transcript 1099

CONSCIOUSNESS IS THE ONLY POWER

7th November, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It's good to be with you again this beautiful Thursday night. How are you all feeling?

Students: Great!

R: You're sure about that? You should feel great. If you only knew who you were you would never feel anything but great; if you were only aware that you are not what appears. You are neither male nor female, Christian nor Jew, black nor white. You just are. There is no thing that comes after that. You just are. You are that. And that is the most beautiful, joyous, happiest, whatever you can ever be. You are the delight of the universe. You are a total joy to yourself. You are infinite love. Everything about you is beauty and grace, just the way you are. And all you have to do is to awaken to that.

There are many of us when confronted by some hostility, confronted by some problem, having to make a decision, for instance you are at work and the president of the company calls you in, about to give you a promotion, but you don't know why he or she is calling you in, and you begin to fear you might be losing your job, or you have to make a major decision at home, or perhaps the doctor has just diagnosed you with cancer, when things like that happen instantaneously, many of us do not have the patience, or the time, or the energy to practice self-inquiry.

Many of us cannot begin by saying "To whom does this come?" when we are immediately confronted by a situation. We can't just say "I feel this. Who am I?" We can practice self-inquiry when we have peace and quiet, usually, when there is no immediate decision we have to make. But what do we do when we have to make an immediate decision, or somebody just told us something we have to react to? What do we do? There is something you can do. You can immediately say to yourself "Consciousness is the only power." That is a very powerful statement. Quite a few people who have called me and told me about a certain problem, and I gave them this to say, have reported they've had wonderful results from doing this. Before you start to think about the problem, or solution, or reaction, you say to yourself "Consciousness is the only power."

Now let's dissect this and see what it really means. Consciousness is absolute reality. It is all-pervading, omnipresence. It is pure intelligence. It is omniscient, omnipotent. It is pure awareness. There is no place it begins or ends. It is bliss, total joyous bliss. There are no mistakes in consciousness. There is no such thing as good or bad in consciousness. Consciousness is conscious of itself, and there is nothing else. Nothing else exists. "Consciousness is the only power," means that there is not consciousness and you, or consciousness expressing as you, or consciousness expressing as the universe. There is only consciousness. You have absolutely nothing to do with it. You don't count. You are a nonentity. You don't even exist. But consciousness is. As you make this statement with feeling the truth always prevails. Therefore you can rest assured that whatever happens after that is divine right action, perfection. Once you make that statement you no longer have anything to concern yourself about. You let go completely. Worries cease. Reaction is halted. Fears diminish. Anger is totally annihilated. You are completely free when you make that statement throughout your entire being, that consciousness is the only power.

For all these years you have believed that you are a human being, having to make decisions, having to do things or they will never get done. Now you are beginning to see that consciousness is everything. It takes care of everything when you get yourself out of the way. You get yourself out of the way by becoming still. Once you have affirmed to yourself that consciousness is the only power you will notice that your mind becomes quiet. There is no longer anything to argue about, no longer anything to confirm, to remember, nothing to react to. Consciousness has spoken and you are free. This doesn't mean that you have awakened or that you have become self-realized. This appears to work for you at a so-called human level.

Now here is the paradox. At the human level nothing really exists, yet at the same time things begin to work for you. This is why this teaching is beyond words and thoughts. Do not attempt to analyze these things as I talk to you. Do not attempt to figure it out in any way. Just let it happen. Reality, as consciousness, exists and you don't. Yet when you say "Consciousness is the only power," something happens to your humanhood. You become happy. You couldn't care less if they dropped an atom bomb on your head. You couldn't care less if the doctor did tell you you've got two weeks to live and you've got cancer or whatever. Or you've been promoted to president of your company. It's all the same. You feel alive. You're not alive as most people feel. It's a universal aliveness. You sort of feel that your cells, your atoms, are connected to the entire universe. And you do know that all is well. You feel wonderful. This happens just by saying "Consciousness is the only power."

Think how you can use this. Your mother in law calls you on the phone and starts screaming. You watch TV. You see all the news that's going on in this world. Something is going on in your life. You have to meet something, somewhere, on a certain date. Instead of thinking of the problem, of the situation, whether it's good or bad makes no difference, you say "Consciousness is the only power." It's really amazing at the results some people have had with this. You can also do this when you first awaken in the morning, as soon as you wake up. There are some of us who cannot catch the I. That's really funny. Some people are calling me on the phone and saying "I'm trying to catch the I every morning when I wake up, but it eludes me, runs faster than I can catch it, because I immediately become concerned with the world. The I has really taken over and I missed it." This happens a lot with some people. It is true you should try and catch that gap between awakening and sleeping, that gap in between, and watch the I, watch the I going from the heart to the brain, when you become aware of the body, and you become aware of the world and the universe. Then you reverse the position, following the I-thought back from the brain into the heart. This is the practice you should do. Yet many of us do not have the time. We're in a hurry, we get up too late. We cannot continue this. But you can say to yourself "Consciousness is the only power." You'll find just by saying that you start to feel good. You've got control. You feel power. Say to yourself right now "Consciousness is the only power." Feel how meaningful that is. It removes all doubt. It helps in the thinking process. It allows the thinking process to stop, to slow down. This is a tool you can always use.

Of course if you can know the truth about yourself when you awaken all the time, that is even better. If you can realize the truth about your body, that you don't have a body, that you do not have a mind, you are total freedom, total joy.

What I'm trying to say is you have to use whatever method you have to use to remove the idea of humanhood and the world. Most of us live a hectic life. We always have to be somewhere. We always have to do something. We're always running back and forth. We don't even know where we are going sometimes. We think we're doing something important. We've got to be here, we've got to be there. In the long run does it really matter? It's hard to understand, for some of us, that by being quiet, and not rushing and hurrying, we can get more done than we ever imagine. You do not come to this earth in the appearance of a body in order to bog yourself down in employment and family and homes.

Now these things are fine if you use them correctly. There is nothing wrong with having employment a family, a home. But do not allow those things to possess you. By affirming to yourself "Consciousness is the only power," you free yourself from attachment. Yet there is more love, there is a greater compassion, there is a greater joy, greater peace. When you say "God is the only power," or "Consciousness is the only power," it's the same thing, something begins to happen. A subtle energy begins to take shape, begins to take form, and begins to take over your life. You then realize that you have no life of your own. You go forth in this world doing the things you came here to do, living your life as it appears. Yet you're no longer concerned. You're no longer hurried or worried. Fear has left you. Anxiety has left you. Anger has left you. And you become one of those rare beings that appear to exist in the world but are totally free.

What I am explaining to you here is that you do not have to be liberated to experience this state. As I always tell you, there are no steps to liberation. You either become liberated or not. But there are steps to sadhana, to spiritual practices, and you can climb upon these steps, going very high, to the top floor, where you are not liberated but you have total harmony in your life. By total harmony in your life I mean the problems seem to be there, but not for you. There is no longer a problem. You wonder how can this be. Well, for whom is the problem? For the ego, as you know, for the mind, for the body. And even though you have not transmuted into self-awareness, the appearance of the body rises to a higher vibration.

Remember, as I am explaining this, bear in mind that whatever I am talking about doesn't even exist. That's the wonderful thing about this teaching. I'm telling you a bunch of lies. Yet they appear to be true. Your humanhood appears to rise and you appear to have a good life, even though circumstances haven't changed.

What we're trying to do here tonight is to improve the status of your existence before liberation. Do not look for liberation. Do not desire anything. Most of you know this by now. Do not say to yourself "Oh Robert is saying these things that don't even exist. Why doesn't he just tell us that we are consciousness and get over with?" This is true to an extent. You are consciousness. You are God. You are absolute reality. You are choiceless awareness. But even if I say this to you some of you still have to deal with the world. You still have to get up tomorrow and go about your business and do whatever you usually do. And I know that many of you forget this teaching, for you get enmeshed in the world. The world grabs a hold of you. You begin to think about sex, about greed, about all kinds of things. This is normal for a human being.

Therefore we are talking tonight about how to rise above this, entertain a higher level of humanhood that doesn't exist, before becoming liberated. And you simply do this by affirming "Consciousness is the only power." You stop. You no longer think anything after that. You will find, as you say this, your thoughts will begin to stop by themselves. It's such a powerful statement that your mind is shocked into silence. You're actually shocking your mind. Your mind can't believe that you're saying this. Your mind is expecting you to say "I'm worried over this situation. I'm happy over this situation. This is going on in my life and that is going on in my life." And when you say "Consciousness is the only power," the mind is stunned. It doesn't know what to do. And you begin to feel feelings you never felt before. You feel fantastic joy welling up within you. Now, if you've got time, it is then that you can practice self-inquiry, if you have time, because you have stopped your mind. But some of you tell me when you first get up in the morning trying to practice self-inquiry is fruitless. You just don't have the time. You're thinking about where you are going to go and what you've got to do. But when you exclaim to yourself "Consciousness is the only power," your mind starts to become quiet. Then you can ask yourself "To whom is this quietness come?" and you can go into self-inquiry.

Do not allow a day to go by where you do not practice something. Never allow your mind and your body to dictate to you how things are. Do what you're doing and never regret it. Once you say to yourself "Consciousness is the only power," what you do after that is good and right, no matter how it looks and how it turns out. That's a little secret. You have to hold on to your statement. In other words, let's say you say to yourself "Consciousness is the only power." Then you go outside and you find that your car has been stolen. Does that mean that it didn't work? Does that mean something is wrong? This is where we separate the men from the boys and the women from the girls. Your car being stolen is a blessing for you, a blessing in disguise. I know it doesn't appear that way when it happens, but if you have firmly affirmed that consciousness is the only power, how can there be a mistake after that? Where would the mistake come from? As we discussed previously, what we call consciousness is all-pervading. There is no room for anything else. There cannot be something evil or something good when consciousness is the only power. Therefore, when you make that statement, flow with everything. Flow with everything. By flow with everything I mean observe, watch, look, but do not react. Your body may be in pain. You may feel awful. Or you may feel healthy as a horse. When you're healthy or sick, or happy or sad, this has absolutely nothing to do with your unfoldment.

This is something you really have to understand. We're not trying to exchange bad humanhood for good humanhood. We don't even think about humanhood. We're not even thinking about the condition or the situation. We observe it. We watch it. We look at it, but leave it alone. Now if you can do this, I can assure you, you will become one of the happiest people who ever lived. And this is before you become self-realized, before you awaken. You'll be radiantly happy.

It is also true, when you do awaken, that kind of happiness disappears, for that's sort of human happiness, to an extent. Do not try to figure it out, do not try to analyze it, for when you do you're using your mind, and your mind has been programmed, conditioned, since you were born, and before. Therefore whenever you try to analyze anything, whenever you try to figure out situations and conditions, you're using your conditioned mind. From a conditioned mind there can never be peace, there can never be real joy, there can never be real love. The mind has to be unconditioned to feel these things. But when you say "Consciousness is the only power," just by saying those words something subtle takes place within your being. I can't really explain what happens but I can assure you, you'll like it.

As you work on yourself this way, as your perception becomes deeper, the perception into yourself, at that time you can have an instant awakening, becoming totally free also. The transmutation takes place at that time. You become liberated, free. Yet if you look for this, if you expect this, it will elude you. What I'm trying to say is, keep yourself to the point where you are saying "Consciousness is the only power." This will lift you high by itself. It will take care of everything.

You always believe you've got to do something. You've got to lift yourself up, or you've got to know the right words, or you've got to be in the right state of mind. This is not true. People who have been liberated have become so because of a quiet mind, by not really thinking about these things, by not really desiring anything like that, by not caring about this. When you're saying "Consciousness is the only power," you're not thinking of what you want or what you don't want. You're not really trying to improve your humanhood. You're not trying to decide what is good and what is bad. You're simply making that statement in nothingness. It's a blind statement. It's something that needs no explanation, no defining. You simply exclaim it and leave it alone.

Let's use an example. Say you go for your yearly check up and the doctor tells you you've got diabetes, and you're going to lose all your toes, and your fingers, and your tongue and your eyeballs. That wouldn't be so bad. It could be worse. When you say "Consciousness," to yourself "is the only power," you're not meaning to say this is not going to happen to me. Nothing like that at all. You have no reasoning behind it. There are no wants or desires. I want to make this perfectly clear. You are making that statement in the silence and you're not trying to get a better reading for yourself from the doctor. You're not trying to change anything. You're not trying to do anything. You're simply making that statement "Consciousness is the only power." And you can do that over and over again, as many times as you like, during the day. Even if nothing is happening you can say this. Do not desire anything. Do not look for anything. Do not expect anything to happen. Do not believe your life style is going to be changed, or you're going to become liberated. Simply make that statement.

So when the doctor told you you've got diabetes, you make that statement, you smile, and you do not think about what the doctor told you, whether it's true or not, right or wrong, false or not false. You keep all your energy on that statement "Consciousness is the only power." Everything will take care of itself. You'll be delighted with the results. You can practice this any time, any where, for you're doing it to yourself. You're watching TV and you see the dastardly situations in the news, say to yourself "Consciousness is the only power." You're not trying to change anything. You are not trying to do anything. You are merely affirming the truth and the truth will make you free. Feel free to ask any questions about this.

S: Robert, instead of the word consciousness, the things that come to my mind is the equivalent "I am is the only power." Would that be appropriate?

R: If it works for you it's good. (S: The other thing was, when I say "I am is the only power," would I go into the self-inquiry "Who am I?") No, not necessarily. Stick to that. If you feel inclined to practice self-inquiry you can do so, but I was referring to using this method when you are confronted by life's vicissitudes.

S: Is it equal to say "Consciousness alone is. All else is illusory?"

R: Don't make it too long. You can say that. Just say "Consciousness alone is." (S: "Consciousness alone is" isn't any longer than "Consciousness is the only power.") But don't say "All else is illusory." (S: Well, that's not a necessary comment. It reminds you of the state of affairs.) Exactly. You can say that, yes, if that's meaningful to you. But this is like ammunition we use in our everyday experience, in our everyday life. Because again, there are many of us that have to face the world day, after day, after day, after day. And perhaps we're in situations we're not happy with, or in a job we don't like, or there is something going on in our lives that seems to bother us. If you will use this method and just keep affirming "Consciousness is the only power," and leave it alone, you'll be surprised at what happens.

S: What do you mean exactly when you say keep affirming "but leave it alone?"

R: I mean when you affirm it do not try to break it up, or ask yourself what it means, or where you are going with it. (S: Say it several times, just don't think about it?) Exactly. Just say it to yourself. It's sort of like that experience I had when I was a kid, that I was telling somebody about. When I wanted something, I used to say "God, God, God," three times, and somehow it would appear. I never realized what I did, but when I said "God, God, God," three times, I never defined what I wanted, what I really was doing. My mind was just on what I said. In other words I sort of surrendered to the words "God, God, God," and I recall I never really went into what I really wanted. I think I told you the story about the violin. Did I tell you that? (S: Yes.) It's in one of the transcripts, yes. I wanted to play the violin and my mom thought it was a waste of time. She didn't think I could. She was right. But I wanted the violin in any case. So I went to sleep. I forgot about the violin to an extent. And I said "God, God, God." I fell asleep saying "God, God, God," three times in succession. And the next day an uncle of mine that I hadn't seen in years came by and brought me a violin. Of course I wrecked it. After playing with it for a day I got tired of it, broke it. So I suppose, from experience, there is something that happens when you make such a statement without any desire or motivation. Just to make the statement. There's more to life than meets the eye.

Many people in Advaita Vedanta feel the only time they can experience total happiness and joy is when they become liberated. The reason you can feel a higher sense of happiness before it happens is because of the fact that you are already liberated, and you don't know it. When I tell you to make that statement, you're making it in the face of liberation. You're not bringing anything to you from far away. You're not causing anything to happen, secret powers coming down of the sky, or something coming out of you, and make something good happen to you. You're speaking as a liberated person. Your nature is moksha, liberation. You are that from the beginning. Otherwise when you say "Consciousness is the only power," it will be nothing. It would be dead. Nothing would ever happen if you were not already liberated. The reason something does happen is because you're working from the standpoint of consciousness. You are already that. But you think you're human. Therefore what I'm trying to show you is even if you believe you are sort of human, by making that statement you can lose a good portion of your humanhood and lift yourself up to a higher plateau. Again it's very paradoxical because in one breath I say "You cannot become liberated from doing anything," and the next breath I'm telling you to use this method and you lift yourself up. But it's really the same thing. You are already the one and there are no others. You are that one, right now. That one is all-pervading, omniscient, omnipotent. That one is you.

S: Robert, if I think that something should be different than it is, it brings in the element of time. And time itself is not real. Is that correct?

R: Just by thinking that something should be different you are making a mistake. When you say "Consciousness is the only power," you're not trying to change anything. You're not trying to do anything. You're just resting in that statement. Yet everything will appear to change. Things will happen by itself.

S: Robert, is this the way it may work with this Advaita Vedanta dictum "I am Brahman," or "You are that?"

R: Yes, that is the same when you say "I am Brahman, I am Shiva," it's the same thing. But many times for westerners when you say "I am Brahman," you are saying "I am God." Therefore, when you have a problem and you say "I am God," you don't believe it, because you're involved in the problem. (S: It's blasphemy from the Christian position, which is our culture.) Of course. But even from our position we've been so brainwashed that some of us, when we say "I am God," we think we are committing a mortal sin. And when there is a problem staring us in the face, when some of us say "I am God," we don't believe it, because we say to ourselves "How can I be God and have this problem?" But when you say "Consciousness is the only power," you're leaving yourself out of it. And that's more believable for you because the I is left out, yet you're saying the same thing. You're playing tricks on your mind. That's all you're doing. Consciousness is I, consciousness is God. You're not saying "I am God," because you will not believe yourself. Yet when you say "Consciousness is the only power," what have I got to do with consciousness? Nothing. Yet the words themselves are very powerful. They will accomplish everything with everybody.

S: If you say "Consciousness alone is," that has to include you. (R: Yes.) There's no way around it. But you're not saying "I am God." (R: No.) Or "I-am consciousness." If you say "Consciousness alone is," that includes you as well as everything else.

R: It's the same thing as saying "I am God." (S: No, it's not the same thing because you don't really...) It's a very subtle way of saying "I am God," but actually means the same thing. (S: It's implying it.) Yes. (S: it's implying it without saying it.) And that's how you fool the mind. The mind will go for that.

S: But they say "Be still and know that I am God." But we have to have the stillness before we can say that.

R: I believe what they mean by that, they're telling the mind "Be still. Be still and know that I am. I am God." (S: If the mind is perfectly still will that knowledge automatically appear?) When the mind is perfectly still then God is. (S: That's all there is?) That's all. There's nothing else. (S: But there is no one there to know that.) The knower has been transcended.

S: When something good happens to a person, good or bad, we say it's his or her karma. But the fact of the matter is they're not individuals. So it can be said it's karma, but not it's his karma or her karma. Is that correct?

R: As long as you believe in karma, then karma will always grab you, and turn you in all directions. But when you ask "For whom is there karma?" and realize it's only for the personal I, then there is no longer any karma. As long as you believe you are the body then karma exists for you also, for karma only exists for the body. Karma does not exist for the Self. Karma only exists for the body and the mind. And when the body and the mind has been totally transmuted, where is there karma? It's gone. It never was.

(end) [TOC]

THE SILENCE OF THE HEART

10th November, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It is good to be with you again this wonderful Sunday afternoon. There's nothing else to do so you might as well come here, get out of the wind, come to a beautiful atmosphere, enjoy the trees, the view, the smog. It is good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

Always ask yourself "Why am I here?" It is always good to ask yourself this. I don't mean why are you in the universe? Why are you here in this room, in this class, at satsang? What do you want? What are you looking for? Remember, if you're looking for anything you're here for the wrong reason, for there is nothing that I can give you, really, that you haven't already got. There is absolutely nothing I can do for you. For I am not the doer. Neither are you. You are already fulfilled. Everything I have is yours. There is absolutely nothing lacking in you. You are spirit. You are not the body that appears to be a body. You are spirit, something absolutely different than what you can ever imagine.

How do you see yourself? What do you think you are when you think about yourself? Do you think you are a separate entity, striving, fighting for existence, trying to become enlightened? This is a great mistake. Everything that you can ever imagine that you want to be, you already are. You are the imperishable Self that has always been, that you always will be, beyond birth, beyond death, beyond experiences, beyond doubts, beyond opinions, beyond whatever it is your body is going through. Whatever thoughts your mind thinks, you are beyond that. You are the silence, the silence of the heart.

Know yourself. Whenever you think of yourself, think of yourself as the Self. Not the I-thought, not the personal self, but as the supreme energy, sat-chit-ananda, nirvana. You are that. If you really believed you are that you would be in total peace. There would be no thing in this world that can ever disturb you. You would have no doubts. You would have unalloyed happiness, total joy. It would make no difference what your body is going through, or what thoughts come into your mind, or what people are doing or are not doing, who is right, who is wrong, who is enlightened, who is not. You would never think things like this.

When you think you're human you have duality to contend with, right and wrong, healthy or sick, rich or poor, happy or sad, and the rest of it. But when you have transcended this you see yourself in a completely different light. You see yourself as the light, the light that shineth in the darkness. The eternal glow that can never diminish. Omnipresence, all-pervading. You are that one. You have always been that one. You are not what you think you are when you're sad, when you're angry, when you're upset. This is a lie. There is something within you that knows the truth. That is the truth. You are that.

Last Thursday I brought to your attention that I wish I could share the things with you that I feel, but they were ineffable. There are no words to describe these things. There is no language that can try to describe the realities, the pure awareness. No words. I received some phone calls from some of you, and they said "Robert, you can tell me how you feel, You can share it with me." A few people asked me this. I tried to explain, if I was able to share it with words, I would.

But that's not important. What's important to you is how do you feel? Never mind what's going on within me. If you understand who you are then you understand what is happening within me. Do not spend your time trying to determine what teachers are feeling or where they are coming from. Rather try to determine where you are coming from and who is it that thinks? Who is it that has a problem that they can't resolve? Who is it that believes that they want to become enlightened? Find out. Understand the truth about yourself. Go deeper within yourself. Stop thinking about the world and your problems, or whatever is going on in your life. That will resolve itself when you begin to understand that you are pure intelligence. Your so called personal life will always resolve itself, will always take care of itself. The power is within you. There is nothing lacking. Never compare yourself to anybody else. Look at yourself with your inner eye.

Think how many years you've been going through life believing you're a body, a mind, an ego, the situations you've been through, the agonies, the ecstasies, the dualities. You're beginning to see now that all of those things belong to the I-thought, to the personal self, which is not really you. You are total freedom, having absolutely nothing to do with the personal self. You simply have to ask yourself "Who is this personal self? Where did it come from? How did it arise? How did it get a hold of me and make me believe I'm human? That makes me feel I was born, and I have to die? What is this personal self? Where did it come from?" And as you follow the personal self, the I-thought, you'll begin to see it never existed. It was never born. It is absolute nothingness. And you'll become radiantly happy, full of love, full of peace.

So some people still ask me "When you say you feel love, what do you mean?" The love that I feel is totally unconditioned. This is the reason I can love you no matter what you do, no matter how you act, no matter where you come from, no matter what's going on. I can love you because I love myself. And there is only one Self. So the Self that I love is you. It's not separate. If I loved you as a separate entity I'd have a problem, for the separateness would show me different phases of your life. But I can't do that. I can only love, for the Self is love. It is not a personal love. It is all-pervading. So, as I am an embodiment of love, you are in that love also. There is only one love and that love is consciousness, and you are that.

People ask me when I see peace, what do I mean? I don't have to see peace where it's peaceful. I feel and see peace in every situation. Whatever there appears to be going on, there is peace. Just as in the center of a hurricane there is a peaceful circle, total stillness at the center of a hurricane. The same is true in the center of a tornado, in the cyclone. There is a center of peace. We are all that center. The true peace is you. The turmoil, the chaos that appears to be in this world, is not the truth. It is not reality. It is something that comes and goes. This too shall pass. But your center is God, consciousness, absolute reality, Brahman. Those are all synonymous. That is the peace that exists.

The reasoning behind this is that everything that appears is an image, an image that appears on the reality of life. There's reality, consciousness, and all of the vicissitudes of the world that go on all the time are superimposed on this consciousness, like a chalkboard. Images are drawn on the chalkboard. It never affects the chalkboard. They are erased. New images are drawn. The new images never affect the chalkboard. No thing affects the chalkboard. The chalkboard remains the same whether you decide to draw a fire, a hurricane, a murder, famine, death, or whatever you decide to draw. Wholeness, health, peace, birth, anything. They are all impostors. The chalkboard never changes.

Always think of yourself as the chalkboard. And all the things that go on in this world, try to feel them as images on the chalkboard, that change, change continuously. This will help you. It will help you to understand that you are not the conditioning that goes on in your mind. You are not what your eyes show you in this world. You are not the feelings you feel. You are not the things that you hear, the things that you taste. Those are all the images. You are totally absolute freedom, total harmony and joy. This is your true nature. Abide in this truth and become free.

(end) [TOC]

CONSCIOUSNESS AND MAYA

14th November, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It's good to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart.

Always remember that this is satsang. It is not a lecture, or a sermon or a speech. It is not Robert speaking to a group of disciples, or students, or whatever you want to call yourself. It is consciousness speaking to consciousness. And since there is only one consciousness you are actually speaking what I am speaking. You are feeling what I am feeling. There is only oneness, absolute reality, and you are that.

Try to remember this. There is consciousness. What you think you are, male or female, whatever your name may be, forget about that for a while. Think of yourself as omnipresence, all-pervading. Do not question it. Do not analyze it. Just allow it to take over, the presence, the power. It starts within your heart and begins to spread all through your body, encompassing your body. Your body merges with it and it continues to spread until all of us in this room have become it. We're no longer human. We have become it. It keeps on expanding and expanding until the entire world is it. It keeps on expanding, expanding, until all the galaxies, planets, stars and solar systems are it. It keeps on expanding, expanding until the entire universe is it. There is no longer anything that is separate from it. Everything is it. We may call it consciousness, the Self, absolute reality. This is it. This is your real nature.

What are you feeling? Try to let go of all your emotions, your preconceived ideas, all of your dogmatic beliefs, all about your body or about others. Allow your mind to remain empty. Feel that I am it, pure awareness. I have always been it. There never was a time when I was not it. The appearance of the body cannot fool me any longer. The world and all its manifestations cannot fool me any longer. The universe with its planets, and galaxies, and solar systems cannot fool me any longer. I can see through these things to the source. I can feel the source because I am the source. I have always been the source. There never was a time when I was not.

As far as thoughts are concerned, they do not exist. They can no longer bother me or make my life miserable. As far as other are concerned, there are no others. There is only the source. I can no longer be deceived. There is no thing that has ever transpired in my life that can hurt me. I forgive everyone and everything, and especially myself. I am the power, and the presence, and the glory. If I am that so is everybody else, so is everything else. All is well.

When you take a true picture of yourself, when you look at yourself, when you get up in the morning and you sort of become the witness to all of your actions, you will notice that you revolve around three words, I, me and mine. There is usually never a moment in your material life when you do not use these words. If every time you said I you were aware of what I really means, that would be a different story. But unfortunately we do not use I that way. When we refer to I we're talking about the body. We say "I feel wonderful, I feel sick, I feel happy, I feel sad, I feel this, I feel that." We also say "This is mine, this belongs to me, no one else can have it. It's mine alone." Me, me, mine, mine, I, I. We're always involved with those three words, aren't we? And this is what keeps us human. This is what keeps us back from realization. Those three words.

It would be difficult to speak without those words, for instead of saying "I feel good," you'd have to say "Feel good." Instead of saying "I feel sick," you'd have to say "Feel sick." Instead of saying "I feel depressed," you'd have to say "Feel depressed." Instead of saying "This is mine," you would say "This is." Instead of saying "I am angry," you would say "Angry." It would make you sound ridiculous but at the same time it would make you understand that you are not that I. You are not the mind.

You will immediately catch yourself and realize, when you say I you have to be very careful what you say after that. For I can never be sick. I can never know anything unhappy or happy, good or bad, rich or poor. I is beyond all those things. I is consciousness. I is God. I is pure awareness. Imagine, if you will, that whenever you said I you realized truly what this I means to you. You're no longer speaking of the small I, the body I, the I that does not exist. You're speaking of God. Whenever you say I you're speaking of God.

Therefore if you said "I am sick," that's blasphemy. How can God be sick? If you say "I am unhappy," same thing. How can this thing called God be unhappy? Even if you say "I am happy," how can God be happy according to human standards? As you begin to realize what this I really means you'll automatically be lifted up to a higher state of consciousness. Just by realizing continuously what I really means.

Yet you have to do this every day. You have to catch yourself every moment. Think how many times today you used the term I, and what you said after that. Think how many times today you said the word me and "mine," as if you were an individual, as if anything can belong to you personally, as if you really own anything, and you have to protect it and take care of it, as if it is yours.

Everything belongs to God. Everything is God. It is true that you appear to be using it, but never for a second believe that it belongs to you. This is why, when people realize this truth, it's so easy for them to share, but when one believes they are the body then they have to hoard, and hold onto something, and fight for their existence and stick up for their rights.

Is it any wonder that you don't wake up? How can you wake up when you're fighting for your rights as a human body, when you're trying to protect the things that you think you own? This is maya, total maya, the belief that you own something, that you are something. It's all an illusion. There is only God. There is only consciousness. Everything else is an appearance.

Enjoy the world if you can, but do not allow the world to be your Master. Do not allow the world to tell you how things are. Do not allow the news, or the newspaper, or the way of the world to confound you and confuse you, and to make you sad, or angry, or upset you. After all, it's the same as seeing a movie. You look at the movie and you see all kinds of dastardly things going on. But then you catch yourself and you say "It's only a movie. It's not the truth." And so it is with life. You observe everything that's going on in life. You watch, you look, you see, yet you never react. You're never for or against. You understand and this makes you free.

What we call maya is very powerful and so it appears. It grabs you in it's clutches and makes you believe that things are happening in this world, and makes you believe that things are moving, changing. That's the picture it shows you. There are very few people who can go through a day without being affected by maya. Think about yourself. Just today. How have you been affected by maya, believing something about your body, or about somebody else, or about a situation in your life, or about the world, or about the universe, and feeling it? That's maya. Here's an example. I've told this story before.

One day Buddha and his chief disciple, Nerada, were walking along a country road. Buddha was discussing maya. He explained that the trees, the river, the mountains, the beauty, all of the bugs and the mosquitoes, animals, it's all maya. And Nerada said "But Master, how can this be? It sounds virtually impossible. I can grab the tree. I can grab your arm. I'm stung by a mosquito. I feel this thing. There's a bump on my arm. How can this all be illusion? I don't understand." And Buddha said "I'm thirsty. Go get me a glass of water." There was a town nearby so Nerada went to the town and knocked at the door of the first house he saw.

An old lady opened the door. She said "What do you want?" Nerada said "My Master would like a glass of water." She looked him over and saw that he was handsome, well built, healthy, and she said "Come on in." He went into her house and there was a beautiful lady sitting on a chair. The woman said "This is my daughter. Isn't she beautiful?" Nerada was astounded at her beauty. He said "She is the most beautiful girl I've ever seen." The old lady said "How would you like to marry her?" and Nerada said "Why not?"

So he married the girl. They had a big wedding and all the people in the village came. The next day he got a job. He was a potter by trade and he made beautiful pots out of clay. He did this for a living. After the first year they had a child and he was able to afford a beautiful house. He had a mortgage payment, had to pay taxes, so he had to work harder and hire people to help him. He had employees. He had to pay them salaries, take out taxes, workers compensation, everything else. Then, after two years passed, another child. He was completely enmeshed in family life. Some days were good. Some days were bad. A couple more years went by, three years, four years, five years.

One day there was a big hurricane, a very powerful hurricane, that came into the town. The place was getting flooded. Nerada said "What are we going to do?" All his furniture was being ruined. Everything he believed he owned was getting wet, totally ruined. He took his family up onto the roof. There was a clothes line on the roof. They all hung onto the clothes line. The hurricane became stronger, and stronger and stronger. His mother-in-law was washed away by the flood. Nerada said "I guess we didn't need her anyway. She was old."

But the hurricane was still very strong and his wife and two children were holding on. One of the children was washed away, and Nerada became very distraught, but he was holding on with his wife. Then the other child was washed away. He became very upset, but he said to himself "At least I have my wife. We can have more children." Then his wife was washed away and he said "What happened to my family? They're all gone. Everything I worked for is all gone. Everything I strived for is all gone. I'm going to end it all, commit suicide." So he let go of the rope. The next moment he found himself sitting next to Buddha with a glass of water. He looked at Buddha and Buddha said "It's about time you brought me my water." So Nerada looked at him and said "Now I understand what maya is."

This is just like us. We become so enmeshed in the world. We think things are real. Everything bothers us. We become angry. We become upset. But the truth is you are not maya. You are absolute reality. You are total awareness. You are the Self. Know who you are and wake up.

Awaken and be free.

(end) [TOC]

ALL IS WELL

17th November, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It's good being with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. I can assure you that all is well. All is exceedingly well. Everything is in it's right place, doing what it is supposed to do.

Do not judge by appearances. Do not even judge yourself. You are a beautiful person just the way you are. When I say "just the way you are," I am referring to your real Self, consciousness. You are beautiful just the way you are, not what you think you are, not what you appear to be, not what the world shows you, but just the way you are right now.

When you are without thoughts, when you are without needs, without wants, without desires, then you are God. You are the universe. You are divine love. You are beautiful. Yet when you begin to think about these things you deny it, for you think about the past and the future instead of staying centered in the eternal now. You think of the mistakes you made in life. You think about the dastardly things going on in this world. You think about your future, about the so called recession. You are enmeshed in maya. Do not continue to think this way.

Your true nature is total bliss, and you are in total bliss right now. There is absolutely nothing lacking in your life. But when you think about it, there is. Therefore do not think. Stop thinking. When you stop thinking all is well. When you stop thinking there are no mistakes. Do not concern yourself with the telephone, with your body, with your affairs, what appears to be happening in the world. These things shall pass and new things will come along. It never ends. It never stops.

Thoughts can never bring you peace, even if they are good thoughts, for good thoughts lead to bad thoughts, and bad thoughts lead to good thoughts. You are to ask yourself "To whom do these thoughts come? Who thinks? Who is the thinker? I am? I am the thinker? Then who am I? What is the source of the I that thinks? Where did this I come from? How did it originate? Who gave it birth? What have I got to do with I?"

Wake up. You are an asset to the human race, an asset to your Self, an asset to God. You are a wonderful person just the way you are, just the way you are.

It's interesting to note that many people throughout the world are beginning to be attracted to Advaita Vedanta, the non-duality principle. More than ever in the last two years or so. Many people who have never dreamed they would be involved in Advaita Vedanta are being involved in Advaita Vedanta. Now the amusing and interesting thing to me is that a good 80% of these people become teachers. New teachers of Advaita Vedanta are popping up all over the world.

I received many calls during the week, and you'll see why I'm smiling when I explain it to you. Just this morning I received a call from somebody in Texas that I have been corresponding with. And he told me "Robert, I read your transcript for a month straight, like you said, and I am enlightened now." So I said "That's wonderful. What makes you think so?" He said "I stopped quarreling with my wife, I feel more peaceful, and I don't give a damn about the world. But I have a question. What do I do now?" What can I say?

There are many people who are going around claiming they're enlightened, more than ever. It really makes no difference to me, but it's amusing. It's interesting. First of all, what does the word enlightenment mean? I'm not talking about a dictionary definition. To the path of Jnana what does enlightenment mean? The answer is, there is no such word. No one becomes enlightened. There is no body, no I, no me, there is no thing that can ever become enlightened. The word enlightenment is used by the ajnani, by students. Absolute reality, choiceless awareness, sat-chit-ananda, parabrahman, those are all words that do not exist, except to the student, in order to explain that there is a state beyond the so called norm, a state of total transcendence. And we give a name to this, enlightenment.

When this actually happens or transpires in a person the I has been totally destroyed, totally annihilated. The me no longer exists. And to that being there is absolutely no one who became enlightened. That being is resting in his true nature, in nothingness, absolute nothingness. No one can become enlightened. No one can be liberated, for the you that thinks it can be liberated doesn't even exist. There is no you. There is no person. There is no human being who is a human being one day and the next day becomes liberated. There is only the liberated Self and you are that. There is not you as you appear. The appearance of you, which you think you are, is false.

This is why I say all of your problems, all of your nonsense that you go on with, all your worries, all your cares, all your emotions, they do not exist. They never have existed and they will never exist. It is all the game of maya, the leela. It doesn't exist. No one in this room exists. There is no you and there is no me. There is only the Self. And when the self becomes the Self it is no longer the self, for there never was a real Self to begin with.

This is the reason why I emphasize, stop thinking. Your thoughts pull you deeper into maya, into illusion. Do not think of enlightenment, or awakening, or being liberated, or finding a teacher who can help you. You are beyond help. No one can do anything for you.

Actually what happens is this. As you begin to realize you are not your thoughts, you are not your body, you are not your mind, you are not the world, you're not even liberated, you are nothing, as you begin to think this way whatever has to happen in your evolution will transpire without you doing anything. If you are meant to be with a teacher you will be with a teacher. If you are meant to be by yourself you will be by yourself, yet you have absolutely nothing to do with these things. Remain in the no-thought state.

Leave the world alone. Leave people alone. Do not come to any conclusion. Do not judge anyone. Everything will take care of itself.

The worst thing you can ever do is to search for enlightenment, for liberation. This keeps you back. It keeps you back because there is a self that is searching. There is an I that is searching. There is a me that is trying to become something and the whole idea is to remove something from your consciousness. Therefore the process of realization is removal, not adding. Removing this and removing that. Removing all concepts and all preconceived ideas. Removing all of your thoughts, no matter what kind of thoughts they are. Good thoughts, bad thoughts, they all must go, and what is left will be nothing, no thing. You are that. You are that no thing.

Doesn't it feel good to be nothing instead of believing you are thoughts, and you are human, and you have a job to fulfill, and you have a mission? There are many spiritual people you know who think they have a mission. They have come to save the world. They can't even save themselves and they're looking to save the world. The world will go on the way it's going on without your help, for or against. Leave the world alone.

There is a power and there is a presence, which I like to call the current that knows the way, that takes care of everything. It is all part of the grand illusion. And even in this illusion, which appears in front of your eyes, there is a presence and a power that lifts you up. It will lift you up as high as you can allow it to, until it lifts you up completely out of your body, out of your thoughts, out of the universe, to a completely new dimension. You'll appear to be the same person as always to people, but you'll not be that person any longer, for that person is gone, no longer exists. You have become Brahman. You have become all-pervading. You have become your Self without trying to do so.

You must always have gratitude for the way you are. Do not feel sorry for yourself. Love yourself just the way you are. By loving yourself just the way you are you will transcend those things that have appeared to annoy you, to bother you, to cause you pain. They will all go. You'll no longer be aware of them. Let go of everything. Have no desires whatsoever. Dive deep within the Self. Do not react to the outside world or to your body.

All is well.

(end) [TOC]

EVERYTHING IS CONSCIOUSNESS

21st November, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It's wonderful to be with you again. I welcome you with all my heart. It's good to see you. Good to hear you. It's good to smell you. We'll open up the tonight session with a reading from the Ashtravakra Gita, translated by Thomas Byrom, and read by Glen.

(reading)

There's only one way to bring peace to the world. There's only one way to bring peace to yourself. There's only one way to overcome problems. There's only one way to find yourself. And that way is to realize that everything is consciousness.

What do I mean by that? Take everything in this room, the glass, the lamps, the chairs, the couch, the rug, the light, and your body. They are not real. They are consciousness. I am not saying that consciousness has produced these things. I am not saying that first there is consciousness, and these things came out of consciousness. On the contrary, I am saying that everything that appears to arise, that you hear with your ears, that you taste with your mouth, that you feel with your hands, is consciousness. It is not what it appears to be. It is not duality. Remember what I'm trying to convey. There is not consciousness and the world. There is only consciousness and you are that. A paradox, contradiction. You are the paradox. You are the contradiction. You are not what you appear to be. You are not what you see. No thing in this world, in this universe, is as it appears to be.

But how can this be? We look at each other. We see the things of this world. We feel the pain. We feel sorrow. We feel happiness. We feel joy. And yet I'm saying to you that these things do not exist. There is only consciousness. You can only know this when you experience it, so you're saying "This is good for you, Robert, but what about me? I feel the world. I get hurt easily. I'm sensitive. Things bother me. I see man's inhumanity in the world and I cry. I perceive all these dastardly things going on in the world. They make me sad. How can you say these things don't exist? How can you say there is only consciousness when all these things face me every day?"

That's just it. You have to be ready to turn away from the worldly things. You have to be prepared to jump within yourself, to dive deep within yourself and to sort of ignore the world for a while. This doesn't mean that you have to give up anything. It means that while you're going through your daily chores, while you are doing your work in this world, you simply have to become aware every once in a while that everything is consciousness. Just by being aware of these things that I'm talking about, you awaken. You become free. Just by being, aware, by thinking to yourself when you get up in the morning

"Everything may appear real to me but all is consciousness. Everything is consciousness. Consciousness is space, pure choiceless awareness."

How can you prove this scientifically? If you got a hold of a giant electronic microscope and you put your body under the microscope, you would see tremendous amount of space. You would see atoms separated by a vast amount of space. And if you obtain an ultra-electronic microscope, which hasn't been invented yet, you would see your body as pure space. There would be no atoms. For the ultra-electronic microscope would see through the atom and you would see space, total space. That space is consciousness. This is not only true of your body. It is true of the chair, the building, a tree, a flower, an animal. Everything is space.

That's why I say so often "We are all nothing." All of us are nothing. So we are no thing. We are no thing conceivable. We are no thing that you can ever imagine. Your imagination only goes down to atoms. You know about molecules. You go down to atoms, pure energy, but go beyond that. Go beyond the pure energy. There's absolute nothing. That nothing is you. That nothing is consciousness.

There was once a class being conducted like this. And a particular student said "Master, I don't know what you're talking about. How can everything be consciousness? How can everything come from nothing? This doesn't make sense." And the Master pointed to a fig tree, said to his student "Go bring me a fig." The student went and pulled a fig from the fig tree and brought it to the Master. The Master said "Break open the fig." He did. "What do you see?" "Seeds." "Bring me one of those seeds." He obeyed. He gave him a razor blade and he said "Cut open the seed." It was a pretty hard job because the seed is so small, and he cut his finger a couple of times, blood all over the place. He finally managed to cut open the seed. And the Master said "What do you see now?" "Nothing." In the seed there's a hollow, absolute nothingness. And the Master said "From this nothing the entire universe is produced."

And this is true of everything on this earth, and this world, and this universe. Everything is nothing. There is absolutely nothing that exists. Remember I am saying that things do not come from consciousness. I am saying that everything is consciousness. Things do not exist.

Human beings appear to be made so that they see things, hear things, smell things, touch things, and feel things. Therefore they think they are living in a material world, in a relative world. Yet the ultimate truth is, everything is an optical illusion, like the snake in the rope, like the sky is blue, like the water in the mirage. These things do not exist. You, as you appear, do not exist.

Just by thinking about this, will free you. You really do not have to do anything else, for some of you. Just to consider this, to ponder this, to try to realize everything is really space, everything is consciousness, to think about this and rest, something begins to happen to your mind. You begin to lose your mind. I know many people have told you you lost your mind already. That's a compliment. You begin to lose your mind.

What I usually mean by losing your mind is they change one appearance to another appearance. That's when they call somebody insane. They just change appearances. They see things that do not exist. But when I talk about losing your mind I am referring to emptying the mind, actually destroying the mind, annihilating the mind, totally, totally transmuting the mind. Not to change it to something else.

Even in religion they try to focus on the God of their religion in meditation, focus on an item. These do not awaken you. It may improve your concentration, make you a little more one pointed, yet it will not awaken you. The only time you will awaken is when your mind is destroyed. There has to be no mind left. When the mind is destroyed consciousness appears by itself, for in truth you are already that. You have always been that. But as long as you go on crying over spilled milk, when you look at your life, and you see the things that upset you, you see the things that make you angry, the things that make you worried, the things that make you fret and become excited, what a waste of energy, what a waste of time.

There is no thing in this world that is that important. As long as you believe it is important you will never awaken. You can't, for you're caught up in maya. You are playing the game. You're still involved in the leela. You're feeling things. You're reacting to things. You're arguing about things. You're debating things. You're still not sure. As long as you keep acting this way you can not awaken. Just think of the things you thought about today, just for today, since you woke up, the things that went through your mind, the actions you took, the emotions you had, the worries you had, the feelings of sadness, or joy, or any kind of feelings. All this is a waste of your precious energy. This is what keeps you back. This is what makes you a human being. This is what makes you worldly.

It's up to you to understand what I'm saying and to begin to get a program of non-action in your mind by not reacting. When something takes place in your mind or in your world, you become the observer. You become the witness. You do not react. You try to keep your mind centered in the now, in the moment. You do not think about ten minutes ago, nor about yesterday, or about last week, or last month, or last year, or five years ago. You do not consider what somebody did to you ten years ago, or how you were wronged. Those are the things that keep you back. Do not consider where you are going to go next week, or what you have to do to become enlightened next month, or the teacher you have to go to see next year, or the book you have to read next week. You do not think about these things. All of these things are part of maya. They are part of the grand illusion. They pull you back into materiality.

Some of you wonder why you don't make too much progress on your spiritual journey. That's not hard to see. Just take a look at your belief system. Look at the way you're living. Some of you are afraid to make changes. You want your life to be the same now and forever. You know this is impossible. If you're afraid to make a change life will come along and pull the rug from under you one day. And you'll have to make a change.

All the things that hold you back, your security blanket, think about this. What is your security blanket? Food? The opposite sex, or the same sex, whatever you prefer, or no sex? All these things keep you back. Just being involved in a movement, trying to make this world a better world in which to live, keeps you back.

Now some of you new people will feel sort of strange, when I say something like this, for you're saying "Aren't we supposed to help the world?" You're supposed to find out who you are. Your first and main job is to awaken, and then you will see if you want to help the world. What world? But first awaken. The more you become involved in peace movements, or anti-peace movements, or this or that, the more you get pulled into materiality. These are all commendable things. It's better than being a bank robber, I guess. So if you have to do something, help other people. There's no question about this. But remember the truth. "I've got to find myself," you should say.

You do not have to find yourself at the expense of others. This is wrong. But be by yourself all you can. Realize that this is your life. It is not your husband's life. It is not your wife's life. It is not your children's life. It is not your relative's life. It's your life. You exist here and now. What are you doing with it? How can you allow people to make you angry? How can you allow people to tell you what to do, to make decisions for you? All the answers are within yourself. But you have to turn within yourself. You have to sincerely turn within, with a great passion, and find yourself.

The world appears very strong. People appear very real. Some of us always seem to get involved in all kinds of situations. Yet take a look at your life and see why you get involved. Honestly look at yourself. Do not be afraid to see yourself. See the things you do, the words you say, the thoughts you think, and you'll see why you're not making too much progress.

Now if you really want to make progress you will drop everything, mentally. Remember when I speak of dropping everything I'm not referring to your quitting your job, moving to India, stop reading books, stop watching TV. I'm not referring to this really, if that's what you want to do. I'm referring to mentally letting go of your reactions to whatever is going on in your body and the world. Leave the world alone. Leave people alone. Do not try to change people or to make them see your point of view. There is no point of view. Every point of view is wrong. We want to get rid of points of view.

You have to sincerely want to awaken, and I kid you not, to awaken is simple. You just have to give up everything mentally. That's all. And consider the fact that everything is consciousness. Everything. No thing is as it appears. This includes yourself.

There are many people who stay the way they are and they are always talking about something outside themselves. They try to change the world. They try to see the world as consciousness. They shrug people off. They become indifferent. This is not right. You start with yourself. You take an honest look at your habits and see the things that you're doing. Don't worry about other people. Remember you are creating others with your mind. Everyone who is in your life, you have created yourself. Otherwise where do they come from? You are the creator and all the things in your life are your creations. You have done this unconsciously.

Karmically you have attracted everybody in your life that's in your life right now. You think certain thoughts a certain way and you'll attract those people in your life. If your mind is full of larceny, bad thoughts, you will attract people like that into your life, and then you will say "It's a bad world. You can't trust anybody." But it begins with you. You have to look honestly at things holding you back from your own realization. And you have to start working on yourself diligently, until the time comes when you no longer have to do that.

It's fine for me to sit here and say the world doesn't exist, nothing exists, but when you walk out of this door the world hits you right in the face. Some of you become depressed because you have to go home by yourself, perhaps. You wish you had a relationship. Some of you feel depressed because you have a relationship and you wish you were alone. Nobody is happy. Everybody thinks something is wrong with their life. Some of you are depressed because you can't get enlightened.

Think about what you're doing. Think about what you're feeling. So we begin a program. And from my own personal experience I found that self-inquiry is the fastest way to awaken, for some people. Therefore you passionately get yourself involved in self-inquiry. As I said before, it is true that listening to these words and realizing that everything is consciousness can awaken you. But this is only if you are prepared. By prepared I mean you've already transcended all the things we were talking about, all of the emotions and all of the fears, all of the hurts and all of the frustrations. If you have already transcended these things then that's all you've got to do. All you have to do is hear the word, and you're awake. But for most people it doesn't work this way. Therefore you have to practice some form of sadhana.

Self-inquiry becomes very useful. You simply allow thoughts to come to you and you inquire in a gentle way "To whom do these thoughts come? Who is thinking these thoughts? I am." You wait and you inquire sincerely "Who am I? What is the source of this I?" When I say you have to dive within yourself, that's how you dive within yourself. People often ask me "How do you dive within yourself?" That's how you do it. You inquire "Where does the I come from?" The I is deep, deep within yourself. "What is the source of the I?" Then thoughts will come to you again and you repeat the same thing over again. "To whom do these thoughts come? They come to me. Who is this me? What is the source of me?" Me and I are synonymous. "Where does the me come from?" You do it over, and over, and over again.

You do not look for a time. Forget about time. Do not worry about anything. Spend time by yourself. Most people cannot spend time by themselves. Many people tell me they stay by themselves a lot but if you're going to their house the TV is on, the radio is on. That is just like having people in your house. When I say spend time by yourself I mean in the silence. Take the time. Sit down in a chair and watch your thoughts and begin to inquire "To whom do these thoughts come? They come to me. I am thinking these thoughts? Who is this I? What is the source of the I? Where did it come from?"

Let's practice this together, because many of you have told me, you're having much success when we do this together. So make yourself comfortable. It's better if you close your eyes. It removes obstructions. It makes no difference how many times you've practiced this before. Whenever you do it, it's like the first time. This may be the time for you to awaken. That's why you should never give up.

You simply sit still. Do not try not to think, for if you try not to think you will have thoughts that you can't get rid of. You will be full of thoughts if you try not to think. You do nothing, absolutely nothing. You're watching the thoughts come. As soon as the thoughts come, in a gentle way you inquire "To whom do these thoughts come? They come to me. I think them. Who is this I? Where did it come from? How did it arise? From where did it arise? Who is the I? Who am I?" You remain still. The thoughts come again. You do the same thing again, and again, and again, in a gentle peaceful way. So let's do it.

(meditation)

(end) [TOC]

Transcript 114

HAPPINESS

1st December, 1991

Robert: Good afternoon. It's good being with you again. Welcome to the second bhandara of the Jnana Marga Society. What does bhandara mean? It means to feed. It's actually associated with feeding the homeless and the poor. So here's what we'll do. Make up your mind that from now until Christmas you'll find a homeless person somewhere. Either bring them to your home for a meal or give them $10 and say God bless you. Will you do that?

Students: Yes.

Robert: The first homeless person you see. Do not choose or pick.

Everyone on this planet, every human being, does what he does, or what she does, for one reason, in order to attain happiness. Think about that. Everything you do, everything, is to become happy. People get married to be happy. Then they get divorced to be happy. Then they get married again to be happy. Then they get divorced again to be happy. Everything you do is to become happy.

That's subjective. We have different purposes consciously. We think "I'm doing this because I want this." But if you go deep within you you'll see the real reason is to be happy. Everything, it makes no difference what it is, is to attain happiness. The murderer murders because he or she thinks, in their warped mind, that this will make them happy, to get rid of this person. A hit man kills because he dreams of the money he's going to get, so that he can spend and purchase the things that will make him happy.

Everything you do is to be happy. True. Everything. There is no other reason. You may think you have other reasons but it's to be happy. You're going into spiritual life to find happiness. Whatever you do, it's to be happy, and you can think of thousands of things that you've done in your life. You believe it's for another purpose but if you really are honest with yourself, you're doing everything for your own happiness. Even when you help the poor somehow it makes you happy to do this. You go to school to learn to be a doctor, a nurse, an accountant, a bum, whatever you're learning is for your happiness. You feel that in the long run this will make you happy.

But what if somehow you began to realize that the happiness you're searching for externally is really you, the thrills you get in the external world from doing certain things is none other than yourself, that happiness that you've been looking for all these years, believing that when you graduate school, when you get married, find a good profession, this will be your total joy, total happiness, and it has not. If you begin to realize, if you begin to ponder, that this happiness that you're searching for, you have always had. Not only have you always had it, it is you. You are happiness. You are extreme happiness. Total bliss.

There is nothing in the external world that can make you as happy as you already are. You begin to ponder these things and you understand that this world is a world of constant change. No thing ever remains the same. Therefore how can the world make you happy? It may make you happy for a short time, for a while, but all things must change, as you all know by now. And all the things you've been through in this life, to make you happy, have changed. It's not the same any more. Everything has changed. Yet you will not admit or realize that the only true happiness is yourself.

You may say to yourself "But I'm not happy. I feel out of sorts. I feel depressed. I have a job I don't like. Something is wrong with my life. I need more money. I need more love," and you think if you acquire these things it would make you happy. It is true you'll be happy for a while, but when the novelty wears off you will return to the old depressed self. And you will continue searching for happiness in the world until the time comes when you feel that you are this happiness.

Now why aren't you experiencing this if you know it? Well, it's like an onion. You have to peel off layer, after layer after layer to get to the core of the onion. The core has been covered by layers of skin. So it appears that our happiness, the light that we are, has been covered by ignorance, by maya, the grand illusion, and we react to the world and to situations instead of turning within, finding the truth that we are happiness, and no matter what is going on in this world, it will not faze us, for nothing can interfere with our happiness.

We try to change conditions. We run all over the world. We search for this, we search for that, always believing, always thinking, that there is some happiness somewhere that we have not discovered yet, and if we only discover this happiness we will be forever free. Yet you are beginning to understand that there is nothing in this world that can make you free or make you happy. It's only for a while. It's only for a short time that the world will make you happy.

Think about when you got married. When you got married you were so happy. And as the weeks went by, as the years went by, you became miserable. And even if you don't admit it, it's not the same. The same with your job. You loved your job when you first got it. You were only thinking of the highest good. This is the best job I ever had. I love it. I'll keep it forever. After six months, a year, you get bored. Things do not turn out the way you thought they would and you start to search for a new job, new happiness, always searching for new happiness. You move, change cities, change states, attain new friends to be happy. You're always looking for this happiness.

You have probably read by now that happiness is within you, but nevertheless you forget. You continue to search. You continue to struggle. You continue to fight, looking for that happiness, searching for that happiness, always looking to the outside world, always believing and thinking that the world is going to bring you happiness somehow.

And we never learn. We still believe that if we won the lottery we would be the happiest people on earth, after it has been proven to you that it is not true. When you follow the lives of the people who have won the lottery, many horrible things have happened to them. Some have become alcoholics. Some have left their families. Some have gone to jail. All kinds of strange things have happened to these people.

Money, person, place or thing, health, sickness, poverty, lack and limitation, these things have absolutely nothing to do with your happiness. Your real nature is happiness. You are the happiness you've been looking for. But, as I said before, it's been covered up with layers, and layers of layers, like an onion, and you have to remove these layers of ignorance, or maya, to discover who you are.

Once you discover your true Self, that you are happiness, you will never again look to this external world for anything. Remember what we're trying to do. We're not trying to change situations. We're not trying to change bad for good. We're not trying to bring to us a good human existence. There is no such thing. All human existence changes. Everything will change in your life. When you attain the true happiness, when you awaken to it and you realize that's what you really are, there will be nothing in this world that will ever be able to frighten you again, upset you again, cause any problems for you at all. There will be nothing that can do anything to you. You will be totally free. And you will understand that this true happiness, this bliss that you are, is all-pervading, omnipresent. Therefore you will see it is not you that is totally happy, it is the Self. And everywhere you look you will see the Self, for the Self is not limited to your body.

People who look in the world and see different situations, they look at the world and see what they are. But you look at the world and you see your Self. You see the happiness that you have attained. It has absolutely nothing to do with your body, with your mind, with the world, with the universe, with God, or with anything else. You are not separate from the total joy, bliss and happiness, which pervades this universe. You are that.

But remember what you have to do? You have to remove the layers of ignorance, those things that make you upset, the anger, the unfulfillments, the anxieties, the things that upset you, the things that you believe are causing you anguish. You do not change the condition. You change yourself. You begin to see and understand that everything happens within yourself. There's nobody that can really help you. There is no real person you can run to in order to change yourself.

You have to, number 1, come to the conclusion that this world and this universe can never make me happy. Number 2, you have to realize and see that happiness is already within you, you are that. Number 3, you have to say to yourself "Now what do I have to do to bring this happiness out, to become the embodiment of happiness, so I will raise myself above the world, the world will no longer be able to hinder me, annoy me, bother me, or show me anything."

You begin to work on yourself. This is called sadhana. You begin a spiritual practice. You no longer compare yourself with anyone else. You no longer run about looking for other teachers. You're no longer looking for solutions to your problems. You learn to become still. When you begin to know the whole universe, everything, is only here because of you, when you begin to understand that if you weren't around, there would be no universe... You have created the entire universe. And every person, and everything that exists, as you know by now, is an emanation of your own mind. Everything comes out of your mind.

Therefore what you begin to do in your sadhana, your spiritual practice, is to pull everything back in and destroy it. From searching you find that one of the greatest sadhanas, one of the greatest techniques, is self-inquiry. You begin to realize that atma-vichara is the fastest way to awaken, to awaken to the fact that you are eternal happiness and bliss.

First you read some books, before you stop reading, you see some teachers, before you stop going to teachers, and you realize that there are Sages, Jnanis, in this world who have achieved this, so you know that it's not a hoax. You do not want to begin a practice, some spiritual practice, that really does nothing for you and causes no change. Therefore you want to meet people who have become this, who have actually experienced this total happiness, this total joy. They no longer look at the world, or in the job market, or anywhere else for their happiness or their security. These people really have it. Therefore you want to be like them. You want to become free also. You want to become liberated also. And you discover that self-inquiry, again, is the fastest way to get there. So you begin.

How do you do it? You forget about the world. You no longer compare yourself to anyone. You do not care what anybody is doing. You leave people alone, but you begin to question the thoughts that come to your mind, your belief system. Everything that you are, your concepts, you question everything, for you begin to understand it is all of these things that you have become that have made you what you are today.

And how do you do this? You sit down when you can, where it's quiet, where you will not be disturbed. After a while you can do this while you're working, or while you're driving your car, or while you're doing anything else in this world, but to begin with you want to get the practice down strong first, before you start doing it in the conscious world.

You begin to watch your thoughts, whatever thoughts come into your mind, makes no difference what they are. You question them by inquiring "To whom do these thoughts come?" You try to be still. You're not looking for anything. You have simply posed the question in a calm peaceful way. "To whom do these thoughts come?" And the answer always comes by itself. "These thoughts come to me. I think all of these thoughts." You then realize that I is the one who thinks the thoughts. So you inquire "What is the source of the I? What is the source of the I?" You do not look for an answer. You keep your mind still as much as possible. Then more thoughts will come to you and you do the same thing again. "To whom do these thoughts come? These thoughts come to me. I think these thoughts."

When you are depressed, when you feel slighted, no matter what feelings come to you, even if you are feeling worldly happiness, for you realize the worldly happiness will change eventually, you therefore inquire "To whom do these things come? Who is thinking these thoughts about worldly happiness, about depression, about anything? Where do these thoughts come from? They come from me. Where else would they come from? They come from somewhere within myself. I think them. Then who am I?" which is the same as "What is the source of the I?" You become still. More thoughts come. You do the same thing over, and over and over again. When you feel as if you've got enough you get up and go about your business. You will find that during the day you're feeling more peaceful, you're feeling more relaxed, you're feeling more at ease, the world is no longer bothering you too much.

Then you continue this practice continuously, night and day, as you wake up, as you go to sleep. You never stop. You keep your life simple. Just by doing this practice your life will become simple. You'll no longer relate to all the things you see in the news. You'll not be troubled by catastrophes or man's inhumanity to man, not because you do not care, but because you have become an embodiment of peace, happiness. And you sort of understand that the world is a dream, like a dream. Everything that is happening in this world is a dream and it has absolutely nothing to do with you. You are part of reality. You are reality. Everything becomes as images on the screen and you are the screen.

Your body will still do the work it came here to do. You will find that you are doing whatever you have to do in this world, but you will be happy. As you practice self-inquiry you will become happier, and happier and happier. Whenever something befalls you, whether good or bad, you will begin to see it's the I, the personal I, that is reacting. Therefore you will work on removing the personal I by inquiring "To whom does it come? What is it's source?" and you become still. You become quiet.

You may be in the most dire circumstances. You may be involved in all kinds of things. Your body may be going through all kind of experiences, but you'll be happy. You will realize you are not the body that goes though these experiences. You are not the mind that thinks all these thoughts. You are total freedom, pure awareness. You are absolute reality. You are Brahman, sat-chit-ananda. You are the universe, and all is well.

(end) [TOC]

THE BODY AND THE WORLD

December 12th, 1991

Robert: Good evening. It is good to be with you again on this lovely Thursday evening, freezing outside, people dying from the cold, people having colds, flu's and all kinds of weird things, and yet, here we are.

The body is just like the world. The world seems to appear, the world seems to prevail, and then the world seems to disappear. Your body seems to appear, your body seems to prevail, and then your body seems to disappear. Yet what does this have to do with you? Nothing! For you are not the world. You are not your body. You are not the doer. You are not dreaming. You are absolute reality. You are effortless pure awareness. You have absolutely nothing to do with this world. You have absolutely nothing to do with your body.

Yet no matter how many times I tell you this, you react to the world and you react to the body. Is it any wonder that you suffer, that you're in pain, or you have bad thoughts and bad feelings, for you believe the world is real? You accept your body to be real. As long as you do this you must go through different experiences. It is only when you become the witness to all the phenomena that appears to go on that you can really find peace and be happy. Happiness and peace are the reality of your life, yet you can never really find these things or feel these things if you are reacting to your body or to the world.

Your body is really a replica of this world. The world appears, your body appears. The world prevails, your body prevails. The world disappears, your body disappears. There's no difference. When you come to the conclusion your body and the world does not exist, you will no longer have feelings of being born, prevailing a certain number of years, or leaving your body.

People like to use the terminology that somebody has left their body, that you are leaving your body, yet in truth, you have no body to leave. There never was a body that you can just leave. This would mean there are two of you. This would be duality, would it not? This would mean there is a body and there is you, and at a certain time you leave your body. So where are you before you leave your body? You believe you're in your body. Where in your body are you? If I cut you open will I find you? Are you hiding somewhere in your body?

This is all new age philosophy, that there is a body that you have to give up and leave it. But I can assure you there never was a body that you have to leave, and there never was a world that begins and ends. There simply is no body. There is no world. When you can comprehend this you will become the happiest being that ever existed. I should say you'll become the happiest nothing when you can really feel and know that there is no body.

Yet you look around and you see all these bodies here. You observe bodies, you observe the world. This is the reason you have to always ask yourself, "Who observes this? Who sees this? Who sees these dastardly things going on in this world? Who sees anything?" It is the I that sees. It is the I that believes it is the body. It is the I that has problems. Begin to understand that you are not the I. You're not I. The I is only a thought. It was never you.

The I is like a magic show. It causes everything to appear. It makes everything seem real. You should say "What have I got to do with this I? This I is not me. I have absolutely nothing to do with this I.

The world is like a mirage. Your body is an optical illusion. You have to separate yourself from your thoughts and from the I. And you can do this merely by observing, by understanding, by looking, by seeing correctly, observing, seeing and looking at the phenomena as it goes by. Do not get caught up in situations. Do not allow yourself to feel one way or another.

How can you tell if you're making progress? Simply by the way you feel. If the world is getting to you and you feel there's something in this world that you hate or you love, something in this world that upsets you or makes you happy, then you know you're not making progress, or not too much progress. True happiness, peace, love, is your very nature. There is nothing in this outside world that can give it to you.

Always remember that the outside world, the external world, is like a dream. That's all it is. A dream and nothing else. Yet the question arises, "Who is dreaming?" And the answer is "Nobody," for in truth there is nobody dreaming and there is no dream going on, yet all these things appear to be so. Where did they all come from? They come from nowhere. There is absolutely nothing happening. No one is really dreaming. There is really no dream going on.

The whole thing is a big joke. You do not exist. Doesn't it make you feel good to know you're a nobody, that you do not exist? You're not even the absolute reality. You're not even consciousness. Those are all words. You're not nirvana, you are not emptiness. You are none of those things. What are you? There is silence. You are the silence. Total silence. It is only when you rest in the silence that you appear to awaken. I say you appear to awaken for there's no one to awaken, and there is no silence. What else is there to say?(laughter)

I really want you to feel, this evening, as if you are absolute nothingness. Feel yourself melting away. The whole dream is melting away. The belief that you are a spirit is melting away. The belief that you're seeking liberation is melting away. The belief that there's somebody who is something is melting away. It's all melting, all of your preconceived ideas, all of your concepts, all of your learning, everything you've read in books, all this idea about Jnanis, gurus, students, teachers, it's all melting away. There's nothing left. And now nothing is melting away. Don't you feel good? There is no word to describe you.

Of course, as soon as you start thinking about it, you spoil it. The mind has to be made quiescent, quiet. Do not try to analyze what I say. Do not even think about it. Every time you think you spoil it. There's absolutely nothing to think about. There's nothing to argue about. There's nothing to debate over. There's nothing to believe. There's nothing to accept. There's nothing to give up. You are beyond nothing. There never was a time when you were something. There never was a time when you were nothing. (someone coughs) There's a nothing over there coughing himself to death.(laughter)

When you concern yourself with your body, when you concern yourself with worldly conditions, when you try to improve something, all you're doing is admitting that you are a fool. In truth, this is all nonsense. Everything is nonsense. Therefore, why not be happy? Why think about conditions, situations? Just be happy. Do not try to analyze what happiness is. Do not even try to be happy. Just be happy. How do you become happy? By not thinking. If you have to think about it, it is not happiness.

True happiness has no name. There is no one who can ever be happy, for no one really exists to be happy. Therefore, if you try to make yourself happy you'll have to experience the other end of it, which is unhappiness. So stop believing that you want to be happy. Also do not believe that you want to be unhappy. Do not believe anything. Especially do not believe what I am saying. (laughter)

What am I telling you?

S: Holy cow dung! (R: Sure.)

S: Scrambled eggs. (R: Scrambled eggs? Good. How about scrambled tofu?) Toy food.

R: Everybody wants something. They want to become something. They want to achieve something. They want to remove one quality and attain another quality. But since you do not really exist, and you have never existed, the whole thing becomes folly, for there is no one to become happy, there is no one who is unhappy, for there is no one who exists. There are no words being spoken. There is no speaker. So what are you listening to? When you find out what you're listening to, you'll know who you are.

The worst thing you can ever do is to try to change your condition, to be dissatisfied with the way things are. Things are the way they're supposed to be. Do not try to think about it or to analyze it. Things are exactly the way they're supposed to be. When you think about this you spoil it. There are no mistakes. No one is right, and no one is wrong.

Take a look at the world in which you appear to live. Look at this world. Look what's happening in this world. It's crazy. How can you possibly believe in a world like this? Yet, the world has always been like this, in one way or another. There have been people just like us, five hundred years ago, discussing the same things. It was probably us.

Arguing about who's liberated and who's not liberated. This is not new. A thousand years ago, same thing. There were wars, disease, and groups of people sitting around like were sitting around now, discussing nonsense. It's always been the same.

You don't even want to wake up, for there's no one to wake up. Sometimes I tell you to awaken. When I say this to you something may happen sometimes, that you become something that doesn't exist. If someone had to awaken they would not awaken to reality, for there's no reality to awaken to. Those are just words. Be yourself!

Yet there is no Self and there's no one to be, so how can you be yourself? Why do you listen to me? (students laugh) You want to be something. You want to be liberated. You want to be yourself. You want to be a Jnani. Why don't you want to be a banana? A banana is just as good as a Jnani.

S: The peeling.

R: So be an un-peeled banana. Everybody wants to be something. You will find when you are satisfied with the way things are, just the way things are, right now, at any given moment, that's it. Just the way things are. Not when things are like this or things are like that. Just the way things are. It makes no difference where you are, what's going on in your life, with whom you are living at this time, what's going on in this world. When you're allowed to be just the way you are, when you allow everything to be just the way it is, then you are yourself, for you're living in that split second of eternity.

It's like an atom exploding. You are that center that goes nowhere, yet is everywhere. And you're always living in that center, in that second. There is no time or space. There's only that second, the instant of a second. You have to find this out for yourself.

You have to find this out for yourself. Don't look at me. For all you know I may have escaped from the funny farm.(laughter) Find out for yourself. And you do this by keeping still! You can never find out for yourself by reading, or by meditating, or by discussing scripture, or by trying to prove a point, or by thinking you've got it. It is only when the noise in your head stops, only when the chattering stops and you go beyond silence.

(silence)

SU: I don't know how to even talk about it but Ill just ramble along and see if it comes out with any thing that makes sense. Yesterday I was teaching, and my neighbor, next door, with whom I've had very good relations, came to the window and said "Too loud," and I went over and I wanted to talk to her. There was just nobody there to talk to. She was livid, she was mad, she was like a tiger. She talked about the law, she was going to get the law. I've no right to teach there, and when I saw that there was nobody I could reach, I just went back. But what happened there was... it brought up such a terror in me, such a guilt, that I was in total amazement at my reaction to it.

Of course I would shrug my shoulders and say it's too bad, you know, but I couldn't shake this, and as the day went on it rolled around in me, and around, and around, and around, and it took me back to my childhood where I was always getting into trouble and I was always thinking up excuses to make, and always feeling guilty, and always being afraid of being punished by God. And so this thing of crime and punishment came up and I just lived with it, watched it, but it went inside of me and there was just no controlling it.

As a matter of fact, it awoke me about four o'clock this morning and I was dreaming of a judge and being questioned and all that, and I'm in total amazement at what the mind can do with a simple thing that has really no meaning. It has nothing, you know. It is of no consequence. But it affected my teaching today. I couldn't let go, I couldn't feel free. I had to work around and do things that I wouldn't ordinarily think about. So I don't know where this comes from. I don't know what's going on.

R: It's really a good sign because it's coming to the surface. You've had it inside of you for many, many years and now it's coming up, and it's going out. (SU: Right, I hope.) So it will pass. Don't think about it, don't put your mind on it, don't consider it. Just observe it, and watch it as it comes out of you. It's coming to the surface, and it's coming out of your pores and out of your body, and out of your life. (SU: Well I'm glad I brought it up because I was still scared about it.) Yes, it's been inside of you since childhood. (SU: Yes it has.) And now it's coming to the surface. So it'll go out and you'll never have it happen again. (SU: Good, great, thank you.)

SH: And you won't have to be psycho-analyzed. (laughter)

SU: No I had that too, it didn't come out then.

R: Say, "Asta la vista. Asta le wago" (SU: Oh I'm so glad I brought it up it was like a secret I didn't want to tell anybody about it.) Now that you've shared it, it's gone. (SU: Great.) You're finished with it forever.

SF: Robert, on Sunday I wrote a question about if you wanted to comment on nish karma karma, which, as I understand it, karma means work or action rather than destiny, and as I understand it nish karma karma is something done without any motivation. As an example, Sri Bhagvan spent a whole lot of time making a walking stick and polishing it, and when they came across a young shepherd boy he just gave it to him, and that was all there was to it. I've experienced this a few times, just doing something just because it's there to be done, not because it's going to produce any results, and it's kind of a nice feeling. Do you understand what I'm talking about?

R: What's more important is how come you're on that side instead of this side. How come you're sitting there? You usually sit here. (laughter) (SF: Well I thought I'd try it. I'll get back on the other side next time.) (laughter) That's important. Nish karma karma is not important. This is important. You're sitting on this side instead of this side. (laughter) (SF: Thank you I accept.) Don't worry about nish karma. (SF: I'm not worried. I just thought maybe you'd say something.) I said enough. If you sat on this side I wouldn't bother you. (laughter)

SU: He's very funny tonight. (laughs)

SL: Robert, what is meditation? How would you define meditation?

R: Meditation is when you sit and you think of something. You have to have something to meditate on. (SL: Is it repetitive, or just anything?) If it's repetitive it's japa, mantra japa, when you repeat a mantra over and over again. That's repetitive. But when you meditate, you meditate on a candle flame, or you meditate on a guru, or a flower. You have to have an object and a subject to meditate. (SL: And what's the objective?) The objective is to become that which you're meditating on. It makes your mind one pointed. It makes you quiet. It quiets the mind and makes your mind one-pointed so you can think about the object of your meditation. And this leads you to higher ground.

SL: So that's like a step. It's kind of like trying to take a step in order to clear your mind and have a blank mind. To actually think of nothing?

R: That'll help you if you meditate. But you have to ask yourself the question, "Who meditates?" And you will realize that your real Self, whatever that is, does not have to meditate at all. It is your ego that wants to meditate, and wants to become something, wants to quiet the mind, wants to make the mind one pointed. The ego wants to do this. Why don't you simply realize that there is no ego, there's no mind, and there's no one to meditate, and be yourself?

SL: But short of that, I mean not being able to do that right now, there is still the three things that you recommend that we do, is we go over the transcripts and break them down and keep reading them. The second thing is self-inquiry. And the third thing is just to say, "I am." Right?

R: And to be aware, to watch, to observe, to be the witness. (SL: Isn't that sort of like self-inquiry or is...?) That's a sort of self-inquiry. But you don't say anything. You just watch. (S: Okay.) You become aware. You look. (SL: So as you're getting angry, or fighting traffic, or fighting with the people in the malls for Christmas or wherever, and you're observing yourself doing that, while you're doing it. Is that sort of...?) Observe yourself going crazy. Ask yourself, "Why am I doing all this? Christmas, bah, humbug!" Observe yourself. Watch what you're doing. Inquire, "Why do I have to do all of this? What is the purpose of all this? Who has to do all this?" And you will find out that you are pure awareness. All these things are unnecessary. Yet, your body will appear to be doing them, if that's what you have to do, but you will not be involved in it, and you will be at peace.

(silence)

SF: Something else I've been wondering about, not long ago the swami inside of the Rama Krishna mission in Boston visited and he told a story that I felt was kind of interesting that when the Supreme Court building that was being built in Washington, back in the twenties, someone got an idea that they might have portraits of the founders of the great religions or at least people in who's name the religions are carried on now.

And the portraits were commissioned and painted and hung. And when the muslims started out they had a portrait of Mohammed and of course they raised hell and they had to take this painting down and it's still in the basement of the Supreme Court building. And it occurred to me that Mohammed told his people that he didn't want representations of him made.

He probably what he had in mind was, he wanted to them to be thinking of the ultimate reality or the atman or whatever the name. Rather than the perceiver or the self with a small "s.". And I doubt seriously that he wanted them to be fanatic about it the way they are now and the way they made them take down the paintings. What do you think about that observation?

R: Well I think you ought to ask Mohammed that. (SF: Well I will when I get a chance.) Because I have no idea what Mohammed was thinking. Or what the Supreme Court people were thinking. (SF: But I still think I'm right.) Why not? (SF: Why not be right?) Why not be right, you can think anything you like. (SF: You bet. Because I don't think Christ wanted all the Jesus freaks to be fanatics either.) The question is what do you want? (SF: Sir?) What do you want? (SF: What do I want?) Yes. Never mind what Jesus wanted or what Mohammed wanted or what anybody else wanted. Let them rest in peace. (SF: Thank you, I'll try.) The question is what do you want? Where are you coming from? That's the important question. (SF: I don't want people to be fanatics. Negligence of any stripe make me nervous perhaps they shouldn't, but they do.) Leave people alone. (SF: I'll try.) Don't concern with people so much. (SF: Alright I'll try.) Be yourself. Find out who you are then see if those things disturb you. (SF: Okay thanks.) Sure.

R: Mary needs a ride on sunday. If anybody can pick her up. Her phone number is there. A ride to satsang.

SH: She requested that they just phone her and let her know. So I put the phone number down there. (R: So anybody who is going that way.) Anybody who wants to pick it up and do it well they can phone her.

R: So let us break bread together.

SH: Persian bread.

SU: Oh it should be heated a little bit.

R: What do you want everything? (students laugh)

(general prashad talk as tape ends) [TOC]

CAN WE CELEBRATE CHRISTMAS?

26th December, 1991

Robert: Good evening. (Students: Good evening Robert) It is good to be with again. I hope you all had a nice holiday. There is more to come.

Someone asked me on Tuesday if it's alright to celebrate Christmas. (laughter) I replied, "Do you mean you need my permission?" If you have to ask do as you please. After all who asks a question like this?

You have to remember that your body is not yourself. And your body is motivated by karma. So that your body will do whatever it came to this earth to do. Yet it has absolutely nothing to do with you. Never think should I do this or should I do that. When you're indecisive you confuse the powers that be, that will lead you guide you in right action, to do the things you came here to do.

In other words you don't have to think about what is going to happen tomorrow or the next day or the day after. Everything will take care of itself. There is nothing in this universe that wants to hurt you. You have to have faith, trust that everything will work out. Everything has to work out because there is only the Self, which is beyond explanation. Yet it is absolute reality, pure awareness. This is what you really are, god, nirvana, all is well. There never was anything wrong and there never will be anything wrong. It's hard for most people to understand this. Yet you have to start to believe and think that something put you on this earth which makes you believe that you are a human being.

Are you a human being? Is there something that put you on this earth? Where did you come from? Who are you? Find out.

We have been discussing the I-thought. The thought called I. And I have been explaining to most of you for two or three years that the I-thought is not you. All of your problems, all of your anxieties, all of your fears, all of your depressions are attached to the I-thought. And it is the I-thought that brings the confusion into your life. For you are identifying with the I-thought instead of identifying with the Self. Some of us still do not understand this. A question I was asked about this is, "If the I-thought is what disease, lack or imitation really is, then how come people like Ramana Maharshi, Rama Krishna, Jesus and others suffered so much? From cancer, from being nailed to the cross. They were self-realized. So why did they suffer so? Who can tell me that? Who can answer that question?

SU: They didn't suffer. (SD: Only thought they did?)

R: You're on the right track. The I-thought that you identify with, suffers. And your I-thought sees these people suffering. You don't but the I-thought does. Do you see?

As long as you believe you are I then you see the I in everyone. If you see yourself as a human being, as I, going through all kinds of experiences then you also see me, Fred, Mary, everyone on this earth going through their experiences. And they appear to be going through similar experiences that you are. When the I-thought dissolves, when it no longer exists for you, you will not see suffering. You will not see good or bad. When I say you will not see I mean you will not see with your spiritual I, anything wrong with the whole universe, you will only see perfection. Yet the body may seem to slightly see the other side. What most people see. But these are like drawings on the chalkboard. They come and go and they have no meaning for you.

Therefore always remember that it is your I-thought which beholds all of the things with life. You have absolutely nothing to do with that. When you see a person suffering. You do the best to relieve that suffering. It is your duty to help. Yet you should always be aware that this is only the I-thought. This is just a superimposition on the Self and has no power, it has no substance, it has no life. It is false like a dream.

SH: How does the I-thought arise?

R: The I-thought never arose. It appears to have arisen just as the water in the mirage, just as the sky is blue, when it's really not blue. Just as the snake in the rope.

SH: So it doesn't come from consciousness misidentifying with body-mind.

R: No it doesn't. That's a long fairy tale that doesn't exist. It's simplicity itself. The I-thought never existed. There is nothing you have to get rid of and there is nothing you have to fight. If the I-thought really existed then you would have to go through periods of meditation, periods of sadhana, you would have to do all kinds of practices, repentance to become free of the I-thought. But since the I-thought never existed and does not exist today or right now, all you really have to do is to awaken. By hearing these words, by coming to satsang, by reading the transcripts, you simply have to awaken. When I talk about the I-thought I'm talking about a lie. But yet it's the only way to explain the situation that you appear to be going through.

SD: But Robert why is the appearance so strong that millions of people are deceived by it?

R: Because millions of people are experiencing maya. They are going through the grand illusion. Which doesn't even exist. Noone is really going through anything. When you have something stuck in your mind it always appears like reality. For some reason we appear to have been born. And we go through experiences and then we die. But we were never born and we do not go through any experiences and we never die. There is absolutely nothing happening.

SG: If the I-thought is like a dream? If the Jnani the eternally awakened one, the dream can't be, that means the Jnani is eternally awakened, The dream never was?

R: There is no dream. Everyone is a Jnani. Everyone is awakened. But some of us refuse to acknowledge this. We would rather keep on dreaming or playing.

SH: Then if we're all our consciousness and that is all we are period then it's sort of a game we play of hide and seek, lost and found? (R: True.) We're coming on like we are what we aren't?

R: True but even that is false. (SH: It's all a pretense?) Because we're not even here to pretend. (laughter) I can assure you of this; there is no one playing any games, there is no one pretending, there is absolutely nothing going on.

SD: Well why should there be a need for awakening if we're all awakened and just don't know it and...?

R: Because I'm sitting here and you're sitting there and we're having a discussion about it. (SD: But where does the illusion of a need to awaken come from?) It doesn't come from anywhere because there never was a need to awaken.

SL: Then we could have gone bowling tonight? (laughter)

R: Of course. And that's the point I was making in the beginning, when someone asked me whether they should celebrate Christmas. What have I got to do with that? If you feel like celebrating, celebrate. If you don't, don't.

SD: What about Christmas as the birthday of another Jnani, wouldn't that be more worthwhile than just another holiday?

R: But after all who is experiencing this? Who is celebrating the birthday of another Jnani? There is only one. There are not two or three or four. There are no others. There is only the one. So who is celebrating what? We're celebrating the birthday of somebody we call a Jnani. Why don't we celebrate our birthday, as the Jnani? Well you say, "Well I'm not evolved as that particular person." "Why do you say that? Why do you believe you're not?" (SD: Because Jnanis know that they're awake, that's the difference.) That's your difference. Know that you're awake. Why do you want to know if somebody else is awake? Forget about everybody else. Look to yourself. What you see in yourself, you will see in everybody else. You are the one and there are no others.

SH: That is just too radical. The mind doesn't want to accept it.

R: You know what you can do with your mind don't you? (laughter) (SH: Not to said in polite company. It's just too damn simple!) That's it! That's exactly true. We want it to be very complicated. We want to get into different dogmas, or we want to get into different type of teachings or we want to read books or we want to travel and meet Masters. We want to do all of these things when all we have to do is sit down where we are and awaken.

SG: So Robert once you have realized the I, the I-am and also have the realization of the complete nothingness of appearances, why would any appearances other than perfection continue to persist.

R: For when you have your self-realization as you call it, you find perfection and imperfection as two sides of the same coin. We talk about perfection and we're talking about human perfection. All human perfection will have to experience imperfection. We have to go beyond both of them. Then we are in an entirely different realm. Where there is no perfection and there is no imperfection. And that's most difficult to comprehend. (SG: The nature of spiritual being is spiritual perfection is it not?) What do you mean by spiritual perfection? (SG: I don't know it's just...we're talking about purity and innocence and just wholeness, a spiritual wholeness and with that consciousness would that translate to what we would call human perfection or human wholeness?) Well this is the trouble of most of the new age teachings. We're trying to change bad for good. And that's a grave mistake I believe for most of us. We don't want to exchange bad for good. For the way this universe is built, it's built on duality. The universe appears to be functioning by duality. And duality means you have to experience both.

Therefore as you go through the vicissitudes of life, you experience good times and you experience bad times. If you experience all good times in this life, human goodness alone, you have to go through another planet to come back again and experience the other side. The only way to free yourself is to get rid of your humanhood. Totally renounce your humanhood. Become inhuman. Then alone will you become free. But as long as you are trying to make a sick body whole. As long as you're trying to make a poor person rich, a depressed person happy, that is only for a while. That will work only for a while. If you go into the teachings of Jesus, Jesus healed alot of people, how many of those people remained healed, we don't know. Even Jesus said to the sinner, "Go and sin no more or a worse fate will befall you."

By sin he meant, do not think the way you've been thinking, do not live the way you've been living, do not believe what you've been believing or you will revert back to the thing I cured you from. And of course most of these people didn't understand what he was talking about. So many of these people reverted back to the sickness they had before. We have to realize that we are not trying to improve our humanhood. We want to get rid of our humanhood. When we transcend the body it's a completely new ball game. For the body will go through these experiences. This is why people like Ramana Maharshi, Rama Krishna, Jesus suffered because they appeared in our eyes to suffer. Weren't they self-realized? Then why did they go through these experiences?

SG: Well my own belief from what I think is that Jesus consciously chose the crucifixion merely to show that there was no power in this world including death which had any power over him, period. And he could transcend anything because he had a consciousness of one power and one Self. Which transcended as you said anything in this world. (R: But did he appear to suffer?) He appeared to, he came and appeared to suffer, yes.

R: This is the truth about us also. The appearance maybe that we're having problems. Yet who is having the problem? The mind, the ego, not you. You have never had a problem in your life. There is absolutely nothing going on in your life. But as you identify with the problem like most people do and you worry about it and you fret about it and you go to psychics and you go to healers and you go to this person and you got to that person trying to get rid of your problem, this is crazy, this is a joke.

For you will go through the problem that you have to go through. And even if you're healed of the problem it will only be for a while. For the pendulum has to swing back. Therefore do not waste your time working with psychics or going through the psychic realms or trying to get healed. Rather work on your own transcendence. Work on your own transmutation. Become free from the bodily experience completely.

Then the body will do what it's supposed to do but you will be safe. For you are not the body. You are absolute reality, effortless pure awareness. That's what you are right now. When you try to think about it you spoil it. If you're able to realize that right this second you are pure awareness then you would be pure awareness.

But you allow your mind to think and tell you things and thoughts keep going through your mind. And you become very human and you go through human experiences. But human experiences do not exist. Your body, your mind, your ego does not exist. The world, the universe, God, does not exist. You are absolute nothing.

I know when I say that you are nothing it sounds a little scary to some people, for they believe when they're nothing they're in limbo. Again you're thinking about your body. Nothing means no thing. You are no thing that is known to your mind. You are beyond anything that you can comprehend.

This is why I say that you have to have faith and trust so you can let go. If you do not have faith and trust then what you see in the world will affect you. You will be afraid to let go all of your experiences because you have no idea where you will be or what will happen to you. Yet there is absolutely nothing to fear in this entire universe or anywhere else. And if you let go you will be completely free, completely awakened. This is what I mean when I say to you, awaken. Awaken now! I mean let go of all the confusion of all the preconceived ideas, of all the conceptual thinking. Let go of everything. Nothing will happen to you. It is difficult for many people.

Since it's Christmas we'll talk a little bit about Jesus. You remember the story of Nicodemus. He was a very wealthy Pharisee and he was afraid to follow the teachings of Jesus. He went to him many times but he was afraid to follow those teachings because he owned land and he owned houses and he owned cattle, sheep. But yet he wanted what Jesus had to offer. For he realized that he was getting older and he was going to die soon.

He wanted to know the truth. He didn't want his friends and his people seeing him hanging around with Jesus. So he went to see him one dark night and he said, "Master what do I have to do to see the kingdom of heaven?" Which means what do I have to do to become self-realized, to awaken. But Jesus knew him and he realized that in this life it was impossible for him to accept these teachings and become free. So he looked at him and he told him, "You have to give everything you own away to the poor and follow me." And this was too much for him. As the story goes he went away and never came back again.

Now look at your life what are you afraid of giving up? Jesus really didn't mean you have to give everything away to the poor. He meant that he had to give everything away in his mind and become simple. A poor person doesn't own anything so he usually has nothing to worry about except getting rich. So Jesus meant you have to mentally let go of all the thoughts and feelings and emotions that have been holding you to this world and to all of your possessions. But Nicodemus couldn't do this, he couldn't let go. So you see you don't really have to let go or give away all of your possessions. It's all done mentally. You have to mentally renounce everything in this world.

Try to remember again as you hear these things that you have absolutely nothing to do with your body. It is your body that is renouncing, not you. You have nothing to renounce. As you begin to let go of all your thoughts and your feeling sand your emotions, of worldly things, you begin to achieve happiness and peace and love that is not from this world. You become totally free. And remember that your body will do what it came here to do, never forget that that is the appearance. You will go through the experiences that you have to go through. They have absolutely nothing to do with you. This is what I mean when I say, "Let go. Forget about yourself. Do not think that you have to accomplish anything."

If you can only understand as a human being, everything has been mapped out for you. Everything has been mapped out for you when you were born. Your whole life is preconditioned, preordained. If you can only remember these things when you're going through your so-called ordeals, problems, situations, it was all planned ahead of time. The exact day when you're going to leave your body has already been planned out. If you're going to be rich or poor, happy or sad, sick or healthy. All these things have been planned out. Therefore what do you have to worry about? What do you have to concern yourself about. What is there to fight and what is there to fear.

Can't you see now that when you get involved in all the things that most humans are involved in, what you're really doing is you're pulling yourself deeper into maya? Deeper into illusion? Deeper into confusion?

SK: I sense that my participation, my positive, joyous participation in the process, that I have a duty towards that, I have a strong sense of that. Is that an illusion?

R: Who is the I that has this? You say, "I have this." What is the source of that I? (SK: I should spend every waking moment investigating that rather than participating?) Yes. You will also participate if you're supposed to. Yet you will not have the doership feeling. If you're supposed to participate in life you will. But as you spend your time asking, "Who am I?" or "To whom does this I come? What is the source of the I?" You will find happiness and joy just as you are. Yet your body will participate if it has to participate. But you will have nothing to do with it.

SD: When you say that you are not the doer, in other words the power that you refer to makes everything happen right, so we don't do anything, is that correct?

R: Correct. There is absolutely nothing that you have power over as an ego. It's all a joke. You get angry, you get happy, you strive for this, you strive for that, you think you're accomplishing something, you think you have duties to fulfill. You have all these thoughts going in and out of your mind. (SD: And even the thoughts are predestined?) The thoughts are predestined, everything is predestined. This is why I tell you the only freedom you have is not to react to your thoughts. Let the thoughts come, let them go, let them do what they want. But do not react to your thoughts. (SD: I thought reactions were thoughts?) Reactions are thoughts when you react, then they're part of your thoughts. That's why I say, "Do not react." Leave your thoughts alone.

SH: Witnessing is not a thought it's not an act. (R: It's not an act.) It's just a perception. (R: Correct.)

SU: Robert if everything is preordained then who does the preordaining?

R: No one. Everything is preordained as long as you believe you're human. As long as you believe you are a body. But when you get beyond the body, nobody is preordaining anything. This is why I said before karma does not exist, reincarnation does not exist. Nothing exists. There is nobody who has preordained a thing.

SX: Then why are we doing different things. Why are you awakening and why are we here sitting here wondering what happened to us. Why is this different? People are different?

R: Because that is what you chose to do. That is what you're doing. This is what you want to do. This is how it appears. Yet in reality you're not doing anything.

SX: Well that's not true. I didn't choose to be an oriental girl or you guys choosing to be a Westerner. Who is choosing me to be born as a westerner or easterner? I didn't choose it?

R: When you believe in the body then there is also a soul. And there is also many different planes of existence. They're all part of the delusion. So what happens to most people like this it appears before you came to this earth on the astral plane you chose to come back to where you are and to go through these experiences. Because you believe this is what you have to do to unfold. But what I'm telling you is to let go of all this thinking. And not to think these things. But rather ask yourself, "Who am I? Where does the I come from that believes this? What is the source of the belief?" Which is the I-thought. And when you get to the origin you become the Self, you become pure awareness, all this dream will be over. And there will be no astral plane, there will be no reincarnation, there will be nothing.

SD: So psychic realms and the astral are all part of maya or illusion? (R: They're all part of maya.) So there's no need to dabble in the psychic realms in order to evolve? (R: Absolutely not!)

SG: Some of these beliefs that are dualistic...you're destroying everything that can be stated, you're saying is an illusion. (R: I hope so.) (students laugh) Is there not some value to traditional beliefs like for me the idea of karma was helpful but the idea of ... certain ideas were helpful and I find that under your scalpel I'm left with nothing and I don't have an identity to go to the next place? So I'm left with all my beliefs shattered but no magnetism towards this dry place that you're painting, which is nothing.

R: Why are you concerned about this? (SG: Because I want to be out if this pain and suffering of this existence that I experience.) Then let go, go within, find out who is the I is, that is suffering, who is going through all this... (SG: These are actions you're saying to do?)

These are actions you do to become free. (SG: Action is in dualism?) Action is in dualism, you have to do the dualism as long as you're practicing a practice.

SG: So you acknowledge that there are some dualistic actions or thoughts that are of some conditional value?

R: You have to use your mind to destroy your mind for some people. It's easier to say wake up when I say wake up and forget the whole thing but if you want to be con-founded, be debatable and argumentative... (SG: I don't but it's a strong habit.) Exactly so then you have to do the practice. (SG: Until the point when you're fed up with it.) Until the strong habit melts, dissolves and you become free.

SD: I also think that your concept of nothingness as being dry and dreary is not really what Robert is saying because he is just saying you are no thing, no thing conceivable to the human mind but consciousness is bliss and happiness...

SG: That's a concept though from my understanding we eventually need to let go of all...

R: It's all a concept really. It goes beyond that. When we sit here I use alot of these words to make you understand that there is a place where all is well. And there is nothing yo need and there is nothing going on and everything is unfolding like it should. But you will not believe me. So we talk about all these other things. We get into reincarnation, into karma for you are always talking about your body, you're feeling your body, you're feeling your experiences.

Therefore we have to have a method, a way that you can use because you are an active person. You can't just become silent and still. Your mind is very active. Therefore you can use your active mind to destroy itself. By inquiring, "Who am I?" By inquiring, "What is the source of the I?" Where did it come from? Who gave it birth?" And as you abide in this I and you follow it to the source the I will dissolve in absolute awareness, in sat-chit-ananda, in parabrahman. So this gives the active person something to do. For they can't go ten minutes without thoughts coming into their mind. Therefore if they turn their mind inward and they practice things like self-inquiry something will begin to give and then you will sit silent.

Self-inquiry is merely a method to bring you into the silence. So you can sit without thoughts bombarding you from all directions. So you can sit without words... (tape break) ...will find joy and peace.

(short silence)

See how your mind is? You can't even sit a minute before you start chattering. You're wondering about this and you're wondering about that. That is why you have to ask yourself, "To whom do these thoughts come? Who is thinking these thoughts?" Every time thoughts come into your mind inquire, "To whom do these thoughts come? Why the thoughts come to me, to who else? I think of these thoughts. I have the fears the frustrations. I appear to have the problems."

But catch yourself what you're saying. You're saying "I" has the problems, aren't you? Not you but I. So what is the source of the I. As you abide in the I and you follow it to the source you will come to the conclusion that only the source exists. And what is the source? Silence.

And even as I tell you this some of you are thinking well if I do that, who will run the store? Who will take care of the business? Who will take care of my home? I'll tell you again, "You will!" And you will take better care of these things then you ever have before. You will have more wisdom to know what to do.

When you're not worrying or fearing something then the opposite comes into play. You will have good ideas, you will have wisdom, you will know what to do, to make anything a success in your life. When you know that you are not the doer. Therefore I say to you, "You do not have to worry or fret. That if I sit thinking, who am I? Everything will go to hell. You are already in hell by believing your are a body. That's hell. Get rid of that belief. If you can come to satsang and sit without thoughts that is the best thing you can ever do. But as you sit here and thoughts enter your mind that spoils everything for you. Whether they're good thoughts or bad thoughts it makes no difference. You want to go beyond thinking. You want to awaken. The only way you can awaken is when you stop thinking.

This is why I always tell you, "Do not believe me, find out for yourself." Investigate yourself. Find out who you are. You do not have to believe a word I'm saying. You simply have to practice or awaken by sitting in the silence and then you will know for yourself. But if you let yourself get involved in mental thoughts and mental ideas in the objective world then you will seem to experience karma, reincarnation, different planes of existence, that is all a dream. It doesn't exist.

You are bright and shiny. You are ultimate oneness. Pure awareness. Why not abide in your real nature.

You never know what is going to happen to you physically if you keep relying on this world. People strive for success, they strive to own things. They want to own bigger and better houses. They want to make out they accomplished something. Yet you can be walking down the street tomorrow and a car will run you over and you'll be dead. So what good was all this striving and fighting for existence and survival.

And even if that doesn't happen, how many more years do you have on this planet? If you're thinking in human terms. How many more years do you have left? What was the point of your existence if you have to die? You've worked all your life, you've strived, you've fought for success. You've tried to accomplish things. You've accumulated all kinds of things. And then you have to die and leave it all behind.

This alone should give you an inkling that the world is a mirage. The world is a bad dream. Get rid of the world. Do not react to the world. Do not fight the world. Do not try to win any battles. Do not renounce. Do not accept. Simply be yourself. Just the way you are right now. Right now just the way you are, you're neither sick nor healthy, rich nor poor, happy nor sad, you are no thing. Stay that way.

Again you can tell if you're making progress by observing yourself daily.

For instance, Christmas was yesterday. Did you get totally involved in it and forget about your Self? And forget that you are not the doer? Did you get so involved in family and friends? And with the Christmas spirit that you forget all about your Self? That you are the Self, imperishable, illumined, never born, never die or did you get completely wrapped up in the Christmas? This is what I mean when I tell you, it doesn't matter if you want to celebrate Christmas or you don't. Whatever you do realize that this is whatever your body is doing. But you are not your body. You're always one pointed. You always think of the Self, absolute reality. And let the body do what it wants. This is how it should be everyday.

As you go about your business, you go to the bank, you go to work, you go to the bathroom, you eat. Whatever you do remember that you are not the body. Keep this in back of your mind. Observe how your body does all of these things. Without your help.

For instance, I pick up the glass and take a drink. Who did that?

SF: The body. (R: What body?) The non-existent body.

R: You see a non existent body? (laughter) What I am trying to say it makes no difference. Do not try to analyze it or figure it out. When I say to not react to anything I mean become still. Don't say I'm not reacting to something. By say you're not reacting to something you're reacting to it. You're reacting by not believing you're not reacting. You see what I mean? When you see something going on, be the witness. Do not believe there is a you doing something and do not believe there is no you doing nothing. Both are wrong. It's erroneous to believe that there is a nothing or there is a something.

SG: I have a problem with the witness because I spent a long time not being fully there in a psychological way.. being a witness is different from coping out but on a certain psychological level I escape from life. And when I try to find the witness sometimes I walk around like less there than I want to be. I'm not applying the witness state in a correct way because I fall into a disassociation which is a psychological safe place that I have made for myself. And so Im a little frightened of what you say about whenever you walk around just witness. To me that scares me because I'm afraid of now.

R: This is why I told you before what you should do therefore is ask yourself, "Who believes this? To whom do these feelings and thoughts come?" Follow it through. "They come to me. I feel fear. I feel this way. Who is this I that feels this?"

SG: In the midst of activity I'm to do this? (R: Yes.) While I'm doing dangerous activities, while I'm... (R: Yes.) Walking on tight rope while I'm playing my music? (R: Yes.) And you need absolute concentration at the same time, and keep in mind who is doing this?

R: Exactly. And you will find that you do your activities better than you ever did before. (SG: That's an feasible thing to do, what you're saying?) Yes. Because you've taken the mind off the object. Therefore you will accomplish the object in a more efficient manner. For you are no longer concerned with the object.

SK: Is that a release from the doer, as the man is saying?

R: It's a total release from the doer. (SK: The doer is not there anymore?) When you keep concentrating on "Who am I?" You are no longer the doer. For you are questioning the doer, you are questioning the Self. (SK: But it's being done the way it's supposed to be done?) Yet automatically your body will accomplish whatever it came here to do. Remember that the body that doesn't exist appears to be under the laws of karma. Therefore the Lord of karma will take care of your bodily functions and take care of your needs until you awaken to the fact that there are no needs and there is no karma and there is no body. It becomes paradoxical. When you start discussing it this way. But never the less that's the only way to talk about it. There is only a body as long as you think of a body. But as you raise your thoughts and you transcend your thoughts, the body will appear to do what it does but as far as you're concerned you're doing nothing. There is no one doing anything.

SF: The body is in the mind?

R: The body is the mind. When there is no mind there is no body. I know this sounds a little absurd sometimes when I talk about it. But let's go back to your tight rope situation. Imagine you're walking a tight rope. As long as you believe you are the body you have to be careful, you have to watch your step, you're looking about falling and everything else. But when you get to the other state, when you know that you are not the body there is no one walking a tight rope because that doesn't exist. But other people will look at you as if you're walking a tight rope. Because they are seeing themselves. They're seeing bodies.

SD: And would the in between step be the witnessing of you're walking the tight rope and knowing that you're not the doer?

R: There is really no in between. It all happens at the same time. If you become aware that you are not the body there is nobody left to witness.

SD: Well true if you're fully awakened but I was talking about from where most of us are to that. That there might be an interim step of witnessing, isn't that what witnessing is for, is to awaken?

R: Witnessing is to keep your mind still. To make your mind one pointed so you can become silent and awaken. But if we look at the different interim steps we're making it harder for ourselves. As far as we're concerned there should be no steps, there simply should be an awakening and that's it. And if we can't do that we should do whatever we have to do to get to that point. Without thinking too much about it.

That's why so many of us get so mixed up in the procedure. So mixed up in the game of trying to be a witness or trying to practice self-inquiry. Don't set your mind on these things but do them anyway without thinking about them. As you do them without thinking about them the thinker will become totally demolished. And the thinker will disappear. But again the truth is when you look at a situation it is the body, the mind that observes the situation. But when a Jnani looks at a situation the Jnani sees the Self and he sees the situation also, but as the Self. That is a little confusing isn't it?

SJ: If it brings us back to the topic that you first stated...

R: Jay where did you come from?) (laughter)

SH: Yeah where did you come from? (R: Who are you?) Yeah, are you?

R: Yes we want to stick to the reality. The reality is that there is nothing going on. Noone is doing anything. When you say, "Well that is a bunch of baloney because I'm doing something." Think about the dream state. In the dream state you always appear to be doing something. But you know very well when you awaken you did absolutely nothing! So why is it so hard to look at this world like that? Why don't you admit that this world is a dream and end it all? And pierce the bubble. But you insist on this world being a dream. And not knowing about it.

SK: So is it a belief system of this is all there is and there really is no faith in anything else. I'm totally conditioned to this physical world, my thoughts and it's all there is, It's all I know? Did you say just let go of that?

R: I'm saying look at it like you would a dream. You let go of the dream. Imagine if you will that we're all having a dream and we're all sitting here like this. Just like we're sitting here right now. And we're asking all these questions and we're going through all of these ramifications and we're wondering if we can ever wake up, and I tell you, "When you awaken you will know it you will be awake, it's all a dream." And you don't believe me. And even if you don't believe me you wake up and everything is gone. You're in the waking state the dream is gone. And so it is when you awaken from this state, you will be in the absolute reality state. Where nothing is happening. Yet you exist, as the Self. And the whole universe is within you. So when you have a problem with the teaching think of the dream state.

SG: Can a dream character awaken?

R: You awaken because you are the character, that's dreaming. Don't worry about somebody else awakening. It's your dream. Everyone in the dream is your dream. (SG: If it's a nice dream then you want to wake up, but if it's a horrible dream then you don't want to wake up.) It makes no difference you still wake up. And the waking up makes you realize there was no terrible dream that is real and there is no nice dream that is real. They are both impostors, fakes. They both do not exist. And so it is in this world also. Things that appear terrible do not exist. And things that appear nice do not exist. They're all part of the mortal dream. Therefore awaken and be free.

SH: When you say Robert that all exists within you of course that means the you that you really are? It doesn't exist in you as an ego? It exists in you as you are always which is consciousness? (R: Consciousness right.) Yeah.

R: Consciousness in this case is like the blackboard. (SH: All this is written on it.) All the images of the world the universe. So the whole universe is within you. Just like the images on the blackboard. But you are free of everything. You are total freedom. (SH: Then the images exist because of you also?) The images exist because you exist. (SH: Umm. But you can't say you are the images?) No you are Brahman. (SH: You are that which they are written on? Which they appear on?) You are the absolute reality and the images are superimpositions. (SH: How would the images come about in the first place?) They never did. (SH: They seem irrelevant.) They are irrelevant. The whole thing is irrelevant. This whole conversation is irrelevant. (SH: Yeah, okay. (laughs) touche.)

SF: The last thursday I brought up a couple of matters. One was; No amount of karma what we call any activity or work can bring about realization, and the other one was what Mohammed had in mind when he told his people not to make images or representations of him, and I got a strong feeling that you wanted me to figure that out for myself.

R: Of course because you're always concerned about Mohammed or Jesus or everybody else. (laughter) Let them rest. Find out who you are. Jesus, Mohammed are thoughts of your own. (SF: Yeah but I can learn from those guys.) You can learn from those guys but you have to finally learn from yourself. (SF: And be my own authority.) Exactly. (SF: Thank you.)

SH: Throw them all in the scrap heap. (R: Including yourself.) They are irrelevant. (laughs) (R: Throw yourself on the scrap heap also.) Right.

SF: I can learn from them the same as I sit here learning from you, I hope?

R: Well you have to get rid of this idea that you're learning from anybody. (SF: There is nothing to learn?) We're just here together to have a great time. To share prashad and to tell jokes, to amuse ourselves. And in the process all of your karma will be all eaten up, then everything will disappear and you will awaken. So don't get the idea that you've got to learn from me or from anybody else. (SF: Because we already know?) Of course everything is within you.

SP: Robert you talked about faith and trust? It seems to me that those two things are connected to one thing, love?

R: Faith and trust are connected to love? (SP: Yeah.) If you like them to be they are. Faith, trust, love they're all the same. But we're not talking about human love or human faith or human trust. We're talking about letting go. Becoming completely free.

(silence)

SF: The way you described the actions of a Jnani at times are so... what he does is automatic and spontaneous and successful. As though those things which a Jnani appears to do will be successful from a worldly sense in the eyes of a so-called human being.

R: Well not necessarily. Again we're trying to discuss what a Jnani is. A Jnani is no thing. Has absolutely nothing to do with success or not success, or happy or sad or rich or poor. The Jnani has absolutely nothing to do with these things. For the Jnani is not a body that has these things. A Jnani is the universe, the pure self-awareness. So all these other things have to do with human values. The Jnani is free of those concepts. Even though it appears to the ajnani that the Jnani seems like a person and goes through different experiences. But the Jnani knows that there are no experiences and there is nothing that the Jnani is going through. There is absolutely nothing happening in the world of Jnana. The happenings are in the eyes of the beholder.

SF: What you said sounded as though in the eyes of the ajnani, what the Jnani does will appear to be successful, it sounded that way?

Sometimes it's successful, sometimes it's not. But those are all relative terms. We're bothered about things like success as compared to failure. But in the Jnani's world there is nothing like this going on. This is why we were talking about Ramana Maharshi's suffering from cancer, Rama Krishna dying of cancer, Christ nailed to the cross, who observed this? The Jnani or the ajnani? (SF: The ajnani.) The ajnani observed all these things. But to the Jnani nothing was happening at all. Nothing ever happened and nothing will ever happen. That's the paradox. It appears to happen to the ajnani. So to be a Jnani is not to be successful. You can't say, "I'm a very wealthy person. I'm a very healthy person because I am a Jnani." That is all part of the relative world. And the Jnani has transmuted and transcended the relative world. Therefore the Jnani has nothing to do with those terms.

(silence)

(tape starts abruptly with Robert) ...this is why you always hear there is only the Self. And that's not qualified or unqualified.

SF: Heaven and earth will pass away and my words will not pass away.

R: If you say so. (SF: The words, are pure awareness.) Well how many words have been spoken and passed away? (SF: What was that again?) All the words that Jesus spoke. (SF: I didn't say he said that.) He did say that? (SF: Sure.) So are you saying they will pass away or they won't. (SF: That's what you tell us that we're nothing, no thing.) So what about the words? (SF: The words are just a symbol of pure awareness for the atman or Self.)

SD: I think he's talking about when the bible says, in the beginning was the word, the word was I-am? Are you referring to the word in that way Fred? Consciousness? (SF: No that would be the om.)

R: Even that has to go. (SF: All, everything goes.) All of these things are hindrances. (SF: All thoughts.) They're all thoughts.

SK: You know what's really simple when you have a question, don't ask it. If you don't ask the question you'll see the fool that is asking the question. If you let the fool go there will be no questions. It's really simple. There is no problem if you don't have a question. (R: You can say that. That's true. Then you'll have nothing to do.) That's right and nobody to do it?

SV: And Robert will be out of a job. (SH: Fat chance.) (laughter)

SX: Then why are we here? (R: Ask yourself.) (SK: Who wants to know?)

R: We have some prashad. We have a papaya. Honey dipped papaya.

SD: Umm. Start with Mary.

SM: Robert. (laughter)

(general prashad talk as tape ends) [TOC]

THREE PRECEPTS FOR SELF-REALIZATION

2nd January, 1992

Robert: Good Evening. (Students: Good Evening.) Happy 1992. Whatever that means. I welcome you with all my heart. It is good being with you once again.

Many of you have been with me for over two years now and you're all making progress. Some of you cannot see it for yourself. But I know you better than you know yourself and I can tell.

There are wonderful things happening to this group. There is something taking place within you. A tremendous happiness is growing within you. Happiness to be yourself. A happiness that does not require outside stimulation. A happiness that you always take with you wherever you go. That nothing can interfere with. The happiness that you are. No matter what is going on in this world, in your family life, at work, whatever, the happiness goes with you. Fear disappears. You are beginning to realize that all is well and everything is unfolding as it should.

The world is becoming less important to you. Yet you're still functioning in the world and you are doing the things you came here to do. But it happens all by itself. You are at peace.

You notice the events that used to make you irritable, depressed, upset have disappeared from your life. Things in themselves perhaps have not changed as yet but you are feeling free. And you are beginning to realize there is absolutely nothing, no one, no thing, that can ever upset you. You are at peace. And because you are at peace beautiful things unfold in your life. Peace begets peace. You attract peaceful people. You are inclined to gravitate towards peaceful situations and you feel good all over. I know this is happening to approximately ten people here. And we'll explain why?

There are three precepts that great movements have talked about in their inner circles. This is nothing that is broadcast to the human race. But the inner circles of spiritual movements have always known this. There are three precepts for self-realization, for awakening. And this is the fastest way you can ever awaken and become free.

The first one is to have a personal relationship with a Sage and to be of service to a Sage.

The second one is to be at satsang most of the time.

We'll go into these more thoroughly.

The third one is to be in meditation with a Sage at appointed times.

Those are the three precepts that have been known since the beginning of time in every spiritual organization. They are usually not discussed with the outer movements, for the average person does not understand these things. But the inner circle or people who are close to the Sage very well understand these things.

In Advaita Vedanta, in this teaching, everybody is the inner circle. There is no separation, everyone is the Self. Everyone is absolute Reality. So I share this with you.

The first precept: To be in close association with a Sage.

Many of you know of Ramana Maharshi. He had the same attendants around him for thirty, forty, fifty, sixty years. They were of service to him until he left his body or until they left their body. We always make sort of fun of this that the devotee who used to pull his fan to keep him cool all year round, that was the only job he did. He never spoke he just pulled the fan all day long for forty years. And then while he was pulling the fan one day he just dropped dead. And Ramana called it, he exclaimed, "He will never come back again. He is free. He is liberated."

Now what happens to a person like that, who was in close proximity to a Sage and he was of service to a Sage. The self-realized Sage is the epitome of grace. The entire universe is that Sage. It is like sunlight spread all over the world. But when you get a magnifying glass you can pull the sunlight so strongly through the magnifying glass that it starts a fire. The Sage has this attribute without realizing it. For there is no one to realize anything. There is grace always flowing through the Sage. There is joy, happiness, love. That is what the Sage is made out of.

When you have a relationship with a Sage, when you are of service to the Sage, you are of service to your self. For the Sage becomes yourself. There is only one. Of course there is always always one everywhere. But yet through the Sage it shines brighter. Again it's like the sun. The closer you come to the sun the more heat you get. The more you hang around the Sage the greater the awareness, the realization, the joy that becomes expressed through you. When you are of service to a Sage you, again are of service to your self. For remember always there is only one Self. And you become a living embodiment of the consciousness of the Sage. This is very important to understand.

For the few new people that are here tonight, simply open your heart. Do not try to figure this out, to analyze this. For in this new year we wish to discuss this thoroughly so we can know how to function in the next year and the following years. Never try to analyze what I say. It makes no difference whether you agree with it or you don't. Just have an open heart and be still in your mind.

There is no greater way to become realized or to awaken than to be in association with a Sage or to be of service to the Sage. This will take you there faster than any form of meditation, any form of yoga or anything else you may do. It's the fastest way. It is spoken about in the Upanishads, in the Kabbalah, in all of the great books in this world. Never forget this, hold on to this.

The next precept is to be at satsang. It is important that you come to satsang whenever you can. Satsang is an extension of the Sage. When you come to satsang, satsang becomes a part of you. And you take it with you wherever you go. Satsang becomes part of your consciousness. And after a while you notice that you're always at satsang wherever you are. Do not take satsang lightly. I know some of you take it for granted sometimes and you call this a meeting, a lecture but never forget what this is. This is satsang and it is very important for you to realize the meaning of satsang. Sat is reality. Sang is to sit in reality.

Therefore when you come to satsang you are sitting in the reality of the Self. Your Self. The one Self. And as I mentioned you take it with you wherever you go. You may go through trying circumstances but satsang will always remind you who you are. You may be in a prison. Karmically you may be in a hospital. You may go far and wander far away over the hill 'n' dale but when you recall satsang it's just like you are at satsang because you are. Wherever you go, satsang has become a part of you. It is your consciousness, it is yourself.

The third precept is to be in meditation with a Sage. There are certain times a Sage meditates. A Sage never really meditates because meditation means that you pick out an object and you meditate on the object. For the Sage there is no object and there is no subject. The Sage sits in the silence. The silence is a better word than meditation.

When you sit in the silence with the Sage you can be in Japan and the Sage could be in Africa, it makes no difference. But you check your time zone and you sit in the silence with the Sage then you begin to pick up the oneness, the peace, the joy, the love of the Sage. It is like being of service in association with the Sage, when you are in the silence with the Sage.

Most of you realize by now that if the Sage sits in the silence from 6 to 9 in the morning and from 12 to 3 at night. You do not have to spend all of this time in the silence. Spend as much time as you can at that time. And you will see the results that ensue.

Those are the three precepts. There is nothing else you have to do in order to awaken. Everything else will take care of itself. If you just follow those rules and you do these things, you will soon see how everything takes care of itself. But the idea is to do it.

Many people like to hear words, they like to read books, yet they never practice. They never do anything. These things I shared with you are very simple to do. They're the easiest things in the world to do. They are for lazy people like us. They do not want to sit in the sadhana of the lotus posture for four or five hours, contemplating their navel. There is no particular way we have to sit. There is nothing we have to remember. It's just a question of doing.

Life is very short in this body and all of the things you're going through will soon come to an end. If you have not made any spiritual headway you will be under the delusion of karma. And you will return again and again in a delusory body form going through many experiences that appear real to you.

You will be caught up in maya and you will fight for survival, sometimes living from hand to mouth. If you have been a good humanitarian you might gravitate to an illusory planet where you appear to have a relatively good life but this will be only temporary. For the pendulum has to swing the other way and again you will go through pain, ordeals, then you'll have a rest or you will appear to have a semblance of happiness and then go back to pain again, it never ends.

The only way for it to come to an end is to give it all up now. Make up your mind that this is going to become the year for you to totally become realized. To awaken totally. You've had enough... (break in tape) ...do not become deluded into believing you want to change bad things for good things. I've told you so often that the bad and good things are the same sides of the coin...two sides of the coin. Bad and good. We're trying to transcend totally, completely good and bad. And by following the three precepts as outlined this will happen to you faster than you can breath, if you allow it to.

Do not allow the world to run your life. Do not allow people to run your life. Be yourself. Know yourself. Realize that you are Brahman, the pure awareness. There is nothing that can interfere with you. You are pure consciousness. This is your real state. This is what you are, whether you know it or not, whether you care or not. You can walk out of this door and go about your business like you always have, but your nature is pure consciousness and one day you will have to awaken. So why not begin now. Why wait?

Do not let the world fool you. I reiterate again and again. The world appears very powerful. It makes you want things. It tells you to pursue this, to pursue that, to become successful. All this is an illusion.

You are already successful. All your needs will be met if you have faith and trust the powers that be that are within you and without you. You will always be taken care of. There is no doubt about this. You have absolutely nothing to worry about. You have absolutely nothing to fear. Everything is right just the way it is. There never were any mistakes. Leave the world alone, mentally. Physically you will gravitate to where you're supposed to be and go through the experiences that you're supposed to go through. Yet do not react to them, leave everything alone.

SD: Robert I have a question. I think the three precepts are wonderful but what about self-inquiry which Sri Ramana said was the most direct route to awakening where would that fit in to these precepts?

R: That fits in for a person who would rather do something external, such as practicing self-inquiry. There are certain people who will not do the three precepts for their own reasons. Sometimes because the ego is too big. So those people have to work on self-inquiry. (SD: Would it be appropriate when sitting in silence with the guru if your mind wanders to do self-inquiry at that time?) Yes it would. The best thing you can do is to be in the silence but if your mind doesn't stay still you can practice self-inquiry. (SD: To bring it back...) Yes. (SD: ...to being one pointed?) Yes. (SD: Thank you.) We're trying to make it easy for you. (SD: So in sitting with the Sage, is there a subliminal communication because everything is the self in a way?) Exactly, yes. Because there is only the self. (SD: But it would be magnified by sharing the silence?) Exactly. The Self is always available but by sitting with the Sage it magnifies tremendously. (SD: And are you as a Sage aware of those sitting with you? Well they are all just the self aren't they?... never mind.) (laughs) What are you going to do with it?

(tape starts abruptly after a pause)

R: ..inhale and say, "I," exhale and say, "am," to yourself.

SF: What are the three attributes? It seems to help so I want to make sure I have the three of them correct. (R: It is unconditional effortless pure awareness.) (SF: I thought you had a third attribute?)

SE: Choiceless.

R: Choiceless, right. (SF: Choiceless, that's it.) I can never remember those things.

SH: That was Krishna Murti's favorite too, choiceless awareness.

R: Choiceless. Umm, it's a good word.

SD: How would you define choiceless in this instance? (R: It means that you have no choice you are pure awareness.) (laughter) That's it, right.

R: You have absolutely nothing to do with it. It's not your business. Your nature is pure awareness, that's what you are whether you like it or not. So there. (laughter) It's funny, we always think we have a choice. It's like asking a God, "Can you become a cow. Can you become a Kangaroo?" God is everything. God is all and encompasses every...choiceless awareness, self-contained choiceless awareness. And that's what we are. There is no room for anything else. We never had a choice.

Egoically we think we make choices. We think we're in charge we have anything to do with our lives. I can assure you, you have absolutely nothing to do with your life, as crazy as it sounds. You have no life. Someone's probably told you, "Go get a life!" They're trying to fool you. They want you to exist as a human being. Tell them, "No thank you I don't want a life. I'd rather be choiceless awareness." But watch who you tell that to, they might put you in the funny farm.

SF: I had an interesting experience one time, shortly after I got sober I was telling you of a guy that experienced a lot of D.T.'s. And I asked him if the things he saw and the things he felt were real. And he said, "Oh they're more than real." And what I'm wondering is if what he'd saw and what he experienced was a direct happening that did not have to go through the conditioned mind?

R: When he had his D.T.'s? (SF: Yeah the things he saw when he had the D.T.'s.) Well what he saw was his subconscious mind. The subconscious mind invented all of those things. It's just like we invented the world. The subconscious mind is full of all kinds of illusory things. We can see pink elephants, we can see kangaroos jumping up and down we can see all kinds of things. But it comes from us. (SF: I realize that but it...those things don't have to go through the conditioned mind we ordinarily...) No. (SF: That's the point I was...) No it doesn't go through the conditioned mind. (SF: That's the reason it seemed more real than real.) Yeah just like LSD. (SF: Yeah, okay.) And you see all kinds of things, you have all kinds of experiences. (SF: Oh boy!) (laughter) The conditioned mind does all this. You know where Fred's coming from. (laughter)

SD: The sixties were good to Fred. (laughter) (pause) But the subconscious would still be part of illusion right? (R: Yes.) Because it's still of the mind.

R: Yes, everything is of the mind. Whether it's karma or God or the universe or astral planets or subtle awareness, everything comes from the mind. The whole object is to destroy the mind completely until there is no you or I left. Then we're free.

Feel free to ask any question you like.

SY: If there is no you or I why would we meditate on "I-am?"

R: You meditate on I-am because you believe there is a you or I. If you didn't believe there is a you or I there would be no need to meditate on anything. As long as you think you are the I then you meditate on I-am in order to pull you in closely into the I-am. And then you'll be the I-am and nothing else.

SD: Perhaps a distinction should be made between the little I, the individual I and the I-am which is the name of God? (R: Umm.) When you say, "I-am," you are not reinforcing the individual I but the greater... (SY: The big self.) ...the I-am, exactly.

R: Yes. But if you're already without a body, without an I, without a you there would be no need for that because who is left to do it? (laughter)

SF: I'm beginning to see that everyone is exactly where they're supposed to be. (R: Sure) Pope John Paul and the punk rockers on Hollywood Boulevard and people in this room. (R: Even you.) Even me. I belong here I guess. (R: Umm.) And to think that any one of them ought to be dealt with bodily or mentally is very terrible...

R: That's an ego mistake. We try to change people, we try to change things, there is absolutely nothing you can change. (SF: Can't even change myself basically, it's a result of will.) But, because most of us do not realize this, we have to be of service to humanity. We have to help the homeless. Do what we can to make this planet a better planet in which to live but then when you know yourself, it's a different story.

SK: Robert you're saying then just the realization that my existence is a dream, I'm dreaming - I mean who is going to realize this if I'm the dreamer and I'm dreaming this dream? Where does this realization come in to so-call free me from this so-called dream?

R: By realizing when you wake up that you dreamt, you exist. You realize I dreamt, I slept and now I am awake. The I never changed through all three states of consciousness. The I remains the same. Then you have to find out who this I is and where it came from. When you find out where the I came from you'll be free. Do you follow that? (SK: And that's possible?) (laughter) Of course it's possible. If it weren't possible would I tell you about it? (laughter) (SK: I've been told a lot of things tonight.) (laughter) Well it's up to you to use your discrimination. (SK: Umm-hmm.)

SK: But Ramesh said something one time which I've always remembered which relates to what you were just talking about, that if I have nothing to do with being born and I have nothing to do with dying what makes me think that I have anything to do with what is going on in between? (R: Exactly.) You know that is a pretty profound statement. (R: Umm.) So when I say that to myself, there is a sense of letting go right there. (R: Yes.) There is a sense of surrendering... (R: Yes.) ...freeing from myself. (R: All that works. When you do it right.) Yeah.

(silence)

(tape break then tape restarts abruptly with students question)

SJ: ...if you sit in silence with the teacher?

R: If you have been with a guru or a Master, as you say, for a lengthy time, that Master can never leave you, whether he is embodied or not. And when the Master seems to leave his body he will always be with you. But if you've just come under the tutelage of a Master recently, let's say a few months and then the Master leaves his body, you should look for a new Master. For you haven't had the light strong enough to keep this Master with you all the time. So you need a living Master to show you the way to continue the process. But if you've been with him or her for quite a while, that's all you will need for the rest of your life, and after your life, and after that.

SD: So you mean if one reincarnated the same guru would still remain? (R: Yes.) How would the guru be known? (R: Intuitively.)

R: For the few people who are new here tonight it seems sort of strange, we talk about Masters, gurus and Sages. Yet it has been known from the beginning of time, most people can go only so far by themselves, spiritually speaking. And after that they need the help of someone who has been further on the path than they. For it becomes most difficult to have self-realization by yourself. Yet this has been done by a few people. This is possible. But the best bet is to find yourself a Sage or someone who has gone further on the spiritual journey than you have and surrender totally to that Sage. Then you will be free in this lifetime.

SD: Could you explain exactly the meaning of darshan?

R: Darshan means the light of the Sage. The divine light. Having the presence of the Sage in your life when you are in darshan, you are looking at the Master or the Sage and by direct transmission the Master or the Sage can give you a look or touch you or sing a mantra to you or do something. Which will lift you up from where you were before into a higher state of consciousness. So darshan also means looking at the face of a Sage.

SD: Is it the same as grace? Is darshan the same as grace shared by the guru?

R: No, darshan is the glimpse, the look at the Sage. Grace is what emanates from the guru, from the Sage. (SD: Thank you.) As an example, when Ramana Maharshi left his body there was a line of thousands of people getting their final darshan from him, passing in lines. Looking at him for the last time. That was darshan. As far as the Sage is concerned it makes no difference whether he is dead or alive, you get the same darshan.

(tape break)

(Continues with Robert)

R: Thank you Glen. (pause) I have to admit I have a little problem with that because I've been glancing at these cookies all night. (students laugh) They look so good.

SD: Desire. (laughter)

R: Would you like to read the Jnani Mary? (SM: Okay.)

R: Tony knows these are my favorite cookies so he teases me all the time and brings me bags of them so I can look at them and not eat them.

SD: Is that what you were thinking about while we were meditating? (students laugh)

R: Is there anything else to think about? (more laughter)

SH: Longing for cookies. (laughter) That makes you still human. (SD: But not really.)

(Mary reads the Jnani. Robert interrupts when Mary reaches the part where it mentions ...He is free from all longings...and Robert says, "Except for cookies" and everyone laughs. A student adds, "Spoken like a man. (more laughter ensues) (Mary then continues till the end of the reading)

R: Thank you Mary. (SM: Thank you Robert. Now do I get a cookie?) You get two.

R: In this new year let's try to keep our lives less complicated. Keep your life simple. Forget about your fears, your frustrations, drop them. You will be taken care of. There is more going for you than against you. Stop worrying. Surrender to God which is your Self. No one wants to hurt you. No one wants to punish you. As far as your past is concerned, forget it. It never existed. This is a new beginning for you. It's up to you.

Do we have any announcements?

(Students talk about transcripts and about copying them and bringing them back)

R: We have transcriptions here most of the time and if don't see them get after Mary. (laughter)

SD: Robert for the newcomers would you explain prashad please?

R: Prashad is food that has been blessed. The prashad itself is the teaching. When food has been blessed and you eat the food, you are eating the teaching. The food is complete in the teaching itself. So we always have prashad here when somebody brings it. When they don't bring it we don't have it. (students laugh) And this is it. So we'll pass it this way.

SU: Everybody leave a little for Robert to take home.

R: Feel free to take it whatever is left, is left.

SD: Robert I brought prashad also.

(general prashad talk as prashad continues to end of tape)

[TOC]

TRUE HAPPINESS PERMEATES THE UNIVERSE (MORE ON SPIRITUAL HEALING)

5th January, 1992

Robert: It's good to be with you once again, this lovely sunny day. I welcome you all with all my heart.

When you come to Satsang, you come to meet your Self. The Self that you really are, shining, bright, happy, whole, and when you go out of your way to come to Satsang, like on a rainy day like this, you double your value. You're only worth a penny and now you're worth two cents.

It reminds me when I was sixteen years old. I used to go to Joel Goldsmith on Tuesday nights and I lived in the Bronx in New York. I had to go out into the snow. Walk to the train station. Change trains. Go down to Manhattan and walk about a half a mile to the hotel where Joel Goldsmith used to be at that time.

What compelled me to do this? I could've stayed in a nice warm house, reading comic books. There was no TV at that time. I used to listen to, "I Love A Mystery," on the radio, but I would skip all that to go to be with Joel Goldsmith. Why? I don't know. It just happened.

This is the truth for most of you here today. You have no idea why you're here. If you have an idea you spoil it. There's no valid reason for you being here. If you believe that you're looking for something, you're making a grave mistake. There is nothing to look for. You are here because you are you. You are satsang yourself. The whole universe resides as you and when you come together with satsangees you begin to feel and understand this truth.

You forget about your problems, your troubles, the things that you think are important, and you surrender to your Self. By surrender to your Self I mean you let go of all the thoughts, emotions, feelings, desires, wants. You allow the Self to chew them up, spit it out. Everything is dissolved and resolved. There is absolutely nothing wrong right now. If you begin to think about something wrong then there's something wrong. But as you sit in silence and you stay centered in the moment, in that moment there is perfection, there is wholeness. All is well.

When you think, you spoil it. It makes no difference what is going on in your life or what's going on in the world. If you can only be still and carry that stillness with you, wherever you go, you will be saved from the vicissitudes of life and the so-called world in which you live.

The world cannot do anything to you when you do not think about the world. The only reason and the only time that the world functions, is when you believe in it. When you think externally the external becomes manifested as your affairs, and your life, and your situation. When you think internally, then what we call God, reality, happiness, joy and peace are manifested through you as you, everywhere. You find peace.

There's nothing in the world that has any power. You are the power. You give it power every time you think. The world is your creation. The world in which you live, your affairs, your health, your finances, everything is taking place because you are you. If you surrender the you or the I-thought, thinking I have this or I feel this or I belong to this or I'm hurt by this. If you give up that I, surrender it totally, you will be the happiest being that ever lived.

True happiness permeates the universe. It is here, always.

Just as the sun is now shining, yet if you look outside you don't see the sun, you see the clouds. It appears to be a dark day, but we know that the sun is shining. The sun never stops shining. The clouds hide the sun, the rain hides the sun, but the sun is always there.

And so it is that your reality, your happiness, your joy, your peace, your love, is always there, always. There never is a time when it's not, but your clouds of doubt, your clouds of apprehension, of suspicion, the clouds of negative thinking. The clouds of thinking, cause you to believe that you're a human and you have to solve problems. You have to go through different life-styles. You have to try to find yourself. You have to go through all these ordeals before you believe that you are clouded and the sun is not shining.

You must awaken from this. You must awaken and see yourself for what you really are, absolute reality, pure awareness. You are wonderful, wonderful, you are. It makes no difference what your body is telling you or what the world is telling you. You are absolute intelligence. You are free, a joy to the world.

We're all sitting here as individual personalities, but you are not a personality. You're not even sitting here. You are in heaven, heaven meaning the Self, pure. Never judge by appearances. Do not allow the world to tell you how things are. This is the reason satsang is so important, for as you come to a place like this, an awakening always takes place, even if it's partial. And it's like planting a seed, that has to be nurtured and begins to grow. The day will come when you'll awaken totally and be free of this whole mess.

Something tells me I should speak a little bit about spiritual healing in regard to Advaita Vedanta. When you need to heal yourself or someone else of a physical or mental problem, you believe you have to invoke certain powers. You have to have a certain mental state. There is physical healing, mental healing and spiritual healing yet if you recognize the truth about yourself you will ask yourself the question, "Who needs healing? Who has to be healed? Does God need healing? Does absolute reality need healing? Does pure awareness need healing?" Just to believe or think that you have to be healed gives you the impression that you are a body that needs a healing. If you believe you are a body then you have to heal yourself through various methods. This is true. But when you realize you are not the body there's no one that needs a healing.

Healing implies duality, a belief that there is a body that needs a healing. Yet if you look at yourself, who's sick, who has a problem? Not the real you. The real you never had any problem, never can have a problem, doesn't know what the word problem means. All you have to do is stay centered. You have to forget about your body and about the problems, stay totally centered. See your body, the problems as images on a screen.

On the screen there is a person who goes to the doctor, the doctor tells them they've got cancer and they go through chemotherapy, their hair falls out, their clothes fall off, they fall apart. All this is happening on the screen. Yet what happens to the screen? Nothing, the screen remains the same, yet the images appear and go. It may be an image of a funeral. It may be an image of a birth, an image of a war. All these images come and go, but the screen remains intact. Nothing ever happens to the screen.

You are the screen! Yet you have to look at yourself as the screen you have to be able to see it, to feel it. And everything in life is a superimposition on the screen. Do not identify with sickness, with mental anguish. Do not identify with problems. You have to turn your mind away, turn it upward, turn it on itself by inquiring, "To whom does this come?" and realize who you are. There's no one suffering. Only the images on the screen seem to suffer. The world appears on the screen in all its manifestations and changes, continuously changing, never the same. The screen is always the same. You therefore have to realize this. Lift yourself up. Do not be concerned. Nothing can ever happen to you. Nothing can ever happen to you, at no time.

Birth, death, re-birth, karma, they're all illusions. It's virtually impossible for you to die because you were never born. It's virtually impossible for you to have problems, sicknesses, diseases, everything else that goes on in this world, because there is nothing sustaining these things, there is no power that sustains and maintains disease. There's no power like that.

You may tell me, "Well I see it all around me. I feel these things in my soul." Just think of what you're saying, "I see these things, I feel these things," that is your trouble, your problem. The I, that sees this, that feels this. If you would only get rid of that I. That's all you really have to do. The I is the only thing, it's not even a thing, it's nothing. It's only an appearance that makes you believe you're worldly and you're going through different difficulties. It is the I that does this. If you try to change your affairs and you've not changed the I, the same things will happen again and again.

The I has to be destroyed. The I has to be completely annihilated. Totally wiped out and you do this by abiding in the I. You do this by watching the I, by observing the I, by following the I to the source. The source is pure intelligence, pure awareness. The source is nirvana, sat-chit-ananda, Brahman. You are that! Yet you will not believe it. You'd rather play with the world and go through various experiences. You will not realize, you will refuse to realize that the I is the only problem you've got. Remove the I and you will always be at peace. Believe in the I and all sorts of things will transpire in your life.

The I-thought is a dream. It's not real, it doesn't really exist, yet because you believe in it you have to practice self-inquiry. It is the only way for some of us to get rid of the I totally and completely. If you were able to look at this picture that I'm painting for you and see the truth involved, you'd be liberated right now, but most of you revert back to the I. And you believe in the I, for don't you say all day long, "I am this and I am that. I feel this and I feel that. I feel happy. I feel sad. I feel sick, I feel well." It is always the I that feels this, not you.

So in spiritual healing you have to use methods of mental, physical, or God realization techniques. This presupposes that you are a body and you have to do work on your body. You have a hard job. Isn't it easy to practice the other way? To see yourself as a spirit, a universal spirit that has no dimension, no shape, that is nowhere?

Some of you are thinking, you're allowing your thoughts to tell you things. You accept the thoughts and what they tell you and then you wonder why you worry or feel fear. The thoughts will bring up all kinds of things. They will allow you to fear, to be frustrated, to feel imperfect. Yet you must stand tall and observe and watch these thoughts. Do not give the thoughts any help by allowing you're feeling to express into fears or frustrations, but rather watch these thoughts like a third person. These thoughts appear, the feelings appear, the fears appear. "But to whom do they appear?" you say to yourself. Do not deny that you do not feel these things. You're not practicing denial. You merely look at your fears, you look at what's happening in your thought patterns, you watch them, inquire, "Where did they come from. Where did the fears come from? Where did the depressing feelings come from? What are the sources of all the feelings that I've ever had? Are there many sources?" I'm not speaking of apple sauce.

There is one source. There are not many sources. One source. That one source is omnipresence, all-pervading. There has always been one source. There will never be anything else but the same source. That source is no thing. There are no things in this source, nothing, absolute nothing. That source is bliss, consciousness. That is your real nature. Therefore where did the other thoughts come from? Where do all the feelings that I have come from? Find out.

You have to keep on asking. You have to have faith in your Self. Faith that there is power within you that makes the whole universe seem as nothing. Tremendous power, creative power, it is all within yourself. And you have the freedom to use this power any way you choose.

Most of us inadvertently feel certain things causing this power to make them come into our lives. For instance: we believe we can catch a cold if we walk in the rain without any shoes. Where did this belief come from? Someone told it to you when you were quite young, your parents perhaps, and you have proven this because every time you walk in the rain without shoes you catch a cold. So you believe it's true. Yet this is a lie. This is a belief. Because you are so powerful your belief system makes it appear as if you are right by giving you what you believe. You therefore have to be very careful what you think.

Do not allow the world to show you certain things and then you react to them and think about those things. Rather think from within yourself. Think from the source of you're being, from the absolute reality, as within, so without. What you feel within yourself, you will see outside manifesting in your world. You are the cause of everything that has ever happened to you. There is no God who ordains things to happen to you, who causes you to suffer. There is no suffering, no one suffers. It is you who creates your world, no one else.

This is why two people can be looking out the window, and one person will see the trees and the sky, another person will see darkness, ugliness, even death. You have been trained as a child to believe certain things and these are the things that have caused the problems in your life.

The body by itself can never become ill. The body by itself is just a lump of flesh with secretions, bones, it cannot do anything by itself. It has no power to live. It has no power to die. It has no power to do a thing, it's a lump of flesh. Yet it comes to life like a puppet, manipulated by the puppeteer. Who is the puppeteer? Your mind, your mind is the puppeteer. All the beliefs you have, the erroneous thoughts, the preconceived ideas, the concepts. These are the things that have shaped your life the way it is today.

Consequently, if you don't like what you see, if you believe there's something wrong, if you have an illness or a mental anguish, do not run all over the world trying to cure yourself, rather go within yourself, that's where the answers are and inquire, "How did I get this sickness? My body by itself is a lump of flesh, it cannot be sick or well, therefore it is certain thoughts that have caused the illness, the mental anguish, whatever. So how do I get back to myself, radiance, happy?" By following those certain thoughts to the source, by inquiring, "Who feels this? Who believes they are a body? Who believes they're a sickly body, a problem oriented body? That may be the appearance, it may be a fact. But it is not the truth. So how do I get to the truth? By following the feeling of I, I'm sick, I am impoverished, I have mental anguish, following those thoughts to the source, in your heart.

Start when you get up early in the morning, that's the time to begin something like this, and just understand within yourself that the I-thought has rushed from your heart centre to your brain. While you slept the I-thought was in the Self, where it was supposed to be, there was no fear, no sickness, nothing. When you are in deep sleep all of your physical problems disappear, they do not exist. Think about that! When you are in deep sleep you are healed.

You are whole. You are complete. There is nothing going on because the I-thought is at rest in the heart, but as soon as you open your eyes, the eye jumps into the brain and becomes your body, and then the world appears as it appears. If you become cognitive of this fact you'll reverse the procedure. You will make the I-thought go back from the brain into the heart centre. When this is accomplished, it is called self-realization, enlightenment, awakening, liberation.

It is not as difficult as it appears. If you do it in the morning when you first wake up. Do not say, "I am late for work, I am hungry, I have to get dressed," but become aware that the I-thought has become active and imagine - you can use your imagination - imagining that the I-thought is going back from the brain back into the heart where it was when you were asleep. Follow it. Abide in it. When you feel or imagine the I thought is back into your heart then there's no thinking, the thinking process stops. You just are, and you live in a different world. There's absolutely nothing wrong any longer. You feel liberated, you feel free.

These things you must practice. But if you have difficulty practicing these things, as we talked about on Thursday night, you merely have to be at satsang, sit in meditation with the Sage from six in the morning till nine and from twelve midnight till three in the morning. If you do this, you don't have to do anything else. If you're intellectually motivated, you'll want to practice self-inquiry. If you do not wish to practice self-inquiry, sit in meditation at those hours and come to satsang.

We have some questions in the box. First question:

Q: (Robert reads) The state of effortless silence means realization. The problem is getting in that state, how?

A: (Robert answers) To get into a state of effortless silence, you merely have to observe your thoughts and examine what is going on in your head and mind. You watch your thoughts, every time when they arise you ask, "To whom do they come," and you follow them to the source, as we explained before. As you keep on doing this, inquiring, "Who am I? What is the source? Where did it come from?" And you keep inquiring this way. The thoughts subside, slowly but surely, every time you inquire, "Who am I, What is the source of the I?" the thoughts become still, they stop fighting you and eventually you will be in a state of silence.

When you say, "Who am I?" or "What is the source of the I?" you do not answer. You merely sit still until more thoughts come and then you do the same thing. You sit in the silence, other thoughts come, you inquire, "To whom do they come? What is their source?" You sit in the silence and you will notice the space in between "Who am I?" becomes greater and greater, before you have to go back to it again and the silence, the quietness, becomes more profound, until you start to feel an overwhelming peace and quietness. And one day an awakening will take place and you'll be free. So to get into the silence, you have to get rid of your thoughts. And to get rid of your thoughts, you follow them to the source by inquiring, "Who am I?" or "What is the source of my thoughts?" And then everything else will happen by itself.

Q. (Robert reads) Happiness is the state prior to our own activity. Why our activity creates all the suffering?

A. (Robert answers) Because activity is in the world of duality. Duality creates suffering. When there is good and bad, right and wrong, up and down, there is not a steady state. When there is not a steady state there is change. The change creates delusion, for you cannot understand why the change took place in your life. For instance, you're walking down the street and you trip and break a leg. Why did this happen? It makes your mind wonder, think, active and you get into all kinds of ramifications of why this happened? You start to think how you will not be able to go to work, you will lose income, this leads to other thoughts that they'll repossess your house, your car. Your family will disown you and leave you and you go on and on and on, it never stops.

Therefore catch it before it begins. Whatever happens to you, do not feel sorry for yourself. Do not give it power by fearing it, or by thinking that somebody is punishing you, or something has gone wrong with your life. Merely observe the situation, rise above it, by realizing this is all of the mind, the mind has created this, I am not the mind. I am pure awareness. And you'll be at peace.

(Robert asks) Is that all? (SM: Yes I think there were only two Robert.) Oh.

(students ask question)

SB: Robert, all through history there's been a tradition of great spiritual healings and miraculous healings taking place among true devotees. Can you explain how this works?

R. Certainly. When you are in a place like satsang, when you are with the Sage, the light of the Sage, the power of the Sage, the power of the satsang, becomes intense and a devotee who surrenders their problems, their will, all the non-sensical things they've been going on with, their fears and they give up these things by surrendering, then everything begins to melt in that power of the Sage, in that truth, in that reality and omnipresence and that all-pervading goodness.

Therefore, since sickness is a non-entity, it never existed to begin with. You begin to feel perfection and the perfection vitalizes your so-called cells. All the atoms of your body merge in perfection and you are healed, so-called and a healing takes place in your body, for you have given up your thoughts. The thoughts are what caused the illness to begin with. The mind is what caused the problem. When you give up your mind to the Self, in the Self there is nothing but perfection. There's only oneness, absolute reality and now you are merged in this reality. This reality is flowing through you as you and there is nothing else.

There are not two powers, one of sickness and one of healing, there's no sickness and there's no healing, there's just absolute perfection, absolute reality. If there really was such a thing as sickness then there would have to be a lot of fighting to become healed. But since sickness doesn't really exist, by giving this up, by surrendering this feeling, this thought that there is sickness or lack or limitation or anything else the one power, the one perfection, the one God, the one reality, the one pure awareness shines through, and takes over, and you are made whole.

Feel free to ask any questions you like.

SD: I would like you to elaborate on that point because as you yourself have pointed out even some of the great Masters have appeared to suffer from illness. Rama Krishna and Maharishi and I would certainly think that they would be in the position of surrender or even beyond surrender so it must not be quite that simple that the appearance evidently sometimes will continue.

R. You always go back to that. Try to always remember, that it is we who see these things. We see the imperfections. We behold the death and the suffering. These Sages that you mention have told you over and over again, there is no suffering, I am not suffering, it is you who are suffering because you see me this way. It is the mind of mortal man that beholds all these infirmities. It is we who believe that a Christ is crucified, why Rama Krishna is dying of cancer.

It never happened. It appears to happen, and those beings which is most of the world, who are of that level, see these things with their eyes, feel these things with their feelings, hear these things with their ears. Yet this is not the truth about these Masters. This is only our limited vision. The same is true with ourselves, when we appear to be ill, when we appear to have something wrong with the body, we must immediately declare, "I am not the body!" There's no body that can have anything wrong with it because the body does not exist. I am a spiritual entity. I am whole, pure. There is no limitation in me. We have to feel these things.

Therefore for the average person, they simply have to surrender. Surrender to the Self, meaning surrender to the highest thoughts. Surrender to the oneness, to the perfection, to the ultimate, become free by surrendering this way.

Now as you say Ramana Maharishi, Rama Krishna, Christ and others, who seem to have suffered some sickness or some disease, or from being driven with nails through their hands and arms, whatever. The world in which we live is at the stage, where we appear to see these things. And these beings appear to go through these things, for our sake, so we can awaken and realize nobody suffers, nobody dies, and no one has any problems. It is we who have to raise our vision. It is we who have to rise above this so-called death and suffering of humanity, of beings. No Sage ever suffered. No Sage ever died. For death and suffering do not exist. All is well.

SH: But they appear to exist?

R. They appear to exist, of course. This is the level of humanities consciousness. This is the way humanity is at this time, where they can only see the appearance and believe in the appearance. Most of humanity cannot rise above this. Yet if we believe in a higher power and if we are this power ourselves, we will begin to do something to make ourselves rise above the limitations of humanity by practicing self-inquiry, by becoming observant of our thoughts, by surrendering, by coming to satsang, by understanding the truth. (SH: It's really fundamental that we still identify with the body, by being a body?) It's fundamental and it's ridiculous. (SH: Yeah, but it sure is persistent.) It's very persistent like a bad dream. There are some people who dream a horrible dream, and they wake up, and go back to sleep and the dream continues. And they wake up again and they fall back to sleep and the dream still continues. I've known people who have certain dreams for weeks and months at a time. Whenever they go to sleep they dream the same dream and it continues. So where are they? What state are they really in? Are they really in the dream state or in the so-called waking state? So we come to realize that both states are a dream. This so-called waking state is a dream, just like the dream state is a dream. And if we react to the dream we will get caught up more and more into the dream, we will be pulled deeper and deeper into it. Therefore we have to simply awaken to reality by the methods prescribed. (Pause.) Don't look so perplexed. All is well.

SB: Robert if we rest in consciousness then there is no duality, then there is no separate self that is abstracting itself from consciousness.

R: True. (SB Then there is nothing to do.) There is nothing to do if you're in consciousness and you are consciousness and there is nothing else. (SB: No separate self anymore.) Right. (SB: So that is an easy way right?) Then do it. (laughter)

SH: Nothing to do and nobody to do it.

SB: That's what you do, isn't it true Robert? (R: Who knows what I do?) (laughter)

SH: Well you sleep from 3 to 6 that's all because you're on call the rest of the time. (laughter) Is three hours enough?

R: It's plenty. But if you would all sit with me at that time you would see some tremendous changes coming upon you, I can guarantee you of this. If some of you tried this for a month, give it a month. Where you can sit with me from 6 to 9 and 12 to 3, miracles would take place. You would not be the same person you are now. If you do it less then accordingly whatever percentage you put into it, you'll get out of it.

SY: Robert why do you sit?

R: Because there is nothing else to do. (laughter)

SF: Would this be involved being in the physical presence or just... (R: No.) ...or just keeping you in the mind? (R: Whether you're in Japan or Korea, you can be any place you like.)

SD: But there is some strength in doing it at the same time. If you're in Japan you would have to set your clock accordingly. (R: Yes, of course.)

SF: Another thing I wondered about is, our real nature's unconditioned, effortless, choiceless, pure awareness. The unconditioned... doesn't a lot of our conditioning come from another life... and I like the idea of breaking the word "nothing," into "no thing," we could also take the word another and make it into two words "an other life." Not what happens to this particular psychosomatic apparatus. It was from this "an other life" that brought about some of the conditioning which transpires in my mind and since I react to some music, some of these girls sing some torch songs like, "Say it isn't so." They cause a deep reaction in me and I don't know why because I never had that sort of thing... unrequited love, it was real deep within me the way a lot people experience. I've never had it in this life so I wonder if my reaction to that doesn't come from "an other life?" Want to comment on that?

R: Certainly, as long as you believe in karma and reincarnation then it certainly comes from another life. For the body has been here before in a different form and you've had feelings and thoughts and beliefs before that you carry over to this life. But if you feel that you are not a body and you work on yourself by not being a body, not being a mind rather realize that you are this effortless pure awareness then there is no one left to have had these previous experiences.

Previous experiences are from the ego. If the ego is destroyed, by awakening to effortless pure awareness then there never was anything wrong and you're totally free. And it's just the same as people ask me, "Will I be punished for my sins? Will I be punished for things I did in the past?" and the answer is, as long as you believe you have done these things you will be punished because you're under the law of karma, the law of cause and effect.

But if you can rise above the body where you are no longer an ego, you are no longer a mind then there is nobody left to go through cause and effect. It's all transcended. There is nothing there that can hurt you. There is nowhere for it to come from. We create our own punishment. The only way to freedom is to give up the body idea. As long as the body idea persists, then karma persists, reincarnation persists and the rest of the things persist.

SF: It's like Lord Krishna realizing that Arjuna still believed he had a body, he was a body and therefore he was living in conditioning from what he believed, what Arjuna believed, was the past.

R: Umm. Arjuna believed that he was a warrior and he couldn't get out of that belief. Krishna knew this so he told him to go ahead and fight. And he became the leader of a king, of a nation and won the battle. But if Arjuna was spiritually developed he would've just realized himself that he was Krishna. There is only one Krishna. Krishna is the all-pervading Self. That is another name for Krishna, like Shiva, Vishnu, Brahman. They are just another name for the Self. But we personify them into beings. But they're all the Self. You are the same, you are the Self. Do not look at yourself as a body or a mind or as a person that has to overcome problems or a person that is suffering from past incarnations. Give all that up. Surrender it all and become free and liberated. (SF: Thank you.)

SK: Robert in this - sitting with you period - sometimes I do self inquiry and sometimes I don't and during the times when I don't, sometimes it seems that my mind wanders a little more. On the other hand self-inquiry has a sort of a structured busyness to it also. But sometimes I end up wondering what I should do, is the best attitude not to worry about too much...

R: The best attitude is to surrender everything and be still and when thoughts come, give them to me. Give all your thoughts to me, give everything that comes to me, say, "Take it Robert," and keep your mind still. If that becomes a little difficult practice self inquiry or practice observing your thoughts. But the important part is just to sit there. The best way to do this is just to sit and when thoughts come, observe them, do not pay attention to them, let them come let them go and just keep sitting there and things will take care of itself.

SF: Bhagvan said, "Submit to me and I will straighten out the mind."

R: That's a good statement. You have to remember when the words are spoken, "Submit to me," it is not me as an individual. Forget about Robert. You're submitting to me as the Self, which is your Self. There is only one Self. Robert cannot do anything for you. The Self is the Self is the Self, there is nothing else. So what you're doing since you can't see your self as absolute reality, you are surrendering to this self as an appearance all the stuff that has been bothering you by sitting with me. And then you will merge into the same consciousness that has always been, that is effortless pure awareness, that is all-pervading omnipresent, that's what you're surrendering to.

(silence)

(Robert continues) Glen would you like to read one of your fine books?

SN: Can I save it for Thursday?

R: Want to save it for Thursday? Mary do you want to read the Jnani.

SM: Oh yes.

(Mary reads the Jnani refer to beginning of this book for transcript)

R: Try to remember that all is well. There is nothing wrong. You are loved. The whole universe is on your side, everything is beautiful. Remember to love your Self, to pray to your Self, to bow to your Self, to worship you Self, for God dwells in you as you. Peace. I love you.

We have prashad.

SD: Goodie. (laughter) (SH: Just what you've been waiting for, right?) Yeah, really.

R: Real good stuff.

(tape ends) [TOC]

THE KNOWER IS THE LAST TO GO!

9th January, 1992

Robert: Good evening. I welcome you with all my heart. It is good to be with you once again. The holidays are over. Back to normality, whatever that means.

When I say to you, that all is well this is exactly what it means, unconditional, all is well, just the way things are. No matter how things look. No matter what you think. No matter what appears to be going on in this world. All is well! Think about this, just the way things are. There is nothing to add, nothing to delete. Just the way things are.

In the jungle lions are eating sheep. Monkeys eat insects. Man eats animals. All kinds of dastardly things seem to be going on in this world. You see things. You look at the world. There are wars. There is man's inhumanity to man and in your personal life, all sorts of situations are taking place. There is a tendency to be judgmental. To see things a certain way and not like it, for you think it should be another way. Yet I can assure you, all is well. All is extremely well. Just the way it is.

The problem arises when you want to change something. When you want to put your energy into a situation and try to change it to the way you think it should be or when you see something that seems the way it shouldn't be with someone else you believe it should be another way.

The problem lies within yourself. There are no problems in reality. There is absolutely nothing wrong. Everything is just the way it is supposed to be. I keep reiterating this point. Many of you see certain situations and you don't like it. When you don't like something it's as if you're telling god how to run the world. If you can only understand that the Self is all there is and you are that then you would understand that every thing that emanates from you is the Self. The whole universe emanates from your mind. You are in everything.

You are in the murderer. You are in the lion eating the sheep. You are in the monkeys eating the insects. You are in the good things and in the bad things, so called. Everything comes from you. This is your universe. You created it. Just the way it is. It's your fault. (laughter). Why did you do this?

You can't say you didn't do it for as long as you believe something with feeling, you see something that you don't like. Something horrifies you. Something upsets you, then you have created it, where else did it come from? Where did it come from if it didn't come from you? Things just didn't appear. They had to come through somebody's mind. It is the mind that creates conditions.

If you only realize that the mind does not exist there would be no conditions in your life to create or uncreate. The only reason there is a condition is because you're allowing something called the mind to show you and tell you what is right, what is wrong, what is good, what is bad, what is up, what is down. You're doing it. I want you to stop it. Look at the mess you're making of the world. (laughter).

Just think if you didn't think. (laughter) We'd have joy and peace and love. But you keep on thinking, thinking, thinking, always thinking. You never stop thinking. You go to sleep you think. You wake up you think. All during the day you think. You're always thinking, and judging and criticizing, condemning, wanting to change things. Yet again, when you want to do these things you are saying that God doesn't know what the hell he's doing. That's what you're saying, for you are seeing something that you don't like. The seer is at fault. The seer is always at fault.

I'm not trying to say that you bring conditions onto yourself. This is not a New Age philosophy where you think you are responsible for all the hurts in your life. In reality and truth there are no hurts. There is nothing happening. There is no one responsible for anything. But as long as you believe that you are human and you believe you are confronted with situations then in all appearances it looks like you're suffering because you're reacting to a condition that you don't like.

What if you left every thing alone? What if you observe something and never reacted to it mentally or physically. You just left it alone. You didn't fight it. You didn't try to analyze it. You didn't debate it. You just looked at it and left it alone and kept your mind centered on yourself. What do you think would happen?

You would have to become the Self. You would have to become effortless pure awareness, which is your true nature to begin with. But as long as you react to things, even your own body. When you believe your body is sick, your body has mental anguish. Your body is suffering because of some condition, this is what blasphemy means, for in truth you are not that body. You are not that sick body. You are not that body that has mental anguish, that's not you.

That body does not even exist. It's as if you've been hypnotized into believing you've got a body that goes through all kinds of experiences and you've got a mind that thinks all kind of things and you suffer. But I say to you there is no such body. There's no such mind. There's no such world. How could this be? How can this be when you're feeling it yourself when something has hurt you, when someone appears to have done something to you that you don't like, when you're suffering mentally or physically. How can you reconcile this with what I'm saying to you? Well, let's look at this a different way.

When you believe you were born, all of these things were preordained in your life to transpire, or at least transpire sometime during your lifetime. So every thing in your life was preordained. The way you're going to react, where you're going to live, the way you're going to judge. It is preordained when you leave your body Therefore everything has been taken care of for you. You have absolutely nothing to do. You've absolutely nothing to worry about. That's one way to look at it.

If you think your human, if you believe your human everything has been planned for you. Your whole life has been ordained, outlined. But now if you come to the conclusion that you're not human, that you're not the body or the mind, that there are no problems, you were never born and so you have nothing to do with your existence. There never will be a time when you will leave your body. You are the same, yesterday, today and forever. Absolute reality, self-contained, all-pervading, Brahman, sat-chit-ananda, nirvana, this is your real nature. This is what you really are.

Then why does the world affect you so? Why don't you awaken? You don't know. You don't know because you are already awake. There's nothing to know. In order to know something there has to be a knower. Who is the knower? Never answer that question, for there isn't any knower. A knower does not exist, consequently there's absolutely nothing to know. There's nothing to do. There's nothing to be or become. There is no enlightenment. There's no self-realization. There is absolute blank! And you are the blankety, blank, blank.

Why do you think of yourself as a person that goes through experiences? Because you appear to go through experiences, this is the appearance in your life. You have one experience after the another. But don't you have the same experiences in dreams? When you dream you dream that you are going through experiences, one experience after the other, yet you wake up and you realize it's a dream. Yet you sit here and take life so seriously believing that's the dream but this is reality.

Yet if I approached you in your dream you would tell me that this is reality. You would swear up and down that the dream was a reality and that I didn't know what I was talking about. Yet, you woke up and you called the experience a dream.

What to call this experience? A mortal dream, a lie, delusion? Even by calling it names like this is a mistake, because there is someone left calling names. There has to be someone to name something so the someone is calling this is a delusion, calling this existence a lie. By those very thoughts the experiences become true and real for you. There is absolutely nothing you can do about your situation except keep quiet. Do you follow what I'm saying?

If you try to denounce the world and you keep saying the world is a lie, you will feel the world more deeply, for there's someone whose saying that. It is that someone who has to be destroyed, not the condition, not the situation. For the condition, the situation is only an appearance coming from the someone. So do not work on trying to remove the delusion in front of you, do you see what I'm saying?

Do not do the meditation of trying to see the world as nothing rather try to imagine or see who this someone is who sees this world as nothing. It is that someone who has to be annihilated, not the affect but the cause. The cause is that there is someone thinking about all of these things. There's someone trying to be self-realized. There is someone trying to end all their problems. There is someone trying to heal themselves or others. There is someone who judges.

It is that someone who has to go. And the name of that someone is I. It is I who does this. I am trying to become self-realized. But the I is already self-realized. For the I in reality, is Brahman. Pure awareness. This is the true nature of the I. Therefore the I that you think is real doesn't even exist, for there can only be one I and that I is I-am, all-pervading. Do you see this?

It is the I, or the thinker, or the knower who has to be eliminated. For in reality there is absolutely nothing to know. If you are all-pervading, omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent, what else do you want? You've got everything. You are everything. So when you try to know something, you're making a grave mistake. This is a very important point. Remember this.

In Advaita Vedanta, the knower is the last to go. What comes after the knower? Silence! There is nothing else.

Just think how much knowledge you've gathered all these years. Reading so many books. Meditating for years. Seeing so many teachers. Having so many discussions, debates, arguments. Can't you see now this is what's been holding you back? This is what has been holding you back. For you have believed that you're the knower. For you have to become a knower to become free. Yet no one has to know anything for there is absolutely nothing to know. Why is there nothing to know? Because there is only omnipresence, infinity, absolute reality and there is no name for this.

In other words, you cannot know absolute reality. You cannot know pure awareness. As long as there is someone who knows about it, it doesn't exist. It's only when you put an end to knowing that you become the Self. The Self has no shape, no form, no identity. It is no thing. Yet you are that. What are you going to do about it?

When most of you walk out this door you'll start discussions, arguments. You'll start thinking about your outside world. You'll start thinking about your body, your material happiness, or your material suffering. And you'll be back where you started. What I'm saying to you is if you could only learn to be quiet, in your mind. If your mind learns to keep quiet, it will become weaker and weaker and you will notice that all the action you're taking has absolutely nothing to do with you.

Yet you will do things, go places, experience this so-called life, and you are doing absolutely nothing. For there's no one left to do anything. There's no one left to get sick, there's no one left to be healthy. There's no one left to be poor, there's no one left to be rich. There's no one left to possess anything and there's no one left not to possess anything. There's just no one left, and this is what gives you freedom. And the only way you can get to that place is to keep quiet. To be silent.

When you are silent, you live in eternity. You live in that split second, in the opening, the gap, between the world and your Self. And there's no past and there's no future.

There's no body and there's no mind. There is just that split second in eternity. And you are that!

No matter how many times I tell you this, you're still going to get involved mentally. You're still going to think and judge and go through all of these things that we're talking about. If you do this then do not complain. Do not complain about your mental anguish, about your suffering, about your problems, for you'll not give them up.

The only way to give them up is what? To get rid of the person who thinks they have them. Can't you see this now? Not to imagine they're not there. Not to think of something else. Not to try to resolve the problems and change bad into good. But to get rid of that thought, that feeling, that believes there's something else besides the Self. And you do this simply by being quiet. Simple.

You just shut up. You stop making noises, called talking. You stop trying to win points. Who can out-talk who? Who knows more philosophy than somebody else. Who's the right teacher? Who's this and who's that?

In a real devotee those thoughts do not even come to your mind. A devotee never thinks about things like this. A true devotee simply acts in the moment, and does whatever has to be done without thought, without criticism, without judgement and goes onto the next thing the same way, and goes through their whole life in total happiness, in total peace, and total joy.

The only way you can ever have true happiness and true peace and true love, is by keeping quiet. For love, happiness, joy, the Self, pure awareness are all synonymous, they present themselves when you are quiet. They present themselves when you are quiet. You therefore have to make up your mind. Do I really want to awaken? It's so simple, yet so difficult. If you really want to awaken, you have to keep that thought first in your life. It comes before everything. If you really want to awaken, something within you will tell you what to do. You will know. For the reality, which you are, is already done. Therefore it will tell you from within what to do, to be yourself. All you have to do is to keep quiet.

You know you can carry on a conversation and still be quiet. When you speak words and you don't really put any effort into them, you don't really feel them, you have no emotion in them. Then you are quiet. Everything I am telling you, you can do mentally. I'm not saying you should take a vow of silence. I'm merely saying, do not put any emotion into the words that you speak to someone. Do not take the words seriously. You have to live in this world. Therefore talking is necessary. But do not believe every word you say has something to do with your life or anybody else's life or any thing else. Keep your words down to a minimum.

If someone talks to you and tells you something you don't have to elaborate, you can say, "yes," or "no." It's like going back to your childhood. It's rather funny, as we grow up we try to be intelligent and we want to know many words and have long talks and great debates and we want to express ourselves so someone can understand us. Yet, has anyone ever understood you? Does anyone care about the words you speak? They're interested in their words, they want you to hear them. And you want them to hear you. So you talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and talk and you become frustrated, never getting anywhere. You believe somebody will appreciate you if you explain yourself well. Well, you've explained yourself, has anybody appreciated you? Nobody cares. (laughter) They just want to hear themselves talk. Drop it. Be rid of it.

(silence)

Feel free to ask questions. (pause) I guess nobody wants to talk.

SK: Robert, your last point, it seems to me, there are times when you are talking to a friend and there's a kind of engagement and there is a caring and there is a communion and the words are not as important as the feeling, so that goes against my experience of what you describe?

R. Umm, this appears to be true. But in the long run, it doesn't matter. As you keep talking about yourself to somebody else, your feelings are expressed, their feelings are expressed and you feel you have a loving relationship, that's for a time only. You can have a loving relationship and speak little words, few words, or not speak at all. The words that come out of your mouth is to try to make the other person to see how you feel, about them, about yourself. Yet look at the way things are in relationships in this world. Relationships hardly ever last, there is so many problems and this is because of words.

As an example, when you want to marry somebody or want to live with somebody, you tell them all these beautiful words so they will accept you. But then when you've achieved what you want, things begin to sort of change after awhile and pretty soon you're raising your voice and you're using foul words. The thing has changed. It's not the same as it used to be. As long as you're working from your human-hood there will always be problems.

The thing to do is to understand who you are, first. Realize you are not the body or the mind or the doer or the knower or the speaker. This is not you. If you can realize this first before you talk, you will say very little and the little things you do say will be very meaningful. Something within you will speak the few words that you have to say and they will be the right words to cause a positive reaction. Do not feel you have to speak too much to anyone about anything. Truth is silence. Reality is quietness. Peace and love are stillness. Be still and know that I am God.

SD: Robert there's something I don't understand, in fact it's hard to even formulate the question but you were talking about not trying to eliminate or convince yourself of the false appearances of things but simply to eliminate the self and yet Maharishi taught that you could find realization by the use of neti-neti, or by saying, "not this, not this." This seems contradictory to me.

R. There's no contradiction, when you say neti-neti, it is a method, a process of removing the world from your mind. What was the question? (SD: Well it seems to me that previously you were saying that you didn't, shouldn't try to remove the world from your mind but to remove the mind.) Oh yes, when you say neti-neti you are basically removing all of the objects, the worldly things from your mind. (SD: But isn't that what you just said that we didn't need to focus on?) There's no need to focus on that if you don't want to. It's just another method. It is easier to realize you are not the doer and you are not the knower, to get rid of the knower by keeping quiet. This is much easier. Neti-neti is another procedure, another process, just like watching your breath. Just like becoming the observer. Just like saying, "I am," they're different methods, different ways of doing the same thing.

We like to teach a direct method, where you simply awaken by keeping still. If you think you have to use methods, neti-neti is like using a mantra, it's not any different to using a mantra. When you use a mantra you're shutting out the world and thinking only about the mantra and the world disappears gradually but surely. When you use neti-neti you're getting rid of every thing in the world the same way.

When you do what I said, when you do not talk, and you get rid of the knower and you're getting rid of the person that says, "neti-neti." You're getting rid of the whole bowl of wax. You're getting rid of everything. When everything is gone then you're yourself. You have to use the method that suits you best. There's really no contradiction, they're just different methods.

SD: So I understand that, I understand what you're saying that it would be simpler and more direct to simply eliminate the knower or the thought... (tape break)

R. It is necessary to free you and become self-realized. If you want to practice neti-neti, there's nothing wrong with that, but you have to get to the point where neti-neti has to go also. When you're saying, "not this, not this," and everything is gone, then "not this" has to go also. So you come to a place where you keep still. The end result is always silence. The end of every practice is silence.

What is meditation for? Meditation is to make your mind one-pointed so you can become quiet and silent. A mantra can make your mind one pointed, so you can become quiet and silent. Neti-neti is to make your mind one-pointed, by obliterating the whole universe and you become quiet and silent. All these methods lead you to quietness and silence. So I'm just saying to you, "Keep quiet and you don't have to do anything."

SG: There is a real old story, the teaching story where a guru tells his disciple that everything is well. All is well. All is good. All is God. See God in everything. You don't have to do anything, you don't have to...and he's walking along and some guy yells out, "Look out there is a wild elephant coming!" And the guy remembering his guru that all is well and everything is good and looks and sees the elephant coming and look and sees that it is Ram himself who appears as the elephant. And he admires the elephant and the elephant picks him up and throws him down and tromps him. And later on his guru walks by and says something, "Why didn't you get out of the way?" And he said, "Well you told me to see God in everything?" And the guru says, "Well why didn't you see God in the guy that told you that there is a wild elephant coming and get out of the way?" So my question is, it's a matter of perspective, I get the feeling that the words that you use are saying that we should not interact with our environment or we should see everything as good and pure and whole, which it always is but isn't it good and pure and whole to be politically active? And to get out there and to sell those used cars? Or fall in love or go shopping, you know?

R. Of course, I never said to be inactive. I said to be spontaneous, to be totally spontaneous. To do whatever you have to do, without believing you are the doer. That's all. (SG: So I can still be politically active - but isn't that exchanging good for bad though?) Exactly, you will not have an I, to be politically active. (SG: Uh-uh.) You will be politically active yet you will be totally free, because the I is not politically active. The I has been destroyed, there's no I, therefore your body can do anything. So Ramana Maharishi died a horrible death of cancer, yet he never did that, it never happened, because he had no I to feel this. There was no I left to do what you've said, there's no I to die, the I was destroyed a long time ago.

So I'm never saying you have to keep quiet and do nothing. As long as you are in this world as a body, the body will appear in the world of doers. But the point is, you are not that doer. Even though you're politically active, you get married. You have children. You go through life as a used car salesman, whatever you're doing, it's not you that's doing this. That's the paradox. (SG: So in other words you kind of go with the flow?) No, no, no, there's really no flow.

SD: Uh oh. (laughter)

R: You are just doing what you are doing, but you are not the doer. See there are two worlds, I'll explain this a little better. There appears to be two worlds the human world and the spiritual world. The spiritual world does absolutely nothing, but the human world seems to be doing everything. Therefore the first realization is that the spiritual world is within you and the spiritual world within you, you do certain things and you no longer believe you are the doer.

When the I is destroyed by inquiring, "To whom does this I come? Who is the I that is the doer?" And you keep silent and the I is totally destroyed, then you will be totally free, absolutely free. Yet to others the body will appear to be doing things. This is something that is a little difficult for most of us to comprehend. No one is doing anything. Yet the work is getting done and people appear to be doing things. Yet nothing is taking place and no one is doing a thing.

SL: I had an experience sort of like that if it is like that? My daughter told me that she was going to have this painting that I painted. I thought that was kind of funny. I mean I hadn't done any painting in a long time it was just... and now I find myself starting to paint and she didn't tell me what it was going to be or something, I never thought about it the whole time. And I painted on this for two months. And I never knew where it came from and I never felt it had anything to do with me, at all it was just... but in the process when I was painting I always felt very at peace and it just happened. And then when I finally gave it to her she said it was exactly what she wanted and she hung it up in her house and she said, "You have to come and see this." I came and looked at it and it never... I didn't feel anything about it, it was just a painting on the wall. It could have been done by anyone. I could have as easily never seen it before. It was just... it was just done.

R: That's a good example. Life goes on, your body is karmically inclined to go through certain experiences and it will but it has absolutely nothing to do with you. You become spontaneous. Again the example is like a gigantic screen and there are images on the screen. One image is you. That is your body going through images on the screen. Your body is born. It's a baby. It becomes older and it goes to school. It grows up, becomes a musician. Gets married has children. Gets old and dies. You are observing all of this as the screen. You are cognizance of all the happenings of your body going through these experiences. Yet you are apart from this. You are totally free of it. It never really affected you. Now can you see how it works.

Images appear on the screen, wars, man's inhumanity to man, civilizations come, civilizations go, all this is taking place on your screen, on yourself. Yet nothing is happening to yourself. The screen is not involved in the war. The screen is not involved in the birth or the death of the person. Yet on the screen the images are taking place. The screen remains the same. Silence, still, unmovable, never changing. Your true Self is the screen. And all the things you go through in life are taking place on the screen.

Now the problem is you have misidentified yourself with the people on the screen rather than with the screen. Do you see what I'm saying? You believe you are the happening on the screen. You have forgotten that you are the screen. You have identified yourself with the person on the screen. Whereas a Jnani or a realized one, knows themselves 100% to be the screen yet also the images also taking place as their body. And they're going through all kinds of experiences. But they know, a 100 percent sure that they are the screen. The Self is the screen. Pure awareness is the screen. Sat-chit-ananda is the screen. Absolute reality is the screen. You are the screen. Take your identification away from the body consciousness and become the Self.

Many people just by listening to this explanation, awaken!

(silence)

SD: Robert again a dilemma seems to me hard to get passed, that if you think I am the screen there's still an I?

R: This is for the sake of talking. Forget about the I, there is only the screen. The screen is self-realization. The screen is the atman. The screen is absolute reality. The screen is God. (SD: But while in the process of appearing to try to awaken, we seem to need a frame of reference. And as long as we identify with the body we do think and even thinking of the screen, is thinking?) Yes. The time comes when you don't think about the screen, you just are. As you keep practicing, as you keep awakening, as you keep doing the sadhanas that you have to do, the time will come when you just become. (SD: So I think you have just answered my next question which was going to be that it seems that sadhana's involve thinking.) Sadhana has to involve thinking because you're doing it. In the absolute sense there is no sadhana. There is absolutely nothing. There is not even a screen. The screen is for the sake of telling you the story of how it is, to an extent. Because how else would you explain it. But there is no screen. There are no bodies, there is nothing. But yet for the sake of explanation, that's one way to see it.

SK: Robert I just read something the other day coincides with this concept you're just talking about and that was scientifically they show that light created molecules and atoms which created vegetables, minerals and human beings. And in essence what you're saying is when I know that, all I really am is the light. But it appears that the light created all this stuff. (R: Umm.) And I get caught up in thinking that I'm the stuff instead of the original, the screen or the light.

R: Yes you can say that. We're identified with the stuff. Get rid of your stuff!

SK: But at the same time it's a psychological thing... you were talking about before, judging and comparing and criticizing and all this stuff right? I do that a lot. (R: Well stop!) (laughter) Just stop? Yeah right. (laughs) What I was going to say is, when I observe this, well that's not me that's... I see it out there, it's not me, it's out there. That's what I tell myself. That I see it in everyone else and the world is just, it's all wrong, like you said I'm trying to change it. So I'm judging it and comparing it. But that's what I observe, but the observed, what I'm observing, I'm the observer and from what I understand it's the same thing it's really me. And to realize that I'm the criticizer and I'm really criticizing myself that is what I'm seeing. I'm seeing all my own stuff. I just don't want to own it so I say, "It's you that is screwed up." (R: Of course.) Right? (R: Sure.) And for me to own that, that is hard to do, I do not want to accept that. I'd rather find out that it's you. (laughter) I mean that is a rude awakening to realize that I've got to own this stuff.

R: Of course you can only see yourself wherever you look. (SK: Right, I mean it's simple but I don't know...) Well that's only one stage of it. (SK: Yeah. I realize that.) As you continue you realize there is no one who has any steps to begin with. (SK: Yeah.) It's not you at all. It is I, the I appears to have it not you. So ask yourself, "Where did the I come from? Who gave it birth? How did it appear?" And as you inquire this way you will realize the I never existed to begin with.

SD: So at a point is there no realizer either? (R: There is no realizer.) So the seeking of self-realization once again... (R: is erroneous.) Is paradoxical. (R: Paradoxical too.) That too, yeah.

R: Certainly but you have to start somewhere. If you refuse to wake up by my telling you to wake up then you have to do all these sadhanas you have to do all these things. Until you come to the conclusion that there is nobody doing anything. But as long as you believe you're still a body then you have to do those things that you have to do to find out that there is no body. That's why all is well. That is why everything is in its right place and everything is unfolding as it should. You are where you are because of what you are. So there are no mistakes. You simply wake up and become free.

SG: So Robert what you are saying is it doesn't make any difference what is going on in your head, any thoughts and feelings, nothing? It simply is, end. (R: True.) It's like that? (R: This is true.) All this stuff flying up and you can just wake up and it doesn't make any difference where you are at, where you think your at... If what you're saying is the I is just an implication... you get this implication because of the fact that you think you're in this body so you think this body must have an I, is that what you're saying? (R: That's true, yes.) Well it seems to be implied that there must be an I here because there is this body because if he starts doing it on himself, it has to be tacked onto something, it has to be strung onto something you take the blame for it, in a sense?

R: Whenever you refer to your body you say I. I is your body. If there were no I you wouldn't have a body. So you do not try to get rid of the body you try to get rid of the I. And then everything else goes with it.

SG: So even though all of these things seem to be coming down on ones thoughts, all your feelings, all your history, all your memories yet in any second you can just say, "I'm not doing anything." (R: You can say that.) Yeah this is just going on and I'm it, but you don't think it? (laughter) (R: You realize the I is responsible for everything in your life and there is no I, so you're free.)

(silence)

SL: Robert I've always identified the I with Christhood that what we were before we were here and will be with us through eternity. And so when I think of people that have gone on I always think that - how do I say this - I guess I've been kind of malpracticing and I always think that this same I is still being supplied from the infinite, but until they get rid of the I altogether they will still be on the cycle and will be back. (R: Exactly.) You see I've been malpracticing!

R: You've been doing well because you realize it now. (SL: Yeah.) Now you realize this. So everything is happening the way it's supposed to. You were supposed to realize this tonight.

SL: Well I've been teaching my children that because when I think of their grandparents are gone or somebody is gone I have always just felt that I could make them feel secure that they would never be without identity. That they will always be supplied and they will be this to eternity. So what do I say now? God will just be?

R: Just tell them, "That God is and that all is well." (SL: And for someone that is on the beginning path, is that sufficient?) It's sufficient. You can tell them that, "God will take care of them. God is them. They are God. God is within them. And there is only God which is the Self." (SL: Yeah.)

SD: So would it be correct for her to say of diseased grandparents or whatever that they have gone back to being part of God or is that also a misnomer because I guess because you aren't part of God you are God.

R: If you're talking to children you have to make it simple. So they can understand. So you can tell them they've gone back to God, if you like. That God is everything. God is love and they become love. And that all the whole universe is them. They are the whole universe.

SD: So even though it may be a slight spiritual misnomer you can tell them that they go back to being part of everything or part of God? (R: Yes.) Although beyond that would be the fact that they are God period, not part of anything.

R: For children you have to make it understandable. So you can tell them that they have melted into God and God is love and God is the whole universe.

SD: And that would help her with the fact that God is eternal and forever.

SL: But I think that if God just is, it should just eliminate the time to explain through those words and go into God is, because if you're saying that they are there then you're still...I mean "they" might be back on the cycle and it's not up to us, you should just let them know that God is always, period. Is that right Robert? Not try to get into having them consoled by God is because if you get into the point that...

R: It all depends in the evolvement of the children. It depends where they are. What you can say, what they can understand. (SL: Um-hm.) It has to be understandable. But as long as you make them understand that God is, there is nothing but God, the weeds, the flowers, the chickenpox, everything is God. (SL: When you were saying, "I-am, " in the beginning of the... I've read so much I-am recently that in the beginning, didn't you say, "I am?") I-am is absolute reality, I-am is God. (SL: Right, so couldn't I say that they are just "I-am" still? You know, that they are "I am," the "I am" that will never leave us that has never been born and never will die?) Sure you can say that. (SL: Well that's what I say.) Well keep it up? (laughter) (SL: Okay so that isn't incorrect.) You're better using simple language for children. (SL: Yeah.)

SD: I think you need to use simple language for us. (laughter) (R: Speak for yourself.)

S: Glen, do you want to read something for us? Explain what you're reading.

S: In whole detail?

R: No just tell them what this means.

S: From Ashtravakra Gita, "The Heart of Awareness."

You are pure, nothing touches you. What is there to renounce?

Let it all go. The body and the mind, let yourself dissolve.

Like bubbles in the sea all the world arise in you.

Know you are the Self. Know you are one. Let yourself dissolve.

You see the world but like the snake in the rope it is not really there.

You are pure. Let yourself dissolve.

You are one and the same. In joy and sorrow. Hope and despair. Life and death.

You are already fulfilled. Let yourself dissolve.

I am boundless space. The world is a clay pot. This is the truth.

There is nothing to accept. Nothing to reject. Nothing to dissolve.

I'm the ocean. All the worlds are like waves. This is the truth.

Nothing to hold onto, nothing to let go of. Nothing to dissolve.

I am the mother of pearl. The world is a vein of silver, an illusion.

This is the truth. Nothing to grasp. Nothing to spurn. Nothing to dissolve.

I am in all beings. All beings are in me. This is the whole truth.

Nothing to embrace. Nothing to relinquish. Nothing to dissolve.

R: Thank you Glen. (turns to Mary) Do you want to read the Jnani? (SM: Yes.)

(Mary reads the Jnani)

R: Thank you Mary.

Do we have any announcements?

SM: Yes, we have transcripts and we have four more. I don't have any myself so I had to take one of them. And this is "Beyond the World of Maya." It's the new one that just came out. It's number 51 and I would like to have people make some copies if you would please.

R: We have prashad. Remember what prashad is, it's the entire teaching and the teacher. So when you eat prashad you're eating your teacher. (students laugh)

SM: I'd just like to thank the people who brought back number 49, "What is, is God?" (transcript 49) We have them on the table.

R: Be happy!

SG: Don't worry, be happy.

(tape ends) [TOC]

WHO BELIEVES IN KARMA & REINCARNATION?

12th January, 1992

Robert: I welcome you with all my heart. Yet in reality there's no I, there's no my, there's no heart. So how can I welcome you with all my heart? I'm glad you're here.

S: We're glad we're here.

Robert continues: Just the way you are, no heart, no my, no welcome. Just be here now. Exactly the way you are. There is absolutely nothing you need to do. There's no thing you have to become, there are no better days coming later, there's no past that haunts you. You are pure awareness right now. Can you accept this about yourself?

There is really no past and no future. There never was a past, nothing ever happened. Yet most of you believe you are a body and you have gone through various experiences. But I tell you there are no experiences that you have gone through. There is no body that has ever existed.

Why do you want to make believe? You want to make believe that you are a human being, and you've had experiences in your life, of a various nature, you have a past, you feel guilty. You go through all kind of things in your mind. Why do you do this? You simply have to awaken to the fact that you are here. This is eternity. This is all there is. There's nothing else.

I really do not know what some of you are looking for. You're looking to become enlightened. No one ever became enlightened. No one has ever been self-realized. There is no such thing. Drop all your concepts, your preconceived ideas, your beliefs. Some of you here are searching for a better life. There is no better life. This is it! This is all you get. Yet when I say this is it, you think in your mind of your problems. You think of something that's wrong with you, or with the world or with the universe.

When I say this is it, you allow yourself to think. That's the first mistake you make. Allowing yourself to think, to analyze, trying to understand, this is a mistake. No one can understand, because there is nothing to understand. When I say this is it, I am referring to your true nature as absolute reality. This is it! I am not referring to the things you're thinking about. Those are all lies.

When we begin to think about man's inhumanity to man, the destruction of animal life for fun and for human consumption, the destruction of the rain forest, earthquakes, cataclysms. When we try to reconcile this with God, as it were, we can never do it. It doesn't make sense. How can God, whatever he is, or she is, or it is, allow all these dastardly things take place in this world? You become totally confused, disillusioned, when you try to reconcile these things.

Yet in truth there is absolutely nothing to reconcile. The picture I just painted does not exist. There is absolutely nothing happening in the universe. Due to the fact there is no universe. Just by understanding this, not with your mind, not by trying to understand, but by being, just by being. Not being this or being that, just by existing, you become totally free. For you are totally free!

There is no karma that binds you. There is no predestination that affects you in anyway. None of these things exist. There is no re-incarnation. You may think this is a contradiction because I speak of these things once in a while. Remember, to whom do these things come? Who believes in reincarnation? Who believes in karma? Who believes they're being punished for their sins? The mind! Not you.

It is your mind that appears to have been programmed to believe all these lies. Therefore if you come to me and tell me you are suffering, I will tell you, well, this is only karma. This is something you're going through, it will pass. I have to say this to you because this is where you're coming from right now. But the truth is no one suffers, there's no karma, there's absolutely nothing that causes suffering or pain or anything else.

Where would it come from if there is only God? Where would all these things come from if there's only effortless pure awareness? Self-contained absolute reality, Brahman, which is all-pervading. There is no room for anything else. There's no room for your ideas about fears and junk that is going on in your head, nonsense. Nothing exists! Nothing is absolute reality, ultimate oneness, nirvana.

You have always been nothing and you will always be nothing. But as soon as you begin to talk you spoil it. As soon as you begin to analyze it, to try to figure it out, to scientifically come up with a plan of how the universe works you spoil it for it is beyond human understanding, beyond human comprehension.

Your human mind and your human thoughts are only here to destroy you; they are not your friends. No thought is your friend, not even a good thought. Some of you still believe you have to hang onto good thoughts. Good thoughts are lies just like bad thoughts. In order to have a good thought you have to know about bad thoughts otherwise why would you want to hang onto a good thought? You want to replace it and hold it, instead of a bad thought. All thoughts are lies. There has to be no thought whatsoever. No thinking allowed.

You have to be tired of going through the vicissitudes of life and experiencing good and bad, up and down, right and wrong. Becoming happy when things are going your way. Becoming miserable when they go the other way, then becoming happy again when things go your way again becoming miserable when they turn. When will you drop the whole thing? What does it take to make you forget all these things, to let go of all these things? What does it take to awaken? It takes desire to begin with. Desire to become something else and then dropping desire and just becoming. Dropping becoming and just being, dropping being and just...

There was once a little bird who lived in the bottom of a great giant tree. The tree was so big the bird never saw the top of it at all. But the little bird was contented. By eating certain sweet berries that grew on the tree and the little bird would chirp and sing and be very happy. One day the little bird ran out of sweet berries and there were only sour berries left. The little bird partook of the sour berries and became miserable, cursed under its breath, became angry, mad, but then the sweet berries grew again and the little bird forgot about the sour berries and started to eat the sweet berries once more, chirped and sang, became happy until all the sweet berries were gone once again, and there were sour berries and the bird ate the berries and cursed under his breath again, god damn no good son of a !$@!# (students laugh) became angry...

...So the bird thought I'm going to fly around this tree and see if I can find any more sweet berries. He began to fly around the tree. As the bird gazed up the top of the tree which was a long way up and it saw a majestic, translucent, beautiful looking bird sitting on top of the branch at the top of the tree, way up there. The bird looked so peaceful, so radiant, so loving, so free. The little bird felt something and said to itself, I've got to find out the secret of this big bird, why it's so contented. It's not looking for berries, it's not doing any thing. It just sits there happy, majestic, free. I think I'll fly up to it and find out its secret.

It started to fly up the tree. On the way up it noticed some yellow looking berries. It stopped and started to partake of these berries and they were simply delicious, he had never tasted berries like this before. It forgot all about the big bird as it chirped and sang and enjoyed itself. But again like every thing else it had to come to an end. The sweet berries were finished and again there were sour berries left and again the bird mumbled under its breath, cursed, became upset. And again it started to fly around the tree searching for sweet berries and happened to look up and saw that beautiful, translucent, majestic looking bird again, way up on top of the tree. It forgot about the bird, but now it remembered.

The little bird said to itself, I'm really going to fly up to that big bird now and find out its secret of peace. It started to fly but again, three quarters up the tree it saw purple looking berries that looked simply delicious. It stopped to eat of the berries and they were so good the bird again forgot about the big bird. Became happy, chirping, singing until it ran out of the berries again and the same thing happened all over again. Sour berries, sweet berries, this went on and on and on.

Finally, after many years, the little bird was flying around the tree and looked up at the big bird and was totally disgusted with all the berries, sweet and sour. It didn't care any longer about sweet berries or chirping or singing, it wanted to find the peace that the big bird had. It made up its mind resolutely to fly straight toward the big bird and nothing would stop it this time. And so it was. The little bird flew directly up, up, up, up, right into the big bird and when it did it discovered something very interesting. It discovered that it had been the big bird all along, all the time. It was the big bird! It had become itself!

